Schools have been maintained in Ellicottville since 1818. In the summer of that year Eunice Carpenter taught a school in the house of Orrin Pitcher. Chauncey J. Fox taught in the ensuing winter a short term; Ursula Maltby taught a term in each of the summers of 1819 and 1820 in Baker Leonard's house; John W. Staunton taught a school in the winter of 1820-21 in the court room; and Charles Chamberlain taught in the same room in the winter of 1821-22. Schools were also taught on Bryant hill and a school house was built in that neighborhood as early as 1820. In 1823 the town contained three school districts as formed by Artemas Blair, Rickertson Burlingame, and Daniel Thomas, school commissioners. Schools were sustained in all of them three months in summer and three months in winter.

The first school house erected in the village was completed about 1824 and was two stories high. It stood on the public square and did double duty. The lower story was used for a district school and the upper one for a select school. Ultimately it was purchased by Mr. Devereux and converted into a Catholic chapel. The Ellicottville Female Seminary was opened to the public in 1835 by Mrs. S. Cowles and Miss Mary Lyman, who taught until 1838, when it passed into the control of Mrs. Emma Newcomb, who continued it with success for several years.

The Ellicottville Union School and Academy in the village of Ellicottville comprises all the territory of district No. 1. It was instituted October 28, 1865, at a special school meeting held for the purpose, the Board of Trustees then elected being Dr. E. S. Stewart, D. T. Dickinson, and J. King Skinner for three years; S. M. Johnson, Smith C. Springer, and Timothy Walsh for two years; and James Crary, J. D. Fowler, and D. H. Bolles for one year. D. H. Bolles presided and Timothy Walsh acted as secretary of the meeting. The present elegant school building was erected by the resident architect, Mr. Stokes, in the summer of 1888, costing, with the furniture and appurtenances, $15,000. By the munificence of Miss Harmon, sister of the late Eleazar Harmon, it has been placed under the Regents of the University of the State of New York. Five teachers are employed in all the grades, which are primary, second primary, intermediate, and grammar school. In the latter the course includes mathematics as far as and including trigonometry, Latin, German, and French. About 250 pupils are in regular attendance and W. S. Hubbard is principal.

The town of Ellicottville had a population in 1892 of 1,910 and is divided into ten school districts. Ten teachers were employed for the legal school year and the aggregate attendance of scholars was 493, the expense of maintaining the schools being $4,565.62. The assessed valuation of property of the town taxable for school purposes is $655,857 and the value of school buildings and sites is $19,995.

Maple Grove Mills, J. W. & D. P. McMahon, proprietors, are situated on Mill street in the village of Ellicottville. The feed-mills are run by water and have three runs of stone, which are capable of grinding 1,000 bushels every twenty-four hours. The company deals in feed, flour, grain, and grass seed, and handles two hundred car-loads yearly. The saw-mills are propelled by a sixty horse-power engine and have a capacity of 16,000 feet of lumber daily.

Daniel E. Bartlett's last-block factory, hay-pressing establishment, grist-mill, and nearly all the various interests owned by him and located on Mill street, on Great Valley creek, were burned on May 19, 1893. The loss was estimated at about $12,000.

F. C. Rankin's marble shops are located on the corner of Monroe and Washington streets. Mr. Rankin came to Ellicottville in February, 1886, and opened shops for the manufacture of all kinds of marble work for cemetery, furniture, and ornamental purposes. He also deals in granite monuments.

Ellicottville cheese factory, No. 1, is located a little northeast of the village limits; Charles J. Clair & Co. are proprietors. The factory receives the milk of 350 cows, and the work of manufacturing and marketing is done by the proprietors at a stipulated price.

The Bank of Ellicottville was organized July 15, 1878, and commenced business August 1st, following, with a cash capital of $15,500 and these officers: Dr. E. S. Stewart, president; Charles McCoy, vice-president; C. A. Case, cashier; all of whom have been elected each year since the organization. The bank has increased its cash capital stock to $25,000, which is fully paid up. The business has grown steadily. During the year 1890 a fine brick banking office was erected with the latest improved burglar-proof vaults and safes. At the annual meeting on January 2, 1891, articles of agreement were made and executed changing the organization from a private bank to a State bank, and the institution commenced business as a State bank on April 1st following.

The first tangible evidence of an organized religious society in the town of Ellicottville is recorded June 26, 1824, and is signed by Gershom R. Staunton as secretary. The entry reads as follows:

"This day, according to previous appointment, have assembled at the house of Nathaniel Bryant a number of Christian brethren to confer on and adopt measures for the formation of a church, and to regulate and unite themselves into a Christian body, signalized by the title of the 'Regular Baptist Order.' We therefore, whose names are undersigned, after mature deliberation and consultation, covenant together to unite, according to the articles and covenant of faith drawn by Elder Peter P. Root, to prepare the way for being constituted as a church. We do further agree to re-assemble at the house of Nathaniel Bryant on the 10th day of July succeeding at one o'clock P.M., for further conference on the building of the church of Christ."

[Signed] Ebenezer Vining, Daniel Huntley, Nathaniel Bryant, Records W. Vining, Joseph E. Vining, David Putnam, Gershom R. Staunton, Abigail Vining, Lydia Vining, Sally Vining, Mary Putnam, Annie M. Bryant.

The next meeting convened on July 24th and the third on August 21st. At the latter meeting the persons named above were received as constituent members of the Baptist church of Ellicottville, the first regularly organized religious society in the town. September 18th Ebenezer Vining was installed as elder and Records W. Vining as deacon; March 4, 1826, the latter received a license to preach and on May 26, 1831, was regularly ordained as a minister. Meetings were held until August 29, 1826, at the house of Nathaniel Bryant and afterward at the school house and private dwellings until September 8, 1838, when the society and its business was removed to the village and services were held in the court house. Up to this time fifty-eight had been received by baptism and forty-five by letter, and in 1846 the membership was one hundred and twenty-two. The society was incorporated December 16, 1829. On May 1, 1856, it was decided to exchange gospel lot No. 20, which had been deeded to them by the Holland Land Company on October 2, 1830, as the first church organized in town, for a lot in the valley owned by D. Bartlett. This evidently caused dissensions, for the members thenceforth withdrew and joined neighboring churches, leaving only sixteen communicants November 26, 1864, the date of the last entry in the society's books. No house of worship was ever erected and the organization finally became extinct.

St. John's church of Ellicottville (Protestant Episcopal) was organized September 13, 1829, at a meeting held in the school house in the village of Ellicottville; Rev. Rufus Murray presided. Ralph R. Phelps and John Fellows were elected wardens and Ezra Canfield, David Ward, Moses Beecher, Israel Day, Nathaniel Fish, Elihu Alvord, Henry Wooster, and Staley N. Clarke were chosen vestrymen. Rev. Reuben H. Freeman and Rev. Alexander Frazer administered to the church from its organization until 1834, when the Rev. Thomas Morris became the first settled rector. The first church edifice was completed in 1838 and dedicated by Bishop B. T. Onderdonk on August 17th of that year; the church with all other property is now valued at $3,500. The society is at present without a rector, but conducts lay services. The present wardens are Charles McCoy and William Niles. The membership includes twenty-three families with thirty-six communicants. The Sunday school has eight teachers and thirty pupils. The first church bell brought to Ellicottville hangs in the tower of this edifice. It is a Spanish bell of bronze material and was brought to the village in the fall of 1838, being purchased by subscription for $125. For some years it was regularly rung every day at six o'clock in the morning, at noon, and at nine o'clock in the evening. The bell bears an inscription in bad Spanish which, when translated into good English, reads thus: "Hail (I am the voice of the angel who on high sounds forth), Mary! full of grace." It bears the founder's name and date of construction: "Bargas, made at Malaga, 1708."

The First Presbyterian church of Ellicottville was organized by Rev. N. Gould and Rev. S. H. Gridley, at the school house on the public square, December 20, 1829. Those who then comprised its membership were Josiah Hollister, Ira Norton, Orrin Brown, Archelaus Brown, Stillwell Huntley, Hiram L. Ripley, David Pitcher, Sally Ewell, Chloe Fox, and Margaret Rust. At the organization Josiah Hollister, Ira Norton, Orrin Brown, and Hiram L. Ripley were elected the first Board of Elders, and the latter two were also chosen deacons. Rev. J. T. Baldwin served the church as stated supply half the time for the ensuing two years. Rev. Sylvester Cowles supplied the society from 1833 the following four years and in 1836 the membership had increased to seventy-five. In 1841 Rev. Mead Holmes was ordained an installed pastor of the church, and officiated until September 6, 1843, when there were 168 members. Rev. Mr. Cowles was again employed as stated supply for four years from the first of the year 1844. In all these years the church was assisted in supporting their ministers by the American Home Missionary Society. The pastors succeeding Rev. Mr. Cowles were successively Revs. Hiram Eddy, C. Jerome, W. V. Couch, L. P. Sabin, and I. M. Ely. In September, 1869, Rev. Courtney Smith supplied the church and in December, 1870, was installed pastor, which relation continued until his death February 22, 1884. Mr. Smith's successor, Rev. A. G. Daniels, was installed in October, 1884, and finally resigned, being succeeded by Rev. F. R. Wade, who supplied from May, 1887, to November, 1889. The present pastor, Rev. Mr. Remington, began his ministry in July, 1890. The church now has ninety members. The first house of worship was erected in 1838. In 1852 it was superseded by a brick edifice at a cost of $5,000. The church has a flourishing Sunday school.

The First Methodist Episcopal church was organized February 10, 1845. The Board of Trustees then elected consisted of David Simmons, E. Canfield, Isaac Searl, Abraham Searl, and Benjamin Chamberlain. As near as can be ascertained this may have been a re-organization. As early as 1818 the Methodists built their first church on the Holland purchase in Buffalo and soon afterward Rev. Gleason Fillmore was presiding elder and met with the few Methodist people in Ellicottville, where a class was formed about 1821, with Ezra Canfield as class-leader. Services have probably been held statedly from that time. Rev. Father May was the first local preacher and was here in 1822. The first church edifice was built in 1850 and 1851; the present neat gothic structure was erected in 1892 at a cost of $2,500. This, with all other church property, including grounds and furniture, is valued at $4,000. The church has seats for 325 people. The society now has about fifty members with Rev. John B. White pastor. The Sunday school is attended by eighty-three scholars and twelve officers and teachers. Acting in conjunction with the church there is an Epworth League and a Ladies' Aid Society. This charge or circuit in 1840 included six appointments, viz.: Ellicottville, Great Valley, Humphrey, Chapellsburg, Bryant hill, and Mansfield. It now includes Ellicottville, Sugartown, and Eddyville. Each society has a separate Board of Trustees, but a joint Board of Stewards.

The Church of the Most Holy Name of Mary (Roman Catholic), formerly known as St. Philip Neri's church.—The first Catholic services held in this town were in the Mansion House (now the Whitney House), then kept by Daniel Huntley, and were conducted by Rev. Father McAvoy. About six months afterward services were held in J. C. Devereux's land office by the same clergyman. Later Nicholas Devereux purchased a two-story building that had been a school house, which was converted into a chapel and used until the first church edifice was erected in 1851. The baptismal record kept in the church says that the first baptism was made by Rev. H. P. Fitzsimmons, the first pastor, in January, 1850. His successor seems to have been Rev. P. McIvers, whose first baptismal entry bears date August, 1850, and his entries in the record continue until March, 1855. Then come the Franciscan Fathers. The venerable Bishop Timon had charge of the Diocese of Buffalo at this time, which as now included Cattaraugus county. Nicholas Devereux, on a visit to Rome, requested the reigning Supreme Pontiff to send some Franciscan Fathers or Friars Minor of the Order of St. Francis of Assisi to this county. The request was granted, and Fathers Pamfilio, Milian, and Sextus, accompanied by a lay brother, came in 1855 and established in Ellcottville the foundation of the present flourishing Franciscan Order in New York and the eastern States.

The entries of the Franciscan Fathers in the baptismal record extend from June, 1855, to June, 1859. They were succeeded by Dr. Barker, who remained until April, 1860. Next came Rev. P. Bradley, who was succeeded by Rev. John Twohy in 1861 until 1863, when Father Le Breton came and remained until January, 1865; then Rev. P. F. Glennon took charge and he was followed by Rev. James Leddy, who remained until October, 1867. His successor was Rev. James Rogers, now pastor of the Immaculate Conception church of Buffalo, whose pastorate extended to January, 1871, when he was succeeded by Rev. J. Brady, who was pastor until May, 1878. He was succeeded by Rev. M. Ryan, who officiated until the ensuing December. Rev. Philip Kinsella was appointed pastor in December, 1879, and officiated until his death in October, 1889. He was succeeded by Rev. A. R. Barlow, whose successor was Rev. J. D. Biden, the present pastor. In 1891 Father Barlow thoroughly repaired the church, built the parsonage, and in 1892 had the edifice well painted outside and beautifully frescoed inside. The church property, including grounds, etc., is valued at about $25,000. The parish includes about 150 families. The 2,500-pound bell was presented the church by Daniel O'Day, of Buffalo, in memory of his parents.

The German Evangelical Lutheran St. Peter's church (unaltered Augsburg Confession) was organized December 18, 1867, by Rev. E. Leemhuis, with the following members: John Langhaus, Chris Weishan, J. Allwardt, F. Luss, W. Bauer, W. Hess, H. Wulff, J. Stade, F. Stade, J. Hiller, H. Shultz, H. Avers, C. Weishan, J. Wilken, H. Dreier, J. Hagen, J. Ruper, C. Ollrogge, and J. Rouke. The church edifice is located in school district No. 8 in the northwest part of the town. In 1854 the society purchased and remodeled a frame building into a house of worship, in which they held services until their present neat structure was erected in 1884 at a cost of $4,500, the present value of which, including buildings and grounds, is $6,500. The building will seat four hundred persons. The little society, organized with only nineteen members, has prospered and increased until it now has seventy. Their first pastor, Rev. E. Leemhuis, officiated until the latter part of 1872; the pastor now in charge is Rev. William Hanewinkel. The Sunday school is attended by about forty children and is superintended by the pastor.

The Seventh Day Adventists have erected a church edifice the present year on the corner of Elizabeth and Mechanic streets in Ellicottville village.

One of the earliest Masonic organizations in Cattaraugus county was Constellation Lodge, No. 435, F. & A. M., which was chartered at Ellicottville by the County Grand Lodge on June 1, 1835, with Gaius Wheaton, M.; John Vosburg, S. W.; and Jacob Simmons, J. W. Meetings convened in the famous Huntley tavern in what was called the Masonic room, of which many interesting anecdotes are still extant. During the excitement attending the Morgan episode the lodge succumbed and finally surrendered its warrant.

Ellicottville Lodge, No. 307, F. & A. M., was chartered June 14, 1853, the charter being signed by these grand officers of the State of New York: R. H. Walworth, G. M.; J. D. Evans, D. G. M.; Jarvis M. Hatch, S. G. W.; Finlay M. King, J. G. W.; James M. Austin, G. S. P. M. Job Bigelow constituted the lodge and installed Rensselaer Lamb, W. M.; George W. Gillett, S. W.; and Clark Robinson, J. W. There are now eighty-four members. The officers are William R. Pindar, M.; William B. Johnson, S. W.; Edwin S. King, J. W.; Daniel Darling, treasurer; Charles A. Weir, secretary; John K. Ward, S. D.; Abner C. Marvin, J. D.; Alonzo L. Rasey, 2d, S. M. C.; George Deitter, J. M. C.; and James Blackmon, tiler. Many of the members are old men, but are still active in the work. Grand Master William R. Pindar has held the position of master twelve years. The venerable tiler, James Blackmon, is now serving his twenty-second year in that office, and is the only man now living who was present at the first meeting. The regular meetings are held in the lodge room, which is the property of the lodge. Clinton F. Page Lodge, No. 620, of Otto, and Franklinville Lodge, No. 626, have been organized out of its territory. All the records and the old aprons are preserved in the lodge. The master now wears the apron which was worn by John J. Aiken, the second incumbent of that office. The past masters have been: Rensselaer Lamb, John J. Aiken, William Howland, Samuel William Johnson, David H. Bolles, William A. Meloy, J. King Skinner, Edwin D. Northrup, Oliver T. Drown, William R. Pindar, Palmer K. Shankland, Herman B. Drown, Walter G. Scott, and Theodore Lowe.

S. C. Noyes Post, No. 232, G. A. R., was organized with about fifteen members; it now has about forty. Hon. W. G. Laidlaw was the first commander; Byron A. Johnson, senior vice-commander; T. R. Aldrich, adjutant; H. E. Bolles, quartermaster.

Ellicottville Lodge, No. 174, A. O. U. W., was organized September 18, 1878, by D. J. Woodworth, with fourteen members. A. D. Scott was P. M. W.; C. P. Vedder, M. W.; L. H. Crary, recorder; William B. Boyce, general foreman. The present number of members is thirty.

Star Union, No. 22, E. A. U., of Ellicottville, was instituted in 1879 with about twenty members, the present number being 120.

Branch 39, C. M. B. A., of Ellicottville, was instituted in 1876 with Rev. Father P. Kinsella as spiritual advisor and John Roe as president. At its organization the branch had thirteen members; now it has fifty-five.

Branch 73, L. C. B. A., of Ellicottville, was instituted June 19, 1891, with twenty-seven members, and with Rev. Father A. R. Barlow, spiritual advisor, and Miss L. M. Fenton, president. It now has thirty-four members.

Bryant Hill Lodge, No. 808, I. O. G. T., was organized February 19, 1890, with sixteen members and Peter M. Drown as chief templar.

There is a flourishing lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows which meets regularly in the village of Ellicottville, but those in a position to furnish historical information have failed to respond to repeated inquiries.

The Cattaraugus County Anti-Slavery Society was formed in Ellicottville in April, 1836, under the shadow of the indignation of the conservative population of the village, which outnumbered the anti-slavery element fifty to one. A small band of men, who then held the advanced idea that no man had the right to own his fellowman, procured a speaker and held a meeting on April 21, 1836. Another meeting was held on the 23d and an appointment was made for still another the ensuing evening (Sunday). This brought down upon the devoted heads of the speakers and the anti-slavery men the maledictions of the conservative element, who met in council on the grave misdemeanor of the abolitionists holding a meeting on the slavery question on Sunday evening. In a series of resolutions they were denominated as Sabbath-breakers, as outrageous, as being agitators and promulgators of pestiferous doctrine, and the speaker as indicating a concert between the abolitionists and the emissaries of the monarchical powers to subvert the liberties of our country. Again on Wednesday evening the anti-slavery men met at the Huntley tavern to form a society and adopt a constitution. The populace led by prominent citizens were there in force, and under the specious plea of "free discussion" voted down every proposition. The abolitionists attempted to retire by themselves to another room, but were followed by the mob upstairs and down again. The meeting was declared adjourned by Mr. Huntley, but the society was organized, and "free discussion" of man's right to himself was debated until the martyred Lincoln issued his proclamation of emancipation.

Thomas R. Aldrich was born at Quaker Springs, Saratoga county, Oct. 6, 1840. His father removed to Otsego county soon after his birth and died there in Jan., 1844, leaving his wife without means and with four small children. Thomas had a home with a friend and an uncle until he became fourteen, and since then he has provided for his own wants. Aug. 8, 1862, he enlisted in Co. B, 154th N. Y. Vols. May 2, 1863, he received four bullet-wounds at the battle of Chancellorsville and was sent to Carver Hospital at Washington, D. C. He rejoined his regiment at Alexandria, Va., Sept. 11, 1863, and left with it on the 26th for Tennessee, taking part in the battle at Wauhatchie on Oct. 28th. He was also at Chattanooga and Mission Ridge, and started with his regiment in the march through Georgia with General Sherman, but was wounded and captured at Rocky Face Ridge, Ga., May 8, 1864. May 12th he was a prisoner in Andersonville; Sept. 7th he was transferred to the prison at Savannah and later to Millen, to Blackshear, Ga., and to Florence, S. C., and escaped Feb. 22, 1865, at Wilmington en route for the rebel prison at Salisbury, N. C., re-entering the Union lines reduced to a mere skeleton. He was sent to Annapolis, was given a furlough, and was honorably discharged June 22, 1865. In Sept., 1865, he was given a position in the quartermaster's department of the 100th U. S. Colored Infantry at Columbia, Tenn., where he remained until the regiment was mustered out Dec. 30, 1865. He returned to Cattaraugus county and is now and has been for fifteen years deputy sheriff, has been postmaster of Ellicottville five years, deputy U. S. marshal eight years, and commander of S. C. Noyes Post, No. 232, G. A. R., and of Maybee Tent, No. 23, K. O. T. M., several years. Feb. 2, 1869, he married Maryette Walker, who died June 29, 1877.

Samuel P. Arnold, born in Londonderry, Vt., about 1798, married Betsey Hadley, and shortly afterward emigrated to Le Roy, N. Y., coming thence in 1827 to Ellicottville, where he conducted a tannery and had an interest in a shoe shop and furniture establishment. He was deputy sheriff nine years and represented Ellicottville on the Board of Supervisors in 1853 and 1854. He was a collector for the Holland Land Company and later for Mr. Devereux. At one time he owned 1,300 acres of land which he stocked with cattle, being also a heavy dealer in cattle and sheep. Mr. Arnold was an active, energetic business man and a good companion; he was generous and kind to the poor, but never made any display of his virtues. E. Young Arnold, his son, was born in Le Roy, N. Y., May 8, 1826. April 12, 1859, he married Laura P. Young, of New Albion, daughter of Hon. Horace C. Young. He has had extensive dealings in cattle in his own county, in Buffalo, and in Canada. Both he and his wife are great readers. Charles S. Arnold, another son of Samuel P. and Betsey E. (Hadley) Arnold, was born in the village of Ellicottville, Feb. 9, 1838. He attended the common schools and was on his father's farm until he was twenty-eight, when he began farming for himself. Besides this he is an extensive dealer in cattle and sheep. In 1859 he married Addie Frazier, who bore him one son, Charles E., and one daughter, Nellie (Mrs. Frank Neubacher), of Salamanca. Mrs. Arnold died Dec. 10, 1874, and Dec. 16, 1875, Mr. Arnold married, second, Emma Lawton.

The Ballou family in America are of Huguenot descent and early settled in Rhode Island with Roger Williams's colony. They were lovers of civil liberty, possessed quite a military spirit, and one of the family served in the Revolutionary war. Charles F. Ballou, son of David and Eliza (Barrett) Ballou, natives of Vermont, was born in East Otto in 1840, and in early life taught district schools. Sept. 17, 1861, he enlisted in Co. I, 44th N. Y. Vols., and at Gettysburg received a severe gunshot-wound and was discharged from the hospital a cripple Dec. 21, 1863. Returning to his home in Ashford he continued farming, but was obliged to give it up and entered the New York customs house in the city of New York, becoming finally a grocer in Ellicottville.

H. E. Ballou, son of David and Eliza (Barrett) Ballou, was born in East Otto in 1845, and in 1861 enlisted in Co. A, 100th N. Y. Vols., experiencing all the vicissitudes of his regiment, and escaping with only the loss of a piece of skin from his nose. He had his haversack and canteen shot from his shoulders at the charge on Fort Wagner and the stock from his gun at Fair Oaks; his blouse was several times pierced with bullets. He was discharged a corporal after a service of three years and four months, being always on duty and never in the hospital. Mr. Ballou returned home with imperfect eyesight. He is engaged in bee-keeping.

Rev. Arthur E. Barlow, a native of Ireland, was born in 1854 and emigrated to America at the age of seventeen years. He completed his education for the priesthood in Rome, Italy, in 1877, where he was ordained a priest of the Catholic church. He returned to America, was soon assigned to duty in the profession of his choice, and was appointed pastor of the Church of the Most Holy Name of Mary at Ellicottville in 1889. Father Barlow is distinguished in his denomination as a sound theologian, and by all who hear him as a gentleman of fine attainments. He was succeeded in his pastorate here during the present year by Rev. J. D. Biden and transferred to a permanent charge in Hornellsville, N. Y.

Alexander Bird, born in Montgomery county, July 21, 1842, enlisted in Co. G, 154th N. Y. Vols., Aug. 6, 1862, was promoted to corporal, sergeant, sergeant-major, and first lieutenant, and commanded a company as acting captain during the last nine months of the war. Mr. Bird fought at Chancellorsville and under General Sherman was in the battles of Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Kingston, Cassville, Pine Mountain, Peach Tree-Creek, and Atlanta, marched to the sea, and was engaged at Savannah. He marched through the Carolinas to Raleigh and was present at General Johnston's surrender. He marched to Washington by way of Richmond and was discharged at Elmira, N. Y., June 22, 1865. Being wounded at Rocky Face Ridge he refused to go to the hospital, never asked for nor received a furlough, and was absent from his company only six months on recruiting service by order of the War Department. In this capacity as well as in the "tented field" he was an able and efficient soldier. On his return from the army he was a blacksmith twelve years; since then he has conducted a grocery and a meat market. In the autumn of 1880 he made a tour of all his old battlefields. From the field of Rocky Face Ridge, where he was wounded, he cut a hickory walking-stick and formed a head for it with a grape shot that he picked up on the field of Resaca. Mr. Bird is a Republican. He had three brothers in the army: William, James, and Alexander. The aggregate number of battles fought by these four brothers was sixty-one and the sum total of service tendered was eleven years and five months.

George Blackall was born in County Clare, Ireland, and died in this town June 12, 1893, aged 103 years and ten months. He was a Catholic and had lived in Ellicottville thirty-five years. He was the father of eighteen children, five of whom survive him, one of them being the wife of Timothy Kelly.

William Boyce, a native of Massachusetts, married Mary Bacon, a native of New England, and in 1830 settled on lot 10 in Ellicottville. He came from Boston and bought his farm of Allen Green, who had lived on it a short time and had made a small improvement. Three years after he settled here a kind friend in Massachusetts offered Mr. Boyce a yoke of oxen if he would go and get them. The present was gladly accepted and he made the entire trip on foot. Mr. Boyce died in his native town while there on a visit. Benjamin F. Boyce was supervisor of Ellicottville in 1868, but died between the first and second weeks of the session and Rensselaer Lamb filled the office the remainder of the term.

Frederick Brown, Sr., born in Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1831, emigrated in 1853 to America, and was seventy-four days crossing the ocean, landing in New York on July 9th and coming at once to Buffalo. In 1856 he married Anna Maria Buchfink, a German lady who crossed the Atlantic in the ship with him. In 1863 they settled where they now live. Mr. Brown began here with sixty-four acres of primeval forest, which he has changed into cultivated fields and added to it by purchase fifty acres. He enlisted in Co. A, 188th N. Y. Regt., and was honorably discharged June 1, 1865. He fought in the battles of Hatcher's Run, Five Forks, and Appomattox Court House, and is now a pensioner and a member of S. C. Noyes Post, G. A. R. He has been assessor six years. Children: Frederick, Jr., Henry J., Anna, Louisa M., and Charles J.

Samuel Bryant, born in Chesterfield, Mass., Oct. 5, 1781, married Anne Staunton, who was born in Northampton, Mass., March 10, 1785. They settled on Bryant hill, so named in honor of the Bryant family, leaving New England with their seven children and household goods loaded in a heavy covered wagon drawn by two pairs of oxen and arriving at their home, a log cabin, about 1821. While on the journey their little son Royal T. fell under the wheels of the wagon and was instantly killed. They brought with their goods half a bushel of apples, carefully saved the seeds, and planted a nursery which produced the trees of his large orchard, and for several other orchards in the Bryant neighborhood. Mr. Bryant resided on the farm where he first settled until his death April 17, 1853; Mrs. Bryant died June 29, 1869. Mr. Bryant was a captain of militia in Massachusetts; he was a prominent citizen in Ellicottville, a member of the Baptist church, and an old line Whig. They had eleven children, those living to maturity being Maria, born April 9, 1809, married Alonzo Woodard; Ursula, born April 22, 1810, married Jerold Vining, settled in Kalamazoo, Mich., where she died about 1870; Mary Ann, born Feb. 20, 1812, married Nathan Kingsley, and died in Ellicottville; Samuel A., born March 8, 1814, married Rachel Beebe; Royal T., 2d, born May 29, 1823, died on the homestead Sept. 19, 1844; Louisa F., born March 1, 1825, married Cooley Williams, and died at about twenty years of age; Amanda M., born April 18, 1827, married Alfred French, and settled in Lake View, Mich.; and Hiram. Hiram Bryant, born Nov. 27, 1830, succeeded his father on the homestead. He married, Jan. 3, 1855, Jennette H., daughter of Peter Drown, who died July 31, 1868, being the mother of these children: Eva A., born Oct. 2, 1858, died July 16, 1884; Freddie A. and Eddie A. (twins), born March 16, 1861; and Warren G., born Sept. 20, 1870. Freddie A. died Oct. 4, 1872. Sept. 20, 1870, Mr. Bryant married, second, Electa M. Searl, of Franklinville, who is the mother of two daughters: Bertha L., born Dec. 11, 1874, and Ida J., born Dec. 28, 1881. Mr. Bryant is a prominent citizen and a Republican. He and his wife are members of the Presbyterian church.

Charles A. Case, son of Thomas, was born in Lyndon, Oct. 25, 1851, was educated in school district No. 7 of his native town, at Franklinville Academy, and in a commercial college in Buffalo. Remaining with his father, a farmer, and assisting in his large business as a dealer in farmers' produce, he began business himself in dealing in live stock, having a large trade in Canada and the west. He subsequently engaged in life insurance business about two years, when the Bank of Ellicottville was organized and Mr. Case became its first cashier, a position he has continuously held. Mr. Case is a prominent citizen, an affable gentleman, a thorough business man, and a true friend.

Hon. Staley N. Clarke.—Every epoch of a nation's life produces certain individuals who, by virtue of innate strength of mind and breadth of character, stand above the level of common men, and by them are honored and followed as their benefactors and leaders. It is not in the higher walks of life alone that such men appear; they stand forth in the by-ways to assist and cheer the toils of their fellows by their example and advice. Often in the settlement and development of this country such leaders of men have come opportunely to guide the well-being of some struggling colony, and by their purity of life, honesty of purpose, and conscientiousness in the discharge of duty have contributed to the happiness and promoted the welfare of all with broad and generous sympathy. Identified with the early history and development of the county was Hon. Staley Nichols Clarke. Mr. Clarke was born in Prince George county, Md., May 24, 1794. At about the age of twenty-one he settled at Buffalo, N. Y., and began his career as a clerk in the Bank of Niagara. In 1819 he was offered and accepted a clerkship in the office of the Holland Land Company at Batavia, N. Y., where he remained until Jan., 1822, when he was transferred to the office of the company at Ellicottville and appointed as their authorized agent for the county of Cattaraugus. In this selection of manager the company chose wisely. His previous service in the office at Batavia had shown that he possessed the qualities requisite to success in the new field to which they desired to send him, and they were quick to discern and prompt in availing themselves of the benefit they would derive from his business capacity. The result amply justified the trust they reposed in him, and Mr. Clarke remained the agent of the company until it sold out to the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company.

The country was rugged and uninviting and then but sparsely settled. Communication between the different settlements, widely separated by unbroken forests, was slow and difficult, and the settlers at first came but little under the charm of the agent's presence, and hence intimate acquaintanceship was of slow growth. Those who came to take up the land were, in the main, without capital or resource, except brave hearts and brawny arms, with will as sturdy and purpose as rugged as the surrounding forests and hillsides. The instinct of self-preservation inspired them to constant watchfulness lest in some way they should be deceived or imposed upon. They knew their weakness, and for a time they feared the power of the agent. Better acquaintance, however, disarmed suspicion and revealed to them the true excellence of his character; they came to know him as he was and trusted and respected him. The settlers came to him for advice and counsel in all the simple affairs of their uneventful lives, and his relations with them soon became paternal. They confided in and trusted him to a degree quite wonderful, and consistent only with the fact that they had discovered his merit and read aright his character. Without judicial authority Mr. Clarke was for many years the people's chancellor. To him they came as to an upright judge with their disputes and their contentions. He listened to their recitals, and his intuitive perception of right and wrong enabled him to see where justice lay; and so great was their confidence in his wisdom and integrity that his decisions were always respected. Men left his presence with the conviction strong upon them that if they pursued the course suggested by him they could not go far wrong.

His position as between the settlers and the company, whose representative he was, must have been at times a delicate one, not wholly free from embarrassment, and yet, through it all, there was never once the slightest intimation or suspicion of injustice to the one or lack of fidelity to the other. It is believed that in no case was a settler, if worthy and meritorious, evicted from the land for which he held a contract because of inability to meet promptly his payments. If to those who held the security further indulgence seemed beyond the limit of business prudence, and foreclosure became imminent, Mr. Clarke often made the obligation his own, paid the debt to the company, assumed the risk, and carried the burden, thus insuring the settler against oppression and the company against loss: and so at once was generous to the one and just to the other. In later years, when the condition of the settlers had improved and the gloomy forest had become productive farms; when poverty had given way to modest competence, and to the scant and coarse necessities of life had been added many of its comforts and some of its luxuries; when hard and unrelenting toil had been succeeded by some degree of leisure and the pioneers had become independent, self-supporting citizens, they did not forget their friend and benefactor; they were wont to dwell with a fondness amounting almost to devotion upon the unselfish, disinterested, and immeasurable service he had rendered them. They told their children the story of his life, and his name became a household word and his memory a benediction.

Not only by those whom he had befriended was he honored; he was respected and beloved by all men, the affluent, the learned, and the influential. To the needy, if deserving, he was an unfailing friend; no worthy person in distress ever appealed to him for aid and was sent away empty handed. Benevolent far beyond the common, his charities were not bestowed with ostentation or desire for notoriety, but with unobtrusive modesty in harmony with the simple grandeur of his nature. In short his character was ennobled by the unity and harmonious blending of more good qualities and marred by fewer faults than is usual with men who are esteemed both good and great. He was of stately figure and commanding presence, and his manner was one in which were combined both simplicity and elegance. Though not indifferent to public affairs he was not in the popular sense ambitious to appear in them. He served his county as treasurer for seventeen years, and at the earnest desire of his friends consented to represent the district in the Twenty-seventh Congress. On the expiration of his term he declined a re-election. On Oct. 27, 1816, he married Eunice Thayer, of Ontario county, N. Y., who was born March 5, 1797, and died at Corry, Pa., June 23, 1873. Mr. Clarke at Ellicottville, Oct. 14, 1860.

William Clark, son of Wells Clark, was born in Granville, Aug. 28, 1814, and reared in Blandford, Mass. He married Caroline M. Stewart, of Canton, Conn., a native of Blandford, Mass., Aug. 20, 1839, and the ensuing spring emigrated to Ellicottville, coming by canal from Albany to Buffalo, thence with a team to this town, arriving May 1, 1840. His farm had some twenty-five acres partly cleared and a small frame barn, but no house. While building a portion of the house he now occupies they resided in a deserted old log house near by; here the little striped snakes were in possession and would frequently bob up their heads through the large cracks in the floor. Mr. Clark had means to pay for his original farm of 122 acres, and has added to it from time to time until he now has nearly 300 acres. His children are George and Harlan M., farmers on the homestead; Charles W., who occupies his father's farm in Mansfield; James O., a lawyer and teller of the Bank of Ellicottville; Wells W., a mechanic and farmer in Ellicottville; Carrie L., at home; and Mary, who died in Sept., 1889, aged twenty-nine.

Lewis Coit, son of Roger and Hannah (Harris) Coit, was born in Norwich, Mass., June 18, 1818. His parents came to Ellicottville in March, 1820. Their conveyance was a heavy sled drawn by a pair of oxen; their first residence, a log cabin, stood on the site of Judge Scott's barn. Two or three years later he built the residence occupied by the late Amy Huntley. In 1827 Mr. Coit removed to the Coit homestead, the home of Lewis Coit, where he had cleared twenty acres and built a log house, and where he died Dec. 14, 1829. Lewis Coit and his younger brother William then had the labor of the farm and the care of their mother and her seven children. They cut wood three feet long and drew it to Hon. Staley N. Clarke (the only one who would buy it at any price) and sold it for fifty cents per cord. They saved the ashes in their fields and from the kitchen fire, leached them, and made black-salts. Their industrious mother spun and wove linen and wool and clad her family, and often wove cloth for her neighbors. They rode to church in summer in a lumber wagon drawn by oxen and in winter on a sled. Lewis Coit has twelve children living. His mother died at the age of sixty-seven years. In 1847 he married Maria Shults. He has been a dealer in working oxen.

Truman Rowley Colman was born in Coventry, Conn., Nov. 13, 1809, and was a resident of Ellicottville from 1829 until 1854. He was prominently identified with the land interests in Cattaraugus, Allegany, and Wyoming counties and besides carried on at times an extensive mercantile trade and banking business. In 1854 he removed to Dunkirk, N. Y., where he established what became the Lake Shore National Bank. He married Sophia M., a daughter of Moses Beecher. She died Sept. 30, 1867.

James Cotter, born in County Cork, Ireland, Oct. 31, 1831, received a good business education, and at the age of seventeen years, with his father, William, and brother Richard, emigrated to America in a sailing vessel and landed at Quebec after a voyage of six weeks and three days. In 1852 they all settled in Ellicottville. James Cotter, in May, 1858, invested what he had saved in a grocery store, which he continued until 1880, since which time he has lived a retired life. Mr. Cotter has always been a fair dealer. He is a liberal Democrat and during the late war he gave his aid and influence to the Union. He is a great reader. In religion he is a Catholic. Feb. 23, 1864, he was elected town collector of taxes; March 26, 1864, Addison G. Rice, Samuel William Johnson, and James Cotter were appointed a committee on the part of the town of Ellicottville to procure the number of men to fill the quota, and were allowed to pay bounties in their discretion, but in the aggregate not to exceed $4,800; Feb. 27, 1866, he was again elected collector; in 1872 he was a delegate to the Democratic State convention at Rochester and the same fall he was a delegate to the Democratic national convention at Baltimore, which nominated Horace Greeley for the presidency; he is now serving a three years' term as assessor. Oct. 27, 1858, he married Honora H. Hackett, a native of County Tipperary, Ireland, who was born Dec. 10, 1835, and came to Ellicottville in 1852. They have been members of the choir of the Catholic church about thirty years and Mrs. Cotter has been organist the last twelve years.

Burt J. Crawford was born in Napoli in 1861, was reared in Java, Wyoming county, and married Minerva Fuller, of Arcade, N. Y. For two years he kept hotel in Springville, N. Y., and in Nov., 1882, purchased the Crawford House in Ellicottville, which was burned May 11, 1890. He immediately rebuilt a fine brick hotel, which was conceded to be one of the handsomest structures and the best appointed hostleries in Cattaraugus county. This property he exchanged in February, 1893, for property in Buffalo, where he is now proprietor of the newly refitted Hotel Carlton on Exchange street.

William H. Davis, son of John H. and Almira Davis, was born in Montgomery county April 5, 1840. In 1845 the family removed to Ellicottville and located where William H. Davis now lives. Feb. 6, 1862, he enlisted in Co. C, 105th N. Y. Vols., reached Washington on April 8th, and the first night there slept on the ground, which during the night was covered with snow six inches deep. He was attacked with measles on the 10th and sent to the hospital, where he was confined three weeks, when he rejoined his regiment at Cloud's Mills, Va. From the effects of the measles he was again ill and confined in the hospital about two months. He participated in the battle of Cedar Mountain, Aug. 9, 1862, was in the battles of Warrenton Junction, Thoroughfare Gap, Second Bull Run, Chantilly, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Mine Run, and Cold Harbor, where he received a wound from a minie-ball which fractured his skull above the left eye and shattered his cheek bone, which has never united. From blood-poisoning from this wound he has totally lost his left lung. From the time he received the wound until July, 1865, he was confined in the hospital and was then mustered out with his regiment. He has been an invalid ever since. March 26, 1871, he married Lucy Eddy. Children: Emma O., Clara, William H., and Mildred.

Peter Drown, a native of Hartford, Conn., married Eliza Green and soon after removed to New York State. He was employed as a sentinel at the prison in Auburn about two years; settled on a farm in Sweden, N. Y., and marketed his wheat in Rochester for twenty-five cents per bushel; and about 1827 began anew in the woods in the northwest part of Ellicottville, where he cleared the land and gave all his family a good education. Mr. Drown served as commissioner of highways. His wife died in 1821 and left five children; his second wife, Sarepta Thayer, bore him nine children. Ten children are living; two reside in Ellicottville. Mr. Drown died March 11, 1875, aged eighty-three years. Elbridge, the youngest by the first wife, was born Nov. 5, 1819, began life as a jobber clearing land and taught school nine winter terms. He has been a farmer, and also a dealer in real estate and cattle. He married Frances, granddaughter of Rickertson Burlingame.

Oliver T. Drown, son of Peter and Sarepta (Thayer) Drown, was born in Monroe county Aug. 1, 1824, and about 1854 he removed to Spartansburg, Pa., where he engaged in mercantile business. In 1865 he came to Ellicottville and opened a general store, which he conducted until his decease in 1870. Sept. 3, 1849, he married Harriet, daughter of Jacob Huff, of East Otto, and they had four children, the oldest, Herman B. Drown, being the only survivor. He was born in Ellicottville in 1850, and commenced his business life as a druggist in Spartansburg, Pa., in 1876. In 1878 he returned to his native town, where he has since conducted a drug store. In 1876 Mr. Drown married Louise Huenerfeld, of Ellicottville. They have one son.

Alfonso Drown, youngest child of Peter, was born on the Drown homestead, where he now resides, Jan 10, 1842. He received a good English education, and married Nancy, daughter of Collins and Amanda (Walker) Batts, of New Albion. Mr. Drown has been an elder of the First Presbyterian church of Ellicottville for many years.

Peter M. Drown, son of Elbridge, born Jan. 22, 1854, received a good English education, and Oct. 11, 1879, married Flora Day. He settled on Bryant hill, where, when he took possession in 1872, his crop of hay was only eight tons; he has so improved his farm that in 1890 he harvested about 160 tons. Mr. Drown is a progressive farmer and gives his influence for the cause of temperance. Both are members of the Presbyterian church. Meetings of Bryant Hill Lodge, No. 808, I. O. G. T., are held at his house. Of this body he was its first chief templar.

Andrew Gray was born in Northumberland county, England, in 1790, and with his parents came to America in 1800, settling in Gorham, Ontario county, where they lived ten years. His father then purchased a tract of 500 acres of wild land in Caledonia, Livingston county, removed to it, and there the parents died. Andrew had 100 acres of this purchase. He married Agnes Rom- yen, Feb. 21, 1821, and in 1832 removed his family to a farm in the southeast part of Mansfield, where he died March 22, 1864, and his wife Nov. 27, 1879. Mr. Gray was a soldier in the War of 1812. They had five children. Their oldest son, George Gray, born in Caledonia, July 16, 1823, received an academic education, was a farmer, was nine years supervisor of Mansfield, and was many years a member of the Board of Trustees and a generous supporter of the Presbyterian church of Ellicottville. He gave his influence to every good and noble object and died Oct. 28, 1874. His brother, Abram Gray, was born in Caledonia, July 7, 1826. He supplemented his common school education with a year's attendance at an academy, remained with his parents until twenty-three years of age, and began business for himself as a carpenter and builder, which has since been his avocation. Many fine residences, among others St. Bonaventure's College at Allegany and the wooden bridge spanning the Allegheny river in South Valley, are monuments to his skill. Mr. Gray has resided in the village since 1873. He has been an elder of the Presbyterian church for twenty-one years and trustee twenty years.

Allen Green removed from Cazenovia, N. Y., to Sardinia, Erie county, in 1815. In 1826 he came to the northeast corner of Ellicottville, where he purchased 317 acres of wild land, and where his nearest neighbor was five miles distant. He died Sept. 13, 1859, and his wife, Mercy Putnam, May 5, 1872. Children: Charles, Job, Betsey, Clarinda, Obadiah, Allen M., Perry, Ellen, Sarah, Mary, and Job, 2d. Allen M. Green resides in Franklinville. Obadiah Green lived in Sardinia and became a prominent citizen.

Harvey Grinols, son of Daniel R. and Elsie (Tripp) Grinols, was born in Otto, Sept. 23, 1839, and Sept. 23, 1861, enlisted in Co. B, 9th N. Y. Cav., and was on duty with his regiment until he was attacked with fever and obliged to go to the hospital. He was transferred in an emaciated condition to Block Island Hospital, near Providence, R. I., from which he was discharged Oct. 28, 1862. He returned to his farm with ruined health and was obliged to give up so laborious an occupation, and now resides in the village, where he is engaged in dealing in light produce. Jan. 15, 1865, he married Lorinda Hinman, of East Otto, and they have two sons and two daughters.

Joseph, Owen, Miles, and Caleb Harrington, sons of Nathaniel Harrington, came from Otsego county and settled in Mansfield in 1826. The father had served as a soldier in the Revolutionary war and was a pensioner; he was a well-to-do farmer in Otsego county and gave each of his sons a yoke of oxen and fifty acres of land in Mansfield. They soon disposed of their farms; Joseph and Miles settled in Ellicottville, Owen went to Ohio, and Joseph and Caleb eventually located in Little Valley. Miles Harrington married Sarah, daughter of Benjamin Aiken. Their children were Henry W., Stephen A., Augustus C., and Sally D. Stephen A. Harrington, born on Fish hill in Mansfield, July 8, 1828, was early obliged to leave school, and finally entered the law office of his brother, where he was two or three years, leaving by the advice of his physician. He was a groceryman in Ellicottville most of his life, was an aggressive politician and a life-long Democrat, and sometimes in the heat of political campaigns he had a little trouble. He believed in the principles of the Democracy as opposed to those of the Whig party, and was an influential leader. He held several town offices, being justice of the peace nearly thirty years. He was a keeper in the Auburn prison until he resigned the position; he also did some conveyancing and pettifoggery in justice's court. He married Adaline Beecher, niece of Moses Beecher, of Ellicottville, and their children were Walter A. and Fred L.

John Hiller, born near Hamburg, Germany, about 1831, married Mary Lanchow, and in 1863 emigrated with his wife and three children to America, coming to Cattaraugus county and settling in East Otto. He was a brick-maker in his native country, but gave his attention to farming after locating here. He died in Ashford in 1868. His widow married William Fox, Sr., a native of Germany and a farmer. Mr. Hiller's children were Sophia (Mrs. A. Stadler); Henry J., who married Mary King and resides in Plato; and Herman F., a general merchant and an extensive dealer in farm produce. Mr. Hiller commenced his mercantile life a clerk at $12 per month and boarded himself. Three years later he began business where he had been a clerk.

Joseph Horning was born in Mecklenburg, Germany, in 1844. In 1871 he married Louise Weidmann and came to America. Being a carriage maker he prosecuted his trade successively in Little Valley and Ellicottville, and in the spring of 1880 settled on the farm near Ashford Junction where he now resides. Mr. Horning is also a dealer in agricultural implements and fertilizers. His wife died in 1872 and in 1874 he married Henrietta Busckrist, who is the mother of all his living children.

Daniel Huntley, a native of Connecticut, married Catherine, daughter of Thomas Stillwell, and in 1817 removed from Cortland county to Franklinville with his family. It appears that he possessed considerable means, for he bought a large tract of land sufficiently cleared to support thirty cows, which he drove to his place when he came, and began farming on a large scale for that day. His was probably the first dairy in Cattaraugus county. When the county seat was located in Ellicottville he purchased the eighty-acre farm now occupied by his grandson, William Huntley, and moved onto it; he subsequently increased his real estate to about 900 acres. In 1820 he built the Cattaraugus Mansion House and opened it to the public the ensuing year, and kept it until he died July 5, 1846. The hotel was continued by his family until 1872. Mrs. Huntley survived until Dec. 7, 1864. Their children were William, who died in 1828, and was the first person in Ellicottville who was buried with Masonic honors; Thomas S., a farmer at Huntley Station, Ill., the location being named in his honor; Daniel I.; Silas; Samuel; Amy;

Catharine, who died in 1827; and Jane M. (Mrs. P. J. McGowen). Daniel I. Huntley, born in Cortland county, Sept 5, 1810, married, in 1840, Eliza Hawkins, a native of Massachusetts who died in April, 1852, and Jan. 2, 1855, he married, second, Cordelia Chamberlain, who was also born in Massachusetts. Mr. Huntley was with his father assisting on the farm and in the hotel. After the sale of the latter he devoted his time and attention to agriculture. He was prominently interested in military affairs and held all the grades successively from second sergeant to brigadier-general of the militia of the State. He also held the office of county treasurer three years from 1843 and several minor civil positions. He was supervisor of Mansfield in 1862 and 1863. Thomas S. Huntley held the same office in Ellicottville in 1840, while Horace S. served the town of Little Valley in this capacity in 1856, '62, and '66.

Grove Hurlburt, the first settler in the town of Ellicottville, was born in Tolland, Conn., in 1765, and was an early settler in Whitestown, Oneida county. He next built and conducted a tavern at Oriskany and in 1809 settled on a farm of "lease lands" in the town of Rome. In 1815, after a journey of six weeks, he came upon Rickertson Burlingame, who was surveying this town into lots, and, being pleased with the location, went a few weeks later to the land office in Batavia and was offered inducements to settle as soon as the town was surveyed. In the ensuing fall he came with his son John and made choice of lots 56 and 57, containing 316 acres. They remained till fall and cut up the timber preparatory to clearing seven acres, and built a log house, the first habitation of white people in Ellicottville. Feb. 11, 1816, Grove Hurlburt's brother Reuben, with Grove's son and daughter John and Sally, arrived at this log cabin; the latter, then but eleven years old, became the temporary female head of the Hurlburt family, which honors she discharged until March 15th, when they were joined by her parents and the remainder of the family. Here Mr. Hurlburt spent the residue of his long life, dying Sept. 28, 1852. Mr. Hurlburt brought provisions, as he supposed, sufficient to last until he could raise and harvest a crop. The frosts of the "cold season" of 1816 destroyed his grain and corn and he had only a small crop of potatoes. The next season he made black-salts, which he exchanged for two barrels of flour at $18 per barrel. To carry the family through to wheat harvest John searched the country for five days to obtain one and one-half bushels of corn, which he purchased at $1.50 a bushel. Mr. Hurlburt planted the first orchard in town in the spring of 1816. They were obliged to go thirteen miles to mill and to Bethany and Le Roy in Genesee county for groceries. Bears and wolves preyed upon their sheep. John was taught by a hunter to trap the wolves and caught six in a winter, for which he received a bounty of $60 per head. Mr. Hurlburt erected the first frame barn in town in the fall of 1816 and built a comfortable frame house in 1822, now well preserved and occupied. He married Hannah Niles, of Whitestown, a native of Vermont, who was the mother of his thirteen children. Their seven sons are deceased.

William Johnston, a pioneer of Ellicottville, was born in Johnstown, N. Y., which place was named in honor of one of his ancestors. June 21, 1822, he married Sally, daughter of Grove Hurlburt. She was born in Whitestown, N. Y., Feb. 14, 1803. They first settled on a farm, but in November, 1826, removed to the village, where Mrs. Johnston still resides. Mr. Johnston was a skillful mechanic and conducted a cabinet shop. He was a man of influence in town and church affairs, was a justice of the peace, and held other town offices, and was a vestryman in the Episcopal church. Their children were John, a physician of Jackson, Mich.; Grove, deceased; Byron A.; William H., a soldier in the late war and now a dentist in the village; and Mary deceased. Mr. Johnston died in June, 1853. William H. Johnston, born Sept. 21, 1832, enlisted in August, 1862, in the 154th N. Y. Vols. as a musician and was honorably discharged from Mt. Pleasant hospital in February, 1863.

Capt. Byron A. Johnston, son of William and Sally (Hurlburt) Johnston, was born in Ellicottville, Jan. 31, 1827. In 1852 he went overland to California. He remained and two and a half years later returned by way of the isthmus. He was wrecked with 1,500 passengers on board the steamer Yankee Blade, off Point Conception, and over 100 passengers were lost. He was a carpenter by trade. May 7, 1861, he enlisted for two years in Co. H, 37th N. Y. Vols., and served as orderly-sergeant. He was discharged at Fort Washington, Md., Jan. 19, 1862, on a surgeon's certificate of disability. July 21, 1862, he re-enlisted in Co. A, 154th N. Y. Vols., for three years, as orderly-sergeant. Oct. 6, 1862, he was promoted as second lieutenant, May 1, 1863, as first lieutenant, and July 9, 1864, as captain. He participated in the first battle of Bull Run. With the 154th Regiment he was in the battles of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. With the Eleventh Army Corps he was transferred to the Army of the Cumberland on Sept. 28, 1863, and participated at Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge. He went with his regiment to the relief of General Burnside at Knoxville, Tenn., and returned to Lookout Valley in December, 1863, where his command spent the winter. In May, 1864, his regiment joined General Sherman and marched from Chattanooga to Atlanta. He continued with Sherman from Atlanta to the sea and from Savannah to Washington, and was mustered out in June, 1865.

Alanson King, son of Arnold and Candace (Cook) King, was born in Collins, Erie county, March 20, 1816, and married Charlotte Munger in Hanover, Chautauqua county, Jan. 12, 1843. He early became a major of militia, and in 1848 removed to Ashford, where he engaged in mercantile business and owned and conducted a flouring-mill and saw-mill. In 1849 he represented Ashford on the Board of Supervisors. He was an old line Whig, but on the organization of the Republican party joined its ranks. In 1856 he was elected a member of Assembly. He went to the Legislature for honest work and ably filled the position and the expectations of his constituents. Gen. Samuel W. Johnson, a Democrat, said of him: "He returned from the Legislature as poor as he entered it." Mr. King was man of more than average ability; he had great influence, and his integrity and honesty were unquestioned. In 1861 he received an appointment in the customs house in New York, where he remained until 1871. He resided in Ellicottville the ensuing two years and died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Candace M. Gaylord, in Tiona, Pa., Aug. 10, 1888, and was buried at Ashford with Masonic honors. His son, Edwin S. King, the only member of the family residing in Cattaraugus county, was born in Collins, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1844. At the age of fifteen he commenced teaching district schools and taught three winter terms. In Feb., 1862, he came to Ellicottville, and in 1872 formed a partnership in the drug business with Charles H. Matteson, whose interest he subsequently purchased. Mr. King was assistant assessor of internal revenue about ten months; after that office was abolished he was appointed deputy collector, holding the position in all eight years. He has been secretary of the Republican County Committee and clerk of the Board of Supervisors.

John Langhans, born in Lauenburg, Germany, Nov. 4, 1811, married Dora

Merow in Oct., 1841, and came to America in 1858, settling first in East Otto, where he and his family saved money to make a payment on one hundred acres of land on Jackman hill in Ellicottville, where his son John now lives. He removed to this farm in the fall of 1861 and died there Sept. 21, 1884. John Langhans, Jr., was born in Germany, Oct. 21, 1843, came to America with his parents, and Sept. 9, 1864, enlisted in Co. H, 154th N. Y. Vols., joining the regiment at Chattanooga, Tenn. He marched through Georgia in General Sherman's campaign and was honorably discharged with the rank of corporal at the close of the war. Since then Mr. Langhans has been a farmer. He is a Republican and has served his town as assessor. Oct. 21, 1868, he married Sophia Block and has three children. Henry Langhans married Dora Eulers, resides on a portion of the old homestead, and has three children. Julius Langhans, son of John, Sr., is a farmer in Mansfield.

William Lawler was born in the Parish of Kilconley, Ireland, about 1820, came to America in 1852, and was married in Buffalo, in 1854, to Jane H. Stack, a native of Ballylongford, Ireland. They settled the same spring in Peth in Great Valley. In March, 1873, they located on the farm at Ashford Junction where they still reside. They have five children living: Garrat T., William J., Eugene M., James E., and Charles A. Eugene M. Lawler was born Jan. 23, 1862, received his education in the common schools and at the Union school at Ellicottville, chose the printer's trade, and at the age of fourteen years entered the office of Hon. Robert H. Shankland, where he spent four years. In 1881 he opened a general store at Ashford Junction.

Beals E. Litchfield, youngest son and child of Ensign and Mary (Hayden) Litchfield, was born in Chesterfield, Hampshire county, Mass., Dec. 12, 1823. His ancestors were of English descent. At the age of scarcely seven years he came to the settlement of Ellicottville, where the blows of the pioneer's axe were resounding and the primeval forest yet standing, although it had been fourteen years since the birth of the first white child. He describes the arrival, etc., thus: "In the month of October, 1830, Ensign Litchfield and Mary, his wife, then residing in the town of Chesterfield, Hampshire county, Mass., and who were the parents of eleven children, of whom the writer is the youngest, loaded their seven youngest children into a covered wagon drawn by two horses, and bidding farewell to their native hills and home (where for many years they had struggled with adversity, though sometimes they rejoiced in prosperity) started to seek a new home in the then wild woods of Cattaraugus county, N. Y. After a tedious journey of two weeks the covered wagon with its load of emigrants arrived at a log tavern kept by Freeman Bryant, located in the town of Ellicottville on what has since been known as Bryant hill, and on the same place where Peter Drown's dwelling house now stands. Through the kindness of Mr. Bryant and his estimable companion, who had been old acquaintances of the emigrants in the east, the tired and hungry travelers were supplied with a bountiful dinner, to which they did ample justice. After the repast the team was hitched to the wagon and wended its way slowly over the roots and through the woods for about a mile and a half to where our oldest brother Simeon had a few months before pitched, not his tent like the wanderers of old, but his shanty in the woods, said shanty being built of logs and covered with basswood troughs. The floor was also made of basswood split open in the center and laid the flat-side up. The fire for warming and cooking purposes was built in one corner upon the ground, without hearth or chimney. There was an open space in the roof above the fire for the smoke to pass out, but when the wind blew much of the smoke returned to bid the inmates of the shanty a "good bye," and that "good-bye" blessing often caused the silent tear to fall and invariably left a smarting sting behind. This shanty was located on what is now known as the Dooly farm. At that time brother Simeon's family consisted of himself, wife, and three children and father's family of nine persons, and these fourteen people lived in that little shanty (the size of which was only twelve by sixteen feet) for four weeks, until brother Elisha, who was about twenty-one years of age, bought of Orrin Brown his chance on seventy-eight acres of land on lot 62, on which we now reside, and is a part of the Litchfield farm which at present contains three hundred acres. Not being able to obtain possession of the log house on the premises until the next spring, they built a "lean-to" against the back side of the log house, and there our father's family lived during the winter of 1830-31. Such were the conditions we met on our first introduction to Cattaraugus county. There were only a few acres cleared on the farm bought by father, and he and brother Elisha worked on that land the next summer. In October, 1831, Elisha married Amy Buck and in December his spirit left the material form and passed on to a higher condition of life in the spirit realms of existence. Our father, Ensign Litchfield, faithfully labored on the farm as a pioneer for ten years, and October 17, 1840, quietly passed to the higher life, sincerely mourned and sadly missed by his many relatives and friends. Our mother remained with us until May, 1858, when she was released from her material form and crossed the mystic river to join those who were waiting her on the other side. She was truly loved by all her children and friends and was much missed."

As Beals Litchfield grew in strength and years he assisted in the great work of transforming the forests into fruitful fields, became an agriculturist, and has ever been a careful and successful one. He loved and honored his vocation, and his opinions on agriculture are worthy of record. He says: "During the last quarter of a century I have noticed that many young men have left the farm and engaged in other occupations, either because they considered that of agriculture less dignified or less lucrative. There undoubtedly are other occupations or speculations in which, if successful, a large fortune can be more speedily accumulated than by agriculture, but I am sure that the different branches of agricultural pursuits contain all the elements and conditions necessary to bring wealth and happiness to those farmers who pursue their labors in a reasonable and scientific manner. Agriculture is the basis of all other pursuits, hence it can not be less dignified or less useful to mankind. In an early period it was supposed by many that a farmer did not need much education, that a half-idiot could plow, sow, reap, and mow, and consequently be a successful farmer, but opinions as well as agricultural implements have changed, and it is now admitted by well informed farmers that a scientific education is necessary for success in agriculture. A scientific application of labor and other means often unlocks nature's storehouse and fills the farmer's barn with the rich fruitage of the soil and his heart with joy, and I here affirm that agriculture is a chemical science and one of the most useful ever revealed by the Creator to mankind."*

Mr. Litchfield is modest and unassuming in his manners and honest in his convictions. For forty years he has been a believer in Spiritualism, was one of its pioneer speakers, and with conscientious endeavor he lives up to the truths of his belief. In 1890 he published a book, "Leaflets of Thought gathered from the Tree of Life," and has another volume (his autobiography) ready for publication. He has passed a quiet and uneventful life of three-score years and more on the beautiful place where his father first settled; here he brought his worthy helpmeet, Lucinda, daughter of Israel and Delight Thatcher, of Hopewell, Ontario county, whom he married October 14, 1847. Here they have dispensed a generous hospitality; here they have experienced many joys and many sorrows; here their children were born, and here they have mourned their departure for the spirit world; and from here after long and useful lives may they cross to the beautiful land beyond, and "meet their Pilot face to face."

Levi Litchfield, son of Ensign, was born in Massachusetts in 1805 and married Nancy French. In the spring of 1831 he settled in the north part of Ellicottville and in 1835 or '36 made a permanent home on the farm now owned by Fred Weishar. He cleared this farm, erected good buildings, aided in building school houses, and gave all his children a substantial education. During the Rebellion he sold his farm and retired to the village, where he died in June, 1887. Like most of the pioneers he worked hard, was a good financier, accumulated a fair fortune for a farmer, and was highly respected. His oldest son, Harvey Litchfield, was born in Massachusetts in September, 1826, was educated in the common schools, and early chopped, rolled logs, made black-salts, and at the age of twenty-six had 100 acres of his father's farm. He married Almira Boyce. He inherited his father's sterling qualities.

Andrew Lowe came to Ellicottville from Albany, where he had been a dry goods clerk six years. In 1837 he married Jane Bugby, who came to this town when only five years old and resided in the family of Spencer Pitcher. Mr. Lowe died in 1841, aged twenty-seven years; Mrs. Lowe died in July, 1887, aged sixty-seven. She was the widow of Moses Chamberlain, who died in Feb., 1864. Theodore Lowe, son of Andrew, was born Sept. 8, 1839. From 1859 to 1866 he was in the employ of Daniel Bartlett, who ran a stage line from Ellicottville to Great Valley, which he extended to Salamanca in 1864. In March, 1866, Mr. Lowe purchased the route and equipments and conducted the business until the completion of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad in 1878. Since then he has dealt in agricultural implements. He cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln in 1860, has been highway commissioner, and has been for twenty-seven years a Mason. Sept. 7, 1862, he married Celia Ward, of Great Valley.

Abram Mabee was born in Canajoharie, N. Y., July 4, 1839. His father was born a slave, but was liberated in early life; he resided in Syracuse at the time of the "Jerry rescue," and was so active in that memorable event that he removed to Canada to escape arrest as a rioter. Abram Mabee came to Ellicottville in 1850 and had a home in the family of Lewis Coit until he was twenty-one. In 1861 he went south as a servant of Captain Clark and soon after was a teamster in the U. S. service. In December, 1864, he enlisted in Co. A, 20th U. S. Col. Inf., and went with his regiment to New Orleans, being promoted to the rank of orderly-sergeant. He was at the siege of Port Hudson, Brownville, Texas, and Mansfield on the Red river, where he was shot in his right thigh, going thence to the hospital, whence he soon rejoined his regiment at Welkin's Bend on the Mississippi river. He was again sent to the hospital at New Orleans, and was honorably discharged at the close of the war. Since then he has been a barber in Ellicottville.

Bethuel McCoy, son of John and Hannah (Beach) McCoy, was born in New Jersey in 1807. When seventeen or eighteen he came to Great Valley as Judge Chamberlain's clerk, where he remained about five years. In the fall of 1828 he settled in Ellicottville and opened a general store, and was one of the leading merchants until the spring of 1847, when he sold to his brother Stephen and retired to a farm in Great Valley. There he spent the remainder of his life, dying May 12, 1876. He served the town of Great Valley as supervisor in 1865. Stephen McCoy was born in Seneca, N. Y., Jan. 26, 1817. He became a clerk for his brother Bethuel, and in May, 1847, bought the latter's interest in the store and conducted it until 1875. Mr. McCoy represented Ellicottville as supervisor in 1851 and 1852, the county as treasurer one term, and was loan commissioner two years.

John McMahon, born in County Clare, Ireland, in 1820, came to America in 1847, reaching Ellicottville with but a sixpence in his pocket. He entered the employ of Hon. John C. Devereux, with whom he continued until the latter's death. Mr. McMahon came here a stranger, but by untiring industry and excellent business ability he became prominent in the village and county. He was a leading spirit in the organization of the Cattaraugus Railway Company, now the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad, and erected a steam saw-mill in the village where he employed a large number of men. He also owned and conducted a flour and feed-mill and erected several dwellings and stores. Although born in the shadow of the British throne he nevertheless loved freedom and soon was invested with citizenship, but he still had a warm heart for the sufferings of Ireland. He died Aug. 22, 1887. He married Jennie Walsh, also a native of Ireland, who survived him until Nov. 8, 1888. Their surviving children are John D., James W., Daniel P., Thomas P., and Cathleen (Mrs. Martin B. Daley). James W. McMahon is much interested in the affairs of his town and has represented it on the Board of Supervisors nine years. He was the youngest delegate to the national convention that nominated Grover Cleveland for president in 1884 and has been a member of the Democratic State Committee, representing the 34th Congressional District.

James Moffit was born in Franklinville in Feb., 1843, was reared a farmer, was educated in the common schools and the academy at Geneseo, and Oct. 24, 1863, enlisted in Co. G, 64th N. Y. Vols., which a year later was transferred to the 187th Regiment, with which Mr. Moffit served to the close of the war, being honorably discharged in July, 1865. He received a gunshot wound and an abrasion of the skin on his right side at Petersburg. In 1865 he married Josephine Chapman and the same year opened a general store in Humphrey Center. In 1877 he was appointed postmaster and served six years. In 1883 he settled in Ellicottville and commenced the publication of the Ellicottville Post, a Republican weekly. Since 1888 his only son has been an equal partner.

Halsey F. Northrup was born in South New Berlin, Chenango county, in 1844. He obtained a thorough education, especially in mathematics, and early engaged in land surveying, civil engineering, and teaching. In the spring of 1868 he came to Ellicottville and taught the Union School one year, and practiced his profession during vacation. He then gave his whole attention to land surveying until 1875, when he began surveying for the oil pipe line companies. In the winter of 1877-78 he was employed by the Tide Water Pipe Line Company. He made the preliminary examination of the route, secured the right of way, made the surveys and maps, and examined the titles of the lands over which the line passes, which has required nearly all his time, much care, and great research. He is still the civil engineer of this company in charge of all surveying, engineering and right of way matters.

This great line is 285 miles long, passes in a generally direct line, and the pipe of wrought iron is six inches in diameter. The oil is propelled from seven stations. The greatest altitude above tide water is 2,600 feet at Summit, Potter county, Pa. He purchased about 3,000 acres of wild lands in different sections of Cattaraugus county, which he has been selling out in parcels. He owns twenty-one oil wells in Allegany county, which are managed by his partner. He is also the present president of the village of Ellicottville. In 1874 he married Mary Lansing, of Greene, N. Y., and has a son and two daughters.

Michael Oyer, son of Frederick, was born in Herkimer county about 1802. He early came to Ashford with his father, who as a farmer began at what is now called New Ashford, coming in by marked trees over corduroy roads and pole bridges. The nearest grist-mill was at Springville in Erie county, whither they went in summer with a wood-shod sled drawn by oxen. Frederick Oyer resided there until his death; his wife lived to be ninety-nine years of age. Michael Oyer married Betsey Hammond, of East Otto, and settled near his father soon afterward. Selling out five years later he settled on a farm partly cleared in East Otto, where he died. He had six daughters and one son. The latter, Joseph Oyer, married Delilah Dye in 1863, was a farmer in East Otto, and in 1861 enlisted in Co. A, 7th Ill. Vols., for three months. In 1865 he purchased a half-interest in a general store of his brother-in-law, J. D. Larabee, in Ashford Hollow, where he was a merchant ten years. In Feb., 1881, he removed to Ellicottville, where he deals in horses and has a livery stable.

Joshua R. Pettit, born in Tonawanda, N. Y., Dec. 18, 1839, commenced his business life in Ellicottville in 1860, and Aug. 12, 1862, enlisted in Co. A, 154th N. Y. Vols., serving until the close of the war, being most of the time a sergeant of an ambulance corps. In 1866 he opened a grocery in Ellicottville.

Orrin Pitcher, a native of Norwich, Mass., married Miranda Woodruff in Broome county, N. Y., and settled there about 1807. In 1813 he came to Ellicottville and cut down the timber on about two acres where the village now stands, and returned to his family in Broome county. In the fall he brought his wife and son (David S.) and three daughters to Franklinville, whence in the spring he made a path to Peth in Great Valley and removed to a shanty which he had built there. In the succeeding winter he occupied the log house of Grove Hurlburt while building a similar residence for himself. His log cabin occupied the site of the old Mansion House, now the Whitney House, and was the first habitation within the village corporation. This place he sold to Daniel Huntley. He eventually removed to Illinois and thence to Iowa, where he spent the last twelve or fifteen years of his life, dying at the age of eighty-four years. His wife died aged over eighty-seven. David S. Pitcher, their oldest son, born in Broome county in 1809, came with his parents to Ellicottville in 1814 and lived to see the wilderness transformed into a thriving town and village. His brother Orlando, born in June, 1816, was the first white male child born in Ellicottville.

Clark P. Quackenbush, second son of John and Mary (Bargy) Quackenbush, was born in Ashford, July 7, 1849, and June 7, 1871, married Augusta Hinman, of his native town, who was born in Mansfield, April 8, 1849. He settled on his father's homestead of 233 acres, which he owned, and where he remained eleven years, when he began keeping hotel in Ashford Hollow. In March, 1883, they settled in Ellicottville. They have three daughters.

Charles P. Randall, a native of Chenango county, married Margaret Dimmick, and as near as can be ascertained made with his bride his first settlement in Mansfield on Fish hill. He cleared a farm and in a few years became an extensive dealer in sheep and cattle. He resided in Mansfield until his death Dec. 31, 1859; Mrs. Randall died June 21, 1855. Children: Mary (Mrs. C. McCoy), who died in 1859; Joseph D., born in Mansfield, June 16, 1836; George, born in June, 1838; Ralph C., born in March, 1840; and Frank W., born May 17, 1846. Joseph D. Randall married Charity Shannon, of Bridgeport, N. Y. He has been a successful business man, has been an inspector of telegraph for the United States Telegraph Company, has owned several star mail routes, has been a grocer, has drilled a number of oil wells, at one time owning nineteen, has dealt in live stock and largely in real estate, and has built a large number of residences. He is now postmaster of Ellicottville. Mr. Randall cast his first vote for General Fremont and has been a pronounced Republican since the organization of the party.

E. T. Reed, son of J. W., was born in Ashford, May 29, 1853, and choosing dentistry as a profession became a pupil of Dr. Carlos Wait, of Springville, N. Y., where he spent two years. He located in Ellicottville in the spring of 1877, where he has since resided, and where he has acquired a flourishing practice. Dr. Reed was burned out in the great fire in May, 1890, but quickly became settled in his present handsome quarters.

Quartus Rust, born in Chester, Mass., Sept. 4, 1790, early learned the carpenter's trade, and about 1815 married Polly Ellis, who was born Aug. 17, 1792, and who died in January, 1813, leaving an infant son. In 1817 Mr. Rust married Martha Stanton and in 1818 came to Ellicottville. He paid a neighbor $50 to bring his family and their goods to their home in the woods with a yoke of oxen and a heavy wagon, and they were six weeks making the journey. They settled on Bryant hill, where he was a successful pioneer farmer. Mrs. Rust died Nov. 8, 1846. Children: Quartus Ellis, born in Massachusetts, June 2, 1815; Lewis, who died in infancy; Lewis S., born July 25, 1819, who was killed at Second Bull Run; John W., born March 11, 1821, was a mechanic and farmer, and died April 26, 1872; Mary A., born Jan. 21, 1823, married Howland Washburn, and died Nov. 13, 1871; Angeline, born in December, 1830, died July 12, 1842; and Edwin R., born March 31, 1832, a farmer who faithfully cared for his aged parents until their decease, and who now resides with his nephew, Charles C. Rust, in the village. Quartus Rust married for his third wife Mrs. Sarah, widow of Lyman Todd, May 8, 1853; he died Sept. 10, 1854, and she May 10, 1884. Mr. Rust was a justice of the peace for twenty-five years. Quartus E. Rust was a cabinet maker by trade and a farmer on the homestead. In 1859 he settled in the village and conducted a cabinet shop and furniture store until his death Sept. 8, 1889. Dec. 19, 1839, he married Electa M. Knight, who died March 17, 1861; she was the mother of all his children: Amelia M., Charles C., and Ellis E. March 3, 1863, Quartus E. Rust married Ann McCoy.

Henry Saxton was born in Vermont and came to Ellicottville as a clerk in 1817 or '18 for Baker Leonard, whose widow he married. He died of cholera in Louisville, Ky., in 1834, aged thirty-four years. Mr. Saxton possessed great energy and large natural resources, and was a leading citizen of the town and county. He was elected sheriff in 1828, which position he resigned at the beginning of the last year of his term. He was a prominent merchant in Ellicottville and had branch stores in Springville and Randolph; he was also an extensive dealer and manufacturer of pine lumber. He leased a mill-site on the Allegheny river where Salamanca now is and there built the first mill, and used the river as a highway to convey his lumber to market. Children: Albert, who lives in Sacramento, Cal.; Hannah L., widow of J. King Skinner, resides on the homestead where she was born, and which now shelters three generations of the family; Baker Leonard, who enlisted in Co. A, 154th N. Y. Vols., for three years, re-enlisted in the 179th N. Y. Regt. as first lieutenant, and was killed in front of Petersburg; Frederick A., of Washington, D. C.; Walter, who died in 1855; and Ebenezer. Henry Saxton was supervisor of Ellicottville in 1828.

James M. Sheffield, born in Great Valley, March 13, 1847, was raised in Ellicottville, and Sept. 26, 1864, enlisted in Co. F, 43d U. S. Col. Troops, and was honorably discharged Sept. 28, 1865, at Brownville, Texas, receiving in an engagement a permanent injury of his right eye. William H. Sheffield, his father, was a soldier in the 26th U. S. Col. Troops, saw hard service, was disabled from field duty, and was detailed as hospital steward until discharged.

Rev. Courtney Smith, born in Bolton, Warren county, March 21, 1806, died in Ellicottville, Feb. 22, 1884. He received a thorough education, studied theology with his brother, Rev. Reuben Smith, of Waterford, and later received the degree of A.M. from Middlebury College in Vermont. Mr. Smith was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Troy, N. Y., Sept. 10, 1834, and was ordained within a year afterward. He entered upon the labors of his profession in his native town, where he remained seven years, and was then in Warrensburgh, N. Y., fourteen years, was the pastor of a church in Grand Rapids, Mich., nearly ten years, and was four years at Portland, Chautauqua county. Mr. Smith settled in Ellicottville in the fall of 1869 and was duly installed as pastor of the church about a year later. He remained to the close of his life their faithful, efficient, and zealous pastor, and the church prospered under his ministration. He was an argumentative and eloquent sermonizer, an easy and pleasing conversationalist, and the highest type of a Christian gentleman. He had strong and decided convictions of duty and the courage to advocate what he decided was right. Aug. 28, 1828, he married Sarah McIntyre, of Bolton, who survived him.

Theodore Smith was born in Orwell, Rutland county, Vt., on the 28th of June, 1809. He was the sixth in descent from Rev. Henry Smith, who came from England an ordained minister and was installed first pastor of the church at Weathersfield, Conn., in 1636, and died in 1648. In the last century the family moved from Connecticut to Vermont, where it soon became noted for its broad minds and independent natures. It furnished from its numbers many men who became prominent in Colonial affairs and in the councils and on the battlefields of the new Republic. Hon. Pliny Smith, father of Theodore, born in 1761, died in 1840, was the leading mind in northern Vermont in his lifetime, and at different periods was a member of the General Assembly, a State senator, and for many years a justice of the Supreme Court of Vermont. Theodore Smith was educated at the high school and at the college at Castleton. At the age of twenty-one he married Lucy, daughter of Dr. Asher Nichols, and shortly afterward moved to Springville, N. Y., where he began life as a merchant. In 1838 he moved to Ellicottville and entered the office of the Holland Land Company under Mr. Clarke, whose daughter, Eunice Sarah, he had married, his first wife having died some years previously. In 1843 he was admitted to the bar, but never practiced; the legal training, however, proved of great value to him in later life when, burdened with the care of his own and other estates, he had many complicated interests to protect, and the welfare of widows and orphans depended upon his knowledge of legal duties. In the early thirties the Holland Land Company sold its interests to the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company of New York and the latter some years afterward transferred its title to several private individuals. Among these were Mr. Smith and Truman R. Colman, who since 1843 had been partners in the banking business. They fully appreciated the opportunity which lay before them at this time and purchased over 150,000 acres of land in Cattaraugus and Allegany counties, which they disposed of to the settlers in the same manner as the old company. In 1852 the partnership was dissolved, after which Mr. Smith remained in Ellicottville disposing of his share of the partnership lands until 1863, when he removed to New York.

Although not a politician and never in office Mr. Smith took great interest in public affairs. Thoroughly independent in feeling, with ideas founded on long study of political and constitutional writers as well as affairs of the day, he was above and beyond party bias, and followed what seemed to him to be the line of public policy most conducive to the interests of the whole rather than a party or section of the nation. Previous to 1860 he had taken no active part in matters of public interest beyond the discussion incident to a political campaign, and then only to express briefly his views upon the point at issue. But in that year the question of the conservation of the Union, the fatuity of the doctrine of States' rights, and the attempt to abolish a system that was contrary to the basal idea of the constitution stirred within him the spirit he had inherited from his Puritan ancestors. He resolved to do his duty to his country so far as it lay within his power. Prevented by physical weakness from serving at the front he directed his energies towards supplying the material with which the struggle was to be won. With a thoroughness which was a characteristic feature, he went to Washington and familiarized himself with the detail of army life which was to be seen in the great army then encamped near the capital during the period of McClellan's campaign. He likewise visited the various departments of the government and was favored with an interview with the president. At the second call for troops in 1861 Mr. Smith gave his time to the raising of volunteers and the organization of regiments for service. He canvassed Cattaraugus county from end to end, exhorting the people both publicly and privately to do their part for the Union. When companies were formed in the various towns he cheered the departing volunteers with inspiring and patriotic words. Ordinarily of an undemonstrative and unimpassioned manner he became at such inspiring moments a fascinating and brilliant speaker, and through the fervor of his addresses and the earnestness of his manner stirred the enthusiasm of the men of the county to give their best efforts for the Union. In 1863 Mr. Smith went to New York, spending his time between that city and Cattaraugus county until the end of the war, when he moved to Buffalo, where he lived until his death, Jan. 12, 1883. About the time of his removal to Buffalo he gradually began to give up active business, leaving his interests in the hands of his son, Archibald Clarke Smith, and devoted the remainder of his years to his books and to travel. In 1868 he suffered a severe loss by the death of his only daughter, Lucy Nichols, wife of James Curtis Beecher. In time the infirmities of age became too strong to permit an active life, and, surrounded by his family and guiding the development of a younger generation grown up beside him, he passed his last years among the comforts and blessings to which an energetic and benevolent life entitled him. His wife, the eldest daughter of Hon. Staley Nichols Clarke, as perfect a woman as her father was a man, and whose motherly kindness many have cause to bless, has survived Mr. Smith many years.

Mr. Smith was a man of great breadth of character and depth of mind. Fond of study, he devoted his spare moments to his library and was a writer not only of the spirited addresses delivered during the war, but of many short stories and critical essays of literary worth. Combined with these talents were a fund of dry humor and the faculty of easy expression, all of which made him fascinating and instructive in conversation; men left him feeling charmed and elevated by his presence. Of Puritan stock he was naturally severe and critical, but once convinced of the merit of a man there was no more steadfast friend than he. He was charitable and kind, convinced that it was no merit but the pleasantest of duties to serve and make others happy. He was a man of great business capacity, whose foresight and sagacity brought his many interests through dangerous crises, and seized the opportunity where a wrong step would not only have ruined himself, but brought desolation to the many who trusted him.

William Somerville, son of James, was born in Dalkeith, Scotland, in March, 1797. His father was a miller; William was a stone cutter. In 1817 he came to America and went to Washington, D. C., where he was employed on the capitol over two years. Returning to Europe he married, in London, in March, 1822, Hannah Hill, and brought his bride to Washington, where he was employed on the White House. Remaining there until the completion of the national buildings he returned to New York, where he conducted shops of his own until 1842, when he came to Ellicottville and settled on the farm where his son, Henry Somerville, now lives, in Somerville valley, so named in his honor. He died in 1859; his wife died in 1852. Mr. Somerville was a member of the Baptist church. He had ten children who came to "The Valley" with their parents; only five are living. Henry Somerville succeeded his father on the homestead. He was supervisor of Ellicottville in 1892 and was re-elected in 1893.

John W. Staunton and his wife, Sally Brewster, were born in Massachusetts and soon after their marriage removed to Nunda, N. Y. In March, 1820, with three children and all their household goods loaded in a heavy covered wagon drawn by two yoke of oxen, they came to Ellicottville and settled on a farm. He died here at the house now the home of the widow of Dr. J. B. Staunton, Dec. 13, 1858. Mr. Staunton was a well educated gentleman of dignified deportment whose integrity was above question. He was the first town clerk of Ellicottville in 1821, was supervisor in 1823, 1824, 1825, and 1829, and was clerk of Cattaraugus county from Jan. 2, 1826, to Jan. 1, 1838.

William Stokes, son of Michael Stokes, was born in Limerick, Ireland, in 1849; in 1856 his parents came to America, and in 1861 he settled with them on a farm in the north part of Ellicottville. At the age of twenty-seven he became a carpenter, and almost continually since then has been engaged as a contractor and builder, employing from twelve to twenty men. Mr. Stokes is a skillful mechanic and drafts his own work. The Union school building in Ellicottville, the new Crawford House, the Catholic church at Suspension Bridge, the Congregational church at Kane, Pa., the Catholic church at Tonawanda, and numerous residences are monuments to his skill.

Asher Tyler became land agent for the Devereux tract in 1836, and during his residence in Ellicottville he was elected to Congress. He was a man who commanded universal respect and possessed remarkable ability. He subsequently removed to Elmira and was appointed land agent of the Erie railroad, and died there in 1875. "He knew the Indian when as yet the white man's mastery over lands west of Schenectady was only in process of recognition."

Joseph Vaughan, of English descent, married Lydia Rood and in 1810 removed to Pennsylvania. In 1822 they settled in the woods on Bryant hill and about 1830 located in Somerville valley, where they spent the remainder of their lives. Mr. Vaughan was a blacksmith before he came to Ellicottville. He had twelve children, nine of whom grew to maturity. Joseph Millen Vaughan, their first child, born in Massachusetts, May 21, 1808, married Polly Litchfield, of Ellicottville, Feb. 17, 1832, who was born in Chesterfield, Mass., Sept. 6, 1811. They settled on a woodland farm adjoining his father's place, where Mrs. Vaughan still resides. Mr. Vaughan died Jan. 13, 1870. Their eleven children all grew to maturity.

Walter Walrath, son of David and Elizabeth Walrath, was born in Manheim, Herkimer county; Aug. 28, 1826, and in 1844 came to Cattaraugus county. In Dec., 1852, he married Mary Richards and in 1856 settled on a farm near Great Valley Center, which he still owns. He enlisted in the Union army in 1862, leaving his wife and four helpless children, the youngest an infant only six days old. He followed the vicissitudes of the 154th Regiment three years, except that he was a prisoner four months, and escaped without a wound, but had several hair-breadth escapes. A bullet passed through his cap and clipped a lock of his hair, and again his gun was shattered in pieces in his hands. In 1865 he was discharged and is now leading a retired life in the village of Ellicottville. His children are Adelaide (Mrs. J. Chase), Nelson D., Dr. Charles M. (see Medical Chapter), Walter D., and John C.

A. Spencer Weir married Lucretia Beebe and settled on a farm in Freedom in 1836. He was an exemplary citizen and died there in 1888; Mrs. Weir died in 1877. Their oldest son, Charles A. Weir, born in 1852, received an academic education, learned the mercantile business, and at the age of twenty years became a general merchant in Arcade. A year later he removed to Yorkshire Center and in 1889 settled in Ellicottville, opening a furniture store and an undertaking establishment. His maternal grandfather, Charles Beebe, was a very early pioneer of Freedom. In his early manhood he built a log house in the woods and brought to this home his young wife and their first-born child. He resided in Freedom until the approach of old age, when he and his wife retired to Arcade, where they died.

CHAPTER XXVII.*

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF FARMERSVILLE.

FARMERSVILLE was formed from Ischua on the 29th of March, 1821, and has an area of 29,843 acres. It is bounded on the east by Allegany county, on the south by Lyndon and Franklinville, on the west by Machias, and on the north by Freedom and a small part of Machias. The town lies on the eastern edge of Cattaraugus county near the northeast corner. The surface consists mainly of large rolling hills, with quite an extensive and beautiful valley along the banks of Ischua creek and at the head of Mud lake, the outlet of which is the south branch of Cattaraugus creek. The land, though rolling, is little of it too steep for cultivation; indeed there is no town in the county and probably none in the State with less waste or untillable land than Farmersville. The soil on the hills is a rich, vegetable mold admixed with yellow loam, with a subsoil of clay or hardpan. The valleys consist of a vegetable mold and gravelly loam. The whole is well adapted to grazing and the production of hay, grain, and potatoes. Hay and cheese are shipped in large quantities. Agriculture forms the chief occupation of the people.

A watershed near the center of the town rises to a height of nearly 1,000 feet above the Allegheny river at Olean. On the north are the headwaters of the south branch of Cattaraugus creek and on the south some of the tributary branches of the Ischua creek have their source.

According to Marvin Older, now an aged and respected resident of Franklinville, the first settlements in Farmersville were made on Ischua flats, lots 33 and 34, in 1815 and 1816, by Elijah and John Rice, brothers, Joseph Fowler, Pell Keed, Ashbel Freeman, Ashbel Bard, and Real Price. None of them remained citizens of the town many years. Ashbel Freeman died in 1821, leaving a widow and family who retained and lived on the homestead for a long time. Mr. Freeman was appointed judge of what was then the Olean judicial district. Mr. Bard soon removed to Franklinville. There were evidences of civilized settlements on the Ischua creek and on the south side of Mud lake and its outlet at an early date. The supposition is they left previous to the War of 1812 from fear of the Indians. From appearances of graves on these clearings, and from wrecks of old buildings, people died of all ages and were buried prior to 1815.

In February, 1817, the first permanent settlement was made where Farmersville Center now is by Richard Tozer, Peter and Cornelius Ten Broeck, Peleg Robbins, and Levi Peet. The October previous the first three named contracted for six hundred acres of land and erected the body of a log house. The land was equally divided. The evening of the arrival of the five persons named and the wife of Richard Tozer, the only one married, it commenced snowing and in thirty-six hours the snow was nearly three feet deep. For two days and nights the company remained with such covering as they could improvise from their scanty bedding. The third day with great difficulty they made their way through the woods to McCluer's saw-mill, ten miles away, and obtained boards to cover their house. In May Peter Ten Broeck sold his land (200 acres) to Levi Peet. Ten Broeck and Peleg Robbins went on a tour of discovery, but returned to Farmersville in August. After remaining a few weeks the Ten Broecks returned to Otsego county, the home of their parents, on foot, by way of Buffalo, Niagara Falls, and Rochester. In February, 1818, they returned to Farmersville. Cornelius located near the village and Peter first contracted for 100 acres in the southeast part of the town on Ischua creek, to which he added until he became the largest landholder in the county.

Brief biographical reminiscences of many of the early settlers and their descendants appear on subsequent pages of this chapter, but short notices of some of the town's pioneers are given herewith. Cornelius Ten Broeck prospered as a farmer. Though at first, like his brother Peter, he opposed the temperance reform, he afterward signed the pledge, joined the Baptist church, and was a consistent member until his death in 1843. Peleg Robbins located on lands joining Peter Ten Broeck, where he lived and prospered. For the next few years the settlers were governed by some simple regulations. In 1822 the town was organized and Richard Tozer elected supervisor; Levi Peet served by appointment during 1821. Of the five early settlers Levi Peet is the only one now represented by children in the town. Silas L., his third son, is a large landowner, a wealthy and enterprising farmer. The next youngest by his second wife is also a highly respected farmer.

The town increased in population quite rapidly. Among those who became inhabitants previous to its organization were Nehemiah Parish, a soldier of the Revolution who came from Henrietta, N. Y., in 1818, and his sons Roswell, Shubael, and Zabad. Jeremiah Parish and his son Smith emigrated to this town in 1821. The elder was a Revolutionary veteran. The son Smith became a resident of Portville in 1831 and was one of the ablest and most enterprising men of the county. He was an Assemblyman, and while there was stricken down with paralysis, which impaired his health, but mind and heart remained active for many years. Among other residents in 1821 were William Adams, S. Williams, I. Burns, Simeon Bradford (who built the first good frame residence where Farmersville Station now is), Solomon Curtis, Ashbel Freeman, John Flagg, William Gilley, Russel Hubbard, Lyman Hubbard, Daniel Hodges (who represented the county in the Assembly in 1825, was one of the best and ablest men in the vicinity, and who became insane in 1832 and remained so until his death), Joseph Hazelton, James Leland, Thomas Leet, Caleb Lewis, Joseph Mills, John D. Older (the first surveyor), William Older, Jesse Older, Elijah Rice, John Rice, 2d, Clark Rice, David Rood, Cyrus Rood, William Stilwell, Chauncey Taylor, Lucius Tyler (an early justice of the peace), Uriah D. Wood, Alfred Willey, Samuel G. White, Moses Wade, and William Waring, father of John Waring, of this town. The settlers of 1822 were Zachariah Blackmon (a soldier of the Revolution) and his sons Franklin, Jabez, Gaius R., Ransom, and James.

The Blackmons were a very hardy race—all blacksmiths. All the sons were hard drinkers in youth and early manhood. Every one of them reformed and remained teetotalers until their deaths. Franklin and James made this town their home nearly all their lives. Franklin was for many years a member of the Methodist church and died in 1879 in that faith. James R. was a long-time deacon in the Baptist church, but in 1856 became converted to modern spiritualism and remained a firm believer and an earnest advocate of that faith until his death in 1878. The only representatives of the Blackmon family now in town are Lyman, Horace, Elizabeth (Mrs. Jediah Hubbard), and Susan (Mrs. Daniel Baldwin), children of James R. and Persus Blackmon. They are worthy descendants of a sterling race.

John Hayford came in March, 1819, and reared a large family; Mrs. George O. Giles and Mrs. James Caldwell are the only representatives living in town. Mrs. Hayford would accomplish what seems now a fabulous amount of all kinds of family labor. Ora Bond was for a number of years a justice of the peace. He went west many years ago.

Between 1822 and 1826 came Israel B. Abbott, Tracy Avery, John Barnhart, Solomon S. Buller, Edward Bumpus, John Bowers, Samuel Butler, Perry H. Bonney, Ezra Belknap, Harvey Butler, Preserved Bullock, Artemas Barnes, Alva Burgess, James E. Bishop, Asa Bullard, Solomon Burns, John Aiken, and Francis E. Baillet. The latter taught a school in a small log school house, in district No. 10, erected in the summer of 1827. It had a huge stone chimney and fire-place, was sixteen by sixteen feet, and not over six feet and a half between joints. He received $10 per month and boarded at home, a mile away, and took his pay mostly in work. He taught the school a number of winters. He was fond of fun. The school was made up largely of nearly full-grown boys and girls, and one of the prime amusements was blindman's buff. He was a sterling, capable man and far removed from profanity or vulgarity. He was elected county clerk in 1837, 1843, and 1846, and was one of the best recorders and most exact business men the county has ever had. His kind-hearted wife as well as himself will be remembered through many generations.

The following came to Farmersville in 1826: Eli Burbank, Jonathan Carpenter, Curtis Carpenter, Zenas Carpenter, Elma Clark, Caleb S. Cooley, Dyer Coudrey (first physician), Abram Cayter, Jacob Comstock (the first merchant in 1826), Ashbel Carter, James Calkins, Curtis B. Divine, William Dunham, Silas Dort, Salmon Dutton, Albert Fancher, Ezekiel Flanders, Frederic Farrington, Timothy Henry, George W. Gillet, Charles Gary, Abner Grinnell, Richard Goodwin, Ira S. Hatch, Ebenezer Harris, Hiram A. Hill, John Henry, Peter Holmes, Cicero Holmes, Gordon Henry, Peter Hadlack, William A. Harris, Samuel Henry, Ezra Kellogg, Ebenezer Reed, Samuel Mulliken, Marcellus McGowen, Enoch Richardson, Nathaniel Rowley, Gershom Rowley, Jr., Amos Rose, Benjamin Rose, Jonathan Rich, William Ross, Simeon Smead, John Squares, Enoch Sanborn, Alvah Skinner, Asahel Spoor, Nicholas Spoor, James Tarbell, William L. Thomas, Marvel Thayer, Anthony Van Schaick, Jacob Wade, Henry Wade, John D. Wade, James Weston, Oliver Wakefield, Joseph Wedge, James West, and George Wickwire. Of this long list of settlers it is doubtful if one of them brought $500 in cash.

Gordon Henry, born in 1777, probably had nearly that sum, and he bought 150 acres of land of Richard Tozer two miles north of the Center, with twenty acres cleared and a small log house and a framed barn. For this he paid $150 and the same amount on the original contract with the Holland Land Company. This was the largest cash deal in land here up to 1826.

Zachariah Lawrence explored the towns of Rushford and Farmersville in 1812 and made a permanent settlement in Rushford near the town line in 1818, moving into Farmersville in 1822, where he was a successful farmer. One son, Hiram M., is now a resident at Farmersville Station. In 1844 W. H. Williams, the first immigrant from Wales, bought the Willey farm, now a part of S. L. Peet's place. He paid for it in gold—about the first cash purchase of land made in town. Soon after John Griffith and Owen Owens followed; David, Charles, and Robert Jones came in 1849 and D. P. Hooper in 1852. Many other Welsh families soon moved in, nearly all farmers, and either bought or rented farms. Nearly all have raised large families and are among the most industrious and patriotic citizens. There are also a few Irish families and several representatives of sunny Italy now residents of the town.

During the winter of 1829-30 the first temperance society was formed. The pledge of that society only required abstinence from distilled spirits. Gordon Henry and his sons Anson G., Backus, and Thomas, Levi Peet, David Carpenter, Russel and Lyman Hubbard, Nathaniel and Gershom Rowley, Peres Brown, Jr., and fifteen others joined at the first meeting, and nearly every man remained faithful to his pledge. There is one exception. Levi Peet built a hotel and commenced keeping a temperance house; his customers were so few, his profits so small, and the calls of his large family so urgent that he put liquor into his bar. The protests of his excellent wife and the reproofs of his own conscience were so severe that he continued his traffic but a short time, and for nearly fifty years he was one of the most faithful, self-sacrificing, and able temperance advocates in the county. The movement met with violent opposition. A few evenings later the "rummies" met at the hotel and formed what they called a true temperance society, pledged not to drink so as to thicken the tongue, interfere with their walk, or in any way disguise themselves.

The first town meeting was held at the house of Richard Tozer, March 5, 1822, nearly one year after the township was erected, and the following officers duly elected: Richard Tozer, supervisor; Elijah Rice, town clerk; Russel Hubbard, John D. Older, Peter Ten Broeck, assessors; Peleg Robbins, collector; James Leland, Uriah D. Wood, overseers of the poor; Lyman Hubbard, William Stilwell, Joseph Mills, highway commissioners; Solomon Curtis, Jr., Alfred Willey, Peter Ten Broeck, commissioners of common schools; Thomas Leet, Peter Ten Broeck, Russel Hubbard, Samuel G. White, inspectors of common schools; William Stillwell, Levi Peet, William Waring, justices of the peace; Moses Wade, William Burns, Jr., Peleg Robbins, constables. The following lists give the principal town officers since 1822:

Supervisors.—Richard Tozer, 1822-24, 1826; Russel Hubbard, 1825, 1828, 1832, 1836, 1851; Peter Ten Broeck, 1827, 1857-58, 1841-42; Ora Bond, 1829-30, 1840; Jonathan Graves, 1831; George W. Gillet, 1833-35; Russell Barlow, 1839; Solomon Cummings, 1843-44, 1846-48; Edwin Taylor, 1845; Jarvis Leonard, 1849; Reuben Cross, 1850; Andrew C. Adams, 1852-53; James Nichols, 1854-55; Marsena Baker, 1856-58; David Carpenter, 1859-61, 1864, 1871; James H. Day, 1862; J. T. Cummings, 1863; Adelbert Carpenter, 1865; William Henry, 1866; Andrew Knight, 1867; Levi L. Lines, 1868-70; Albert E. Robbins, 1872-73; Henry S. Merrill, 1874-76, 1882-84; James Caldwell, 1877-78; Squire C. Hayden, 1879; Alonzo Older, 1880-81; Melvin E. Smith, 1885-93.

Town Clerks.—Elijah Rice, 1822-24; Jacob Comstock, 1825; Lucius Tyler, 1826-27; George W. Gillet, 1828-31, 1840; Francis E. Baillet, 1832-37, 1842-43; Solomon Cummings, 1838-39, 1841; Grove B. Graves, 1844; Luther Cross, 1845-49; James Nichols, 1850-52; M. Hayford, 1853; Delos J. Graves, 1854; Reuben Cherryman, 1855, 1857; James A. Parker, 1856; Myron Older, 1858-60, 1863-64; J. T. Cummings, 1861-62, 1866-67; Franklin Osborn, 1865; Albert E. Robbins, 1868-71; S. C. Rowley, 1872; D. G. Hubbard, 1873; John Worthington, 1874-75; Scott Cummings, 1876-77; M. E. Smith, 1878-82, 1884; W. D. Smith, 1883, 1885-90, 1893; George D. House, 1891-92.

Justices of the Peace.—1822, William Stilwell, Levi Peet, William Waring; 1823, Lucius Tyler; 1825, Jacob Comstock; 1826, Ora Bond, James Leland; 1827, George W. Gillet, Joseph Hazelton; 1828, Ora Bond; 1829, James Leland, James Weston, Lucius Tyler, Jacob Comstock; 1830, Cyrus Keyes; 1831, G. W. Gillet; 1832, Ora Bond, Elijah Anderson; 1833, Ora Bond; 1834, Cyrus Keyes; 1835, George W. Gillet; 1836, Hiram Bond; 1837, Solomon Cummings; 1838, Ora Bond, Solomon Cummings; 1839, George W. Gillet; 1840, Ora Bond; 1841, Clark Rice, Gideon D. Walker; 1842, Solomon Cummings, Amos Wright; 1843, Edwin Taylor, Stephen Hardy; 1844, Ora Bond; 1845, Felix Baillet; 1846, Solomon Cummings, Hiram Johnson, Russel Hubbard; 1847, Edwin Taylor, Samuel W. Wakefield; 1848, Jarvis Leonard; 1849, Seldon Squares, Hiram Johnson; 1850, David Carpenter, George W. Swift; 1851, George W. Stanford; 1852, Duma Burr; 1853, Hiram Johnson, Benjamin G. Cagwin; 1854, Silas L. Peet; 1855, B. G. Cagwin; 1856, David Carpenter; 1857, A. C. Adams; 1858, S. A. Thomas; 1859, Gardner George; 1860, David P. Hooper; 1861, Gardner George, David Carpenter; 1862, A. C. Adams; 1863, David Carpenter; 1864, David P. Hooper; 1865, Ebenezer Hungerford; 1866, A. C. Adams, John Lockwell; 1867, Abraham Peet, Aaron G. Hovey; 1868, David P. Hooper, M. J. Allen; 1869, Clark Giles; 1870, David Carpenter, Nathaniel Jewell; 1871, Samuel A. Thomas; 1872, David P. Hooper, Dodge D. Persons; 1873, N. D. Smith, Edwin Hooper; 1874, H. M. Lawrence, Jedediah Hubbard; 1875, S. M. Thomas, L. L. Carpenter; 1876, S. S. Thomas, Hiram Robeson; 1877, Abraham A. Peet, Rufus E. Cornwell; 1878, H. M. Lawrence; 1879, R. Stowell; 1880, S. M. Thomas; 1881, A. A. Peet; 1882, H. U. Robeson; 1883, Hugh Griffith; 1884, M. A. Jewell; 1885, George L. Jauncs; 1886, S. A. Thomas; 1887, Hugh Griffith; 1888, Samuel Warring; 1889, George L. James; 1890, S. P. Bingham; 1891, D. O. Phillips, R. Stowell (vacancy); 1892, Charles Peavy; 1893, Hugh Griffith.

The first birth in Farmersville was that of Addison, son of Richard Tozer, in 1817, and the first death that of Mrs. Magdalene Adams, November 7, 1820. The first marriage was that of Peter Ten Broeck to Polly Freeman. In 1824 James Worden erected the first saw-mill, locating it on the outlet of Mud lake. Velinda Older taught the first school in Farmersville in 1819, having about a dozen pupils in a frame barn. The first school district was formed in the southwest part of the town April 12, 1822. This same year, at the first town election, the sum of $25 was voted for support of common schools. In 1823 the population was 636, amount raised for school purposes $39.35, and number of children taught 155. In 1892 the population numbered 1,027. The town that year had ten school districts with a school in each, attended by 279 scholars and taught by ten teachers, the cost of maintenance being $2,314.40. The assessed valuation of the property taxable for school purposes aggregates $540,702, while the value of all school property is $3,740. The school books most in use in the town in 1823 were the Holy Scriptures, Webster's Spelling Book, American Preceptor, Beauties of the Bible, American Reader, and Pike's Arithmetic.

Excellent shipping facilities are afforded the inhabitants by two lines of railroad, one running to Buffalo, the other to Rochester, namely, the Western New York & Pennsylvania and the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg. There is only one station, however, in Farmersville, but there are three just over the line in as many adjacent towns. The first highway was the State road from Franklinville to Fairview, which was laid out in 1816 or before, and it was on this, at the Center, that the first comers located.

Farmersville postoffice, locally known as Farmersville Center, is the oldest village in the town and is situated a little east of the center. It contains two church edifices (Baptist and M. E.) a school house, one hotel, a general store, two blacksmith and two shoe shops, a wagon shop, a harness shop, a grist-mill, a cheese factory, and about twenty-five dwellings.

Farmersville Station is located in the north part of the town on the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad, and contains a Baptist church edifice, one hotel, one hardware and three general stores, a blacksmith shop, a steam saw and grist-mill, a cheese factory, telegraph, express, and postoffices, and about 150 inhabitants. W. C. Williams, who emigrated from Wales in 1868, became the first merchant at the Station.

Fairview is a postoffice and hamlet in the northeast corner of the town, lying partly in Allegany county. It contains one church (Welsh), a cheese factory, a grocery store, blacksmith and cooper shop, and a few dwellings.

Laidlaw is a postoffice established in 1891 with C. E. Wright as postmaster. It lies a little northwest of the center of the town.

The Farmersville cheese factory was built in 1890 by C. E. Wright and has a capacity of manufacturing 100,000 pounds of cheese annually. It is located at Laidlaw. The Farmersville Center cheese factory, situated in the village of that name, was erected in 1880 by Howden Brothers. Its capacity is about 300 cows. In 1889 F. W. & G. E. Hogs built what is known as the Bullock cheese factory, which is capable of producing 100,000 pounds of cheese annually. The Rock Spring cheese factory was built by the Napier Brothers in 1865 and is now owned by J. R. Holden. Its capacity is 900 cows.

Rev. Eliab Going, a Baptist preacher, conducted in 1821, in a barn of Levi Peet's, the first religious services in town. It was not till 1826, however, that a Baptist society was organized. On January 17th of that year a church was formed with eighteen members under the pastoral charge of Rev. Mr. Going, and the body was legally incorporated April 4, 1836. Their church edifice at the Center was erected in 1838 at a cost of $1,600. It is a wooden structure and will seat 300 people. The value of their church property is $500. The society is without a pastor.

The Methodist Episcopal church at Farmersville Center was formed and incorporated September 12, 1823, and re-incorporated September 13, 1834. Again the society was incorporated April 7, 1838, and again November 15, 1853. Their house of worship was built of wood in 1838 and cost $1,500. The present membership is about twenty-five and the church property is valued at $500. The edifice will seat 300 people and Rev. Mr. Wells, a local preacher, conducts services every two weeks.

The Welsh Congregational Society of Siloam, organized by Rev. James Griffiths and twenty-six members October 5, 1856, was incorporated in April, 1871. Their services were conducted in private houses until 1870, when a neat edifice was erected at an expense of $1,200, which represents the present value of the church property. The building will seat 250 persons.

The First Baptist church of Farmersville Station was organized February 14, 1888, with nine members, viz.: William Charles and wife, William C. Williams and wife, Thomas R. Peet and wife, A. B. Morgan and wife, and Mrs. James Davis. The first pastor was Rev. Orson F. Shoonhoven and the present one Rev. W. A. Day. Their house of worship, a wooden structure, was erected in the fall and winter of 1887 and cost $2,000. It will seat 210 people, and with the grounds is valued at $2,150. The society has thirty-five members and the Sunday school eighty scholars and six teachers.

Oliver H. Adams, born in Johnstown, N. Y., in January, 1800, settled in 1824 on the farm where he has passed his life. He has probably done more hard work than any man in town. His sons Warren and Edward live on the homestead. His wife died in 1889.

Cummings Adams settled in Farmersville in 1827, was nearly blind when he came here, soon became entirely so, and remained so until his death. Of great strength and activity of mind and body, the town has had but few men better read than he. His sons were for many years among the most influential in town. Andrew, the youngest, now a citizen of Franklinville, represented the town two terms as supervisor and was a faithful and active trustee of the Ten Broeck Academy until his removal to that town.

Nelson and Joel H. Alexander came to town in 1835, bought land in company, and while clearing up their farms both worked a portion of the time at the blacksmith trade. Nelson was an expert horseshoer and has been a successful farmer on the lands originally bought by the brothers, where he now lives. Nelson Alexander, son of Solomon and Gratia Alexander, was born in Winchester N. H., April 26, 1807, came at the age of twenty-three to Otsego county, where in 1831 he married Polly Bacon, and removed thence to this town. Mrs. Alexander died Nov. 7, 1887. They had eleven children, ten of whom grew to maturity. His son Albert D. is the only representative here. By reading and study he has become one of the ablest men of the town. His wife, a woman of great executive ability, will long be remembered as a kind neighbor and excellent nurse. After a few years the brothers dissolved partnership and Joel, the younger, is now living in New Hudson, N. Y.

William Austin, a veteran of the War of 1812, a native of the eastern part of this State, and a son of John, removed to Pittsford, Monroe county, where he married Rebecca Doud, and came in 1827 to this town, where he built a log house, cleared a farm, and ten years later sold out. He immediately began clearing the second farm, where his wife died in 1843. Six of his eight children grew to maturity, viz.: Susannah, Elihu D., Hannah, Sarah H., Anna, and William D. Mr. Austin died in 1884. Elihu D. Austin, born May 21, 1825, married Jane, daughter of Laban and Sarah (Tarbell) Lewis, and has eight children: Zina, Lucinda M., John W., Albert H., Reuben L., Fred E., James W., and Luther M. Zina Austin enlisted in the Rebellion and served on the gunboat Key West, participated in five engagements, was taken sick, and died on the boat Red Rover, Jan. 11, 1865.

Henry Backus started in the race about the same time with others who came to town during its early settlement. For fifteen years his success, hardships, and endurance corresponded with the companions of his youth, when his wife, a sister of Marsena Baker, was stricken down with consumption, leaving him seven small children. His second marriage was inharmonious, which broke up the family, and he died in Boston in January, 1873. Olive H. Rhoades, of Boston, Mass., is the only one living of the family. Aaron B., the oldest child, emigrated to Oregon with his uncle in 1852, became wealthy, and died in 1882, leaving a large family. Thomas went to Oregon in 1857, where he buried his wife and only son, after which his mind and health became impaired and he died in 1890. James H. was a Congregational preacher, started for Oregon in 1860, and was shipwrecked between San Francisco and Portland. The hardships and exposures impaired his mind and health, and returning to this town in 1869 he died in 1881 at his brother William's. Elizabeth, the oldest daughter and first wife of George Howard, died in 1843.

Marsena Baker was born in Brimfield, Mass., acquired a large landed property, mostly earned by hard work, economy, and good judgment, and inherited a few hundred acres from his father. Aside from him there was up to this time scarcely a man that received as much as $100 by inheritance. While discharging his duty as Committee on Charitable Institutions as member of Assembly he caught the small-pox and died at his brother's in Brimfield, Mass., aged fifty-two. His widow, a woman of culture, great versatility of reading, and many virtues, still lives on the old homestead. The oldest daughter married Judge Cobb, a former resident of the county, and lives in Kansas City, Mo. The second is the wife of Frank Gilbert, of Chicago. The fourth married Putnam Peet, youngest son of Levi Peet. The two sons are unmarried. The children received nearly all their education in the checkered school house; the younger ones had some advantages at Ten Broeck Academy.

William Baldwin, son of Benjamin, a Baptist preacher in Vermont, came to Farmersville about 1835 and settled upon the farm where his son, D. P. Baldwin, now resides, and where he died. His wife was Martha Hinds, a native of Vermont. He had six children, of whom three are living: Benjamin, Martha (Mrs. A. Proctor), and D. P. The latter married Susan Blackmon and has one daughter, Bertha A. (Mrs. M. O. Tarbell).

Jacob Brewer came from Pittsfield, N. Y., with his family about 1833 and settled in the west part of the town, where he took up some wild land and built a log house. Of his four children two are living: Mrs. Olive Knight in Franklinville and Maria (Mrs. Aaron Hovey) in Missouri.

Preserved Bullock was a settler of 1824; his sons Preserved and Woodbury (twins) are dead. Elisha, a son of Preserved, owns and lives on the homestead. Horace, a son of Woodbury, is living near Franklinville Station and his mother lives with him. The wife of Preserved, Sr., was Lydia Woodbury, and both died on the homestead. Preserved, Jr., was born Feb. 5, 1804, married, Nov. 13, 1831, Malana Cronk, who was born May 17, 1804, and died Aug. 18, 1879. Mrs. Bullock died Feb. 23, 1879. Their two children were Joel and Elisha, the former of whom was burned to death. Elisha was born October 1, 1835. Nov. 1, 1857, he married Anna A., daughter of Orrin and Augusta (Hayden) Terry. They have five children. Woodbury Bullock married Eunice Richardson, who survives him. Mr. Bullock died June 15, 1872.

Duma Burr was born in Denmark, N. Y., in 1812. In 1832 he married Lucy Munger and in 1849 removed with his family to Farmersville, where he was for many years a justice of the peace and a respected citizen. He was a member of the M. E. church and died in 1887, his wife dying in 1876. Children: Allen C., who died in 1860; Amelia S. (Mrs. George Gould), of Franklinville, and Triphena (Mrs. William H. Adams), who resides on the homestead.

Harvey Butler, son of Richard and Mercy (Sage) Butler, natives of Connecticut, came to Farmersville in March, 1823, and in September following his wife, Lovisa Douglass, came on with their five children. They lived on two different farms here until 1854, when they moved to Sparta, Wis., where he died in 1871 and where his wife died in 1866. Their daughters were all educated in the public schools and did good service in teaching. The only ones now living are Mrs. Eliza A. Holmes and Mrs. Laura H. Graves, of Franklinville. One son, the oldest of the family, died when sixteen; another is living in Sparta, Wis. The girls were all married.

David Carpenter, a nephew of Levi Peet, was apprenticed to him soon after Peet was married. He married in town, raised a large family, and for many years was one of the wealthiest and most influential men in the county, representing the town as supervisor, town clerk, and justice of the peace many years. The too free use of his name endorsing notes, etc., led to his failure in old age, but he strained every nerve to prevent loss to his friends, for many years working by the day or at odd jobs to earn his support or pay debts. He remained a citizen of the town until 1889 and voted at elections for nearly sixty years. In politics he was first an anti-Mason, next a Whig, and then a Republican until 1872, when he supported Horace Greeley, and for the last six years has voted with the Prohibitionists. A Baptist in religion he has all his life been a teetotaler. Born in Massachusetts he belongs to a family noted for extraordinary memories, which distinguished him, enabling him to transact much business; he was a sort of encyclopedia among his neighbors.

Zenas Carpenter was born July 9, 1801, and settled in this town in 1827 with his wife, Laura Webster, and two children. He afterward removed to the Bullard district, whence he went in 1844 to Lyndon, where he died Dec. 18, 1854. Children: Warren and Laura.

Michael Chaffee settled in 1821 and raised five boys and two girls. The boys were remarkable for physical strength. De Nike, the youngest, the only representative living in town, is a well-to-do farmer.

Lucius Cleaveland came to Farmersville in 1851 and died here in 1876, his wife dying in 1882. Of his seven children five are living: Norris, Freeman, Matilda (Mrs. Horace Blackmon), Charles S., and Delos. Norris Cleaveland married Marion Crawford, and has had three daughters, all deceased. Lucius Cleaveland was a stone mason by trade, a native of Rhode Island by birth, and an Englishman by ancestry.

Solomon Cummings came to Farmersville in 1829 and a few years later married Jonathan Graves's eldest daughter, Mariette. He was a merchant here and represented the town on the Board of Supervisors in 1843, 1844, 1846, and 1848. For a number of years he has lived in Franklinville, in which chapter a further notice of him appears.

David Cutting emigrated from New Berlin, N. Y., about 1824, settling with his wife, Nancy Bancroft, upon a tract of one hundred acres on lot 32, where he erected a log house, set out an orchard, and cleared a farm. His children were Diana, Mianda, Risina, and David L., the latter of whom resides on the homestead. David L. married Mary C. Potter and has one son, Frank L.

David Day was a settler of 1829; he died in 1804. His son James owns the homestead, to which he has made additions. Nelson, the second son, lives on and owns a part of the old Tozer place. His farm had the first fruit-bearing orchard in town, and it is yet among the best. William is a dentist in Franklinville, and Daniel B. lives in Kansas, and Clark, the youngest, died there. Daniel B. was in the battle of Fair Oaks and received five severe gunshot wounds, his being one of the most marvelous escapes from death recorded during the war. His vigorous constitution, great strength, and temperate habits can alone account for his marvelous recovery. James Day represented the town of Farmersville on the Board of Supervisors in 1862.

James Evans was born in March, 1811, in South Wales, whence he emigrated to America and to Freedom in 1852, with his wife, Mary Davis, and three children. Mrs. Evans died July 11, 1870, and Mr. Evans resides with his daughter Mary (Mrs. Theodore Leonard).

George W. Gillet, successor to Jacob Comstock, the first merchant, built a store in 1828. In connection with it he ran an ashery, making pearlash and potash, nearly the only cash articles manufactured or raised for many years. Mr. Gillet was an enterprising man, but failed in business after a few years. He served the county as clerk from 1841 to 1844 and emigrated west soon after his term expired. Himself, wife, and children are all dead.

Jonathan Graves, son of Jonathan, settled at the Center in 1828 and was a partner of G. W. Gillet in the mercantile business a number of years; he afterward bought Richard Tozer's tavern. His oldest son, Grove B. Graves, remained a citizen of the town and died in 1889 on the farm his father had owned. His second son, Delos, is a merchant in Franklinville. The daughters were accomplished ladies. The eldest, Mariette, is the wife of Solomon Cummings, of Franklinville. Julia, the wife of J. T. Cummings, died in Arcade, where they lived, in 1872. Her life was one of great labor. She was equalled by few and excelled by none. She was among the sweetest of singers and most accomplished and beautiful women the town was proud to own. Jonathan Graves was supervisor of Farmersville in 1831.

Gideon Henry was born in 1777 and settled in Farmersville in 1826. In August of that year his right shoulder was dislocated by the kick of an ox. It was not properly set, inflammation and rheumatism set in, and for many weeks he was a great sufferer. The neighbors were faithful in volunteering to watch with him night and day, and after he began to recover they made a large logging-bee. This helped the elder boys, Backus and Thomas, so they sowed about the quantity of winter wheat the father had intended. He died here January 14, 1857. Of Protestant Irish descent his father emigrated to Colchester, Conn., when seven years old (in 1737), and thence to Richfield, Otsego county, when Gordon was sixteen, where he was married to Phebe Cheeseman in 1803, and where all his children were born, five sons and three daughters. He came to this town May 6, 1826. Unselfish and charitable, honest and just, he was especially prompt to pay hired help. He was deacon in the Presbyterian church, and after the division he sympathized with the new school. He was one of the first to embrace the temperance movement and espouse the cause of the slave, and discarded the use of tobacco when sixty years old after using it over forty years. With Phebe, his wife, he lived a loving and respectful union of fifty-four years. Their oldest son, Anson G. Henry, was a person of many virtues and varied experience. He studied medicine in Richfield Springs, N. Y., and Cincinnati, Ohio, and in 1829 came to visit his parents in Farmersville, where he taught the district school the following winter. Completing his medical education he located in Springfield, Ill., in 1832, and became a close and a life-long friend of Abraham Lincoln. Dr. Henry took an active interest in the politics of the State and was elected and appointed to places of importance and great trust. He moved to Oregon and in 1861 was appointed surveyor-general of Washington territory, which position he held until his death. After Lincoln's assassination Dr. Henry accompanied the remains on their journey to Springfield and sailed for his home in Oregon on board the Brother Jonathan, but was wrecked Aug. 12, 1865.

Joseph Henry, of Irish descent, was born in 1815, came to this town in 1827, and for two years rented the John Hooper place. He then bought a portion of the farm he now owns, and by industry, aided by an excellent wife (Amanda Lawton), has added to his lands and other personal property until he is one of the wealthiest men in town. Since the completion of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad he has kept a general store and his sons John and Andrew have conducted the farm. Since the death of his wife, in 1875, he has lived alone with his youngest daughter. He has three other daughters married and two sons deceased. Andrew Henry was born Aug. 26, 1856, and married in 1879 Jennie McKerrow; children living: Matthew and Blanch.

William Henry, the youngest son of Gordon, was born in Richfield, N. Y., Aug. 8, 1818, and married Sophia C. Wood, of Gainesville, N. Y., Jan. 19, 1843. The union has been harmonious and their progress along the same lines of thought and belief. For over sixty years he has taken an active part in all matters of public interest; especially has he always been an earnest worker in the temperance and anti-slavery reforms; never used tobacco, always avoided late hours, and strenuously opposed all luxurious living and show. From 1831 to 1854 he was a Presbyterian, but then became converted to modern spiritualism. For many years he was a pioneer school teacher, the wages at first being $9 per month. In the winter of 1843-44 he taught for $14 and boarded himself. Besides this he had from two to four night schools each week. Teachers at that time set copies for the scholars and made and mended good quill pens. In politics he was first a Whig and afterward a radical Republican. In 1872 he supported Greeley for president. From that time until 1890 he acted with the Democrats and since then has been a leading and enthusiastic member of the People's party. For over thirty years he has been a prolific writer for the local press; and has occasionally written for leading papers in Boston, New York, Elmira, Buffalo, Rochester, and Chicago. His communications generally command the attention and respect if not the approval of readers. His honesty, his courage, and his independence can not be questioned. It became his duty by common consent to lead in raising the quota called for the spring of 1864. He volunteered himself and in less than twenty-four hours the quota of the town was filled. He was supervisor in 1866 and has held other offices of trust. He served on the gunboat Paw Paw until the close of the war and was able to do full duty nearly every day. Since seventy years old he has nearly retired from business and has devoted his life to reading and writing. Besides his prose writings he has written some verses that have been approved by the best minds in the country. He read an interesting poem in 1892 at the Pioneers Picnic. His education was limited to the log school houses and one term in the high school in Springfield, Ill., in 1839-40. At that time he made the acquaintance of Lincoln, Douglass, and many more of the men who afterward acquired national prominence. Mr. Henry often repeats the immortal words of Lincoln: "With charity for all and malice towards none," and Paul's summing up: "Charity never faileth."

Peter Holmes became a citizen of the town in 1820, bought land, and lived upon it until his death in March, 1864, getting his first start making woodenware by hand. He and his wife were very hardy, substantial people, and reared five sons and one daughter. Cicero S., the second son, is the only representative still living in town. Born here in 1823 he has been an exceptionally industrious and hardworking farmer. Luther M. Holmes is a son of Hosea and Eliza A. (Butler) Holmes and was born Oct. 25, 1851. In 1876 he married Ettie, daughter of Lyman and Maria (Sill) Searl, and has two children, Mattie and Ernest. He is an industrious farmer and a representative citizen.

Ebenezer Hooper, Jr., was born in New Berlin, Otsego county, came to Farmersville about 1833, and settled and cleared the farm now occupied by his son Lyman. He was a member of the Freewill Baptist church and a man respected and esteemed by his neighbors, and died in 1869. Mr. Hooper married Caroline Thrasher, who died in 1839, leaving him one child, William, who lives in this town. For his second wife he married Almira King, who bore him five children: Lyman, Solomon, Cornelia, Mary A., and Mary A., 2d. Both of the latter are deceased. Lyman Hooper is a farmer. Born Feb. 4, 1843, he married, in 1863, Florinda, daughter of Robert Blair, and has five children: Alta L. (Mrs. James Rogers), Wallace W., Bertha E., Flora B., and Frankie. Another daughter, Mary C., died in infancy.

George Howard came to this town in 1830 and bought the farm owned by Joseph Mills. An excellent farmer, a good neighbor, and a public spirited citizen he emigrated to Le Roy, N. Y., in 1868, where he died in 1882. His oldest son went to California, where he still lives. A daughter went to Oregon in 1863. Frank, the third child by the first wife, was killed at Gettysburg. The children of the second wife are Thomas, Byron, Charles, and Anson (deceased). Anna, the eldest daughter, is unmarried and lives with her mother in Le Roy. Ella (Mrs. Clarence Bryant) lives in York, N. Y.

Russel Hubbard with his father, who survived him only a few years, and his brother Lyman, who soon removed to Rushford, came in 1821 and settled on a farm of two hundred acres in the east part of the town, where he lived until a few years before his death at Waverly, N. Y. Being one of the best informed and finely cultivated men in the county he was discovered by Horace Greeley and by his influence was nominated and elected to the Assembly in 1831. He also served the town as supervisor, school commissioner, and in other places of trust, and might have been returned to the Legislature, or sent to Congress, or appointed to other positions if he had sought them. A most interesting and fascinating man in conversation he had the elements of an orator, but would only say a few words in public at a time. After being an active member of the Methodist church for many years he became converted to modern spiritualism. He remained a citizen of this town until a few years before his death, which occurred at Waverly in 1875. His remains now rest in the Farmersville cemetery beside his wife, who survived him a few months. His son Jedediah, born Jan. 24, 1828, a farmer, represents him in town. Jedediah married, Feb. 21, 1861, Ann E., daughter of James and Percy (Hayford) Blackmon; children: Jessie (Mrs. Glenn Watkins), Russel C., and Hattie M. For some thirteen years he has been town assessor. An only daughter of Russel, Hattie Scott, is living in Chicago, Ill. The oldest and only other surviving son, Rial W., lives in Chicago and has been a member of the Legislature.

Abel Jewell came from Sherburne, Chenango county, in 1841, settling on the farm now owned by his nephew, Michael A. This he cleared and improved, reclaiming it from a thickly wooded tract to fertile, cultivated fields.

Solomon J. King, son of Samuel and a native of Genesee county, was born March 22, 1818, came with his father to Cattaraugus county, and married Euphema, daughter of Ezra and Betsey Hawkins. Mr. King is a mason by trade and a farmer by occupation, residing on the homestead of his father. They have a son, Lewis A., who married Ellen L. Potter and has one child, Lora E.

Andrew Knight, Jr., son of Andrew, was born in Pittsfield, N. Y., in 1808, and in 1830 married Olive Brewer. The same year they moved to Farmersville onto a farm of 100 acres. Mr. Knight was well known in the county. He bought and drove cattle to Philadelphia, and was supervisor of Farmersville in 1867. Of his six children only one, Fremont, is living. Andrew Knight died April 19, 1886; his widow lives in Franklinville.

Dea. Timothy Lane and his sons Lloyd, Jacob, and Samuel settled on farms on lot 39. The deacon was a Baptist and a gifted man in conference and prayer meetings. The three sons and three daughters comprising his family are deceased. The oldest son of Lloyd, James H., is an enterprising farmer here. His success has been phenomenal. In 1868 he bought a large and poor hill farm, mostly on credit, and has made it into a pleasant home.

Ezra B. Law is a son of Eliphalet and Mary E. (Strong) Law. Born in this town Dec. 16, 1853, he married, April 12, 1873, Eva, daughter of Zabad Parish, and has been a farmer and dealer in cattle and horses. Children: Lovina (deceased), Vernia E., Bertha E. (deceased), and Reuben W.

Benjamin Leonard, son of Evan and Margaret (Davis) Leonard, was born July 2, 1828, and came to Freedom in June, 1844. He married Jenette Bydlem and had these children: Dora, Theodore, Julia, Sarah, Jane (deceased), George (deceased), Charles E., Melvin E., Eddie (deceased), Hattie J., and William B. By his second wife, Martha Thomas, he had children Gretta G., Lewis J., Mary E., David T., and Eliza A. Theodore Leonard was born in Freedom, Feb. 8, 1851, received his education in the common schools and in Ten Broeck Academy, and married in 1879 Mary Evans; children: James F. and Irving B.

William S. Little, who came into Farmersville as a farmer in 1840, was a native of Middletown, Conn., for some time a resident of Genesee county, raised thirteen children, and died at the age of ninety-seven years. Five of his family are living, viz.: Elizabeth (Mrs. E. Hines), Sarah (Mrs. Amos Wright), Emily (Mrs. Clark Sisson), Walter N., and Fred M. The latter owns and occupies the homestead. Walter N. Little was born in Bethany, N. Y., Dec. 6, 1822, came to Farmersville with the family in 1840, and in 1845 married Eliza A., daughter of Jeremiah and Betsey Potter; children: Adelbert W. (deceased), Amelia (Mrs. E. Curtis), Bessie L. (Mrs. M. L. Sessions), and Orville. Mr. Little resides on the farm he originally settled, and carried on his back from Farmersville Center the apple trees now comprising his orchard. Feb. 17, 1862, he enlisted in Co. K, 105th N. Y. Vols., and was with the regiment until its discharge, acting as teamster.

Frederick M. Little, son of William S. and Lurana (Manwaring) Little, was born in this town Nov. 27, 1840, on the farm on which he now resides. May 13, 1861, he enlisted in Co. I, 71st N. Y. Vols., and participated in the engagements of Fair Oaks, Seven Days' Fight, Malvern Hill, Second Bull Run, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Wilderness, Spotsylvania, Cold Harbor, and Petersburg. At Second Bull Run he was taken sick, sent to Philadelphia, and rejoined his regiment in April, 1863, and was discharged July 31, 1864. Returning home he went to Warren, Pa., where he married Carrie B. Loomis, and in 1878 resumed his residence in Farmersville. Children: Charles F. and Nellie M. (Mrs. H. W. Drumb).

Charles Love, born March 22, 1798, settled here in 1827. He was most scrupulously honest and faithful to every obligation. His wife was Katie Lane and they had eight children. Their son James remains on the homestead. George is a farmer in Freedom. Elanah, wife of John Rust, and Catherine, wife of Landes Rogers, reside in this town. Thomas lives in Portville, as does also Mary (Mrs. N. Colerick). Martha (Mrs. H. Rogers) resides in Humphrey. James Love was born Dec. 26, 1832. Aug. 28, 1864, he married Harriet L., daughter of Benjamin and Lucy (Kidder) Martin. Children: Nettie L., Lillie M. (Mrs. Milton Charles), Anna J., Charles B., and Edna May.

Benjamin Martin, a native of Salisbury, Vt., came to Yorkshire in 1834 and in 1851 removed to this town, locating five years later on the farm his son William P. now owns. By his wife, Lucy Kidder, he had eleven children, all but one of whom are living, viz.: Mary (Mrs. Daniel Bullard), Caroline (Mrs. Harvey Turner), Ann (Mrs. Nathaniel Patterson), Benjamin F., Henry G., Hiram A., Harriet L. (Mrs. James Love), Ellen J. (Mrs. Harlan Locke), William P., and Clara A. (Mrs. Fayette Joslyn). Susan is deceased. William P. Martin was born in Yorkshire, Feb. 4, 1845. Nov. 19, 1868, he married Adelaide, daughter of Horace and Laura (Blount) Prescott; children: Erdine L., Leona A., Prescott U., Burnett H., Denton E., and Ethel L.

The Merrill family in America is of English descent and date their residence in this country to the year 1633 or 1634. Nathaniel Merrill and his brother John, as near as can be ascertained, were natives of Wiltshire, England, came to America in 1633-34, and resided in Ipswich, Mass., about a year. They then removed to Newbury, Mass., where they were farmers and original settlers. The homestead of Nathaniel has but recently passed out of the possession of his descendants. Nathaniel and Susanna, his wife, had four sons and a daughter. Their son John was adopted by Gregory Wilterton, supposed to be his uncle (the brother of his mother, Susanna), and at his death he inherited his estate. John married Sarah Watson and they had eight sons and two daughters. Their fifth son, Wilterton, married, first, Ruth Pratt, and second, Hannah Waters, who was the mother of Gideon Merrill. Gideon married Mary Bigelow and had sons Samuel and Nathaniel. Nathaniel married Hannah Belder and they had sixteen children. Their seventh child, Allen, was born in Litchfield, Conn., and early in life became a pioneer of Litchfield, N. Y., where his brother-in-law, Samuel Merry, was the first settler. Allen Merrill married Tammie Smith and they were parents of eleven children. His fifth child, Smith Merrill, was born in Johnstown, Montgomery county, Oct. 16, 1810, and came to Yorkshire in 1835. In the early part of 1838 he married Melinda, daughter of John Howe, who settled in Yorkshire in 1832. Mr. Merrill was a tailor and opened a merchant tailor's store, and remained there in trade until 1849. He then located in the village of Franklinsville, where he continued his business until the financial embarrassments of 1857, when he closed out. In 1859 he removed to a farm in Farmersville, where he was a farmer until 1881, with two years of the time in the same occupation in Great Valley. He has since then resided near his son, Perry E. Merrill, and two of his daughters in the town of Freedom. This family consists of ten children: Henry S., John B., Emmett W., Perry E., Addie E., Loraine H. Steele, Wallace W., Mary E. Hayes, Grace M., and Frank M. John B., Emmett W., and Addie E. are deceased.

Henry S. Merrill, the eldest of this large family, was born in Yorkshire, June 5, 1839, was educated at the common schools, and at the age of fifteen he entered the printing office of the Olean Journal, of which Charles Aldrich was then editor and proprietor. There he was an apprentice for three years, when he returned home and remained until the breaking out of the Rebellion. He enlisted April 22, 1861, a private in Co. B, 23d N. Y. Vols., and followed the vicissitudes of his regiment the next two years, being honorably discharged at the close of his term of enlistment. He participated in the battles of Manassas, Second Bull Run, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, (first and second) Chancellorsville, and several of lesser importance. He escaped without a wound and was only four weeks in hospital. Returning home upon his discharge he again went to the war and was engaged with an army sutler a year. He was then a farmer until 1868, when he engaged in cheese-making, which he followed successfully until 1874 and was proprietor of three factories at the time he sold and left the business. Since then he has been engaged as a farmer, station agent, insurance agent, and in the railway mail service four years. His first presidential vote was given to Abraham Lincoln in Nov., 1864. He cast his lot with the Republican party and there are few, if any, more zealous adherents in his town or county. He served six terms as supervisor of Farmersville, where he has lived since 1868, and has held other places of trust both political and financial; and were he to die to-day his political account should balance. Financially he has been better to acquire than to preserve.

In the fall of 1888 Mr. Merrill received the Republican nomination for the office of county clerk and was elected by the flattering plurality of 2,291 votes. He is now serving his second term acceptably and satisfactorily. Mr. Merrill is the first county clerk in this county who has succeeded himself since 1846, when Francis E. Baillet, formerly of Farmersville, was also his own successor. Feb. 12, 1866, he married Miss Hattie E. Persons, daughter of Alonzo Persons, of Rushford, N. Y., and they are the parents of a son and two daughters. His son Emmett W., born Nov. 19, 1867, married Bula Hilsle on June 6, 1893, and is now aiding his father as special deputy clerk. His oldest daughter, Hattie E., recently graduated at the Normal School at Fredonia, N. Y., and the youngest, Mertie C., is at home.

Alvenus Metcalf, son of Rufus, was born in Freedom in 1820, married Alma Weire, and settled finally in the northeast part of Farmersville, where he died on the farm where his son Carlos now lives. His five sons were Carlos, Earl (deceased), George, Odell, and Charles.

Samuel Mulliken was among the early settlers. To the girls the community is indebted for their faithful service as teachers. Fidelia commenced teaching when only sixteen years old and received seventy-five cents per week; her labors and pure Christian example should perpetuate her name through all coming generations. The family consisted of seven girls and two sons; of the girls all but one, Angeline, were married. She died quite young. The youngest son died in the west. Edwin, the oldest, retains the old homestead, married, and is now living in Rushford, N. Y.

A. F. Merrill

Sally Older was a worthy friend and co-worker as a pioneer teacher with Mary Ann Tozer, Miss Packard, Minerva Peet, the Nobleses, and Fidelia Mulliken. She has been twice married and is now a widow living in Illinois. She was an excellent scholar, especially in mathematics, in which she had no equal in town. All her learning was acquired without the aid of an academy or high school. Marvin Older, an elder brother, was an able and very successful teacher in this and other towns during our early history. Mr. Older has been a citizen of Franklinville many years and one of their best scholars and ablest writers in prose and poetry. Paulina Older taught school as early as 1825 in district No. 2, at the Center, and the writer went to school in the same place during the summer of 1826. Morden Older, brother of Marvin and an accomplished scholar and a successful teacher, studied law later in life and practiced in Moscow, N. Y., until his death.

Wallis Older, son of William, came to this town with his father in 1818, married Juliette Mulliken, followed farming and his trade of cooper, and died here after rearing a family of five children. Alonzo, his son, married Mariam Woods and had six children: Charles E., William W., Rosa, Ella M., Frank, and Clyde. Mr. Older's second wife is Jane Carpenter. He was town supervisor in 1880 and 1881 and is a prosperous farmer.

Nathaniel S. Patterson was born in this town April 8, 1842. Enlisting in Co. D, 154th N. Y. Vols., he served until the close of the war, being discharged June 11, 1865. April 22, 1864, he married Mrs. Lucy A., widow of Henry L. Martin, and has one daughter, Alta M. (Mrs. Frank Bancroft). Mr. Patterson is a progressive farmer on the homestead.

Rufus Peet became a citizen of the town in 1828, was highly endowed, and few men had better memories or a more correct and ready flow of language. He used to say that he obtained a mastery of language by a severe study of Webster's Dictionary; he divided the book into 365 parts, and each day learned to spell and define one of those parts. At the end of the year he had mastered his task and never after that did he hesitate for a word when writing or speaking. With all the qualities he possessed he seemed to lack the power to attract or please. Perhaps the community is as much to blame for not listening and appreciating his superiority as he for not making a more judicious use of his wonderful gifts. Levi Peet was a marked character in many directions. It would hardly be possible to find a human form more devoid of grace and beauty. Slim, six feet two inches tall, loose-jointed, having very few opportunities for school, he was undoubtedly possessed of latent powers susceptible of great development. He was elected justice of the peace in 1822, and by the help of his excellent and well-educated wife he continually advanced in usefulness and influence until his death in 1863. He became an able business man, studied law, and became quite a successful practitioner in justices' courts. He was twice married; his wives were sisters. To them he owes much for his success. And to them he and the world are indebted for a large family of stalwart sons and cultivated daughters. One of his sons in a letter to an old schoolmate in 1891 says: "Some of us may not have filled the niche designed for us by our Creator, yet I think the boys and girls who lived in Farmersville sixty years ago will rank with the average."

Schuler Peet taught school a number of seasons, emigrated to Iowa, and became one of the ablest lawyers in that State. Cornelius also went to Iowa, has been a successful farmer, and has ably represented his county in the Legislature. S. L. Peet, before marriage, was a teacher. They were sons of Levi.

Joseph Powell became a resident of Farmersville about 1828, settling near the center of the town on a tract of land he afterward sold to Cornelius Ten Broeck. About 1853 he moved to Wisconsin, where he died.

Truman C. Pratt, son of Jeremiah, Jr., was born in New Lisbon, N. Y., Nov. 19, 1825, came with his father to Lyndon, and subsequently removed to this town, settling in 1862 upon the farm he now occupies. Jan. 1, 1851, he married Charlotte M. Stockwell; children: Eleanor S. (deceased), Lucien R., Rose M., and Ernest A. Gertrude M., an adopted daughter, married Charles M. Thompson, and died Dec. 15, 1890.

Enoch Richardson came to Farmersville Center about 1828 and engaged in the tanning business. He was afterward a farmer and eventually moved to Rushford, N. Y., where he died.

Richard Robbins married the second daughter of Gordon Henry. His farm joined Mr. Baker's. Their children were all born and educated in the same school district. In culture, reading, and literary taste Mrs. Baker and Mrs. Robbins were much alike. Mr. Robbins, a man of great strength and endurance, did a great deal of clearing by the job, and would chop twenty-five acres in 100 days and has chopped five and three-fourths cords of four-foot wood in a day. He signed the pledge previous to his marriage in 1833 and was among the earliest to espouse the cause of the slave. They had six sons and four daughters. Two, Milton and Egbert (the twin brother of Albert, a policeman in New York) were killed in the Rebellion before Petersburg. Richard was drowned and Frank, the youngest, died in Portland, Ore.; Ellen, the oldest, is not married; Elizabeth died when quite young; Esther F. has had superior advantages of travel and was a genius in sketching and drawing. She has been twice married; her present husband is James Brown, LL.D., of Portland, Ore., where she has had a home since 1863.

Israel Sessions, born in Vermont, October 24, 1806, came with his parents to Oneida county, and moved thence in 1836 to Farmersville, where it is said he "cleared up more land than any man in the county." Marrying Sophia Shepard he had born to him six children, of whom Albert served and died in the navy during the Civil war; Mariette (Mrs. Orson Sweet) is deceased; Luther enlisted in the Rebellion and died at Elmira; Marenus H. married Bessie L. Little and has one child, Edith B.; Edwin C. resides on the homestead.

Nelson D. Smith, son of Asa B., was born in Otsego county. Coming to Rushford, Allegany county, he married there Adaline P. Balcom, and was engaged in milling and cheese making. In 1870 he came to this town, having since been a farmer and cheese maker, and now resides at the Center. He has two sons, Melvin E. and Willis D., who are merchants in the Center village. Melvin E. has been supervisor for several years; and in other positions he has served faithfully and honorably. He married Mary L., daughter of James and Catherine (Ives) Burger; children: Genevieve and Mildred. Willis D. Smith married Florence J. Thomas, and has one child, Harry C.

Ezra Strong was among the early settlers and made a manly struggle with poverty while rearing and educating a family of six sons and three daughters, all of whom are living excepting the third son, Ezra B., and the youngest daughter, Mary Ann. Walter and Jacob are farmers, the first living in Machias and the latter in Freedom. William, the oldest, is a wealthy farmer in Michigan. The two younger are well educated men.

D. O. Tarbell.—Among the few who have remained on the homestead of their father D. O. Tarbell, son of James Tarbell, has been most successful.

He took the farm, which was badly encumbered, cleared off the debts, and added largely to it by purchase. His barns with all their contents were burned by lightning in the fall of 1877 and again in the fall of 1881. The insurance covered only a small part of the loss. Myron O., his son, superintends the farm and D. O. lives in Olean.

Chauncey Taylor was an emigrant from Otisco, Onondaga county, to Farmersville in 1820. Settling on the farm where he died he reared three daughters and one son. Edwin Taylor was supervisor of Farmersville in 1845.

Hon. Peter Ten Broeck became a permanent resident of Farmersville in 1817 and at one time was the wealthiest man in town. An extended sketch of him appears on page 278.

Samuel Thomas and his son and their families settled in town in 1840. Samuel, Sr., is dead. His son Samuel A. still lives here, is a wit and a good story-teller, and has made a specialty of rearing blooded stock. He has been acting justice of the peace for a number of terms, is a very ingenious person, and can make any common article in iron or wood.

J. W. Thomas, a native of Wales, England, came to Cattaraugus county in 1855 and to this town in 1860. In 1857 he married Mary F., only daughter of Robert Gilley. Robert Gilley came with his father to Farmersville when a small boy, married Clarinda Hand, and died on the homestead, which he had purchased. Mr. Thomas was a tanner and currier by trade and combined that vocation with farming, being fairly successful in both occupations. His three children are Fred W., who was killed in an accident at Alpine, Tex., Sept. 19, 1890, Addie V. (Mrs. M. A. Leonard), and Herman H.

Richard Tozer was born in Richfield, N. Y. Soon after his settlement in 1817 he built additions to his one-room cabin and commenced keeping tavern. A few years after he tore down the log cabin and built what was then considered a beautiful and spacious hotel, which still remains without scarcely any changes or repairs to this day, a period of over sixty years. He was the first supervisor after the organization in 1822 and was re-elected in 1823, 1824, and 1826, and was a man of enterprise and ability. He was noted for his sharp wit and burlesques and stories. He had a large family of sons and daughters. Addison, his oldest, was the first child born in the settlement. His second daughter, Mary Ann, married John Packard in 1844. They emigrated first to Galena, Ill., but now live in Chicago. It seems quite proper to keep alive her memory in the town of her birth, where she received in the plain little school house all, or nearly all, her literary education, and where for years she and her husband will be remembered by their pupils for their faithful service and good examples as teachers. She died in Aug., 1892.

Jamin and Arthur Tyler came to this town with their father, Alvin, in 1826, and the father died a few months afterward. They became farmers, retaining lands articulated by their father, where Jamin lived until his death in 1888. He has one son, Clayton, living in town, a daughter, Emma Adams, in Bradford, Pa., and another in Sandusky. The widow of Jamin is still living on the homestead. Arthur and his wife, Hurry, oldest daughter of Harvey Butler, died in Portville, where they had lived many years. Lucius, an older brother, was a still earlier settler, a tanner, currier, and shoemaker, and an early justice of the peace. Henry C., son of Jamin, resides in this town.

Samuel Wakefield, Jr., moved into Farmersville in 1844 and located on the farm now owned by Orin Wright. Born in Brattleboro, Vt., in 1800, he reared a family of eight children, and died on the homestead respected by a wide circle of friends. His wife was Polly Knight and their children now living are Benjamin F., Delia H., Mary J., Fenner, Charles B., and William K.

Charles Wilder, a native of Windham county, Vt., emigrated to Otsego county, whence his son Reuben came to Farmersville in 1837, where he settled on the farm now owned by his son R. S., and where he died. His wife was Elsie L. Skinner, who bore him four children—Frances M. (Mrs. D. O. Tarbell), Mary A., Sarah A. (Mrs. N. Brown), and Reuben S. The latter was born Aug. 17, 1829, came to this town with his father, and Feb. 25, 1857, married Sarah J., daughter of Joseph Henry; by whom he has one son, Millard R. For nine years he lived in Fairview, where he was postmaster and a grocer.

William C. Williams, son of John, was born in Pembroke, South Wales, in 1848, came to America and to Freedom in 1868, and worked by the month until 1878, when he built a store at Farmersville Station, where he has since been engaged in the mercantile business. He married Carrie, daughter of Alonzo Osman, and has been postmaster. Mr. Williams has acquired an excellent reputation as a thorough business man. The first merchant at the Station he is one of the very few laboring men who saved enough from their wages in an iron-mill to bring them to America and start them in business.

John Worthington, whose father was an early settler of Freedom, became a citizen of this town quite early, where his children were born and educated. The oldest, Dubios, became an accomplished scholar and a popular preacher. William, a lawyer, was corporation attorney of the city of Buffalo when he died in 1890. Another son is a carpenter (the trade of his father).

Amos Wright came from Genesee county to Freedom in 1824, settling on 160 acres of land near Elton. There he cleared a farm and worked at his trade of carpenter and millwright, and removed to this town in 1838, locating on the place now owned by Henry Little, where he was killed by a falling tree. He had ten children, of whom four are living: Amos, Jr., Orin, Harriet, and Sally. Orin Wright, a native of Freedom, was born Feb. 23, 1829. Dec. 5, 1852, he married Angeline C. Wakefield, who has borne him eight children, six of whom are living: Samuel, Charles E., Albert B., Irving P., Orin S., and Katie D. His wife died in June, 1888, and for his second wife Mr. Wright married Mrs. Mary J. Law. He is a farmer and a carpenter.

CHAPTER XXVIII.*

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF FRANKLINVILLE.

FRANKLINVILLE lies northeast of the center of the county in lat. 42° 20' and long. 1° 30', and embraces within its limits township four in the fifth range and three tiers of lots from the west side of township four in the fourth range of the Holland survey, and is bounded on the north by Machias and Farmersville, on the east by Lyndon, on the south by Ischua and Humphrey, and on the west by Ellicottville. It contains 31,804 acres, of which 20,200 are improved. It is watered by Ischua creek, which flows south through the east part of the town; Great Valley creek, which passes through the northwest corner; Chamberlain creek and Cold Spring brook, which unite in Morgan hollow, flowing in a southerly direction until Crosby run empties into and forms Sugartown creek, which flows in a southwesterly direction into the Allegheny river; Rockwell creek, which rises on lot 61 and flows northeasterly and west of north into Great Valley creek west of Devereux Station; Simonds run, which flows northwesterly into Great Valley creek east of Devereux Station; Storrs creek, which flows east into Ischua creek south of Cadiz; Boyce run, which rises on Boyce hill and flows easterly into Ischua creek near Franklinville village; and Gates creek, which rises in the eastern part of the town and flows northeast and southwest into Ischua creek at Cadiz.

The western part of the town is undulated and hilly, traversed by narrow valleys along the streams. From the northeast corner broad flats extend down the Ischua valley to below Cadiz, whence to the south boundary of the town they are considerably narrower. The soil along the Ischua valley is largely composed of alluvium and is remarkably fertile. The timber is principally maple, beech, basswood, birch, cherry, and white ash, with occasional groves of hemlock, and originally a sprinkling of pine on the hills and elm and butternut in the valleys. The early fauna consisted of the elk, deer, bear, wolf, panther, wild-cat, lynx, otter, beaver, mink, muskrat, coon, fox, sable, hedgehog, groundhog, and black, gray, red, striped, and flying squirrels. Many of these species have retired before the march of civilization. Among the feathered tribes was the raven, whose hoarse croak and slowly flapping wings distinguished it from other birds; but it, too, has sought deeper solitude.

Eighty-eight years ago the town of Franklinville was a primeval forest: the home of wild beasts and of the untutored savage. The oppressive stillness of its hills and valleys was unbroken save by the halloo of some dusky hunter, the hoot of an owl, or the scream of a wild animal. But in 1805 new echoes were heard in these vast solitudes—sounds which caused the savage occupants to dimly realize the dark foreshadowings of an inevitable doom. They were the sounds of a party of surveyors dividing the vast wilderness into townships and lots. The Indian had already retired before the advancing tread of the Saxon race.

In March, 1806, Gen. Joseph McCluer, the pioneer of pioneers, arrived at Franklinville with his wife and five children and began housekeeping in a log cabin on the site now occupied by the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Myers. Gen. McCluer was born in Belchertown, Mass., May 14, 1775. About the period of his majority he married Betsey Grice, an accomplished young lady. In 1804 he removed to Angelica with his wife and family. His skill and accuracy in surveying soon attracted the attention of Joseph Ellicott, the principal agent of the Holland Land Company. This led to negotiations which ended in an agreement, and Mr. McCluer was sent into the wilderness with compass and chain, accompanied by Solomon Curtis and Ira Pratt as axemen. Beginning at the eastern boundary of the Holland Land Company's purchase, and proceeding westward, they came to the beautiful Ischua valley. Here nature had scattered charms with a lavish hand. The broad, beautiful valley, covered with a wealth of green succulent herbage, stretching out on either side of Ischua creek; the majestic denizens of the forest rearing aloft their venerable heads, crowned with emerald green, intertwining their dark moss-covered branches as if in loving embrace; the evident fertility of the soil; and the natural advantages the location presented for building up a thriving business town—all challenged the admiration of the young surveyor and he determined to make the site of what is now the village of Franklinville his future home. In 1805 he selected lot 39, township four, range four, and built a log cabin on the premises. The next spring he removed from Angelica with his wife and five children, and after a wearisome journey of three days, cutting his own road through the wilderness, a distance of thirty miles, he set his family down at the door of his new home in the Ischua valley in March, 1806. The same summer he put up a log barn where Ely & Ferris's drug store now stands. He became the leading man of the town and held several of the town offices.

Mr. McCluer erected the first frame barn in the Ischua valley. In those days it was a serious matter to build. Settlers were so scarce that he was obliged to go to Angelica to get help to raise it. In those primitive times men were ready at call to go thirty miles to help a neighbor put up a barn, even if it did, as in this case, occupy three days. At a later date he built a saw-mill on Gates creek a short distance east of Franklinville village.

It would scarcely be possible to portray in these pages the toils and privations, the anxieties and dangers, the victories and defeats, the hopes and fears, incident to pioneer life. The sufferings and endurance, the weary days and sleepless nights of the pioneer, can never be fully realized until experienced.

In the growth of the town there have been three periods of rapid increase of its population: From 1806 to 1809-10, from 1817 to 1833, and from 1850 to 1870. Immediately following the survey of the Holland Company's lands in 1805, by Joseph Ellicott accompanied by Joseph McCluer, a tide of immigration set in which rapidly filled up the Ischua valley in the immediate vicinity of Franklinville, and which continued until about the beginning of the year 1810. It was then quite generally understood that a war with Great Britain was imminent, which meant innumerable Indian atrocities. Very few indeed came into the town from this time until after the war closed and the fear of trouble with the Indians had subsided. No open hostile demonstrations were made here by the savages during the conflict, yet their increased boldness in begging or stealing kept the unprotected inhabitants in constant fear. They dared not refuse their demands, yet to give was to deprive themselves and little ones of absolute necessities. Between fear and privation those early settlers led anything but agreeable lives during those two or three years of war excitement. The cold season of 1816 operated against the new settlement. Many became discouraged and left their farms to find homes in other places. Others who had settled in the villages removed to the hills to get away from the frost. This gave the county the name of "Cold Cattaraugus," which clung to it for many years. Franklinville (or McCluer Settlement, as it was then called) was very nearly the center of several surrounding tribes of Indians: The Alleghanies on the southwest, the Cattaraugus on the west and northwest, the Tonawandas on the north, and the Squakie Hill, Gardow, and Canadeas on the north and east.

From about 1817 there were new impulses given which again called the attention of people to this section. The land was sold to settlers at a low figure, and many who had small farms in eastern counties exchanged them for a larger number of acres here. Another consideration which attracted immigrants was the plan adopted by the Holland Land Company of giving "articles." To obtain an article it was necessary to pay enough down to cover the expense of issuing the proper papers; and many a landless wight started for the land office in the morning with two dollars in his pocket and came back at night a freeholder. This easy method of getting possession of land tended to create an unsteady and shifting population. Settlers often desired to change and would sell their improvements for what they would bring and remove to other neighborhoods. This state of things often brought about some novel and amusing sales. In some instances a farm was purchased for a gun or other piece of property. Uncle Robert Scott, as he was called, bought fifty acres in Sugartown for a dog—a hound at that. The abundance of wild game, too, proved a great aid in procuring food for the table.

After about 1820 it was generally reported in the east that the climate of this new region was mild, with early seasons and plenty of pure water, together with a fertile soil and valuable timber; these reports brought settlers quite rapidly. In 1826 Moses Essex, Stephen Seward, and Thomas D. Storrs made a trip from Otsego county to locate land here. This resulted in quite an addition to the population of the town from that section in 1827 and 1828 and later. About 1830 for three or four years a number came to the western part of the town from Genesee county. Afterward and up to about 1836 settlers no longer came in groups and the growth of the town was less rapid. During this whole period a class of men came in who made permanent citizens and many of their sons and daughters still remain. Many possessed means to pay for their farms and thus escaped the privations the pioneers endured. This brought together a set of resolute, athletic men. Their sports were of the athletic type. Almost every raising, logging-bee, town meeting, and election was hailed as a day of recreation. Jumping, wrestling, and ball playing were the usual sports engaged in. General training and Fourth of July were anticipated as legitimate days for all manly and innocent games. One individual, Sela Burlingame, a perfect gentleman, would never bet, never refused a challenge to wrestle, and was never vanquished. We are not aware that a wager was ever laid on one of these contests.

The third period of rapid settlement of the town was brought about by John C. Devereux, son of Nicholas Devereux, the leading proprietor of the lands purchased from the Holland Company known as the Devereux purchase. About 1843 he came to Ellicottville to take charge of his father's interests. Mr. Devereux was an Irishman by birth, and soon after his arrival at Ellicottville he conceived the idea of disposing of their lands to his countrymen, who, about 1850, began to arrive in large numbers. He sold farms on liberal terms and rapidly disposed of his lands to actual settlers. A considerable portion of this property was in Franklinville, which gave a new impetus to the improvement of the town. These new arrivals quickly paid for their farms and surrounded themselves with the comforts of life. When the Irish first began to settle here there was a strong prejudice against them, which was outspoken and quite as annoying as it was undeserved. They were in a manner ostracized. This treatment induced them to lead a clanish life for some years. But they were prompt and honest in discharging their obligations, which gradually won the entire confidence of the community at large. In 1866, the arrivals of this class having considerably diminished, Mr. Devereux moved to Utica, leaving his business here in the hands of John McMahon.

Soon after the first settlers began to raise stock the bears and wolves became so troublesome that measures were taken to protect the inhabitants from their predatory encroachments and bounties were offered for their destruction. Prior to 1822 the Legislature had passed acts authorizing Boards of Supervisors to offer bounties for killing wolves and to levy and collect taxes to pay them. In some instances county treasurers had become involved in consequence of the large amounts of bounty certificates presented for payment, and they applied to the Legislature for relief. As an example the following act, passed February 4, 1822, is quoted:

"Be it enacted by the people of the State of New York represented in Senate and Assembly, That it shall be the duty of the Comptroller to draw his warrant on the treasurer of this State in favor of Moses Vancampen, treasurer of Allegany County, for the sum of ninety two dollars and fifty cents: which sum the said treasurer of this State is hereby required to pay: the same being for wolf bounties."

Sections 8 and 9 of an act passed February 9, 1822, read as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That the County treasurer shall charge the State treasurer the one half of all bounties credited and allowed by the board of Supervisors for wolves taken and killed in their respective Counties, which account the comptroller is hereby directed to allow."

"And be it further enacted, That all laws heretofore made, authorizing any bounty to be paid by any county or town in this State, for the destruction of wolves, bears, panthers, wild cats, foxes, noxious animals, and birds, be and the same are hereby repealed."

The following resolution was passed by the Board of Supervisors of Cattaraugus county on November 10, 1820:

"Resolved, That the County pay a bounty of twenty dollars for every full grown wolf killed in the county and seven dollars and fifty cents for each and every wolf whelp killed in the County of Cattaraugus for one year from this 10th day of November, 1820."

This resolution had been passed year by year for several years prior to 1820, and was passed again in 1821 for the last time. The effect of these bounties is shown by the town audits of the town of Ischua for 1820. As that document contains several items of interest aside from bounties it is given in full:

In 1820 the county treasurer charged the State of New York with bounty money $972.50 and in 1821 with $1,476.50. The State paid bounties in 1822 of $200, in 1822 $90, in 1824 $120, in 1825 $67. After this bounties received little attention. After 1827 stock was rarely killed by wolves or bears.

In 1820 the total valuation of real and personal property in the town of Ischua was $450,818. Ischua then embraced the present towns of Franklinville, Farmersville, Lyndon, Ellicottville, Freedom, and Yorkshshire. In 1892 the total valuation of these towns was as follows: Franklinville, $1,314,510; Farmersville, $702,315; Lyndon, $389,627; Ellicottville, $754,611; Freedom, $720,608; Yorkshshire, $661,014: a total of $4,542,685. Ellicottville, Freedom, and Yorkshshire were set off from Ischua in 1820. The town audit of Franklinville for 1824 was as follows:

Lyndon was set off from this town in 1829, leaving Franklinville with its present boundaries. The total valuation in 1829 was $61,681 and in 1892 $1,314,510. In 1829 the total tax levy of the town was $1,057.32; the ratio of tax on the dollar was .01713. In 1892 the total tax levy was $7,197.28; the ratio of tax on the dollar was .00533.

The first school taught within the present limits of the town of Franklinville was in 1808 or '09 by Dr. John McCluer in a house built by Benjamin Hotchkiss, who had moved out and settled on the east part of lot 38. The first frame school house was built in 1813 on the farm then owned by Henry Conrad and now owned by Thomas Grierson. Its size was 16x20, and Henry L. Kingsley was the first teacher. In 1820 a log school house was built about a half-mile north of the village of Franklinville and William Older, Solomon Curtis, and William Stillwell were elected trustees. In 1820-21 Louie Moore taught this school. In the winter of 1821-22 Benjamin McCluer and in 1824-25 Pardon T. Jewell taught. In 1828 the first school house in the village of Franklinville was erected. Since the first school houses were built, as the districts were formed and numbered, the new buildings, in point of comfort and convenience, have fully kept pace with the growth and prosperity of the town. The first settlers clustered around the village and district No. 1 was organized. Later, from 1817 to 1821, the settlement extended down the Ischua valley below Cadiz and No. 2 was formed. About 1825 Cadiz received a number of settlers, a carding-mill was built by Tilly Gilbert, a store was opened, a saw-mill put up, a tavern and a blacksmith shop established, and No. 3 was organized. There are now twelve school districts in town.

There has been some misapprehension in regard to the formation of the town of Franklinville. It has been difficult to obtain the successive legislative acts which gave the town its present name and form, but they were finally secured through the courtesy of Hon. B. B. Lewis. In the State Gazetteer of 1861 and County Gazetteer of 1874 appears the following: "Franklinville was formed from Olean, June 16, 1812, as 'Hebe.' Its name was changed to Ischua, April 17, 1816, and to Franklinville, March 3, 1824." The latter statement only proves to be correct. March 11, 1808, the Legislature passed an act dividing the county of Genesee, a part of which reads as follows:

"XXI. And be it further enacted, That the county of Cattaraugus be erected into a town by the name of Olean, and that the first town meeting in the said town of Olean be held at the dwelling house of Joseph McCluer, in said town.

"XXII. And be it further enacted, That so much of this act as relates to the forming of new towns shall take effect from and after the day preceding the first Tuesday of April next."

The following is found among the early records of the town of Olean:

"At a special town meeting held at the house of Wyllys Thrall, on Saturday the 16 day of May, 1812, for the purpose of dividing the town of Olean, the following votes were passed:

"1st. That the town of Olean shall be divided.

"2d. That the division line shall be the line between the third and fourth towns, running east and west.

"3d. That the south part of said line shall retain the name of Olean.

"4th. That the north part of said line shall be called Ischua.

- "5th. That the first town meeting in the town of Olean shall be held at the house of Sylvanus Russell.
- "6th. That the first town meeting in the town of Ischua shall be held at the house of Joseph McCluer.
- "7th. That the postage for to send the same to Albany shall be paid out of the contingent money in the town of Olean."

This resulted in the passage of the following act by the Legislature on the 16th of June, 1812:

"SECTION I. Be it enacted by the people of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, That from and after the day preceding the 1st Tuesday of March next, all that part of the town of Olean aforesaid, lying on the north side of the line running east and west between the third and fourth tiers of townships of the Holland Land Company's land in said county of Cattaraugus, shall be erected into a separate town, by the name of Ischua, and the first town meeting in said town shall be held at the house of Joseph McCluer in said town.

"II. And be it further enacted, That all the remaining part of said town of Olean shall be and remain a separate town by the name of Olean, and the first town meeting shall be held at the house of Sylvanus Russell in said town."

Again Ischua and Olean were declared separate towns by the following act passed April 12, 1813:

"I. Be it enacted by the people of the State of New York represented in Senate and Assembly, That all that part of the county of Cattaraugus lying on the north side of the line running east and west between the third and fourth tiers of townships of the land of the Holland Company, shall be and continue a town by the name of Ischua. And that all the remaining part of the county of Cattaraugus shall be and continue a town by the name of Olean."

The towns of Olean and Ischua were still further recognized by the act passed April 13, 1814, annexing a part of the county of Cattaraugus to Allegany, erecting the town of Perry (now Perrysburg), directing the use of monies, and regulating town meetings, etc.:

"III. And be it further enacted, That all that part of the towns of Olean and Ischua, in the said county of Cattaraugus, hereby annexed to the said county of Allegany, shall be and remain separate towns, by the name of Olean and Ischua."

The name of the town of Ischua was changed to Franklinville by an act of the Legislature passed March 3, 1824, as follows:

"Be it enacted by the people of the State of New York represented in Senate and Assembly, That from and after the first day of April next, the town of Ischua, in the County of Cattaraugus, shall be called and known by the name of Franklinville."

The foregoing legislative acts establish the fact that the northern part of the town of Olean was erected into a town by the name of Ischua and remained so until 1824, when it was changed to Franklinville. During the period between 1812 and 1824 towns had been erected from Ischua until only township four in the fifth range, township four in the fourth range, and township four in the third range remained of the original town, and these townships were erected into the town of Franklinville by the act last quoted. Lyndon was set off from Franklinville on January 24, 1829, which left Franklinville with the same territory that it now contains. The town of Ischua was properly represented in the Board of Supervisors from 1818 to 1824. The town of Hebe nowhere appears in the records of Cattaraugus county, and positively there never was a town of Hebe in this county.

Since the town of "Hebe" has in some way got mixed up with the history of Franklinville and Ischua it seems proper to outline its very brief existence. On page 27, laws of 1814, appears the following act passed by the Legislature on February 25th:

"I. Be it enacted by the people of the State of New York represented in Senate and Assembly, That from and after the passing of this act, all that part of the said county of Genesee, comprehending township number eight in the first range of the lands of the Holland Company, shall be erected into a separate town by the name of Hebe; and that the first town meeting thereafter shall be held at the dwelling house of Charles Bristol; and that from and after the passing of this act, all the remaining part of the said town of Warsaw shall be and remain a separate town by the name of Warsaw; and that the first town meeting thereafter shall be held at the dwelling house of Elizur Webster."

Hebe in Genesee county, now in Wyoming, was changed to Gainesville on April 17, 1816, and this is the act referred to as changing the town of Hebe to the town of Ischua:

"Be it enacted by the people of the State of New York represented in Senate and Assembly, That from and after the first Tuesday of May next the town of Hebe, in the County of Genesee, shall be called and known by the name of Gainesville."

The town officers of Ischua in 1820 were Thomas Morris, supervisor; Moses Warner, town clerk; William Price, James Adkins, Ira Norton, justices of the peace; Enoch Howlet, Samuel G. Sutton, Elijah Rice, assessors; Joseph McCluer, Isaac Carpenter, clerks of election; Nathan Cole, Richard Tozer, commissioners of highways; Orange Powell, Isaac Carpenter, commissioners of schools. There was paid for bounties on wolf certificates and wolfs' scalps $160 and on bears' scalps $80. The Ischua town officers in 1821 were Peter Ten Broeck, supervisor; Elijah Rice, town clerk; William Sill, James Green, justices of the peace; Moses Warner, Elijah Sill, Isaac Searl, Sr., Robert R. Blackmon, Henry Conrad, Joseph Cole, commissioners of highways; Isaac Searl, school commissioner; Solomon Curtis, Richard Tozer, assessors.

The supervisors, town clerks, and justices of the peace of the old town of Ischua, as far as ascertained, are as follows:

Supervisors.—Thomas Morris, 1818-20; Peter Ten Broeck, 1821; David McCluer, 1822; Isaac Searl, 1823. Town Clerks.—Moses Warner, 1820; Elijah Rice, 1821; Flavel Patridge, 1822-23. Justices of the Peace.—William Sill and James Green, 1821; Isaac Searl and Jonathan H. Lyon, 1823.

Franklinville was erected March 3, 1824, and the first officers elected were as follows: Isaac Searl, supervisor; Flavel Patridge, town clerk; Jonathan H. Lyon, justice of the peace; Elijah Sill, S. Rawson, Jonathan H. Lyon, assessors; John Morris, Moses Chamberlain, commissioner of highways; Joseph McCluer, Solomon Curtis, John Reynolds, school commissioners; Moses Warner, school inspector; John Patterson, collector and constable.

The town has furnished its full share of members of Assembly: 1814-15, Joseph McCluer; 1829, Flavel Patridge; 1837, Tilly Gilbert; 1844, James Burt; 1846, Gideon Searl; 1858, Henry Van Aernam; 1866, William McVey; and 1868, Jonas K. Button. Henry Van Aernam was member of Congress from 1865 to 1869 and from 1879 to 1883. The principal town officers have been as follows:

Supervisors.—Isaac Searl, Sr., 1824-27, 1831, 1836-37, 1840, 1845; Flavel Patridge, 1828; Joseph McCluer, 1829; John Patterson, 1830; Tilly Gilbert, 1832-35; Hiram W. McCluer, 1838-39; Thomas Seward, 1841-42; James Burt, 1843; Otis W. Phillips, 1844; David McCluer, 1846-48; William Smith, 1849-50; Alanson Crosby, 1851-52; Jonas K. Button, 1853-54, 1857, 1860; O. M. Seward, 1855; Lewis J. Mason, 1856; Samuel Searl, 1858; John Johnson, 1859; Isaac Searl, Jr., 1861-62, 1868-72; William F. Weed, 1863-66; Nathan F. Weed, 1867, 1880-81; William A. Day, 1873-74; Solomon Cummings, 1875; Alfred Spring, 1876; Cyrus W. Fay, 1877-79; Peter T. B. Button, 1882-83; Frank D. Smith, 1884-85; William Ely, 1886-87; Stephen McNall, 1888; S. C. Hayden, 1889; D. W. Dean, 1890; Thomas Davis, 1891-92; J. K. Button, 1893.

Town Clerks.—Flavel Patridge, 1824-26; William Phoenix, 1827-29; Tilly Gilbert, 1830, 1851, 1854; Elijah C. Hyde, 1831, 1833-38; Lorentus Salisbury, 1832; Warren Kingsley, 1839, 1841; Francis G. Clark (P. N. Bradford), 1840; Hiram W. McCluer, 1842; John R. Pollard, 1843-44; Le Roy Burlingame, 1845, 1855, 1858; James J. McCluer, 1846-48, 1850; Merlin Mead, 1849, 1859-60; Henry E. Green, 1852; Francis G. Clark, 1853; Robert Reed, 1856; Joseph Lawrence, 1857; Dexter C. Weed, 1861-63; Sylvester Curtis, 1864; David Phetepiece, 1865-66; Marcus Smith, 1867; Wallace Howard, 1868; J. W. Howard, 1869; Andrew Chandler, 1870; John Sherry, 1871; Delos E. Graves, 1872-75; Avery W. Kingsley, 1876; Christopher Whitney, 1877, 1880-86; Ira T. Gleason, 1878-79; William F. Weed, 1887; John C. Clements, 1888-93.

Justices of the Peace.—1824, Jonathan H. Lyon; 1829, Ezra Brockway, James L. Bishop; 1830, Tilly Gilbert; 1831, Jonathan H. Lyon, Isaac Searl; 1832, Joseph McCluer, Flavel Patridge, James L. Bishop; 1833, Tilly Gilbert; 1834, Pardon T. Jewell; 1835, Israel Day; 1835-37, William Elliot; 1838, Tilly Gilbert; 1840, F. G. Clark, Tilly Gilbert, P. T. Jewell, William Elliot; 1841, Tilly Gilbert; 1842, Manly McClure; 1843, Francis G. Clark; 1844, William Elliot; 1845, Merlin Mead; 1846, Manly McClure; 1847, Francis G. Clark; 1848, Lewis J. Mason; 1849, William F. Weed; 1850, Manly McClure; 1851, Francis G. Clark; 1852, Lewis J. Mason; 1853, William F. Weed; 1854, Ira L. Burlingame, John Little; 1855, Solomon Curtis; 1856, Elathan Wing; 1857, William F. Weed; 1858, William Smith, Nathan P. Williams; 1859, Le Roy Burlingame; 1860, John Burlingame; 1861, Solomon Cummings; 1862, Peter Carr; 1863, Edward Shearn; 1864, Pardon Jewell, N. P. Williams; 1865, Solomon Cummings; 1866, Peter Carr; 1867, John Burlingame; 1868, Le Roy Burlingame; 1870, Pardon Jewell, Solomon Cummings; 1871, William F. Weed; 1872, Marcus Smith; 1873, Pardon Jewell; 1874, Solomon Cummings; 1875, Merlin Mead; 1876, Delos E. Graves; 1877, Pardon Jewell; 1878, George H. Chandler; 1879, Dexter C. Weed; 1880, W. W. Waring; 1881, John Burlingame; 1882, Charles D. Van Aernam, Pardon Jewell; 1883, Henry R. Curtis, John D. McMahon; 1884, John Burlingame; 1885, Pardon Jewell; 1886, Dexter C. Weed, W. W. Waring; 1887, Henry R. Curtis; 1888, Thomas Davis; 1889, Stephen C. Andrews, W. W. Waring; 1890, Pardon Jewell; 1891, Henry Curtis, W. W. Waring; 1892, Charles T. Mason; 1893, James L. Clements.

In consequence of some sinister fatality which pursued the earliest records of Franklinville but little can be ascertained concerning the officers of the town until about 1833, since when there seems to be no break in the records. In one of the county treasurer's books are the following entries:

"John Patterson, collector of the town of Franklinville, in account current with the treasurer of Cattaraugus county.

Feb. 4th, 1825.

"To amount of tax roll as pr. warrant and directions:

To poor masters.....	$ 50.00
To town clerk.....	250.00
To school commissioners.....	26.64
To supervisor.....	226.11
To county treasurer.....	466.91

Amount of fees retained.....
50.98

To cash paid collector.....

Total.....
—$965.08"

All of which was credited as follows:

"By Holland Company's tax.....	$ 366.15
By com. schools rec'd in full.....	26.64
By supervisors rec'ts in part.....	39.22
By poor master rec'd in full.....	50.00
By sundry orders.....	241.57
By transcript returns.....	271.50
Total.....	—$965.08"

The above is the first tax made out and collected in the town of Franklinville, and is for the year 1824. In the year 1892 the taxes on corporations alone amounted to $655.45. The county treasurer's report for the year ending November 14, 1892, states that he received from the collector of the town of Franklinville taxes to the amount of $4,713.09. From the journal of the Board of Supervisors for 1892 it is found that the claims against the town as audited and allowed by the Town Board, and added thereto by resolution of the supervisors, amounted to $762.88. In 1825 the population of the town of Franklinville was 523; in 1890 it was 2,224. In 1825 the town received school money from the State $32.35 and for the year ending 1893 $1,876.14.

Two lines of railroad, with stations on each, afford to the town excellent communication with Rochester, Buffalo, and other points. The Western New York & Pennsylvania traverses the eastern part of the town, running through the villages of Franklinville and Cadiz, the first train going over the road on June 10, 1872. The Rochester branch of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg crosses the northeast corner, the station in this town being Devereux Station. For the first named road the town, on September 5, 1868, issued bonds to the amount of $30,000, and on October 6th Jonas K. Button was authorized to subscribe for 300 shares of the company's stock. On February 1, 1878, the balance of the bonded indebtedness was paid.

There are six cheese factories in the town, five of which turned out 699,407 pounds of cheese in 1892, as follows: Rock Stream factory, No. 4, J. R. Holden, proprietor, 71,102; Franklinville factory, No. 1, E. H. Farrington, proprietor, 188,677; No. 2, E. H. Farrington, proprietor, 180,000; No. 3, E. H. Farrington, proprietor, 143,628; Claire factory, 116,000. The Laidlaw factory was built the past spring by its patrons.

The following is a letter from the Postoffice Department at Washington relative to the early postoffices in Cattaraugus county:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 7, 1891.

"Sir: In answer to your letter to Hon. W. G. Laidlaw, M. C., (herewith returned,) you are informed that the postoffice at Franklinville, Cattaraugus county, N. Y., was established July 5, 1820, Joseph McCluer, P. M. Olean was established May 23, 1816, Philo Cleveland, P. M. Cattaraugus established July 19, 1814, discontinued December 4, 1817, re-established June 17, 1851. West Hinsdale established October 2, 1828, name changed to Rice, April 28, 1848, and Rice changed to Ischua, July 31, 1855. There never was a Hebe office in Cattaraugus county. Respectfully,

"To G. C. Storrs, Esq.,

S. A. WHITFIELD,

"Franklinville, N. Y.

First Asst. P. M.-Gen'l."

Since the establishment of the Franklinville postoffice July 5, 1820, the successive postmasters have been Gen. Joseph McCluer, David McCluer (son of General Joseph), Maj. Flavel Patridge, David McCluer (re-appointed), Silas Adams, Gideon Searl, J. R. Salisbury, David McCluer (re-appointed second time), John Little, Christopher Whitney, Stephen C. Andrews, and Margaret Andrews, the present incumbent. About 1830 there was a postoffice established by the name of Canning with James L. Bishop as postmaster. The office was discontinued about 1833 or '34.

Cadiz postoffice was established October 23, 1851, with John H. Aylesworth as postmaster. From the most reliable information at hand the postmasters have been John H. Aylesworth, Robert Reed, Joseph Lawrence, Le Roy Burlingame, Charles Seward, and Eddy Mead.

Previous to the establishment of the Franklinville postoffice in 1820 the manner in which mails were received and sent out is involved in uncertainty. Prior to 1816 it appears that there was a horseback route from Moscow to Olean which brought the mail to be distributed along the Ischua valley. About the year 1816 there was a mail route opened from Centerville through to Franklinville and the mail carried on horseback, and this continued until July 5, 1820. Among those who carried the mails from 1816 to 1820 were William M. and Marvin Older, sons of William Older, one of the first who settled near the western boundary of what is now Farmersville. The point where he located has since been known as Older hill. The first person who made a contract with the government to carry the mails after the establishment of the postoffice in 1820 is believed to be a Mr. Moore, who carried them only a short time. His trips were made on horseback. He was succeeded by Thomas B. Walker, who held the position for a number of years. He was the first to drive a 'buss for the accommodation of passengers, and his route was from Gainesville to Ellicottville. Reuben Hurlburt, who also carried the mails for some years, succeeded Mr. Walker. A route was also established a little later from Franklinville to Olean with John Patterson as mail carrier, which continued until the completion of the New York & Erie railway in 1851, after which the route extended to Hinsdale only, and this continued until the completion of the Buffalo, New York & Philadelphia railroad in 1872. Bony Deibler carried the mails much of the time during this period. The completion of this road completely revolutionized the mail service through the eastern part of the county.

On the site of the village of Franklinville, which lies in the northeast part of the town and was first known as Ischua flats, Gen. Joseph McCluer settled in 1806, and from him it took the name of McCluer's Settlement, which it retained until 1824, when it was changed to Franklinville in honor of Benjamin Franklin. From 1808 to 1812 it was in the town of Olean and was the center of population of the entire county of Cattaraugus. From 1812 to 1824 it was in the town of Ischua, during which period it was that town's business center, and this fact makes the history of the old town of Ischua (the present town of Ischua was never included in the old town) and the town of Franklinville nearly identical. The first goods sold here were sold by Thomas Morris in 1808; Isaac Carpenter sold goods in 1816 and Flavel Patridge in 1821; the latter built the first store. About 1825 Lorentus Salisbury came to the village and entered the service of Flavel Patridge as clerk. He soon afterward opened a store in company with Jonathan H. Lyon; a few years later he entered into partnership with Jabez Morgan. In 1835 he commenced business alone and in 1837 his brother, J. R. Salisbury, came to the village and became his clerk for one year, when he became a partner in the business, and some members of the Salisbury family has represented some branch of mercantile business up to the present time. Cook & Day had a store which was burned in 1825 or '26. E. C. Hyde sold goods in 1828. The physicians and the lawyers who have practiced their professions in Franklinville have received extended notices in their respective chapters. Joseph McCluer kept the first inn. On the road leading from Franklinville to Ellicottville there were four taverns within the limits of this town in 1829: John Patterson, about a mile west of the village, afterward owned by Jarvis Stone; Samuel McCluer, on the place now owned by Frederick McCluer; Moses Chamberlain, on the place now owned by Peter Carr; and John Andrews, on the Mary Foot farm. About 1828 a tavern was built where the Globe Hotel now stands. In 1825 Pardon T. Jewell rented the McCluer tavern and kept it three years. Jonathan H. Lyon built the first tannery in 1819. About the same time Israel Day started a deerskin tannery and manufactured gloves and mittens. In 1828-29 Jonathan H. Lyon carried on a shoe shop in the village. Jasper M. Bosworth built a blacksmith shop in 1824.

In accordance with the general statutes providing for the incorporation of villages notices were issued, signed by many of the citizens of the village, calling a meeting to determine whether the territory described below should be incorporated into a village to be known as Franklinville:

Beginning at the southeast corner of lot 39, township four, and range four of the Holland Land Company's survey; thence west along the south bounds of said lot 39, 74 chains and 50 links, to the southwest corner of lot 39; thence north along the township line, between the fourth and fifth ranges of townships of said survey, 94 chains, to a point 34 chains north of the southwest corner of lot 40, township four, and range four; thence east through the Riggs farm to the west bounds of the Buffalo road; thence northerly along the west bounds of said road to a point opposite to the northwest corner of land now owned by N. F. Weed & Co. on said lot 40; thence southeasterly across the said road and along said Weed's line to the east bounds of the Rushford or Farmersville road at the Bridge across the Saunders creek; thence southerly along the east bounds of said road to the north line of B. Howard's land on said lot 40; thence easterly on said Howard's north line to the east bounds of said lot 40; thence south on the east line of said lot 40, 17 chains, to the south corner thereof; thence south on the east line of lot 39, 59 chains and 10 links, to the southeast corner thereof, being the place of beginning, containing 647 acres of land.

At the meeting eighty-nine ballots were cast, of which sixty-five were for and twenty-four against the incorporation. A meeting was held on June 17, 1874, which elected these village officers: Samuel S. Spring, president; Jonas K. Button, Andrew C. Adams, and Henry Van Aernam, trustees; Andrew B. Chandler, collector; Solomon Cummings, treasurer; and Alfred Spring (appointed), clerk. The officers elected in 1893 are W. A. Day, president; S. C. Hayden, trustee; James McStay, collector; R. S. Litchfield, treasurer; and Pardon Jewell, police justice. The village contains three dry goods stores, a clothing store, six groceries, two hotels, five lawyers, five physicians, two weekly newspapers, an academy, a union graded school, two marble and granite shops, two hardware stores, two jewelry stores, two drug stores, two wagon and four blacksmith shops, two harness and three shoe shops, two meat markets, a bakery, three millinery stores, three dressmaking and four tailor establishments, two feed stores, a shoe store, one coal office, two livery stables, two insurance offices, two undertakers, a furniture establishment, two photograph galleries, two barber shops, telephone, telegraph, and express offices, a number of carpenter shops, etc., and a population of about 1,100.

The first fire company formed in Franklinville was the "Eagle Engine Fire Company," organized June 30, 1876, with twenty members. The engine was an eighty-gallon Babcock chemical fire extinguisher and cost $704.83. The officers were Ira C. Worthington, foreman, and Andrew B. Chandler, assistant foreman. After the water works were completed in 1891 three new companies were formed: The Alert Hook and Ladder Company, the Union Hose Company, and the Exempt Hose Company. The Union Hose Company was organized from the old Union Fire Company in 1891. The old Eagle Company exists only in memory. The Alert Hook and Ladder Company organized in 1879 with these officers: L. S. Ely, president; W. H. Ferris, secretary; R. S. Litchfield, treasurer; H. K. Fisher, foreman; Walter Whitcomb, assistant foreman. The Alert Company has an elegant suit of rooms furnished at a cost of over $1,000. The Union Fire Company was organized in 1886 and was changed to Union Hose Company in 1891. A new hose company was formed in July of this year. The present officers of the Franklinville Fire Department are: M. J. Waring, chief; L. S. Ely, assistant chief; F. M. Naughton, president; A. J. Smith, vice-president; A. Clark Adams, secretary; R. S. Litchfield, treasurer.

The system of water works is owned by the corporation and the village trustees are its officers. The vote authorizing the trustees to put in the plant was taken July 31, 1890, and the works were completed December 20th following. Water was taken from springs in Lyndon, six miles east, and from Farmersville, two miles north. The works cost $33,000 and have a capacity of 3,500 barrels per day. There is a fall of 181 feet. The work of supplying the village with pure and sufficient water was undoubtedly accelerated by a series of incendiary fires which terrorized the citizens and the whole community.

Mount Prospect Cemetery is situated east of the village, about a quarter of a mile, on the slope of the hill overlooking the Ischua valley from below Cadiz to some distance upward into Machias and Farmersville and some distance to the west. For a number of years previous to 1877 the question of establishing a new cemetery had been agitated, meetings had been held, resolutions passed, committees appointed, and reports made. In July, 1877, a paper was drawn up for the purpose of forming a cemetery association under the laws of the State and about fifty names were secured. On the 28th of July a meeting was held in the Baptist church and a corporation was organized under the name of the "Franklinville Cemetery Association." It was then determined to hold the annual election of officers on the last Saturday of July and the number of trustees was fixed at nine. The first officers were Henry Van Aernam, president; William F. Weed, vice-president; James H. Waring, secretary; Jason D. Case, treasurer; trustees: William F. Weed, A. O. Holmes, James Ferris, first class; Solomon Cummings, Warren Carpenter, J. H. Waring, second class; Henry Van Aernam, Jason D. Case, John E. Robeson, third class. On the 30th of July the certificate of incorporation was recorded in the county clerk's office and the association thereby became a corporate body with full power to purchase land and lay out into lots, ornament, and sell the same for cemetery purposes. The trustees on the 5th of September, 1877, purchased of Tryphena and Luman Howard twelve and twelve-hundredths acres of land for $2,000; as a matter of convenience they later bought one and seventy-one one-hundredths acres for $350, so that the plat contains thirteen and eighty-three one-hundredths acres. The grounds received the name of "Mount Prospect Cemetery" and were dedicated to the sacred purpose of burial places for the dead on the 6th of June, 1878, by appropriate exercises. Rev. F. W. Fisher delivered the dedicatory address.

Morgan hall is a commodious building and cost about $15,000, $9,000 of which was willed to the town by the late Henry Morgan, for the purpose of erecting a town hall, in whose honor the building received its name. It was completed and dedicated in 1885; Marvin Older delivered the dedicatory address. The remaining $6,000 was raised by a tax on the inhabitants of the town. The building is conveniently located near the center of the village, south of the park and across the road, and is 120 by 54 feet in size. The auditorium will seat 550 persons—360 below and 190 in the gallery. One room on the ground floor is set apart for transacting town business and another for the postoffice. The basement is for the use of the fire companies.

The Franklinville Electric Light Company owes its existence to the push and energy of two young men, Will H. Ferris and Samuel Arthur Spring, who called a meeting of the citizens at Morgan hall in November, 1892, at which a committee of five was appointed, consisting of Dr. J. W. Kales, L. S. Ely, Fayette Searl, C. D. Van Aernam, and P. T. B. Button, to investigate different electric light plants. This committee visited several different plants, and at a meeting held some two weeks later it reported in favor of arc lamps, and accordingly the trustees of the village called a special election for January 31, 1893, which decided on electric lighting by a handsome majority. The trustees advertised for bids for lighting the streets with sixteen 2,000 candle-power arc lamps and the contract was awarded to S. A. Spring and Will H. Ferris, who subsequently received orders for over 700 incandescent lights for buildings. A company was formed with a capital of $12,000, Messrs. Ferris and Spring taking one-half of the stock, the balance being taken by Dr. H. D. Walker, J. C. Bowen, A. & G. E. Spring, S. C. Hayden, J. K. Button, and Avery Kingsley, and these officers were elected: H. D. Walker, president; E. E. McNall, vice-president; Samuel A. Spring, treasurer; Will H. Ferris, secretary; H. D. Walker, E. E. McNall, George E. Spring, S. A. Spring, Will H. Ferris, Board of Managers. A site for the plant near the Dean & Spring casket factory was purchased and a brick building erected. Up to August 1, 1893, there were seventeen arc street lamps, eleven commercial arc lamps, and 500 incandescent lamps in operation.

The inception of banking transactions in Franklinville dates from January 1, 1867, when N. F. Weed & Co. started an exchange office for the business accommodation of the village and town. This led to the organization of the Bank of Franklinville on December 24, 1872, with a capital of $26,000 and these stockholders: Asher W. Miner, William F. Weed, Thomas Case, A. A. Morgan, Samuel Morgan, Jason D. Case, L. F. Lawton, Horatio Stillwell, H. E. Green, James O. Jordan, Simeon R. Williams, and Nathan F. Weed. William F. Weed was president and J. D. Case was cashier. This bank commenced business February 3, 1873, and until January, 1876, occupied quarters in the second story of the Wasson store; on that date it moved to its new two-story brick banking house on the site where once stood D. Claflin's dwelling. On January 1, 1877, the institution became the First National Bank of Franklinville with a paid-up capital stock of $55,000; this was the second national bank in the county. The charter was dated January 15, 1877, and the first officers were William F. Weed, president; H. Stillwell, vice-president; Jason D. Case, cashier; directors, W. F. Weed, A. W. Miner, H. Stillwell, T. Case, H. E. Green, N. F. Weed, and J. D. Case. On May 1, 1882, W. F. Weed and H. E. Green resigned, and H. Stillwell was elected president and Thomas Case vice-president. Mr. Stillwell died about September, 1883, and Mr. Case became president and James H. Ferris vice-president. The latter died January 12, 1885, and was succeeded by John R. Holden. Thus the present officers are Thomas Case, president; J. R. Holden, vice-president; J. D. Case, cashier; E. D. Scott, assistant cashier; directors, J. R. Holden, J. D. Case, A. W. Kingsley, B. S. Colwell, E. D. Scott, R. B. Griffin.

The Farmers National Bank of Franklinville was organized August, 1882. The capital stock is $52,000; surplus, $5,500. The first officers were John Napier, president; William F. Weed, vice-president; and W. J. Weed, cashier. April 1, 1885, W. J. Weed resigned as cashier and A. P. Adams was elected to the position. Upon the death of William F. Weed on August 1, 1888, his son, Nathan F. Weed became vice-president. With these changes the present officers are John Napier, president; N. F. Weed, vice-president; A. P. Adams, cashier; R. S. Litchfield, teller; directors, A. O. Holmes, Alfred Spring, William Ely, J. E. Robeson, W. A. Day, N. F. Weed, John Napier, J. E. Euchner, and A. P. Adams.

The Franklinville Canning Company was organized January 10, 1882, with a capital stock of $18,700, and with these officers: Alfred Spring, president; William M. Benton, vice-president; Ira T. Gleason, secretary; A. W. Kingsley, treasurer; Ira T. Gleason, William Ely, Jason D. Case, executive committee. The factory was completed and commenced operations the same year and packed of all kinds of fruit a total of 314,447 cans. The factory was burned in October, 1887, and rebuilt in 1887-88. The main building is two stories high and 50 by 108 feet in size; attached are two ells each 75 feet long. A brick boiler house, in which is an eighty horse-power boiler and forty horse-power engine, a two-story warehouse 50 by 175 feet, and a one-story building for husking corn, etc., completes the plant. The whole is equipped with modern and convenient machinery, and both fruit and vegetables are packed. In the can shop large numbers of fruit and syrup cans, paint pails, etc., are manufactured; this department is kept running nearly the entire year. During the packing season from 200 to 250 hands are employed. The total pack of all kinds during 1892 was 1,237,270 cans, of which 208,570 or more were gallon cans. The company also made 227,000 syrup cans and 33,000 sap buckets for market. The present officers of the concern are Alfred Spring, president; Dr. H. D. Walker, vice-president; W. A. Day, bondholder; A. O. Holmes, secretary; P. T. B. Button, William Ely, A. O. Holmes, executive committee.

The Dean & Spring Manufacturing Company was incorporated September 22, 1888, with the following officers: P. T. B. Button, president; William Ely, vice-president; Samuel A. Spring, treasurer; D. W. Dean, secretary; P. T. B. Button, William Ely, Albo Holmes, Lewis H. Stilwell, D. W. Dean, Samuel A. Spring, Board of Managers. The capital stock is $48,000. The company deals in feed, lumber, and burial supplies, and grinds all its feed and manufactures its burial supplies except trimmings; it simply deals in lumber. The sales in 1889, the first year after the organization, aggregated about $100,000; in 1892 they amounted to $200,000. They employ 40 or 50 hands.

The Grierson flour and feed-mill derives its motive power from Ischua creek. It is owned by Thomas Grierson, who purchased it of James Grierson in 1876. It has three runs of stone with a good capacity.

The Franklinville machine and foundry shop in the village manufactures a general line of castings and small agricultural implements. H. S. Crossman is proprietor and five or six hands are employed.

The Ten Broeck Free Academy is one of the two leading educational institutions in Cattaraugus county, and in point of advantages ranks high among the prominent seats of learning of the kind in western New York. It occupies a pleasant location in the northern part of the village of Franklinville. The institution was incorporated April 19, 1862, and in the following year was endowed by the founder, Hon. Peter Ten Broeck, for fifteen years associate judge of the county, after whom the academy is named. In 1867 a commodious cut-stone building was erected on a campus of four acres at a cost of $21,000. The school was opened in December of that year under the control of three trustees named in the act of incorporation, viz.: Jonas K. Button, Heman G. Button, and John T. Cummings, representing respectively the towns of Franklinville, Machias, and Farmersville. Mr. Cummings, however, declined to serve and Andrew C. Adams was appointed in his place. Upon the removal of Mr. Adams from the town in 1873 James H. Day was appointed his successor and vice-president of the board. In 1884, at the resignation of Jonas K. Button from the presidency of the Board of Trustees, Heman G. Button succeeded to that office and Dr. Henry Van Aernam was appointed to fill the vacancy in the board, both of whom continue to act in their respective capacities as president and secretary. Since 1884 no treasurer has been appointed. The First National Bank and the Farmers National Bank are the financial agents of the board, through whom all the monetary affairs of the academy are conducted. The school began under the principalship of William M. Benson, A.M., and remained under his supervision until 1882, when he was followed by Theodore F. Chapin, A.M., who retained the position during the next five years. At his resignation in 1887 Professor Chapin was in turn followed by the present principal, Hamilton Terry, A.B. The first class was graduated in the classical course in June, 1870, and consisted of Alfred Spring, Joel H. Greene, James H. Waring, Emily M. Adams, Ida M. Adams, Mary T. B. Button, and Ida A. Gibbs.

The current expenses of the school are met by the income from an endowment of nearly $47,000 made by the founder, by receipts from tuition, and by an annual apportionment from the State literature fund. The institution is furnished with suitable apparatus for experiments and illustrations in the sciences, with a well-selected library of books covering all branches of knowledge, and with a free reading room supplied with educational and political papers and magazines. Students are admitted at any time and special classes are formed when necessary. There are three courses of study: (1) An English course designed to give a thorough practical knowledge of the English language, but in which a large number of subjects are elective, an arrangement which allows the student great freedom of choice in selecting his studies; (2) a German-French course for those who wish to become versed in the modern languages; and (3) a Latin-Greek course for those who intend to pursue a classical collegiate course. Graduates of this academy from the full Latin-Greek course have uniformly succeeded in securing an appointment to a Cornell free scholarship at competitive examinations. Candidates for graduation from any of the courses are required to have a Regents' preliminary certificate, and must have pursued at least three studies, exclusive of the preliminary branches, each term, and are entitled to a Regents' diploma. The income from a fund of $600 given by Caleb G. Hall for this purpose is annually distributed in prizes to the successful contestants in competitive examinations on past and current political subjects. The academy has been uniformly successful in carrying out the designs of its founder, imparting knowledge to a large number of young men and women, and qualifying them to successfully engage in the arduous duties of life. It has been a potent factor in developing the educational resources of Cattaraugus county as well as advancing the cause of learning in adjacent counties and States. Since its inception its patronage has steadily increased, and its students and graduates have gone forth well trained and mentally equipped. Its various teachers have admirably sustained a good reputation in the line of instruction, and have uniformly imparted to the school a high degree of thoroughness and efficiency.

Cadiz is a post village one and a half miles south from Franklinville, and is located on the west side of Ischua creek and on the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad. It contains one church edifice, a cheese-box and barrel factory, a saw-mill, blacksmith shop, a broom factory, one store, a cheese factory, school house, and about thirty-five dwellings. Tilly Gilbert settled here in 1825 and erected the first store and a carding-mill. Elijah Hyde became a merchant here in 1830. John McNall built a saw-mill on the creek in 1818 and a tavern in the village in 1826. The first settler on this site is said to have been John Warner about 1809. The Cadiz steam saw-mill, operated by Samuel P. Bard, has a capacity of 6,000 feet of lumber daily. The Cadiz cheese-box and barrel manufactory was built by Davison, Hinkley & Allen about 1870, and was purchased by its present proprietor, L. J. B. Goo, in 1882. He makes about 75,000 cheese boxes and 5,000 apple barrels annually.

Devereux Station is a postoffice on the Rochester branch of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad, in the northwest part of the town.

Fitch is a postal hamlet near the southeast corner of Franklinville, in the Ischua valley, on the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad. It contains two stores, a saw and feed-mill, a cheese factory, and a half-dozen dwellings. The saw-mill here was built in 1882 and the feed-mill added in 1889.

It was some three or four years after the first settlement was made in Franklinville that a minister of the gospel appeared among the pioneers. The first preacher in this region was Rev. John Spencer, a Congregationalist who was sent out by the Connecticut Mission Society as early as 1807. He traveled on horseback and preached wherever he could find a half-dozen listeners. He organized the first religious body in town, but the exact date can not be ascertained. There was a church here, however, in 1813, and the locality being then without a name the society was designated "No. 4—4th range" in the minister's reports. Mr. Spencer's labors ceased in 1825. The first religious meeting in the west part of the town was held at the house of T. D. Storrs in the spring of 1828. Barnet Windsor, a Freewill Baptist clergyman, preached, and as a preacher there he was followed by Joseph Vining and he by Ira Burlingame.

In 1828 Rev. William J. Wilcox, a Presbyterian, held meetings in the red school house on "North East street," and on the 2d of November of this year the old (Congregational) society was re-organized under the name of the First Presbyterian church of Franklinville. At this organization three members of the old church were living, viz.: Mrs. Betsey McCluer, Mrs. Aurelia McCluer, and John Warner, who, with Youngs E. Benton, Mary Ann Benton, Parma Dennison, Mary Ely, Seth Ely, and Laura Ely, constituted the membership of the new organization. The Presbyterian form of government was adopted November 28, 1829, and it was also voted to unite with the Presbytery of Angelica, and on February 24, 1830, at Angelica, the church was received into the convention. On August 31st following the society had thirty-five members. The first resident pastor was Rev. John T. Baldwin, who began his pastorate about January 1, 1831, receiving a salary of $100 a year and remaining until 1834. In 1832 a building committee was appointed which was succeeded on February 2, 1833, by a new committee, which reported February 1, 1834, that Gen. Joseph McCluer had given the society a lot and that a church edifice had been erected thereon. This was the first building erected in town for church purposes and was dedicated August 13, 1835, by Rev. Sylvester Cowles. The first bell was purchased in 1850 at a cost of $100. The pastors to 1876 were Revs. John T. Baldwin, 1831-34; William J. Wilcox, 1834-35; J. T. Baldwin, 1835-36; William Howden, 1836-37; C. W. Gillam, 1837-42; H. A. Sackett, 1842-47; Joshua Lane, 1847-49; C. H. Baldwin, 1849-52; Mr. Jerome, 1852-53; E. J. Stewart, 1854-55; J. T. Baldwin, 1860; J. E. Tinker, 1868-70; W. C. Gaylord, 1871-72; J. L. Landis, 1873-76. The present pastor is Rev. R. R. Watkins. The first house of worship was the one erected in 1834, and for over fifty years it was used for the sacred purpose for which it was designed. It was repaired in 1868 at a cost of $1,962, and again in 1878, and was refurnished in 1876. This edifice gave place to the handsome new structure which was dedicated March 22, 1893. The new building was planned by Capt. E. A. Curtis, architect, of Fredonia, N. Y. It is of Gothic architecture, the material being of brick and frame. It contains several memorial windows and is beautifully decorated and furnished. The structure cost $12,000 and will seat about 600 people. To this society was given in 1830 a communion set, the gift of three young men of New York city. On July 8, 1831, the Holland Land Company, in accordance with the usual custom, deeded the church 100 acres of land "as the first church organized in town," the trustees at that time being Flavel Patridge, James L. Bishop, and Seth Ely.

The First Baptist church of Franklinville was organized October 20, 1825, with seven members, of whom Caleb Barber was the last survivor. Rev. Eliab Going was the organizer and the first pastor. He was a licentiate of the Rushford Baptist church and held services of his denomination in this locality as early as 1816, being preceded, however, by Rev. Mr. Beckwith, a missionary, in 1814. The early meetings of this society were convened in private dwellings or in school houses until 1832, when a wooden edifice was erected. This was replaced by another in 1853 which was burned March 12, 1869. The next year the present house of worship was built at a cost of $10,000, the entire church property being now valued at $8,000. It will seat about 700 people. The society has a membership of 180 under the pastoral care of Rev. A. S. Thompson. A union Sunday school was maintained during the early years, or until May, 1868, when a distinct organization was effected, the present members numbering about 170. This Baptist church was the first religious body regularly organized in the town of Franklinville and under the rules governing the Holland Company it was entitled to the gospel lot, but on the day the application was made the gift went to the Presbyterian society. One of the most eminent pastors of this congregation was Rev. G. W. Varnum, still living, a retired life, in the town.

The Free Methodist church of Franklinville was formed at a school house on East hill in 1863, and had an original membership of fifteen. The first pastor was Rev. O. O. Bacon. Services were held alternately at this place and in Cadiz until 1875, when a church edifice was erected, of wood, in the village of Franklinville, at a cost of $2,275, and dedicated January 6, 1876, by Rev. R. W. Hawkins, of Oil City, Pa. The building will seat 300 people and is valued, including all other church property, at $2,200. The present pastor is Rev. W. Manning and the membership numbers about twenty-five. The Sunday school has about the same number of scholars.

The First United Presbyterian church of Franklinville was organized June 25, 1867, by Rev. D. C. McVean, with twenty-six members, who belonged mainly to the Lyndon congregation. The sermon on this occasion was delivered by Rev. Mr. Galbraith, and Charles Thompson, John Johnston, and Daniel McKinley were chosen elders. Services were held at first in the churches of other societies and in halls, by various ministers, and Rev. William Donaldson was the first pastor, assuming charge November 1st and being installed December 7, 1870. On November 14, 1867, the society purchased a lot on which a neat wooden edifice was erected at a cost of about $5,000 and dedicated in the fall of 1870. The present house of worship, a brick structure, was built in 1882 at a cost of $12,000, and with other church property is now valued at $14,000. It will comfortably seat about 400 persons. The society has nearly 200 members with Rev. J. B. Lee, D.D., pastor. The Sunday school has a membership of 200 scholars.

The St. Philipmenia Catholic church, in the village of Franklinville, was organized in 1873 by Rev. J. Brady, of Ellicottville, who became the first pastor, and consisted originally of twenty members, the present number being forty. Their house of worship, a wooden structure, was erected in 1873 and dedicated August 1, 1875, and will seat about 150 people. The present value of church property is $1,500, and the pastor is Rev. J. D. Biden, of Ellicottville, in which charge this parish is located.

The First Methodist Episcopal church of Franklinville was organized in July, 1878, by Rev. F. D. Goodrich, with fifteen members, over whom Rev. C. S. Daley had the first pastoral care. Their house of worship, a neat wooden edifice, was built the following year at a cost of $3,000, the present value of the entire church property being about $6,000. The building will seat 350 people; and the society has 125 members with Rev. F. M. Cole, pastor. The Sunday school has a membership of about one hundred scholars and twelve officers and teachers.

The Methodist Episcopal church of Cadiz was organized in 1840 by Rev. Thomas B. Hudson, who was installed the first pastor. The original membership was fifty, the present number being thirty-five. The present house of worship was erected of wood in 1840, at a cost of $1,800, and will comfortably seat about 200 persons. This society is under the pastorate of Rev. E. C. Swartz, and has a Sunday school of fifty scholars connected. The present value of their church property is $2,000. From this society a number withdrew in 1863 and formed the Free Methodist church, leaving the membership of the parent organization less than ten.

It would seem from reliable sources that the first Masonic organization in the county was started in Franklinville, for on October 25, 1824, Cattaraugus Lodge, No. 393, F. & A. M., was instituted by Rt. W. G. M. Joseph Enos. The first evidence that meetings were held are dated November 16th and 30th of that year, and they convened in the lodge room in the McCluer tavern. On June 24, 1825, the festival of St. John the Baptist was publicly observed, and on December 30th of that year a Royal Arch Chapter was petitioned for and granted, A. F. Hayden being the first high priest. The masters of Cattaraugus Lodge were Joseph McCluer, Thomas Morris, James L. Bishop, Pardon T. Jewell, Isaac Searl, and David McCluer, the last incumbent. It ceased to work in 1830 and its worthy master, David McCluer, is said to have refused to surrender the charter. The first death in the lodge occurred in 1827, the deceased being Edward Swales, who was buried with Masonic honors. The last regular communication was November 23, 1830.

Franklinville Lodge, No. 626, F. & A. M., was organized June 1, 1867, with seventeen charter members, and with David M. Phetteplace, W. M.; John Burlingame, S. W.; W. A. Day, J. W.; Horatio Stillwell, treasurer; J. R. Salisbury, secretary; George W. Phetteplace, S. D.; Joseph Deibler, J. D. There are now sixty-seven members with these officers: M. J. Waring, W. M.; Milo Farwell, P. M.; B. R. Van Hoesen, S. W.; G. G. Williams, J. W.; J. D. Case, treasurer; W. S. Hovey, secretary.

Ischua Lodge, No. 409, I. O. O. F., was instituted April 3, 1849. Its number was changed to 192 on December 1, 1850, with Silas Adams, N. G., and Jasper Adams, V. G. The lodge disbanded in the fall of 1854 and was reorganized February 23, 1892, by Millard N. Allen, D. D. G. M. The first officers of the new lodge were Charles Munger, N. G.; H. R. Fisher, V. G.; James Clements, secretary; and James Turnball, treasurer. There are 45 members.

Alanson Crosby Post, No. 508, G. A. R., was organized April 6, 1891, with twenty-eight charter members, the present number being fifty. The first officers were A. P. Adams, P. C.; M. F. Thompson, S. V. C.; Henry C. Farwell, J. V. C.; William Ely, adjutant; C. E. Manwaring, quartermaster; Henry Van Aernam, surgeon; William Storrs, chaplain. The post was named in honor of Capt. Alanson Crosby, who went into the service in the 154th N. Y. Vols. and was killed at the battle of Kenesaw Mountain.

Henry Van Aernam Camp, Sons of Veterans, was organized April 3, 1893, by Charles H. Rafferty and M. J. Burke. The first officers were Charles Pelton, captain; R. O. Williams, lieutenant; E. J. Reiman, second lieutenant;

Guy C. Ames, chaplain; John F. Andrews, first sergeant; James McStay, second sergeant; C. D. Van Aernam, W. G. Kerr, and M. H. Wade, camp council.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized in 1883 with about twenty charter members and the following officers: Mrs. William Swinton, president; Mrs. M. R. Findlay, vice-president; Miss Hattie Watkins, secretary; Mrs. Julian Orr, treasurer. There are now about forty members.

A lodge of the A. O. U. W. was organized March 3, 1877, with eleven members, the present number being thirty-three. The first officers were W. S. Hovey, P. M. W.; James D. McVey, M. W.; George Clark, recorder.

A branch of the E. A. U. was instituted December 15, 1879, with thirty-five members. The present membership is sixty-nine.

A lodge of the I. O. of G. T. was formed in February, 1891, with about thirty members, the present number being 100.

Among the town's pioneers was Buel Dunbar, who early settled on the east part of lot 14, and after occupying the premises a few years sold to Aaron Whitney. Mr. Whitney built a saw-mill. Moses Warner, a brother of Roswell Warner, settled on lot 14 and occupied it for some years. Samuel Rickor came about 1821 and made a beginning on lot 55. John Redmond was the first to settle on lot 23. He remained on the place but a short time. The farm was afterwards owned by Marcus Smith. Martin Francis came from Ireland to Franklinville about 1853 or 1854 and went on to a wild lot where he resided over fifteen years. Zadoc Whipple settled in the west part of the town prior to 1821. Boon and Brant occupied part of lot 23 previous to 1827.

About 1817 Caleb Barber came from Chenango county and purchased the lot now occupied by Orvil Willard. He married Lovina Lyon, of Norwich, Chenango county. Mrs. Barber was the sister of Mrs. Ira Burlingame. Of their eleven children these are living: Augusta, Henry, Caroline, Alvira, Celestia, and Lucina. Seth Wheeler married Alvira, and they now live in the village of Franklinville. Moses Chamberlin came from Ellicottville about 1842 and settled on lot 47, where Peter Carr now resides. He built a frame house, the first one built in the west part of the town. He kept a tavern for a number of years up to about 1836.

In 1813 Jacob Ford came from Rutland county, Vt., with an ox-team. He took a piece of land near where John McPherson now lives. A few years later he moved to Ellicottville. Several of his sons reside on East hill. John Reynolds came about the same time and located below Cadiz. Ely Rockwell settled on lot 61 and resided there a number of years. Nathaniel Bryant established himself in the extreme west part of the town about 1820. He took an active part in town affairs. About 1840 he moved to Great Valley.

On the road proceeding west from the school house in district No. 9 the first settlers were Nathan Kingsley, Duty Buck, Abram and Joseph Purdy, and Ivy Buck. Ivy Buck came about 1821; the others about 1830. Purdy became a permanent settler, the others selling out after a few years. Samuel and Elijah Silliman and Henry Huyck settled early in the northeast part of the town, and Ephraim Fitch, Edward E. Smith, and Ashbul Church on East hill. Nehemiah Rogers and John McNall settled at Cadiz in 1817. John McNall kept a hotel at there for a number of years. His son William married Sybil, daughter of Col. Stephen Seward. His son Levi married Mandana, daughter of Francis G. Clark. One of the daughters married Warren Kingsley. Howland Washburn located below Cadiz in 1817. Daniel Huntley came from Cortland county in the same spring and purchased of Levi Gregory three lots of 100 acres each, which were somewhat improved. The location was near the place where Wilson Hogg lives. In 1821 he moved to the town of Ellicottville.

About 1818 William Sill, Deodatus Sill, and Elijah Sill settled in the Ischua valley below Cadiz. William Sill was elected justice of the peace within a few years after his arrival, and it is said that he issued the first warrant ever issued within the present limits of the town. An amusing anecdote is told in regard to it. Mr. Conrad had a man working for him by the name of Abial Rolf, who had by some means overdrawn on Mr. Conrad $1.50, the price of a vest, which Conrad had furnished him. Rolf started to go home before he had worked out the sum. That was a little too much for "Uncle Henry," and he at once took Henry Gross (constable) and went to Mr. Sill for a warrant. Form books in those days were scarce, but the squire proved himself equal to the occasion. He took up his pen and after a few moments' reflection wrote the following:

"Here, Henry Gross, take this, catch Abial Rolf, and bring him before me quickly, for Henry Conrad says he owes him.

"WILLIAM SILL, J. P."

This proved sufficient. Henry Gross brought the delinquent before Mr. Sill and the matter was arranged satisfactorily. Mr. Sill married Harriet McNitt. Deodatus and Elijah both filled responsible town offices. Isaac and Jacob Searl, Aaron Osgood, and Eleazer Densmore came during the same period and established themselves below Conrad's mill on Ischua creek.

About 1823 James L. Bishop, from Connecticut, came in and after several changes gained possession of the west part of lot 38 in 1828. He organized the first Sunday school in the west part of the town. He was captain of militia and was one of the early justices of the peace. He was postmaster and kept the Canning postoffice, which was established through his influence. His office was in his own dwelling. When he sold and moved west in 1838 the office was discontinued. There is a letter before us dated July 20, 1831, and directed to "Mr. Thomas D. Storrs, Franklinville, Cattaraugus county, Canning post-office, N. Y." This letter bears the postmaster's endorsement at Cherry Valley, N. Y.: "PAID 18 $\frac{3}{4}$ ," which was the price of letter postage 250 miles in the "good old times."

About 1821 John Andrews came to Franklinville. He put up a log house and barn on lot 53 and kept a tavern known as the Half-way House about twelve years. Children: William, Marshall, John, Melissa, and Minerva. Marshall was the first settler on lot 63.

There was in 1806, a few months after General McCluer had settled on lot 39, a log shanty standing on or near the site where the First National Bank now stands, covered with halves of hollow logs, the lower tier laid touching each other with the hollow side up, forming troughs to carry off the water, the second or upper tier with the hollow sides down, thus forming a watertight roof; but who was its builder, or when it was built, are items of unknown history. In General McCluer's log cabin and log barn and in Solomon Curtis's house of the same material, and in the shanty above named,—four buildings in all,—we have the nucleus around which the present village of Franklinville has since grown up—then McCluer Settlement.

George Adams was a native of London, England, and came to Humphrey in this county in 1830. He was born Jan. 16, 1805, and died Oct. 27, 1890, residing in Sugartown for sixty years. His wife was Mary Bunting, also a native of England; she died March 28, 1874. Of their five children two, Sarah (Mrs. Warren S. Root) and George W., are living.

Moses Antisdale came to Franklinville from Cherry Valley, N. Y., in 1829, and settled on lot 45, previously purchased. He finally sold out and moved into Morgan hollow, where he resided until his wife's death in 1860. He married Nancy Coon, of Cherry Valley, previous to coming to this town. Children: Mary J. (Mrs. G. C. Storrs), Diantha (Mrs. Walter Lindsay), Willard, Sarah Ann, Louisa (Mrs. William Patterson), Anna (Mrs. John Oakes), and Luther S. Mr. Antisdale and Luther went to Illinois in 1860. In 1861 Luther enlisted in Co. A, 2d Ill. Cav., and was soon promoted orderly, in which capacity he served until General Oglesby was mortally wounded at Corinth, Oct. 3, 1862. After General Oglesby's death he served under Gen. John A. Logan. He was in many battles along the Mississippi, including Fort Henry, Fort Donelson, Pittsburg Landing, Corinth, and Vicksburg, through all of which he passed without a wound, but afterward died of intermittent fever in the military hospital at New Orleans in the fall of 1863. Moses Antisdale enlisted a few months later and received an injury on board a gunboat at the siege of Fort Donelson, in consequence of which he was discharged and died aboard the cars on his way home, in April, 1862.

Robert Bard came to Farmersville from Herkimer county in November, 1816, and settled on what is now known as the Freeman farm. He married a daughter of Ashbel Freeman and had four children. Mr. Bard came to the village of Franklinville in 1829, having traded his farm with John Patterson for property where now stands the Globe Hotel, where he kept hotel 26 years.

Marshall O. Bond is a son of Ora and Laura (Carpenter) Bond and was born June 26, 1828. January 1, 1852, he married Hannah Searl, of Franklinville, and settled in the village, where he engaged with his father in harness making. In July, 1862, Mr. Bond enlisted in Co. D, 154th N. Y. Vols., as first lieutenant, and resigned in 1863 on account of sickness. A number of years were spent in the oil country and upon returning to this town he engaged in farming. Children: Ida E., Adda M., Hanford S., and Kate G. Ora Bond, the father of Marshall O., was supervisor of Farmersville in 1829-30 and again in 1840.

James F. Boyce, born in Worcester, Mass., March 1, 1795, came to this county in 1823. He kept bachelor's hall in the woods two years and then married Elizabeth Bloodgood, from Herkimer, N. Y., the ceremony being performed by Israel Day, J. P., of Franklinville. The couple located on Bear creek, two miles farther into the forest than any other settlers, and remained there seven years; they then came to this town and settled on lot 32, on Boyce hill, where he resided until his death Jan. 12, 1864. His wife died April 5, 1885. Children: Louisa H. (Mrs. Ezra Buck), David F., Almira C. (Mrs. Harvey Litchfield), Nancy E., Amy L., and Mary A. Z. (Mrs. Joseph Vaughan).

David Burrows, a Vermonter by birth, at the age of eighteen came with his father to Gainesville, N. Y., and in 1840 removed to Franklinville, settling in Cadiz, where he commenced shoemaking. His wife was Orrilla Rockwell, who bore him five children, of whom three are living: Jasper A., Lucinda M. (Mrs. D. Alger), and George W. Mrs. Burrows died July 9, 1855, and Mr. Burrows on March 31, 1885. Jasper A. Burrows was born Oct. 28, 1843, and married Candace, daughter of Edward C. Squire; two children: Dora A. and Edward C.

Samuel Butler, son of Nathan, came with his wife, Phebe Lyon, from Otsego county to Franklinville in 1820. Two years afterward he bought seventy-five acres of wild land in Farmersville, whither he moved and erected a frame house. He was a carpenter and joiner by trade. A few years later he returned to this town and purchased the farm and built the stone house where John Napier now lives. Of his four children two are living: Eliza A. (Mrs. Howard) and Lewis L.

Jonas K. Button* was born in Machias on the 3d of May, 1821. His father, Charles, was a pioneer farmer, and the early life of Mr. Button was passed on the farm with a large family of brothers and sisters, and his stalwart frame was inured to the severe toil which was the lot of the "tiller of the soil" in the primitive history of the county. His father died in 1832 and the duties of the farm so occupied the attention of the children that the education of Mr. Button was restricted to a few winter terms of school in the log school house, but that temple of learning has been the source of inspiration to the men who have risen to prominence in western New York. After attaining the age of eighteen years he worked out at farm work by the month during the summer season and taught school during the winter months. He early acquired habits of thrift and economy and was particular to add to his savings each year, knowing that this course was the only one that insured the attainment of a competence. He was never afflicted with the modern mania of becoming suddenly rich, but preferred to acquire his accumulations by ceaseless energy and in business where his ripe judgment could be of service to him. On the 27th of Sept., 1845, he was married to Jane M. Duncan, and together they began life in the employ of Judge Peter Ten Broeck, of Farmersville, and that rare judge of men at once appreciated the merit of the young couple, and their friendship continued unabated until the death of Judge Ten Broeck.

In 1847 Mr. Button purchased and moved onto a farm about three miles south of the village of Franklinville, and which has ever since been known as "the Button farm" and is now owned by his youngest son and namesake, who, at twenty-two, is proving himself a "chip of the old block" in representing the town as supervisor. Mr. Button was early ambitious to excel as a farmer and like his early patron, Judge Ten Broeck, to become a large landed proprietor, and so well was his ambition gratified that at his death he owned 2,100 acres of farming land in the county of Cattaraugus, being the largest owner of tillable land within its borders. This land comprised six farms well stocked and under an excellent state of cultivation. In 1864 he took up his residence in the village of Franklinville and thereafter leased his farms. Mr. Button was the model landlord. He was unerring in his estimate of men, understood well when his farms were properly carried on, and while fair and considerate to his tenants was strict and exacting in requiring them to care for his stock and maintain his farms in good condition. His relations with his tenants were close and kindly, and he seldom was obliged to change them, and his leaseholds were profitable alike to him and his lessees.

When the cheese industry by factory-making first started Mr. Button erected a factory between Franklinville and Cadiz and another west of Cadiz, and they were the nucleus of a combination that has become celebrated. For many years he attended to the financial management of this combination, selling the cheese and distributing the proceeds, and his excellent judgment and methodical habits prevented criticism as to his performance of this trust. Mr. Button early took an interest in politics and was soon recognized as one of the leaders of his party in the county. He was an uncompromising Democrat, zealous in defending the principles of his party, and a partisan in practice. He was supervisor of Franklinville for five terms and was elected member of Assembly in 1867, though the district was regarded as safely Republican. He was the candidate of his party for Congress in one or two campaigns. He affiliated with his party during the Civil war, yet believed in the suppression of the Rebellion and the unity of the nation. He contributed liberally for the payment of bounties, and, to induce enlistments, at one time paid $1,000, at another pledged $100 to be divided equally among the next four who should enlist, and again personally advanced $3,000 to enable the town to fill its quota, trusting to future legislation for its re-payment. Western New York has been largely Republican since the inception of that party, so Mr. Button's political preferment was confined to the offices stated, but in the councils of his party and among those in this end of the State who were instrumental in party organization he was a prominent factor.

Judge Ten Broeck appointed him sole executor of his will with plenary power in the management and disposition of his large estate. When it is remembered that his property included about 7,000 acres of land the magnitude of the undertaking can be partly appreciated. This vast area he managed with consummate judgment, making sales from year to year until the entire land was converted into money or securities that were gilt-edged. He was also by the act of incorporation one of the trustees of Ten Broeck Free Academy, and by virtue of his residence in Franklinville and his aggressive individuality was the master spirit of the Board of Trustees until his resignation shortly prior to his death. The academy was erected in the village, which was then remote from a railroad and where education was at a low ebb. Mr. Button assumed the direction of this business with his wonted energy and the academy was soon the potent agency in eastern Cattaraugus for higher education. His zeal in behalf of this institution was irrepressible and he seized every opportunity to advance its influence. When Franklinville became a full-fledged village Mr. Button, though opposed to incorporation, was elected as one of its first trustees, as the taxpayers had implicit faith in his judgment and fairness. He well served his constituents in this capacity, believing thoroughly in public improvements and yet guarding wisely the expenditure of the moneys raised.

In 1879 he united with the First United Presbyterian Church Society of Franklinville, of which his wife was a member. Thenceforth he was a faithful, earnest Christian. He made no parade of his new life. He contributed one-fourth of the $11,000 used in building the substantial church edifice of this society. He died in Franklinville, Sept. 8, 1884, leaving his widow, four sons, and two daughters, all of whom are still living.

Mr. Button was a man of sterling, positive traits of character. He despised any cant or hypocrisy and asserted his intense convictions confidently and fearlessly. On any matter, either local or of a wider range, he took a decided stand. With little education in his youth, yet, by friction with men, by keen observation, by an aptitude for comprehending the pith of any subject, and by his unflinching common sense, he soon became well informed. He made a marked impression on the people of eastern Cattaraugus, was thoroughly respected, and was recognized as one of its leading men. In defining to a young man the cardinal principles leading to success he stated they were "integrity, industry, and perseverance," and they certainly comprised the elements that made his own career so successful.

Reuben C. Button, son of Lyman and Polly (Brown) Button, was born in Machias, Nov. 25, 1839, and removed to this town in 1855, living for a time with his uncle, Jonas K. Button. Nov. 3, 1861, he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Little, and was engaged in farming until 1865, when he opened a livery stable in the village. In 1876 his wife died and Nov. 25, 1880, he married, second, Addie V., daughter of Sylvester and Mary Curtis.

Peter T. B. Button has always taken an active interest in the mercantile and political affairs of the town. He has served as supervisor and in other offices, and was largely instrumental in organizing the Franklinville Agricultural and Driving Park Association, of which he has served as treasurer, secretary, and president.

Robert Campbell, a relative of Judge Campbell, of Cherry Valley, Otsego county, N. Y., was born in that place and resided there until after his majority. He married Elizabeth Campbell, and in 1829 he came with his family to Franklinville and settled on a part of lot 29 on the road known as Otsego street, from the fact that every settler thereon was from Otsego county. He remained on the place about thirty years and then, with his son, Andrew J. Campbell, removed to Black Creek and remained there until his death. Children: Samuel, Mary Ann, Albert J., Eleanor, Alanson, Deborah, and Andrew J. Samuel married Eliza Morgan, July 24, 1851, and remained on lot 29 until his death in 1889. Children: Dewitt, Sarah, and Amenzo. Amenzo now resides on the place with his mother. Albert J. married Permelia daughter of John W. Dickinson, Feb. 2, 1841, and settled on a farm in upper Sugartown, where he resided until his health failed, when he moved to Franklinville village and kept a hotel twenty-five years. Children: Mary and Devillo. Devillo went to Mazo Manie, Wis., where he is a druggist. Mary, at the age of twenty-four, met with an accident in a collision on the Great Western railroad at Komoka, Ontario, which rendered her a cripple.

Warren Carpenter, son of Zenas (see Farmersville), was born Jan. 17, 1827, and Dec. 18, 1849, married Catherine J., daughter of Thomas De Kay, of New Hudson, Allegany county; children: Zenas, Thomas, Elroy V., Samuel, and Julia A. (Mrs. E. D. Scott), who died Nov. 7, 1890. Mr. Carpenter lived with his parents until their deaths and in Lyndon until 1880, when he came to Franklinville village. He has taken an active interest in laying out and beautifying Mt. Prospect Cemetery. Besides this he has been called upon to plan and adorn several other burial places.

Peter Carr, a postmaster under the British government, came to Franklinville in 1849 and purchased the farm belonging to Moses Chamberlin, which he made his permanent home until his death in 1873. He was justice of the peace several years. He left Peter Carr, Jr., his only heir, in possession of his estate, who still resides upon it. In 1857 Peter, Jr., married Katharine, daughter of Patrick Power. Children: Mary, Rose (Mrs. Wilson Hogg), Josephine (Mrs. Charles Weed), Katie, Anna (Mrs. J. G. Jolly), and Joseph.

Thomas Case, born in Berkshire, Tioga county, Jan. 14, 1818, came in Feb., 1838, with his father, Phineas Case, from Candor, N. Y., to Lyndon, where he resided until March, 1884, when he moved to Franklinville. On Jan. 14, 1845, he married Betsey, daughter of Nicholas Melrose, of Lyndon. She was born Sept. 20, 1826, in Delhi, Delaware county. Children, all born in Lyndon: Jason Daniel, Oct. 3, 1847; Edward Nelson, Dec. 9, 1849; Charles Arbuckle, Oct. 25, 1851; and Eben Leicester, Aug. 19, 1859. Edward N. is a successful farmer; the other three are bankers. In Sept., 1865, Thomas Case assisted in organizing the Cuba Banking Company, of Cuba, N. Y., and later in changing the company to the succeeding organization, now the First National Bank of Cuba. In Oct., 1870, he assisted in starting the Bank of Olean, which in 1871 was re-organized into the First National Bank. In Aug., 1878, he assisted in organizing the Bank of Ellicottville, of which his son, C. A. Case, has been the cashier. In Nov., 1883, with others, he started the Citizens' Bank of Arcade, N. Y., of which he is now a director, his son, J. D. Case, being the president. In Dec., 1872, Mr. Case proposed and with others organized the Bank of Franklinville, which was subsequently merged into the First National Bank of Franklinville, and has always been an active director and for several years its efficient president. His son, J. D. Case, is the cashier. Mr. Case has been a fortunate financier, honest and punctual in his business affairs, cheerful, social, and temperate. With a free hand and open purse he aids everything beneficial to society.

Jason D. Case, son of Thomas, was born in Lyndon, Oct. 3, 1847, attended school in the Hayden district and two terms at the Rushford Academy, and assisted in the farm duties at home and his father in buying eggs, butter, etc. In the fall of 1868 he taught the Morgan district school near Cuba reservoir, and the following summer he was engaged as superintendent of the Cherry Run and Pithole Oil Company, making a satisfactory sale of their property in 1872, when he bought a third-interest in some valuable oil property near Parker's Landing, Pa. Mr. Case was active in the organization of the first bank in Franklinville and later of its successor, the First National; of the Bank of Ellicottville, of which he is a director; of the Citizens' Bank of Arcade, of which he was the first president; of the canning company in Franklinville, being for some time a member of its executive committee; and of the Franklinville Cemetery Association, of which he has been trustee and treasurer since its foundation. Jan. 29, 1873, Mr. Case married Helen C., daughter of Samuel and Catharine Morgan, of Cuba. Children: Nellie and Gertrude A.

Moses Chamberlin came from Dutchess county to Ellicottville in 1816 and thence he moved to Franklinville, settling on the farm now owned by Peter Carr, where he lived about thirty years. He then moved to Allegany, where he died in 1869. Mr. Chamberlin married Anna Platt, of Caledonia, N. Y. Children: Mary (Mrs. Sylvester Curtis), Dr. William, Dr. Harry, Ann E. (Mrs. John Knox), Laura, Charles (died in 1880), Eliza (died in 1887), Henry (died in 1865), Lucy (Mrs. E. N. Babbitt) died in 1884, and George S. (died in 1884).

James Clements came here from Ireland in 1859. In March, 1859, he married Margaret Lochard. He purchased and moved onto the farm he still occupies. Children living: James, Mary, Thomas, Margaret, John, William, Timothy, George, Robert, Alexander, and Samuel. James and John are partners in a grocery in Franklinville. John has been town clerk several terms.

James Collie, a native of Morayshire, Scotland, and a son of James and Barbara (Mitchell) Collie, was born March 10, 1821, and at the age of twenty-six married Elizabeth Watson. In 1853 he came with his wife to America and settled in Franklinville, moving to his present farm in 1857. Of his eleven children eight are living : Peter, William, James, Jessie, Mary, Elizabeth, Mima, and Louisa.

Milton N. Colvin was born March 28, 1870, on Chappel hill in Humphrey. He was the son of Royal and Mary Colvin and the second child of a family of seven children : Charles, Milton N., Carrie, Lucia, Agnes, Hattie, and Welcome. Sickness and other dire misfortunes pursued the family until it was broken up and its members scattered. Milton was adopted into the family of Walter Whitcomb, of Humphrey, and came to this town with Mr. Whitcomb in 1883, with whom he resided until 1891, when he began life in earnest.

Henry Conrad, from Tompkins county, during the summer of 1807 located on the north half of lot 37 and commenced the erection of a mill, which he completed in the summer of 1808. The mill was in keeping with its surroundings, primitive indeed, but it would grind wheat into flour which did not always resemble the "beautiful snow." That useful old mill more properly belonged to the "Tuscan Order" of architecture than to any other. In the early part of 1807 John, Nicholas, and Daniel Kortwright, from Tompkins county, settled upon the north part of lot 36 and south part of lot 37. They were millwrights and superintended the building of Henry Conrad's grist-mill, and instructed "Uncle Hank" (as he was commonly called) in the art of grinding grain and taking toll. Owing to some defect in its construction the mill was not uniform in its mechanical behavior. There is one anecdote in relation to Uncle Hank and his mill which illustrates the fun-loving propensities of the Warner family. Parley Warner, who lived near the mill, on observing some customer emerge from the forest with a bag of grain across his brawny shoulders, would stealthily approach the rear of the mill and seize the arms of the wheel in his herculean grip, and, with muscles firmly set, await the coming ordeal. The gate would be raised, but the wheel would not move; it was as firmly bound as the nymphs had bound Andromeda. After uttering a few words not admissable in Sunday school Uncle Hank, armed with the necessary tools, would go around to the rear of the mill to see "vat vas der ail mit der tam veel." By the time he reached the wheel Parley would be snugly concealed in the alders. Mr. Conrad was a kind-hearted man. He had four children by his first wife : Elizabeth, Margaret, Catharine, and Samuel. Margaret married Elijah Sill; Elizabeth married Thaddeus Farwell; Catharine and Samuel were mutes and were never married. One of the granddaughters of Mr. Conrad, Fanny Farwell, is the wife of D. J. Morris. By his second marriage Mr. Conrad had six children : Peter, Henry, Joseph, John, Henrietta, and Fanny. About 1820 he sent Samuel and Catharine to New York, where they received an education. When they came back they could read and write fluently and converse by means of the hand alphabet. Samuel died of small-pox at his brother-in-law's, Elijah Sill, about 1830. Lyman Searl, Thomas M. Sill, Fayette Searl, and Robert E. Gardner also married granddaughters of Henry Conrad.

Samuel A., Alanson, Jedediah W., and Lot C. Crosby came to Franklinville in 1830 and settled on Crosby hill, the place taking its name from the four brothers. Alanson and Jedediah purchased portions of lot 28, while S. A. (known here as Austin Crosby) made his home on lot 36 and Lot C. on lot 35. They were sons of Col. Jedediah Crosby, who was born near Boston, Mass., in 1776. At an early period he removed to Gorham, N. Y., where he married Mabel Austin, a native of Connecticut. She was born May 1, 1782. In 1805 the couple moved to Bergen, N. Y., then known as the Triangle, where they made a permanent home. Colonel Crosby was a volunteer in the War of 1812 and commanded a regiment at the battle of Fort Erie, where one-third of his soldiers were left on the field. Both Colonel Crosby and his wife were of English descent. He died in Bergen, August 18, 1830; she died May 21, 1866. They had five sons and four daughters, the latter being Polly, Lou-anny, Harriet, and Lovina. S. Austin Crosby married and had sons Christopher C., Jedediah W., and Luther V. Christopher C. married Helen Starr. Jedediah married Viola Kenyon and resided on the homestead until his death. Luther married Mary Wenrick. Newton A. and Ora B. are deceased. Alanson Crosby married Cornelia Wright; children: Mabel, Manley, and Alanson, Jr. Mabel married George Baillet. Manley (see Bench and Bar, page 363) is a practicing attorney in Corry, Pa. Alanson enlisted in 1862 in the 154th N. Y. Vol. Inf. and was killed before Atlanta, Ga. He was a young man of rare promise. As a well-deserved tribute to his memory the Grand Army Post in Franklinville received his name. Jedediah Crosby, Jr., married a daughter of Roswell Warner, a granddaughter of Gen. Joseph McCluer. He still resides on Crosby hill, occupying the place on which he settled when he first came to this town. One of his daughters married Dudley Kenyon and a second married Thomas Wheeler.

Solomon Cummings came to Farmersville in 1829 and a few years later married Jonathan Graves's eldest daughter, Mariette. He became a merchant, was successful, represented Farmersville as supervisor in 1843, 1844, 1846, and 1848 and Franklinville in 1875, was a very exact business man, and always performed his duties with ability and fidelity. For many years he has resided in Franklinville. He sold his property in 1850 to his father and brother, John T. Cummings, who continued the mercantile business until his sudden death in 1876. J. T. Cummings left an excellent record behind him for ability and integrity. He was supervisor of Farmersville in 1863. By consulting him and his library almost any matter of history, law, politics, religion, or science could be learned. From tinkering clocks to making or repairing any article of the house or tool on the farm he was an expert, and he had a great variety of tools that he persistently refused to lend. He was a Congregationalist, a cultivated scholar, and a valuable friend. The Cummingses emigrated to this town from Warren, Mass., and are direct descendants of the Puritans.

Solomon Curtis, from Lanesboro, Mass., located on a large tract of land where the village of Franklinville now stands in 1806 and removed thither with the first settlers, erecting his log house a few rods west of the center stake in the village plat in 1808. It is said that hunting and trapping were his primary and agriculture his secondary pursuits. Mr. Curtis married Abigail Rose, of Rushford, Allegany county; children: Azur, Rensselaer, Polly, and Sylvester. He died in 1840 and his wife in 1837. Rensselaer Curtis was born in Franklinville, Feb. 8, 1818, and Feb. 8, 1848, married Ruth M., daughter of Ezekiel and Polly (Foot) Foster. Locating in Machias in 1850 he returned to Franklinville nine years later, and in 1863 settled on the farm he now occupies. His son Henry R. is an attorney in the village. Sylvester Curtis, born April 1, 1819, married, in 1844, Mary, daughter of Moses and Anna Chamberlin, and for eighteen years lived on the farm where his father died; he then sold out and moved to his present farm. His daughter is the wife of Reuben Button.

Thomas Davis, son of John and a native of Wales, England, came to America with his father when ten years old and settled in Litchfield, Herkimer county. In 1857 Mr. Davis married Sarah M., daughter of Jacob Klock, and in 1865 located in Lyndon, of which town he was supervisor in 1873 and 1874. In 1882 he came to this town and settled as a farmer at Cadiz, being elected supervisor of Franklinville in 1891 and 1892. Mr. Davis in public and private is an exemplary citizen, serving his constituents with honor and credit, and in all matters of importance to the town and county he takes a deep interest.

Danforth W. Dean, son of Tower J. and Esther E. (Young) Dean, was born in Centerville, Allegany county, Feb. 8, 1853. In 1877 he removed to Franklinville, where he has since followed the carpenter's trade, engaging in 1878 with Richard Little in the contracting and building business; he is also at the head of the Dean & Spring Manufacturing Company. He was supervisor of Franklinville in 1890, and served in that position with honor and credit. Feb. 8, 1882, Mr. Dean married Jennie, daughter of John Conners.

Willard Drewry removed from Genesee county to this town in 1831 and settled with his wife on a wild lot on Genesee street. In 1865 he sold to Mr. Simonds and went west. His son Ebenezer enlisted in 1861 for three years, and served his full time; he was mustered into the service in the 105th Regt. in Oct., 1861, and was honorably discharged. He died in 1878.

James Duncan and his wife Annie came from Scotland in 1833 and the next year settled in Franklinville, first at what is now the village and subsequently on East hill. He finally removed to the village and died. They had nine children.

He moved to Franklinville, March 16, 1855, and his wife died June 4, 1860. He married his second wife, Mrs. Lydia Dickinson, Nov. 27, 1862. Austin W. Elmer, the eldest son, was mustered into the navy in Sept., 1864, for one year, and died of disease contracted in the service. Crosby L. Elmer resides on the homestead, with his father, on Crosby hill. The family influence has been exemplary.

William Ely, son of C. C. Ely, of Rushford, Allegany county, was born July 27, 1841, and obtained his education in the common schools and in Rushford Academy. In 1862 he enlisted in Co. D, 64th N. Y. Vols., and was in all the engagements with his regiment from Antietam to Cold Harbor, where he was wounded by a minie-ball in the ankle. Being discharged in 1865 he returned home and in 1866 came to Franklinville, where he started a drug store in the village under the firm name of Walker & Ely, which two years later was changed to Ely & Day by Walker disposing of his interest to W. A. Day. Day subsequently sold out to H. D. Smith and the firm became Ely & Smith. In 1884 Smith sold to W. H. Ferris and the style was changed to Ely & Ferris. In 1867 Mr. Ely married Caroline S., daughter of Marcus and Susan (Stillwell) Smith. Mr. Ely was supervisor of Franklinville in 1886 and 1887.

Moses Essex came from Decatur, N. Y., in 1827, and settled on the west part of lot 13, which he had previously purchased from James O. Morse and Benjamin Rathbun. He soon erected an ashery, which he operated over twenty years. He purchased all the ashes and black-salts that he could from those who were clearing up their farms and worked them into potash, which he shipped to New York city. In those early times about the only way the settlers had to raise money to pay taxes and buy bread was by making ashes and black-salts, which were jocosely called "legal tender." Essex remained on the place about 23 years. His daughter resides on a part of the farm.

Aleanzor M. Farrar is a son of Wiggin M. and Betsey (Loomis) Farrar, of Machias (q. v.). He was born in that town Sept. 15, 1829, and Jan. 1, 1854, married Lydia Carver. Until 1884 Mr. Farrar was a resident of Machias, on the old homestead, where he served as justice of the peace twelve years and as assessor. In 1884 he came to Franklinville. He has in his possession a sword used by John Farrar, his grandfather, on the field of Bunker Hill.

Edward H. Farrington, son of Harvey, was born in Newport, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1848. His father was an early cheese maker, in which business the son was educated. In 1873 Edward H. came to Franklinville and began manufacturing cheese, being interested in 1890 in nine factories producing several hundred thousand pounds of cheese annually. In 1872 Mr. Farrington married Sarah, daughter of Nathaniel McAfee, of Canada. Children: Irvin A., Howard P., Harry, and Ellen.

Henry C. Farwell, son of Thaddeus (see Ischua), was born Feb. 19, 1832. In 1854 he engaged in lumbering in the great lumber woods of Wisconsin, and June 1, 1861, enlisted in Co. K, 4th Wis. Vols., fighting in the battles of Williamsburg, Second Bull Run, Seven Days' Fight, Antietam, South Mountain, Fredericksburg (both engagements), Gettysburg, and Rappahannock Station, where he was wounded by a ball passing through the leg. He was promoted captain of his company and was discharged Oct. 14, 1864. Returning to Ischua he married, March 28, 1866, Anna, daughter of Henry and Betsey Cook, of Mansfield. He was a farmer in Ischua, which town he served as supervisor in 1873 and again in 1875 and as assessor several years. Mr. Farwell moved to the village of Franklinville in 1885. Children: Lettie C. and Arthur M.

There he married Melissa, daughter of Sylvester and Harriet (Fuller) Skeels. He also lived in East Otto and in Ellicottville. In 1870 he returned to Franklinville and purchased the grist-mill below Cadiz known as the Conrad mill, which he conducted until 1876, when he moved to the village of Franklinville, where he now resides. Children: Luni C., Mina C., Harriet A. (deceased), Nettie O., Grace M., and Edgar J.

George S. Hackett, son of Stephen K. (see Ischua), was born Feb. 20, 1844, in the town of Ischua, and at the age of seven years, his mother dying, he was bound out to D. H. Woods, of Rushford, Allegany county, where he lived until Dec. 22, 1863, when he enlisted in Co. B, 2d N. Y. Mounted Rifles. He was actively engaged in the battles of Shady Grove, North Anna River, Tolopotomoy Creek, Cold Harbor, Gaines's Farm, siege of Petersburg, and Pegram Farm, and was discharged at White Hall Run on June 18, 1865. Returning to Rushford Mr. Hackett married, July 4, 1866, Fannie M., daughter of John W. and Caroline (Searle) Sill, and in 1867 settled on Buzzard hill in Humphrey. He followed cheese making for a number of years, residing in various places, and in 1881 located in Franklinville village, where on Jan. 10, 1891, his wife died. She was born April 1, 1846, and bore him two children, Willie B. (deceased) and Lewis A.

Squire C. Hayden has been prominent in the industrial and political interests of the town and county, and in various capacities has represented his constituents with eminent ability and unswerving integrity. He is trustee of the village and was supervisor of Farmersville in 1879 and Franklinville in 1889.

James A. Haynes, a native of Yorkshire and a son of Daniel B. and Amanda (Stewart) Haynes, was born March 7, 1839, and Feb. 24, 1861, married Isadore Busecker, of Ischua, who died Jan. 20, 1868. May 19, 1869, Mr. Haynes married for his second wife Mary A., daughter of S. J. Smith, of Ischua. The same year he formed a partnership with Mr. Smith in the mercantile trade under the firm name of S. J. Smith & Co., which business was continued until 1873, when Mr. Haynes sold his interest to A. J. Morris. He then purchased a farm, which he sold in 1885, and in 1886 moved to Franklinville village, where he handled sewing machines until 1890, when he started with Thomas Grierson a flour and feed store. Soon afterward Mr. Grierson sold to F. P. Willard. Mr. Haynes was supervisor of Ischua in 1872.

John R. Holden was born July 30, 1843, in Ashford, and is a son of Arnold and Patience Holden. In Sept., 1861, he enlisted in Co. B, 9th N. Y. Cav., and was discharged from the Patent Office Hospital in April, 1862, for sickness. He re-enlisted in October, 1864, in Co. A, 9th N. Y. Cav., and was mustered out in June, 1865. Jan. 18, 1863, he married Melvina, daughter of Poltuz and Elizabeth Rush, of East Otto, and in 1867 settled in Farmersville, whence he removed in 1885 to the village of Franklinville, where he has been engaged largely in the cheese trade, a business he has successfully followed for more than a quarter of a century. Mr. Holden has been prominent in town affairs and is vice-president of the First National Bank of Franklinville. His father, Arnold Holden, was supervisor of Ashford in 1831.

Samuel L. Hollister was born in Cairo, Greene county, Oct. 29, 1788. In 1806 he came to this town and in 1812 married Sibyl Norton, who was born in Litchfield county, Conn., May 24, 1791, and moved to Franklinville in 1811. In 1816 he removed to Great Valley and in March, 1821, went to Mansfield, where he died June 29, 1849.

Hosea T. Holmes, son of Peter Holmes, an early settler in Farmersville, was born in that town Dec. 28, 1821. In Jan., 1843, he married Eliza A., daughter of Harvey Butler, and until 1871 was a farmer. He then came to Franklinville and died June 13, 1889. Children: A. O., Clark L., and L. M.

Joseph Holmes, a native of Leeds, England, came to America and to Franklinville in 1830, settling in Cadiz, where he followed his trade of gunsmith and kept also a dry goods and grocery store. He was born March 6, 1817, and died June 9, 1882; he married Amantha, daughter of Eli A. and Finetta Sprague, of Ischua, and had born to him seven children, five of whom are living: John T., Alfie F., Jennie G., Mary E. (Mrs. R. Stone), Reuben B.

Benjamin Hotchkiss, about 1817, came from Whitehall, N. Y., and after a brief residence in the Ischua valley located on lot 38. His son Hiram settled on the same lot a little farther west. One of his daughters was the wife of Isaac Searl and another became Mrs. Aaron Osgood. Hiram Hotchkiss was a soldier in the War of 1812. Simeon Hotchkiss located on lot 38. He married Lucretia, daughter of Stephen Platt, from Plattsburgh, N. Y. Children: Benjamin, Sarah, Alexander, Mary, Stephen, Orange, and Charles. Stephen and Orange enlisted in the 154th Regiment in Aug., 1862, and both died in the service. Alexander served in the artillery.

Simeon Ingalls came from Otsego, N. Y., in 1828, with his wife and family, and settled on lot 29. He married Martha, daughter of T. D. Storrs. He finally sold his place and moved to Tennessee, where he was at the breaking out of the Rebellion. With several others from the north he was forced to leave the State, barely escaping with their lives.

John Johnston was a Scotchman by birth. He came to this county in 1833 and bought a farm of Elijah Sill; in June, 1834, his family joined him, and in September following he died. He had four sons and three daughters; two sons, James and John, reside on the homestead. John Johnston, Jr., born in May, 1818, married Agnes Penman, by whom he had seven children. He was a popular citizen and a respected gentleman; he represented the town of Franklinville on the Board of Supervisors in 1859.

William W. Kingsbury, son of Benjamin, was born in Cherry Valley, Otsego county. In 1830 or 1831 his father came to Rushford, Allegany county, where he now resides. He is a carpenter and farmer. He married Betsey Bassett and has three children. Frank D. Kingsbury, his son, was born Sept. 25, 1849, and in 1880 married Arlouine L. Smith, of Rushford. In 1882 he came to this town and purchased the Dell Zell farm; children: Harry and Willie.

Warren Kingsley, son of Nathan, came from Otsego county to Franklinville in 1825, he being at that time seventeen years of age. For five years he worked on the farm and for eight years was a clerk in the employ of Tilly Gilbert in Cadiz. February 22, 1838, he married Augusta, daughter of John McNall, who died Dec. 26, 1889. Mr. Kingsley was thoroughly identified with the best interests of the town, holding for twelve years the office of assessor and for a number of terms the position of town clerk. With the exception of some fifteen years, which were spent in Machias, Mr. Kingsley made the town of Franklinville his home from the date of his settlement until his death, which occurred at the residence of his son, Avery W. Kingsley, Feb. 25, 1891.

Gilbert Laidlaw and his wife Margaret and their three sons and two daughters emigrated to America from Scotland in 1851. They first settled in Rochester and in 1852 removed to this town, locating on a farm in what has since been known as the Laidlaw district. His wife died soon after their arrival and his death occurred in 1863. One son, Hon. William G., is a prominent lawyer in Ellicottville; the other children were Robert, James, Agnes, and Betsey (Mrs. A. Duncan).

The Latham family trace their ancestry back to Mary Chilton, the first female to land on Plymouth Rock from the Mayflower. The American Messenger for 1850 says: "Chancellor Walworth, an eminent jurist of this State, traces his ancestry to Mary Chilton. John Winslow, brother of Edward Winslow, one of the first governors of the Plymouth colony, married her, and their daughter became the wife of Robert Latham, from England, who came to this country some twenty years after the arrival of the Mayflower. From Robert Latham and his wife all the Lathams in this country, so far as known, have descended." A branch of the family early moved to Vermont and at about the same time David Latham settled at Lyme, Conn. His grandson, Joseph Latham, born Dec. 12, 1787, came thence to Le-Roy, Genesee county, in 1808, commencing the journey on his birthday, crossing the Hudson river on the ice opposite the city of Albany and the Genesee river where the city of Rochester now stands. He volunteered in the War of 1812 with the rank of sergeant-major and participated in the storming of Fort Erie with unloaded muskets and fixed bayonets. May 2, 1818, he married Polly, daughter of Col. Jedediah Crosby, came to Franklinville in the spring of 1834, settled on Crosby hill on the farm now owned by his son, Joseph Latham, and died June 7, 1865; his wife died Dec. 9, 1870. Children: Joseph, William, Russel, and Helen. Russel Latham enlisted in the Rebellion, served on board the U. S. gunboat Towa, and after that vessel was destroyed in action with the rebel forts on Cumberland river he died at Clarksville, Tenn., Dec. 23, 1864.

Joseph Latham, Jr., born Dec. 12, 1819, has been a minister in the Genesee Conference of the M. E. church for over forty years. He married, Sept. 4, 1851, Lydia R., daughter of Hon. Lyman Nelson, county judge of Potter county, Pa.; children: Franklin (died Nov. 4, 1874), Orry N., William H., Russel M. (died August 28, 1867), Lyman R., Joseph C., Minnie M., and Josephine Eugenie (died Jan. 22, 1878). Orry N. is a physician at Bolivar, N. Y.; William H. is a lawyer in Nebraska and county judge of Frontier county; Minnie M. married Rev. F. S. Parkhurst, of the Genesee Conference, Aug. 25, 1880. The Latham family has represented California as collector of the port of San Francisco, as governor, and as U. S. senator.

Teneyck Low was born in Cherry Valley, N. Y., Aug. 13, 1789. He was a soldier in the War of 1812 and served in the militia under Gen. Stephen Van Rensselaer; he was one of the brave little band who volunteered to cross the Niagara and attack the British at Queenstown Heights, where he received a slight wound in the shoulder. Some years after the war he married Abigail Buchanan and came to Franklinville in 1825, settling on lot 21, where he resided until his death May 15, 1870. Children: Charlotte, Margaret, Anna, Amanda, Marvin, Judson, Mary, and Clarinda. Marvin-married, Feb. 8, 1851, Lucy Puddy, and resided on the homestead until his death Aug. 25, 1886. Children: Alvin A., Lluwellyn, and Judson M. Alvin now lives on the place with his widowed mother. Judson was born Jan. 22, 1839, and remained on the farm with his father until 1861, when he enlisted in Co. B, 9th N. Y. Cav., as orderly-sergeant. He went to the front and for gallantry in the service was soon promoted to second lieutenant. His indomitable courage and readiness to undertake dangerous duties often led him into hand to hand encounters with the enemy. On one occasion he and his company were sent forward to ascertain the position of the rebels. Their course led them into a piece of woods where they found a considerable force of cavalry drawn up ready to receive them. The rebels were so vastly superior in numbers that instant retreat was their only course, during which he became slightly detached from his company and was at once surrounded by five Confederates, the foremost of whom exclaimed: "Now, you d—d Yank, surrender!" After shooting one rebel through the head and unhorsing two with his sabre a fourth rode up behind and struck him across the neck with a carbine, which knocked Judson from his horse, and while he laid on the ground a horse struck him in the side, from the effects of which he died Nov. 9, 1863.

Robert Lowden was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and fitted himself for the ministry at a college in Edinburgh. His father, a sea captain having a daughter and five sons, emigrated to America and settled in Pictou, Nova Scotia, where the family became largely interested in mercantile business and ship building, in which Robert continued, and thus relinquished the idea of entering the ministry. He married a widow, Mrs. Wallace, née Abigail Dickson, and had eight children. Charles Thomas, the third, was born in Merigomish, Nova Scotia, Aug. 22, 1815, and by his half-brother, Alexander Wallace, was instructed in blacksmithing, a trade he followed for many years. At the age of twenty-one he came to the States and on Oct. 22, 1837, arrived at Yorkshire Center, where he set up as a blacksmith and continued for thirty-five years. In Nov., 1838, he married Pamey B. Woolley, who died Nov. 4, 1877; in the fall of 1878 he married Mrs. Martha J., widow of John Ten Broeck, of Franklinville, to which village he at once removed. Mr. Lowden, after his settlement in Yorkshire, took an active interest in politics, and after becoming a legalized citizen he was chosen delegate to several Republican conventions, including the one at Ellicottville for organizing that party in Cattaraugus county. He was several times town clerk, justice of the peace, and justice of sessions; was supervisor of Yorkshire in 1861; was for five years loan commissioner; was postmaster at Yorkshire Center for twelve years; and from 1872 until Dec. 31, 1878, held the office of county superintendent of the poor. In all these positions he served with marked ability. He had six children; his two sons became blacksmiths.

Jonathan H. Lyon came to this town in 1816 from Troy, N. Y. He married Harriet Perkins, from Otsego county, in 1819. He was a man of some influence among the early settlers. About 1830 he was doing business in the dry goods line, tanning, shoemaking, etc. Children: Russell, Reuben, Delos, Amanda, and Clara. Clara is now living on the homestead lot in the village.

Charles T. Mason was born in East Otto, April 30, 1840. His father was David T. Mason, a pioneer of that town. In 1858 Charles married Jennie E., daughter of John and Sally Dudley, and in 1864 he purchased the Mason homestead in East Otto. He followed carpentering and farming, and in 1881 removed to the village of Franklinville. Children: Charles H., of East Otto; Rosa M., who died March 4, 1889; and Lois A. Lewis J. Mason was supervisor of this town in 1856.

Gen. Joseph McCluer* (or McLure), the first settler in the town of Franklinville, was born in Belchertown, Worcester county, Mass., May 14, 1775, and at about the age of twenty married Betsey Grice. He came to this town and located on the site of the village in March, 1806, with his wife and five children. He was an agent and surveyor of the Holland Land Company. He served as captain on the Niagara frontier in the War of 1812 and was the soldier who rescued the bugler Burns after he had deserted from the British and swam the

*The original orthography of this name in Franklinville was McLure, though the pronunciation was identical with McCluer or McClure. Gen. Joseph McCluer used, it is said, the ancient form, but his descendants have many of them adopted the present spelling, McCluer.—Editor.

Niagara river to reach the American lines. Mr. McCluer represented the counties of Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, and Niagara in the Assembly of 1814-15, the three counties forming one district. He was county clerk in 1821 and was a general in the State militia. After an active and eventful life he died of heart disease Sept. 11, 1833. His wife survived him eleven years, and was buried by his side in the family burying ground a few rods south of their former habitation. The remains of both were subsequently removed to the present cemetery. The family of Joseph and Betsey McCluer consisted of five sons and three daughters: Samuel, Manly, Joseph, David, Freeman, Emily, Harriet, and Caroline. Samuel married Lucy Carpenter and settled on the hill road on lot 30. He kept a hotel until his death. He was born Dec. 4, 1795, and died in July, 1829. He built the first frame barn between Franklinville and Ellicottville. He had nine children. Frederick, his son, was born Aug. 5, 1825, married Permelia Nichols, and occupies the old homestead. Of their six children four are living: Dell, James H., Frank D., and John H. Manly married Emily Wightman and settled on the west part of lot 30. He filled several town offices, one of which was justice of the peace for several years. He was born June 26, 1800, and died May 1, 1853. Joseph occupied the west part of lot 23 prior to 1827, and resided on it until he removed to Canada in 1830. He was born June 1, 1802. He gave a bushel of wheat for four pounds of nails, which were used in building his barn. He married Patty Long. Emily married Roswell Warner, a farmer and a man of influence. One of their daughters married Jedediah Crosby and settled on Crosby hill. Harriet married Pardon T. Jewell in 1825. Mr. Jewell was one of the early teachers and took a lively interest in our common schools. He was superintendent of schools for several years. He was elected justice of the peace in 1834 and again in 1840. Caroline married John G. Mathewson in 1826 and settled upon the north part of lot 4. After a few years Mr. Mathewson removed to Michigan with his family, where his wife died several years ago. Freeman McCluer first located on the south part of the old homestead and afterward on the south part of lot 38. He was in the U. S. service from Nov., 1861, to about 1863, when he was discharged on account of ill health. Returning to Franklinville he was granted a pension, and soon disposed of his interests here and removed to Iowa. David always resided within a few rods of the old log cabin in which he was reared. He lived in the town about seventy-five years. He received a fair education, studied law, and became an attorney of some note. In 1817, at the age of ten, he drove a team once a week to Ellicottville to supply Baker Leonard with provisions while he was building the first hotel erected in that place. He represented the town on the Board of Supervisors and filled other offices of trust. In Feb., 1825, he married the daughter of Thomas Morris. Of their children Leonard D. McCluer enlisted in 1861 in the 21st N. Y. Regt. and served until 1865. John, the youngest son, enlisted in Co. I, 6th N. Y. Cav., and fell in battle in 1864.

Benjamin McCluer, a brother of Gen. Joseph McCluer, was born in Belchertown, Mass., in 1775. He married Elizabeth Barber in 1814, came to this town about 1821, and purchased a farm on lot 7, where he died in 1832. The farm was occupied by members of the family for many years afterward. Children: Elizabeth (Mrs. James Mallory and later Mrs. William M. Older), Dr. Benjamin, and Mary J. (Mrs. Allen Briggs and afterward Mrs. Alanson Campbell). Porter McCluer and Abner Hoyt owned parts of lot 7.

David McCluer, a cousin of Joseph McCluer, arrived in this town from Vermont in April, 1806, and selected the north part of lot 5, a few rods below the village of Cadiz, where Hiram Warner McCluer was born April 30, 1806, being the first child of Saxon origin born within the limits of Cattaraugus county. Mr. McCluer removed from Franklinville to Allegany with his family about 1836 and resided there until his death. He was supervisor of Ischua in 1822. Hiram W. McCluer still resides in Allegany.

Thomas McKernan, son of Thomas, was born in County Caven, Ireland, in 1823, and came with his son Hugh to Scottsville, N. Y., in 1848, where he was engaged in manufacturing barrel hoops. His wife, Ann Phillips, whom he had married in Ireland, came to join her husband in 1849, bringing with her their children James and Mary. After residing in Scottsville, Holley, and Eagle for brief periods the family moved to Ellicottville in 1866 and settled on a farm, where he died Oct. 18, 1879; his wife died Nov. 5, 1880. Children: a daughter who died in infancy, Hugh, Joseph, Frank, Thomas, John, Michael and James. James McKernan was born Nov. 12, 1846, and Oct. 6, 1867, married Susan M., daughter of S. R. and Prudence Williams. Children: William, Joseph, John, Thomas, Catherine, Simeon, Helen, James, and Josephine.

William McNall, oldest son of John and Mellison (Washburn) McNall, was born Feb. 23, 1806, at Stafford Springs, Conn., and died Dec. 20, 1870, in this town, whither he had removed with his parents in 1816. The family settled in Cadiz. Dec. 17, 1829, he married Sibyl, daughter of Stephen Seward. Children: Charles (deceased), William, Jr. (deceased), Nathan (died March 5, 1857), Thomas E. (killed at Morton's Ford, Va., in 1864), Stephen E., and four daughters. Stephen McNall was supervisor of this town in 1888.

Rev. D. C. McVean was born Oct. 10, 1818, in Caledonia, N. Y. His parents settled on the farm where he was raised in 1816; his twin brother, John C. McVean, still resides on the homestead. After receiving the usual drill of a village school D. C. studied at Cambridge, N. Y., and Cleveland, Ohio. In after years he said that while a boy working on a farm a premonition sometimes came over him that he should preach the gospel. His mother was left a widow and his labor was needed at home. At the age of seventeen, on profession of faith in his Master, he united with the U. P. church of Caledonia. He graduated at Union College in 1844 and was licensed to preach in June, 1847. After laboring as a licentiate in the New England States and in the south he accepted a call from the Lyndon church in this county and was ordained and installed pastor Jan. 29, 1850. During the sixteen years he labored there the church grew and prospered. The membership was scattered, yet he was indefatigable in his work. After the resignation of his charge at Lyndon his labors were mostly confined to Franklinville, where he resided, and where by his efforts a nucleus was formed around which gathered those who afterward formed the membership of the First United Presbyterian church of Franklinville, which was organized by Mr. McVean on June 25, 1867, with forty members, and now there 214 communicants. An epidemic soon afterward broke out in the community and during his visits he became the victim of the disease, and while he was preaching on the last Sabbath before his death he was stricken with this malady and died the following Saturday. Mr. McVean married M. J., daughter of Abram Gillespie, of Orange county, N. Y. Their only son, Creighton, died at the age of seventeen. In 1848 Mr. McVean, Dr. Henry Van Aernam, and Hon. S. S. Spring located in Franklinville. To the united efforts of these three men, aided by Hon. J. K. Button, the citizens of Franklinville and adjacent towns and indebted for the endowment of Ten Broeck Free Academy.

The Mead family.—Tradition has it that three brothers came from England before the Revolutionary war and settled in Greenwich, Conn.; most of their descendants settled elsewhere in New England. Merlin Mead, son of Clark; was born in South Salem (now Lewisboro), Westchester county, Aug. 18, 1794, and at seventeen began teaching district school in the winter, working on his father's farm summers. After his marriage, Nov. 14, 1820, to Polly, eldest daughter of Eli Clark, of Waterbury, Conn., he removed to New York city and in connection with Mrs. Mead continued teaching about ten years with the subsequently famous Mr. McKean. They opened an evening school, teaching two hours each evening, charging simply for light and fuel. Richard and Robert Hoe, the inventors of the celebrated printing press, were among his pupils. Mr. and Mrs. Mead united with the Cedar Street Presbyterian church under the pastorate of Dr. J. B. Romeyn. Owing to Mrs. Mead's failing health they removed to Cattaraugus county in the fall of 1830, settling in the village of Franklinville. With his brother-in-law, the late Seth Ely, who preceded him by two years, he kept tavern in a building erected for the purpose (standing near where W. A. Day's buildings now are). Mr. Mead taught the district school in the old red school house two winters. As Mr. and Mrs. Mead came with a "gift"* in their hand to the Presbyterian church of Franklinville they esteemed it their greatest joy to unite with that church, which they did by letter on the first Sunday after their arrival, and Mr. Mead was elected and ordained an elder, remaining such till his death, being also elected clerk of the session, trustee, clerk of the society, etc. Nov. 14, 1870, they celebrated their golden wedding. In politics Mr. Mead was in early days a Whig, becoming afterward an Abolitionist. He died at his home in Cadiz, Dec. 23, 1874; Mrs. Mead died May 19, 1882. Children: Thomas Ely, born Aug. 10, 1821, died Aug. 28, 1822; Maria S., born July 30, 1824, married J. C. Giddings on July 4, 1849, and now lives in Venango, Pa.; Romeyn, born March 22, 1827, married Mrs. Jane B. McGuire on Oct. 12, 1871, and now lives in McMinnville, Tenn.; Lois Rebecca, born Sept. 16, 1830, married Aaron Treadwell, settled in Redding, Fairfield county, Conn., and she died Oct. 16, 1888; Rhoda Ely, born Dec. 17, 1833; Eli Clark, born Aug. 1, 1836, died Jan. 3, 1839; Aaron Benedict, born Nov. 7, 1838, married Mary E. Packard on Sept. 2, 1868, and now lives in Chicago, Ill.; and Merlin Edward, born Aug. 18, 1842, married Isabella W. Johnston, March 7, 1877, and resides in Cadiz.

William Mitchell, with his wife and sons Alexander, Thomas, and John and daughters Janet and Agnes, emigrated from Ayrshire, Scotland, in 1834, and settled on a part of lot 6 in the town of Freedom. Respected by his neighbors for his moral and religious worth his house was the ministers' home, and through his influence a branch of the United Presbyterian church of Lyndon was formed and sustained during his life. He died in 1860, aged seventy-six; his widow died in 1874, aged eighty-five. Alexander, after living in York, N. Y., a number of years, returned to Freedom and was elected justice of the peace in 1857, which office he held until his death in 1875. He was largely identified with all the public affairs of the town, settled satisfactorily many family estates, and always used his influence to prevent litigation. Janet married James Yule and settled in Eagle, Wyoming county, where their family still remains. Agnes married Andrew Currie, of Lyndon, where she lives with her sons. John was elected justice of the peace in Freedom in 1876 and held that office until his removal to Franklinville, where he and Thomas now reside.

Henry Morgan, son of Samuel and Sarah Morgan, was born in Cherry Valley, Otsego county, April 2, 1806. It is a noteworthy coincidence that while Gen. Joseph McCluer was taking the initiatory steps toward developing the future town of Franklinville a child should be born in a distant part of the State destined to play such a conspicuous part in its history. Of Mr. Morgan's early life but little is known, except that he received a common school education that was scarcely up to the standard even of those early times. But what he failed to acquire from teachers was amply-compensated for by his strong, vigorous intellect and his instinctive love of knowledge. After he fully developed into manhood many of the intricate problems in the sciences were solved as if by intuition, especially so in the mathematics. He was kind hearted and sympathetic, and easily moved by the misfortunes of those about him, yet he was eccentric in his modes of charity. He was ready in case of need to do what he could by his own labor, or to furnish a team, or himself and team, or supply food such as he had to spare; but it is not known that he ever bestowed money. When property was turned into cash it was carefully laid by. He was no miser, yet he was not a spendthrift; he was industrious and frugal. In 1833, in company with his parents and three sisters, he removed to this town and settled on lot 51, town four, range five, a tract of land then known as the Big Elm flats, since known as Morgan hollow. Here during the succeeding four years he underwent the toils and privations of pioneer life. In 1837 he rented what was then known as the "Half-way House," and with the family left, for the time being, his home in the "Hollow." For about four years he acted as host, hostler, and farmer. In 1841 he returned with the family to his home on the "Elm flats." Soon after his father died and two of his sisters married, and thus he became the head of a family consisting of himself, his aged mother, and a sister, for whom he ever provided with a bountiful hand. Thus situated he continued to reside on his farm in Morgan hollow twenty-five years. In 1866 he sold his farm in the hollow and purchased of Robert Campbell a farm of fifty acres, on which he resided a few years. Soon after his mother's death he removed with his sister Almira to Cadiz, where her death occurred a few years later. Afterward his sister, Mrs. Eliza Campbell, and her husband remained with him until his death, which occurred at Cadiz after a brief illness Oct. 8, 1881.

A few years prior to his death Mr. Morgan held consultation with some of his friends concerning the propriety of having a town hall. After a few interviews of this nature the subject was not again mentioned by him to any one except to his attorney. His mind was of the argumentative type; he reasoned from cause and effect, and his beliefs were mainly based on such propositions as could be demonstrated. He regarded all phenomena as the effect of natural, though often either of obscure or invisible, causes. His intellect was adapted to deal with the physical sciences rather than with those of the metaphysical and psychological. He believed in the existence of God and in the immortality of the soul, and derived his belief from the material universe. Near the close of his life, and after those who had affectionately clung to him to the last had passed to the palace of rest, he decided to bequeath to the town of Franklinville the larger portion of his property for the purpose of erecting a town hall. After Henry Morgan's munificent bequest of about $8,000 a magnificent building was erected, on which, in bas-relief, are two words, MORGAN HALL.

There are three names that will ever remain green in the hearts of the people of Franklinville: Gen. Jos. McCluer, Peter Ten Broeck, and Henry Morgan.

John Morris and his father, Thomas, came to Franklinville from New Jersey in 1807. Thomas Morris selected lot 38 and erected a dwelling house upon it. During the same summer he opened a store on the ground now occupied by the residence of the late Horatio Stillwell. Mr. Morris was supervisor of the town of Ischua (now Franklinville) in 1818, 1819, 1820, and 1822 and of Franklinville in 1846, 1847, and 1848. John was born in 1802 and in 1823 married Lovina, daughter of John Patterson, and had ten children.

Samuel B. Myers was born in Portage, N. Y., June 30, 1842. Feb. 14, 1865, he enlisted in Co. B, 154th Ill. Vols., and was mustered out May 22d following. Nov. 15, 1880, he married Mary E., daughter of Albert J. and Pernelia C. Campbell, of Franklinville.

Elijah Oakes is a son of Elijah, who served in the Revolutionary war. At an early day the father settled in Rochester and moved thence in 1839 to Franklinville, where he located a farm of fifty acres, which he cleared. He married Joannah Leonard, who bore him twelve children, of whom Elijah, Jr., was born Feb. 10, 1835, and Oct. 20, 1856, married Sarah C., daughter of Hiram and Harriet C. Morgan, of Franklinville. In Sept., 1864, Mr. Oakes enlisted in Co. A, 187th N. Y. Vols., participated in the battle of Hatcher's Run, and was discharged in March, 1865. Returning to his farm he resided there until 1880, when he moved to Cadiz. Mrs. Oakes died Oct. 24, 1881, and he married, second, Katie, daughter of Freeman and Maryette Cleveland. His children are Manley C., Willie V., and Ella E. (Mrs. B. Crosby).

Marvin Older was born in Middletown, Delaware county, Aug. 22, 1810. A few days after his birth the Hon. Dudley Marvin called at the house of his parents and suggested that the tiny specimen of humanity before him be christened Marvin. The name was agreed to by common consent, and ever since he has answered to it. His parents, William and Hannah Older, raised sixteen children, Marvin being the sixth son and eighth child. In 1815 his parents with their family removed to Otisco, Onondago county, where they remained three years. Mr. Older has jocosely remarked that, during that time, there was nothing pertaining to the narration of his life "except that I invariably stood at the head of my class in district school, from the fact that there were but two in the class, and one of them at least was lamentably underwitted," which of course was the other fellow. On the 16th of July, 1818, William Older unloaded his household appendages from an emigrant wagon by the side of an excellent spring on the northeast corner of lot 25, township five, range four, of the Holland Land Company's purchase. This location was then in the original town of Ischua, which at that date included the entire north half of the county of Cattaraugus; it is now in the town of Farmersville, one and one-half miles northeast from the village of Franklinville. The location for the last seventy-three years has been known as Older hill. At that time there was but one school house in the whole country. Marvin's father was a cooper, and the shop became the school room of the young student. His library consisted of a Bible and psalm book, Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, Young's Night Thoughts, Hervy's Meditations, an antiquated dictionary whose first pages contained a condensed synopsis of English grammar in its most incomprehensible and mysterious form, Dwight's Geography, Dilworth's and Daboll's Arithmetics, the American Preceptor, Webster's Spelling Book, Esop's Fables, Robinson Crusoe, and Charlotte Temple. Such were the surroundings of the mere stripling when he commenced the struggle for intellectual development. Without the privilege of attending school, and with an unquenchable desire to obtain knowledge, home study became a passion as well as a necessity. In that cooper shop, with the shavings that fell from his father's drawing-knife for a light, a barrel-head for a slate, and a piece of coal for a pencil, many a knotty problem yielded to his persevering efforts.

From the age of thirteen to fifteen years Marvin attended the district school in the old log school house which stood a short distance north of the village of Franklinville; two months to Miss Louie Moore (since Mrs. Smith, of Hinsdale) and about the same length of time to Pardon T. Jewell; and afterward eleven and a half days to Eleazer Perkins. This rounded him up and polished him off as an accomplished scholar of the period. In the autumn of 1828 he entered upon his first term as a teacher, and at intervals, both summer and winter, has followed the profession through a period of forty years, having in all taught what is equal to fifteen years without recess or vacation. It is balm of Gilead to the heart of Mr. Older at this time, when the shadows of life are lengthening, to know that he has no warmer or more faithful friends than those old-time pupils who received the first rudiments of an English education from him. Of the nine sons in his father's family Marvin alone remains; of the daughters three survive and reside in the west.

On the 17th of July, 1836, Marvin married Diantha T. Reynolds, of East Bloomfield, Ontario county, who was born in Sullivan, Madison county, Feb. 23, 1816. There have been born to them four sons and six daughters. Their oldest child (a son) died in infancy; of the other sons, Robert E. and William M. served in the army during the Rebellion—Robert E. was killed near Petersburg, Va., June 18, 1864; William M. was wounded and captured in the valley of the Shenandoah and died of starvation in Andersonville, Ga., Aug. 22, 1864. The remaining son, Wallis M., died at Franklinville, Dec. 24, 1878. Of the daughters five are or have been teachers and all are married.

Oct. 24, 1861, Mr. Older enlisted in Co. I, 6th N. Y. Vol. Cav., and after a brief period of camp drill at Staten Island, N. Y., the regiment was sent to the front early in the summer of 1862, and was successively under command of Generals Pleasanton, Averill, Custer, and Sheridan. Soon after the organization of the regiment he was detailed on extra duty as clerk in the quartermaster's and commissary's departments in the field, which positions gave additional comforts and duties. This relieved him from ordinary duties of the rank and file, yet he participated in the battles of South Mountain, Antietam, and Fredericksburg, and came out free from bruise or scratch. On the night of the last day of April, 1863, he was one of a squad of seventy, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel McVicker, who, being on a reconnoissance, suddenly found themselves in the darkness of a foggy night, surrounded on all sides by the enemy en route for the historic heights of Chancellorsville. Mr. Older says of this adventure:

"To stay and fight would be sheer madness; to tamely submit would be cowardice; and the only way was to hew a road with the sabre in a desperate charge. The latter alternative was adopted; some succeeded and reached the main body, and some fell in the encounter. I was among the latter, and when I had, after a severe effort, collected the scattered fragments of what little intellect I once possessed I found myself half buried in mud, with my head sadly battered by a sabre-stroke and a dead horse across my legs. I drew myself from beneath my dead horse and crawled to a little mound beneath some dwarf pines and communed with myself in sober, almost in dead, earnest. There was nothing to disturb or vary my gloomy forebodings except the groans of the wounded, the twinges of acute pain, the moaning of the chill night wind, and the heavy rumble of artillery trains on the distant pikes en route for the bloody scenes of the coming morrow. I had dragged from my saddle two blankets, an overcoat, and a haversack of provisions, but of these, as soon as it was light, the vandal hounds relieved me. We were then taken to some farm buildings hard by, and suffered to sun ourselves and nurse our wrath on the south side of an old out-house. Toward night we were taken to Spotsylvania Court House and our wounds dressed, and the next day I, with two others who were unable to walk, was loaded into a dump-cart drawn by a dilapidated mule, and started on our triumphal march to the city of Richmond! After much fatigue, many delays, privations, and starvations we arrived at our destination, and were at once escorted to that historic watering place, Belle Isle, and subsequently to that fashionable resort, the 'Hotel de Libby,' where we were treated to rebel hospitality by way of the naked floor for a bed, the grimmy old roof for a covering, gray-backs for recreation, mule soup for refreshment, and river water for a beverage. But all things have an end, and so did my imprisonment. I was returned on parol by way of Petersburg, City Point, James River, Fortress Monroe, and Annapolis to convalescent camp near the city of Washington, where we arrived in July, 1863. * * * I was immediately detailed as a clerk in the ordnance department, and for merit was promoted to the first rank in the office, and the order of detail was made permanent by the endorsement of the secretary of war, in which position I remained until the close of the term of my enlistment, when I returned to my family a poor, battered, time-worn veteran of the war."

Mr. Older's life has been one of changes. He has labored in the field and has held official positions; he has taught common schools, and has been at the head of polite literary circles. For ten years he held the chairmanship of the Regents' Board of Examiners in Ten Broeck Free Academy, and filled the position with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of all concerned. In disposition he is unobtrusive and retiring, and the positions he has held are those in which his services have been next to indispensable.

Maj. Flavel Patridge was a native of Wilbraham, Mass. His wife was Azubah Ellis, of Stafford Springs, Conn., and with one child, Frances C., they came to Franklinville in 1820, living in a small house where the Morgan block now stands, where he carried on shoemaking and conducted a store. Major Patridge was a prominent man in politics and held several positions of honor and responsibility. He was town supervisor in 1828, was postmaster a number of years, and a member of Assembly in 1829. He was a strong temperance advocate and an active member of the Presbyterian church. Of his nine children only one, Eliza A. (Mrs. James Waring), is living in town.

John Patterson came from Onondaga county to the county of Wyoming in 1805, and moved thence to Franklinville in 1820. A few years later he purchased and settled on a farm. Mr. Patterson was well known in the county as well as in his town. He was supervisor of Franklinville in 1830. He built a hotel about 1830 which he kept for several years and sold to Jarvis Stone, who kept it until his death. Between 1860 and 1870 the property was sold by the heirs and has since acquired the name of "Brown Eagle." Mr. Stone left three children: George, William, and Mary (Mrs. Russell Adams). John Patterson was the first collector in Franklinville after its organization in 1824.

Peter Phillips, from Kinderhook, this State, came to Franklinville about 1831 and married Mrs. Samuel McCluer. Children: William W., born March 9, 1835; Charles W., born March 17, 1837; and David L., born June 9, 1839.

Otis W. Phillips, son of John, came from Chenango county to the town of Franklinville in 1833 and settled on what is now South Main street in the village, where he died May 19, 1888. His wife was Phebe Garlick, who bore him eight daughters and three sons. He was a carpenter and built many of the best houses in the town. As a citizen he was highly respected and as a politician he became very popular, being supervisor of his town in 1844. Five of his children are living: Sarah M. (Mrs. James Laidlaw); Phebe M. (Mrs. Charles Schutz); L. A. (Mrs. Egbert Van Slyke), of Great Valley; Delia M. (Mrs. Truman Harrison); and Otis H.

William Pierce came to Franklinville in 1832, from Genesee county, and settled on Genesee street. There were four children: Harriet, John, Ellen (Mrs. Cyrus Fay), and Lorette. He sold to Mr. Simonds in 1839 and removed.

Ira Pratt, one of the axemen who accompanied Joseph McCluer while surveying the Holland Land Company's land, settled in the Ischua valley, but just when and where can not be ascertained. A grandson of Joseph McCluer states that Mr. Pratt married one of the general's sisters and resided in the town from 1806 to about 1836. They had three children: Orvil, Lucy, and a second son. Orvil went to California and became a Supreme Court judge. There was a vein of dry humor in Ira Pratt's composition which often proved amusing, but sometimes rather annoying to those of whom he made a target. In 1831 Austin Cowles had come into possession of the Conrad grist-mill below Cadiz. His occupation was preaching the gospel and grinding the grists. On one occasion Ira Pratt had taken a grist to mill, but in some mysterious way the grain was lost and Cowles refused to pay for it. Pratt sued and recovered judgment, whereupon Cowles put up this notice:

"FRANKLINVILLE, March 26, 1831.

"WHEREAS, Ira Pratt has commenced a prosecution against the firm of the Franklinville mills for property left thereat, and pretended to be lost by said Pratt; this is therefore to forbid any person leaving grain or other property at said mills on his account, as the subscriber Gives this Notice that he will not hereafter Receive Said Ira Pratt's property in safe Keeping.

"AUSTIN COWLES."

To which Pratt replied:

"The Publick are hereby requested to take notice that I forbid Austin Cowles (late miller) preaching or attempting to preach, and all persons are forbid to permit the said Cowles to preach in their houses, out-houses, sheds, or yards any where in my Diocese on pain of my displeasure. Dated at Franklinville this 25th day of March A. D. 1831.

"ELDER BLOSS."

"P. S. I also forbid Austin Cowles, late miller of Franklinville, taking extra tole from me, or from any of my church, on pain of my displeasure.

"E. B."

Noah Pratt, son of John, was born June 12, 1832, in Ashford, and when twenty-one married Jane M., daughter of Arnold Holden. In 1866 he moved to Franklinville on the farm where B. J. Green now resides, where he lived until 1870, when he purchased his present farm. Children: Edwin H., Albert L., Alice B., and Edith M.

John Reynolds and his wife, Permelia Searl, and one child, Marilla, came from Washington county to Franklinville in 1819 or '20 and settled on the farm now occupied by their son Dennis. Five of their eight children are living: Henry, Dennis, Maria, Marietta, and Marilla. Mr. Reynolds died Feb. 6, 1865, and his wife July 29, 1884. Dennis Reynolds, born Aug. 1, 1824, married, in 1849, Wealthy, daughter of Jeremiah and Roxey H. (Gladding) Ryther, and until 1865 was a farmer on East hill. In that year he removed to the Reynolds homestead. Children: Stewart, Dwight, Millard, and Fred, of whom only the last named is living. Henry Reynolds was born March 4, 1822, and married, in 1850, Harriet J., daughter of Nathaniel Ransbury, who came to this town in 1844 and settled on East hill. Mr. Reynolds was also a farmer on East hill, but in 1887 moved to Cadiz. He has one son, Melvin L.

Lewis C. Riggs, son of Dr. Lewis Riggs (see page 130), was born July 14, 1845. On Sept. 21, 1868, he married Martha J., daughter of Matthew and Louisa (Brooks) McGeorge, and in 1872 assumed charge of the Riggs homestead in Franklinville. Mr. Riggs, like his father, is well posted in agricultural matters and devotes his time solely to the care of the paternal farm. He is a breeder of Hambletonian horses, Holstein cattle, and Cotswold sheep.

Nathaniel Rogers, a native of Massachusetts, came to Franklinville in 1850, settling on a farm on East hill, where he died. He was a worthy member of the Presbyterian church, and had born to him seven children, of whom two are living in this county, viz.: Levi, of Humphrey, and Mrs. S. S. Searl.

Oliver Root came from York, Livingston county, about the year 1818 and located on lot 41. He married Zulama Merrill. He built a saw-mill, the first one in that locality. An incident characteristic of those hardy pioneers occurred at the raising of this mill. After the frame was up they all repaired to the log house, where Oliver snugly seated his guests in as nearly a semi-circle as the stools, chairs, and benches at his command would permit. He then mixed a quantity of whisky and sugar in a tin pan, and with a large spoon commenced at one end of the half circle, giving the first a spoonful, then the next, and so on to the end of the line. The operation was continued until that crowd was as jolly a set of fellows as a mixture of whisky, sugar, and good nature ever make. Mr. Root lived on the place until his death Feb. 18, 1872; his wife died Feb. 18, 1875. They had twelve children, two of whom are now living on the homestead. Warren S. married Sarah, daughter of George Adams; children: Alice C., Charles D., and George W. Clarinda married Mark Harrison, resides in the south part of the town, and has one son, Truman. Noah M. Root, another son of Oliver, was born Nov. 16, 1820, and married Betsey, daughter of Robert and Elizabeth Barron, of Franklinville. He settled and cleared a farm and died Aug. 9, 1877. His widow married J. D. Frank and resides in Great Valley. Children: Sabra M. (Mrs. Benjamin Pierson), Huldah E. (Mrs. B. C. Cleaveland), and Loren F. The latter was born Sept. 29, 1850, and married Laura J., daughter of Calvin C. Bowen. He resided on the old homestead until 1886, when he moved to the village of Franklinville, where he engaged in the insurance business with J. C. Bowen.

Isaac Searl was the second son of fifteen children of Gideon and Hannah Searl, and was born in Whitehall, N. Y., Oct. 23, 1789. Of this large family six brothers and five sisters of Isaac have resided in Cattaraugus county. In July, 1811, Mr. Searl married Martha Hotchkiss, of Washington county, and in 1816 moved with his family to Warsaw, N. Y., coming thence in the fall of 1817 to Franklinville, where he died April 11, 1860. His first settlement in this town was on land occupied by the Globe Hotel, but from this he soon removed to a farm, where he erected a log house, and where he dispensed for many years a generous hospitality. Mr. Searl united with the Baptist church in April, 1837, and from then until the close of his life he was an exemplary member of that society. He had nine children, some of whom survive. Mr. Searl was supervisor of Ischua in 1823 and of Franklinville in 1824-27, 1831, 1836-37, 1840, and 1845—ten terms in all.

Isaac Searl, Jr., son of Isaac, was born Sept. 22, 1820, and has always lived in Franklinville. He has been a life-long farmer, at the present time being one of the most extensive agriculturists in the town. Like his respected father he has taken a lively interest in town affairs, serving as supervisor in 1861 and 1862 and again from 1868 to 1872 inclusive, and as assessor and poormaster. He married Jane, daughter of John Johnson. She died Jan. 11, 1883.

Orange Searl, son of Isaac, Sr., was born Jan. 8, 1816, and came with the family to Franklinville, where he has always been a farmer. He removed to Cadiz in 1875, and is now one of the oldest pioneers in the town. He married Elizabeth A., daughter of Nathaniel Ransbury.

Lyman Searl, son of Isaac, Sr., was born May 22, 1818, and occupies the homestead farm of his father, having been almost a life-long resident of a single school district, and following since his boyhood the avocation of a farmer. He married Hannah M., daughter of Elijah Sill (q. v.); children: Lucian H., Viola E., and Henriette (Mrs. Luther M. Holmes).

Samuel Searl was born Jan. 13, 1812. He was a son of Isaac and Martha (Hotchkiss) Searl, and he married, Sept. 19, 1835, Sophronia, daughter of Ira and Elizabeth Burlingame. Settling first on East hill he removed thence in 1851 to the farm now occupied by his son Fayette. Mr. Searl held several positions of trust, was a member of the Board of Supervisors in 1858, and was an exemplary member and deacon of the Baptist church. Of his two children, Fayette and Hanford, the latter, born June 25, 1837, enlisted in June, 1861, in Co. K, 83th N. Y. Vols., was promoted orderly-sergeant, was taken sick in front of Yorktown, and was taken to the hospital at Annapolis, Md., where he died May 3, 1862. Samuel Searl died Feb. 17, 1865; his wife died July 25, 1857. Fayette Searl, born March 7, 1846, married, March 18, 1867, Susan C. Farwell, of Ischua, and lives on the homestead.

Jeriah Searl, born in Hampton, N. Y., Jan. 3, 1788, died in Franklinville in April, 1863. He married in 1815 Rachel Saries, and carried on farming and manufactured chairs. In 1835, with his wife and four children, he moved to Franklinville, settling on a farm of 115 acres on East hill. For fifty years Mr. Searl was an active member of the M. E. church of Cadiz and for thirty years was class-leader. His wife was born May 28, 1787, and died Sept. 4, 1867. Children: Almond D., Caroline C. (Mrs. J. W. Sill), Lucy B., and Samuel S. The latter was born May 23, 1824, and in 1858 married Lucretia, daughter of Nathaniel Rogers. Settling on a farm on East hill, which he cultivated a number of years, he moved to Franklinville village in 1885. Children: Cora M. (Mrs. Clarence Morris), Clifton R., Marshall J., and Arthur J. Almond D. Searl was born Dec. 4, 1815, and came with his parents to this town in 1835. He married Jane, daughter of Edward and Lucinda Scott, and settled on the farm now occupied by his son E. E. He died in 1882. Children: Dolson B., Emily, Covil J., Walter H., Julia C., Electa M., Lucy L., Frank E., Elmer E., Ellen J., and Agnes S.

Gideon Searl, a native of Washington county, came to Cadiz at an early day and engaged in mercantile trade. He subsequently removed to Ischua, where he followed the same business and was elected a member of Assembly in 1846 upon the Whig ticket. He finally returned to Franklinville and became postmaster, and was accidentally killed by the cars. His wife was Loranía Howard, by whom he had seven children, four of whom are living: Cynthia A. (Mrs. S. P. Bard), Gideon, O. S., and Roxanna (Mrs. J. H. McCluer). Mr. Searl was much respected, and the positions he filled he honored with a noble manliness and a strict integrity.

Stephen Seward came from Decatur, N. Y., in April, 1827, and put up a double log house, which was considered aristocratic in those days. He settled on the east part of lot 21. He was a man of much decision of character and manifested a good deal of public spirit. James Seward, son of Stephen, came to Franklinville with his father in 1827 and settled on lot 21. He was a man of some ability and perseverance; he became captain of militia, and his influence in society was good. Orrin M. Seward served as supervisor of this town in 1855 and Thomas held the same office in 1841 and 1842.

David C. Sexton, a native of Rhode Island, came to Cazenovia, N. Y., where he resided until 1825, when he came to Rushford, Allegany county, with his family. There he followed the trade of carpenter and builder until his death in 1843. Hezekiah C. Sexton, his son, born April 28, 1804, came to Rushford with his father, and Dec. 16, 1824, married Maria, daughter of Elisha Babcock, of Cazenovia, who was born in 1807. Mr. Sexton took up a farm where Rushford village now is, and was deputy sheriff of Allegany county for several years. In 1845 he came to Freedom and a few years later to Cadiz, where he kept hotel until about 1870. He died Nov. 14, 1885, and his wife Jan. 16, 1890. Children: Melinda D. (Mrs. Starkweather), of Buffalo; Emily E. (adopted), wife of Dr. T. F. Frank, of Pittsburg, Pa.; and Elisha D., born June 26, 1830. For six years Elisha was employed by Beach, Wheeler & Co., of Buffalo, as traveling solicitor. June 15, 1857, he married Eliza H., daughter of Bela Norton, of Hinsdale, and soon after settled on a farm near Cadiz, where he lived till 1885, when he moved to Franklinville. He has one daughter, Belle D. Mr. Sexton is a member of the M. E. church.

William Sill was born in Connecticut, Sept. 25, 1786; his wife, Harriet Arnold, was born May 10, 1796; they were married in Victor, N. Y., Feb. 20, 1815. With three brothers—Deodatus, Elijah, and Alonzo—he came to Franklinville about 1820 and settled in the south part of the town. He died Aug. 30, 1839, and his wife Oct. 1, 1859. Children: John W., Caroline H., Elijah B., Thomas M., Chloe A. (drowned), Charlotte A., Phebe A., Andrew J., Alonzo D., and Mark. Thomas M. Sill, born in May, 1822, married, Sept. 13, 1849, Sarah M. Farwell, of Ischua, and settled on a part of the A. J. Sill estate, but subsequently removed to the farm on which his widow now lives, where he died in May, 1886. Children: Elon M., Viletta M. (Mrs. E. E. Searl), Enos K., and Carrie G. (Mrs. Edwin Guthrie, Jr.). Andrew J. Sill was born Oct. 29, 1832, in Franklinville. He married, Jan. 4, 1860, Mary A., daughter of Nicholas and Rebecca Linderman, of Ischua, and settled on the homestead, where he resided until 1884, when he moved to the village of Franklinville, where he died July 4, 1889. His widow and three children—Mrs. H. R. Reynolds, Aggie, and Will N.—reside in Franklinville.

Deodatus Sill, brother of William, settled about 1820 on the farm now owned by Dennis Reynolds, where he died. He had ten children.

Elijah Sill, brother of William, married Margaret, daughter of Henry Conrad. He resided in Franklinville from his settlement in 1820 until about 1833, when he removed to Hinsdale, but four years later returned. Eight years afterward he moved to Hinsdale again, where he died.

O. H. C. Simonds was born in Brownville, N. Y., in 1808. When quite young he came with his father, John Simonds, to Alexander, Genesee county, where he resided until after his majority. He married Laura Kilborn, of Canandaigua, N. Y., Nov. 3, 1830. Coming to this town from Genesee on May 6, 1831, he settled on lot 46, on the road afterward called Genesee street.

He taught school a number of winters and his remarkable powers of explanation rendered him an excellent teacher. He took a great interest in the early Sunday schools and did much to make them successful. He has been town superintendent of common schools and commissioner of highways. Children: Mary, Philo, Ellen, Julia, Sabra, Justin, and Harriet, of whom Philo, Ellen, Julia, and Sabra are living. Mrs. Simonds died May 6, 1889. Julia, the widow of William Jameson, resides on the farm with her father. Justin enlisted in Co. A, 100th N. Y. Vols., and was killed at Fort Wagner, July 18, 1863. The following is taken from a letter of his dated "Camp near the Chickahomony, June 13, 1862":

"We crossed the Chickahomony at Bottom's Bridge on the 2d and were kept on constant picket duty for more than a week at Fair Oaks Station. At the battle of the 31st our division, of not more than 600 fighting men, was in the advance, and consequently was the first to receive the attack of the enemy, whose force was not less than 30,000, yet it took them three hours to drive us back a half-mile. By this time the other divisions had come up and all were driven back another half mile before dark. You can judge of the loss of the division by our company: we went in with thirty-six men and left fifteen on the field, including our captain and first lieutenant. Our second lieutenant has since died at Camp Scott, so it leaves our company without an officer. I succeeded in getting near enough to them to take the belt from a Louisiana Tiger, and I have it now."

Thomas Denny Storrs, son of Nathaniel Storrs, was born in Mansfield, Conn., Feb. 11, 1782. When quite young he came with his father's family to Worcester, N. Y. April 8, 1804, he married Katharine, daughter of Alexander Campbell, of Glasgow, Scotland, a brother of Robert Campbell, of the same place. She was born in Rheinbeck, N. Y., Oct. 14, 1787. They resided in Worcester until April, 1827, when they came to Franklinville, arriving on the 25th. He settled on lot 37, which he had previously purchased of James O. Morse and Benjamin Rathbun. In the fall of 1827 he put up the first frame house on the street, clearing a place just a trifle larger than the building. Then the struggle for existence commenced. Not a rod of ground was cleared on which to raise food, and to this wilderness home Mr. Storrs had brought his wife and six children. The principal meat for a time was venison, which was plentiful; corn bread, with now and then flour enough to make a shortcake, comprised the menu in those days. Mr. Storrs was a cooper, and by furnishing the asheries with pot and pearlash barrels and making black-salts he very soon established a comfortable home, where he resided until his death Aug. 19, 1874. Children: Martha (Mrs. Simeon Ingalls), Nirum, Alexander, William, Jehiel, George C., Lester, and Jane (Mrs. James H. Nichols). Nirum, born May 23, 1806, came with the family to Franklinville and settled on lot 29. He married Silva, daughter of James Bradley, of Middlefield, N. Y., at the home of Royal Farrar in Machias, and the two lived together until May 10, 1878, when she died in Hinsdale. Children: Thomas, Barzilla, Phœbe, and Catherine. Alexander was a lawyer in Hinsdale; see page 331. His four children were Emery A., Rosette (Mrs. John A. Grow), Caroline (Mrs. John Adams), and Marshall, who died in infancy. Emery A. became a prominent member of the Chicago bar.

William Storrs was born in Worcester, N. Y., Jan. 20, 1810, and came to Franklinville with his father in 1827. June 1, 1834, he married Lydia, daughter of Edward and Rachel Pindar, of Worcester, and they settled on a part of the homestead. In the autumn of 1840 he and his wife returned to Otsego. In the spring of 1841 he became pastor of the Baptist church in Jefferson, Schoharie county. In the summer of 1842 he became pastor of the Baptist church in the village of Lodi, town of Cherry Valley, N. Y., where he was ordained March 8, 1843. In addition to his ministerial work he has taught several terms of district, academic, and select schools. In Sept., 1861, he enlisted in Co. F, 76th N. Y. Vols., and was soon appointed military commander of the mess-room; a few days later he was appointed commissary-sergeant, and held both positions until he was discharged in May, 1862, on account of disability. He returned to his home in Belmont, Allegany county, where his wife died Jan. 20, 1889. He now resides in Hinsdale.

George C. Storrs was born April 5, 1820, and was brought to Franklinville at the age of seven. He early developed a passionate love of books, which were the companions of his leisure moments. He soon turned his attention to mathematics, mastering branch after branch with a rapidity rarely equalled. He also became conversant with other studies. His habits of study led him to adopt teaching as a profession, which he followed for more than twenty years with marked success. In the sciences he was well versed and was also a fair scholar in the languages. He served two winters as clerk of a committee in the Assembly at Albany and over three years as an officer in Clinton prison at Dannemora, N. Y. Oct. 25, 1842, he married Mary J., daughter of Moses and Nancy Antisdale. Children: Mary (Mrs. Edwin Pettengill and later Mrs. Seward Harvey), of Mansfield; Amelia, who died at the age of sixteen; Willard, who died in infancy; Lester; and Ida. (Mrs. Byron Eddy), of Eddyville. Lester resides on the homestead.

Lester Storrs was born May 23, 1822, and was brought with the family to Franklinville at the age of five years. He became a teacher at an early age and died Oct. 26, 1849, of consumption caused by over-study and a severe cold caught in the winter of 1847. In 1848 he taught two terms on Jackson hill in Cuba, N. Y., and one term in the academy at Richburg, Allegany county, in the spring of 1849.

John Ten Broeck was a brother of Hon. Peter Ten Broeck (see page 278) and was born in Otsego county on March 11, 1797. He came to Farmersville in 1821 or 1822. He removed to the village of Franklinville in 1847, and died Sept. 15, 1866, his remains being buried in "Ten Broeck cemetery" under a costly monument prepared by his own direction. John Ten Broeck was a man almost the direct opposite of his honored brother. He was abrupt and eccentric but charitable, unpolished in etiquette and harsh in retort but kind-hearted, and possessed excellent traits of character. From his first wife he obtained a divorce and the second bore him no children.

Joseph M. Vaughan came from Wayne county, Pa., in 1820 and settled in this town on lot 61. With a yoke of oxen he made the journey, bringing his wife, Lydia Rood, to his home in the unbroken wilderness. Joseph M., Jr., their son and one of their nine children, was born May 21, 1808, and married Polly, daughter of Ensign Litchfield, of Ellicottville; children: Abraham, Lucinda, Jessie, Joseph E., Almanza, Laura, Lydia, David G., Fred A., Harriet P., and Charles M. Abraham served in the Rebellion and died in the service.

William Waring and Catharine, his wife, came from Connecticut about 1821 and located on lot 33 on the farm now owned and occupied by their eldest son, John Waring. The family consisted of four sons and four daughters. The eldest daughter, Julia, is the wife of A. F. Bard, of Port Allegany, Pa. The eldest son, John, is a prosperous farmer one mile north of Franklinville. The second son, James, now a dealer in general merchandise in Franklinville, was born in what is now Farmersville, April 6, 1821. In his youth he was apprenticed to a village blacksmith, and after his majority he erected a shop opposite the Globe Hotel, where he commenced business for himself, and soon after married Eliza, daughter of the Hon. Flavel Patridge, and has four sons and three daughters, all living. The life of a village blacksmith soon became too monotonous for one of Mr. Waring's versatile temperament and he tried farming with indifferent success, the sober realities of the profession oftentimes running counter to his ruling propensities to buy and sell. He has distributed vast sums of money to farmers in this vicinity for principally wool and butter. He has always shared a fair measure of public confidence, having held many offices of trust and emolument, and his life thus far has been financially a success. His friendships are warm and spontaneous, his dislikes and aversions are decisive.

Moses Warner, with his four sons, Moses, Jr., Parley, John, and Roswell, all from Vermont, settled on lot 5, township 4, range 5, in the summer of 1806, and three of the boys, on becoming of age, took parts of the same lot. But little is known concerning the old gentleman except that he was a cooper and worked at his trade. The mother left a legacy of good deeds behind her. She was an excellent nurse, and also possessed considerable skill in combating diseases with roots and herbs. She was often called on to perform the more delicate duties usually assigned to the medical profession, and when such calls were made there was no night too dark or rough, no path too lonesome or obscure, no day too cold or stormy for Mother Warner to hasten to the bedside where her services were needed. She possessed good health and a lithe, wiry frame, and never troubled herself or those around her for horse or carriage to take her to the sufferer's couch. Many a patient had reason to say "God bless you, Mother Warner." She had a strong, well-balanced intellect, and in short might be termed a walking volcano of wit, sarcasm, and good humor. The boys inherited their mother's constitution and many of her characteristics, and were noted for their courage, powers of endurance, and love of fun. John Warner married Naomi Hollister in 1811, theirs being the first marriage in the town.

William Franklin Weed was born in Darien, Conn., June 3, 1811, and was the tenth child and fifth son of Nathan and Mary Weed. Nov. 14, 1831, he married Sarah W. Chandler and in May, 1834, came to this town. Children: Dexter C., Nathan F., and M. Adeline (Mrs. M. J. Crowley). Mrs. Weed died Sept. 10, 1876, and Oct. 9, 1877, Mr. Weed married Miss Ann E. Hogg. He was a leading factor in the material prosperity of the town; himself and sons were long identified with its financial, mercantile, moral, and educational progress. Nathan F., under the firm name of N. F. Weed & Co., started the first banking business in Franklinville and William F. was the first president of the first bank in town in 1872 and of the First National Bank at its organization in 1877. The latter represented Franklinville as supervisor from 1863 to 1866 inclusive and Nathan F. held the same office in 1867, 1880, and 1881.

John Whitney, son of Christopher and Rhoda (Wilder) Whitney, was born in Hinsdale, March 14, 1830. At the age of sixteen he commenced learning the trade of harnessmaker in the employ of Norman Birge and three years later came to Franklinville, where he was employed by Ora Bond, whose harness business he purchased in 1851. Sept. 9, 1851, he married Mandana, daughter of Manly and Nancy McCluer; children: Christopher, Emma (Mrs. Alfred Smith), Fred M., Mandana (Mrs. V. Smith), and Nettie (Mrs. William Showalter). In Oct., 1861, Mr. Whitney enlisted in Co. I, 6th N. Y. Cav., and was discharged for disability March 16, 1863.

Sherlock Willard, son of Daniel, was born in Massachusetts, Nov. 15, 1786. His wife, Elizabeth B. Reynolds, was born June 27, 1789. They came to this town in 1828 and settled first upon a farm then owned by Robert Bard and subsequently upon the place now occupied by their son Franklin P., where Mr. Willard died Aug. 31, 1846, and his wife Oct. 29, 1871. Mr. Willard was a merchant before coming to Franklinville, but after his settlement here followed farming. Children: Elisha R., Sherlock B., Orville D., Chas. P., Erasmus P., Augustus T., Franklin P., Sophia A., Louisa E., Hannah M., Mary E.

Simeon R. Williams, son of Sylvester and Lydia (Sterling) Williams, was born in Granville, N. Y., April 23, 1814, and in 1838 came to the town of East Otto, where he purchased a small farm and erected thereon a log house. Nov. 5, 1838, he married Prudenda Morgan, who bore him 16 children, 15 of whom grew to maturity. He moved to this town in 1853, and died March 19, 1885.

Abram Wood is the son of Solomon Wood, who married Anna Shewman, of New Jersey, and settled in Tompkins county, N. Y., where their first child, Abram, was born in 1830. In 1831 they came to Lyndon, where five more children were born: Harriet (Mrs. Sylvester Gray), Halsey S., Horace A., Jane L. (Mrs. Montravill White), and Allena L. The children of Mrs. Jane L. White are Anna, Harry, and Catharine. Abram was reared a farmer, but became a contractor and builder, which he followed till his marriage in 1885 to Adelia B. Seward, when he returned to farming. His wife died in 1890.

Robert J. Woodard, son of Asa and Mary Woodard, was born April 14, 1843, and Aug. 6, 1862, enlisted in Co. C, 154th N. Y. Vols. Participating in the battle of Chancellorsville he was taken prisoner July 1, 1863, at Gettysburg, was confined in Belle Isle and Richmond, and Sept. 10, 1864, was transferred to Florence, S. C. Feb. 18, 1865, he was started for Salisbury, N. C., but upon reaching Wilmington he made his escape on the morning of Feb. 19th, and three days later rejoined the Union army. He was discharged June 23, 1865. May 27, 1867, Mr. Woodard married Atalia, daughter of Hiram and Harriet C. Morgan, and resides on the Morgan homestead. Children: Asa H., Charles., George C., and Floyd.

Harvey Woodworth, a brother-in-law of Moses Chamberlin, came to Franklinville in 1823 and settled on lot 45. He was the first carpenter in the west part of the town, and was a fine workman. His son Arad, it is said, invented the first brick machine in the United States that worked satisfactorily in making pressed brick. The first trial of his machine was made on Moses Chamberlin's farm, near the forks of the road. The right to manufacture, use, and sell it was afterward sold in Boston for $100,000.

CHAPTER XXIX.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF FREEDOM.

FREEDOM is situated in the northeast corner of the county, and is bounded on the north by Wyoming county, on the east by Allegany county, on the south by Farmersville, and on the west by Machias and Yorkshire. The town was formed from the original town of Ischua by an act of the Legislature passed April 13, 1820, and comprised all the territory of townships six in the third and fourth ranges. In 1844 this was reduced by the annexation of the west tier of lots of township four to the town of Yorkshire.

The surface is described as a "rolling moderately hilly upland." It is less broken than in most of the towns in the county, and all of it admits of cultivation to the summits of its hills. The principal streams are the south branch of Cattaraugus creek, which flows northwest across the southwest corner of the town, and Clear creek, the outlet of Fish lake, which flows in a northwest direction through the central part of the town and empties into Cattaraugus creek in Wyoming county. Freedom is further beautified by several pretty lakelets: Fish lake in the east part, Beaver lake in the south part, and Law and Scum lakes in the central part. The soil, composed of gravelly loam and clay, is of good quality and is especially adapted to grazing and dairying, and also to the growing of fruit and all agricultural products. There are several quarries of good building stone.

The first settlers in Freedom were enterprising and sturdy pioneers mainly from New Hampshire and Vermont, who brought with them their habits of persevering industry and economy and their sterling principles of honor and integrity. Their posterity have inherited these qualities and ably represent them in public and private. Quite a colony from the two States named settled in the town in 1811: Warren Stanley, Ezekiel Reynolds, Elihu Daggett, Enoch Howlet, Rufus Metcalf, Earl Sawyer, and Jonas Irish. Stanley, Reynolds, and Daggett removed a few years later and are but little known. It is related that Daggett's family in a time of great scarcity of food, to keep the wolf of starvation from the door, dug up the potatoes that had recently been planted and ate them. Gideon Baker in 1822 made the first settlement on the farm now owned by Joseph Baker. He came from Connecticut. Josiah Mead came to Freedom in 1823 and built in 1824 the first carding and cloth-dressing mill on George Waterman's farm. The water-power being insufficient he erected a similar mill on the site of the present Hayden mills, and for several years continued both establishments.

Freedom, although formed April 13, 1820, remained unorganized and without town officers until the town meeting held at the house of Gillet Hinckley on the first Tuesday in March, 1821. This meeting elected William Price, supervisor; Earl Sawyer, town clerk; Enoch Howlet, Charles Beebe, and Lot Crowel, assessors; Lot Crowel and Enoch Howlet, overseers of the poor; Daniel Cole, collector; Elihu Daggett, Nathan Holmes, Nathan Cole, commissioners of highways; Daniel Cole, Israel Reynolds, John G. Ensign, constables; Enoch Howlet, Charles Beebe, Nathan Cole, commissioners of schools; Earl Sawyer, Wycum Clark, Nehemiah Sparks, inspectors of common schools; Gillet Hinckley, Daniel Cole, E. Howlet, poundmasters; Earl Sawyer, Nathan Holmes, Nehemiah Sparks, James D. Sischo, Jonathan Stow, James T. Drew, Charles Beebe, Delinus Daggett, David Hinckley, fence viewers; Willard Law, Earl Sawyer, David Hinckley, Israel Reynolds, Lot Crowel, James T. Drew,

John G. Ensign, Simeon Magoon, Reuben Daggett, James D. Sischo, Jonathan Cook, Oliver Alger, overseers of highways. Following is a list of the supervisors, town clerks, and justices of the peace since the organization of the town:

Cheney; 1889, J. Lammie; 1890, Ellsworth Cheney, Enoch Howlet, William H. Cushman; 1891, G. W. Haskell, Arthur Powell, Martin Cole; 1892, M. Cole; 1893, E. E. Howlet.

Rufus Metcalf, Jr., whose birth occurred December 24, 1812, was the first white child born in Freedom. The first persons married here were Elihu Daggett to Sally McKee and Sylvester Davis to Miss Daggett, the two ceremonies being performed at the same time and place in 1817. Peter Davis died December 17, 1816, his death being the first one in the town. Jemima Clark taught the first school in 1816. Elam Ellithorpe came from Monroe county, accompanied by seven sons, and erected the first tannery, in 1824, on the farm now owned by John Charles. In 1828 he built a second tannery in Sandusky village. The first postoffice was established about 1824; Dr. Warren Coudery, an early physician who resided in the Fish lake neighborhood, was the first postmaster.

Nathan Cole and his brothers Daniel and Asahel, Reuben Brown, and Hazen and Daniel Jaquish were the first settlers in Elton; in early days the neighborhood was known as Cole's settlement. Nathan Cole built the first saw-mill there prior to 1827. In 1830 there were two asheries in the place; one was owned by a Mr. Terrill and the other by a Mr. Buell, and both kept groceries with which, presumably, to pay the pioneers for their ashes. About 1835 Isaac Crawford erected a brewery on the lot now owned by Jonah Thomas, which was burned about 1840 and was never rebuilt.

Daniel Howlet owns an ancient agricultural relic in the form of an old bull plow, which was made by his father in 1817. This primitive implement is entirely of wood except the point, which is wrought iron. It is well preserved.

In the northwest corner of the town a black lubricating oil was discovered in 1865. A test well was put down by Hope, Converse & Mulligan on the farm of David Morgan. In 1878 E. K. West & Co. put down the second well and in 1890 Scott & Co. drilled another on the same farm. All found oil at a depth of from 150 to 175 feet. Prentiss & Co. sunk a well on the farm of Delos Clough to a depth of 1,400 feet, but no oil was discovered after passing the rock at 150 feet below the surface.

Freedom is an agricultural town, with cheese making the leading industry. Grain is grown successfully, apples are produced in quite large quantities and of good quality, and vegetables are raised in abundance. The manufacture of maple sugar is the source of considerable revenue.

About 1840 several Welsh families from Oneida county settled in Freedom. They were mostly enterprising and industrious farmers, and from that time forward the colony has continued to increase until it now forms a very considerable portion of the population of the town.

The highways of Freedom compare favorably with those of other towns in the county. The first road was "laid out" October 20, 1813, by the commissioners of highways of the town of Ischua, of which Freedom then formed a part. The road lies in and along the valley of Clear creek. The first iron bridge in the town of Freedom was erected in 1877 by Commissioner of Highways D. D. Newman across Clear creek in Sandusky. The town now has thirteen of these substantial structures.

The Rochester branch of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad enters the town on its eastern border, about two miles south of the northeast corner, traverses in a southwesterly direction through the hamlet of Freedom station, enters Farmersville, and with a curve to the northwest re-enters this town. With a curve to the southwest it again leaves Freedom near the southwest corner. The Tonawanda & Cuba railroad (narrow gauge) was discontinued from Sandusky to Cuba on October 15, 1886. In January, 1892, the name of the road was changed and has since been known as the Attica & Freedom railroad. Its southern terminus is Sandusky.

In harmony with their New England ideas the pioneers were active and energetic in providing for the education of their children. The first school commissioners of the town, Enoch Howlet, Charles Beebe, and Nathan Cole, established two school districts in September after their election in March, 1821. In 1825 the population of the town was 935 and it then contained four whole and three fractional school districts, and $73.57 was expended for school purposes. In 1890 the town had a population of 1,251, and is divided into eleven school districts with eleven school houses and maintained a school in all of them. The school property was valued at $4,225. The assessed valuation of the districts is $671,392. Twelve teachers were employed for the legal term and 253 children attended school. The amount of public money received from the State was $1,389.18; raised by local tax $1,157.80.

Sandusky is a post village situated north of the center of the town on Clear creek and on the Attica & Freedom (narrow gauge) railroad; the village also has stage communication with Freedom station. The village contains three churches, a district graded school house, three general stores, one hotel, a harness shop, an undertaking establishment, two meat markets, two blacksmith shops, a wagon shop, two saw-mills and a grist-mill, a cheese factory, a woolen-mill, and 325 inhabitants. Situated on Main street, which runs about north and south, is a pleasant public park or common, prized as the bequest of the late David Wild. The park was used in the old training days for military parades, for public meetings, and for a play-ground. The plat is a part of lot 38, township six, in the third range, and is bounded as follows: "Beginning at an iron in the center of the State road, at the northwest corner of the Beebe block lot, and runs thence N. 15° 50' W. along the center of said State road 638 feet 9 inches; thence N. 88° 3' E. 108 feet; thence S. 13° 30' E. 497 feet; thence N. 73° 30' E. 66 feet 4 inches; thence S. 9° 10' E. 56 feet; thence S. 16° 10' E. 36½ feet; thence S. 69½° W. 24½ feet; thence S. 15° E. 25 feet 3 inches; thence S. 74° 10' W. along the said Beebe block lot 119 feet 9 inches, to the place of beginning, containing one and one-half acres of land." Although many of the inhabitants of Sandusky never knew Mr. Wild, yet his memory is revered by them and his bequest is held as a sacred trust.

Freedom is a station on the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad, in the east part of the town, and contains a postoffice, one store, a church edifice, and about a dozen dwellings.

Elton is a hamlet in the southwest corner of Freedom and a station on the Buffalo, Rochester, & Pittsburg railroad, and has a postoffice, two church edifices, a school house, two stores, a saw-mill, a feed store, a cheese factory, two blacksmith shops, and about seventy-five inhabitants.

The Arcade signal service station is located in the northern part of Freedom, on the slope of a hill on the south side of the valley of Clear creek, between Sandusky and Arcade. This station was established in April, 1890, and has an elevation of 100 feet above the valley and 1,557 feet above tide-water. It is situated on the farm of James D. Tate, who was appointed observer at the time it was established.

May 19, 1830, Josiah Cheney purchased of David Wild the site where Josiah Mead had a few years before built a carding and cloth-dressing mill, and where the Hayden woolen-mills have since been built. Mr. Cheney continued the business of wool-carding and cloth-dressing until 1836, when he sold to a Mr. Waldo. In 1842 the property was owned by Guy C. Mead, who sold it to Harvey Lanckton in 1844. The latter conveyed it to Albert Lanckton in 1847, who conducted the business until 1850 and sold to Martin Hayden, who continued until 1869, when he began the manufacture of yarn. In 1871 he made stocking yarn and flannels for market. In 1868 the firm of M. & T. Hayden was formed and continued until the death of Martin Hayden in 1883. Since then Theodore Hayden has been the sole proprietor. The business has steadily increased. These mills consume 30,000 pounds of wool annually and turn out 30,000 yards of flannel, 5,000 pounds of yarn, and 22,000 shirts. They are run by water-power and employ 15 or 20 operatives.

E. D. Austin's grist-mill in Sandusky is erected on the site of a mill built in 1822 by Elihu Cruttenden. The property has had several proprietors. About 1856 it was owned by David H. Wood, who in 1859 rebuilt the mill and in 1861 the first dam, which had been washed away. Mr. Wood sold to George Wood, who sold out to Thomas Dorman. In March, 1885, E. D. Austin purchased the property, which he has improved by putting in elevators and other new machinery. The motive power is water; the mill contains two runs of stone, one for making flour and the other for grinding provender, and has a capacity of 300 bushels of wheat and 500 bushels of feed per day.

Arthur T. & George C. Norton's saw-mills in Sandusky on Clear creek, which furnishes the motive power, were rebuilt by Elon A. Norton in 1866 on the site of the mill erected by Spencer Crowel about 1840. Mr. Norton designed his mill for sawing lumber only, but subsequently built an addition and he and his sons have put in a planer and other machinery. The saw-mill has a capacity of 8,000 feet of lumber per day; three hands are employed.

Lyman Richardson's saw-mill in Elton was built by him in 1843. It was washed out in 1864, but immediately rebuilt, and now has a capacity of 3,000 feet of lumber daily. In 1876 a grist-mill was added capable of grinding 100 bushels of grain per day. Both mills are operated by water-power.

The grist-mill of Fred Gates in Sandusky was built by Eber Holmes in 1845. In 1877 Mr. Gates purchased the property of Jerome Wakerly. The mill is operated by water-power and has two runs of stone.

The saw-mill of Thomas S. Sparks was erected by a Mr. Wood; the property has had several proprietors. In August, 1868, it was purchased by Mr. Sparks, who manufactured lumber and cheese boxes. In 1885 he put in steam-power as auxiliary to water-power. It has one lumber saw, one planer, and one shingle and heading machine.

Religious services were first held in Freedom in April, 1813, at the dwelling of Rufus Metcalf, and were conducted by Elder P. Root. From then until the organization of the Methodist and Baptist societies meetings were doubtless held at private houses or in barns by representatives of different denominations. About 1835 some disciples of the Mormon religion held a series of meetings in Orrin Cheney's barn and various other places which caused much excitement. When they left for Ohio they were followed by ten or fifteen families who became converts to Mormonism, some of whom afterward renounced the faith and returned. The leaders of this movement to obtain proselytes were Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Parley Pratt, and John Gould, who made their headquarters with Rufus Metcalf and Dr. Warren Coudery.

The First Baptist church of Freedom is located in Sandusky. The first covenant meeting was held at the house of Stephen Hollister on Saturday, November 4, 1820, when the following named members organized themselves as the South Branch of the First Baptist church in Concord: Deacon Colby, Samuel S. Nichols, Silas Parker, Joseph Pasco, Caleb Calkins, Stephen Hollister, E. R. Wilbur, Sardis Davis, Samuel Upham, Hurlburt Cruttenden, and Isabella Clark. At a council held at the house of Silas Parker in China, February 22, 1821, this branch became an independent church with the name of the "China Baptist church." Caleb Calkins and Deacon Colby were chosen deacons March 27, 1821. July 27, 1826, this organization was changed to the "First Baptist church in Freedom," and retained forty-four of its old members and several were granted dismission to join churches in Sardinia. The society was formed or re-organized in 1844 and contained only sixteen members with Rev. Francis Spears, pastor. That year the present house of worship was erected, of wood, at a cost of $1,100, and is now valued, including grounds, etc., at $2,500. The edifice will seat 250 people. The present number of members is about seventy, with Rev. Thomas Seyse, pastor. The Sunday school has fifty-five scholars.

The First Presbyterian church of Freedom was incorporated January 20, 1827, and became extinct after a few years of usefulness. In fact its existence is scarcely remembered at this late day.

The First Universalist church of Sandusky was organized May 24, 1845, with twenty-five members; Rev. G. S. Gowdy was the first pastor. The present house of worship was erected in 1845, at a cost of $1,500, and will seat 200 people. The society has thirty-five members and is without a pastor.

The First Methodist Episcopal church at Sandusky was re-organized January 12, 1846, with eleven members. In 1890 the present church edifice was erected at a cost of $1,635. The church property is now valued at $2,500. The edifice has seats for 300 people: the membership numbers twenty, with Rev. Joseph Clark, pastor. The Sunday school has an average attendance of twenty-five scholars. Before the erection of the present house of worship meetings, after the re-organization, were held in the Universalist church. Prior to that time services were held at the Fish lake settlement. Before the Mormon excitement in about 1835 this church was prosperous and strong, but the dissensions caused by the doctrines of the "Latter-day Saints" nearly extinguished its organization for a time. The society evidently had a regular existence in the early history of the town, probably before 1820, for on October 6, 1827, the Holland Land Company deeded it fifty acres of land—a part of lot 28—which was sold in 1867 for $1,200.

Salem church, near Sandusky, was organized June 30, 1850, as Calvinistic Methodist (Welsh); in September, 1892, the denomination was changed to Welsh Presbyterian. Rev. Edward Rees officiated at the organization, when the church had only ten members. Rev. John D. Jones, the first pastor, preached in the school house at the "Sand Bank" for two years, or until 1854, when the present house of worship was erected at a cost of $900, and will seat 250 people. The church property is valued at $1,500. The present number of members is fifty-six, with Rev. John Evans, pastor. The Sunday school is attended by fifty pupils under R. J. Williams as superintendent.

The Ebenezer Baptist church (Welsh), located at Freedom, was organized with twenty members by Rev. John P. Harris on March 2, 1843. Rev. Richard Morris, who was ordained March 16th of that year, was the first pastor. The first church edifice was erected in 1844. In June, 1871, the present house of worship was dedicated, the cost of the structure being $3,000; the seating capacity is 350 people. Deacon John Lewis donated the lot upon which it stands. The present number of members is 165 with Rev. Joseph M. Lloyd, pastor, who is also superintendent of the Sunday school, having 100 scholars.

The Freewill Baptist church of Elton was organized on May 29, 1837, by Rev. A. H. Andrus, the first pastor, with forty-six members. The first house of worship, a wooden structure, was built the same year. In 1873 the present church edifice, also a wooden building, was erected at a cost of about $2,000, and with the grounds, etc., is now valued at $1,800. The church has sixty-three members with Rev. A. P. Markham, pastor. The building will seat 250 people. The Sunday school has seventy-two scholars.

The Free Methodist church at Elton was organized in 1880 by Rev. Mr. Burgess. Rev. C. C. Egleston was the first pastor. The present church edifice was erected, of wood, in 1881, has a seating capacity of 225, and cost $1,200. The present number of members is twenty-eight with Rev. N. B. Martin, pastor. The church property is worth $2,000. The Sunday school is attended by twenty scholars with C. E. Leonard, superintendent.

In 1840 a number of families in Freedom and Lyndon organized a religious society called the Associate Reformed church, with Rev. William Howden as the first minister. Meetings were held principally in school houses. The name was changed about 1858 to the United Presbyterian church of Freedom and Lyndon; no edifice has ever been erected.

Sandusky Union, No. 95, E. A. U., was organized May 20, 1880, with fifteen members. The first officers were B. B. Grover, chancellor; E. Shuart, advocate; B. B. Holmes, president; Sarah C. Norton, secretary.

Freedom Lodge, No. 127, A. O. U. W., was organized January 25, 1878, by James D. McVey with twenty-five charter members. The first officers were Harrison Cheney, P. M. W.; J. D. Colburn, M. W.; R. O. Jones, F.; M. D. Scobey, O.; B. B. Lewis, R.; E. W. Earl, financier; P. E. Merrill, receiver. The present membership is thirty-eight.

Sandusky Council, No. 103, R. T. of T., was organized in 1879 with fifteen members, the first officers being Harrison Cheney, C. C.; M. C. Freeman, secretary.

David Austin came from Taunton, Mass., in 1823 and settled on the farm now owned by Alonzo Wyman. He was a shoemaker and a farmer. David Austin, Jr., who came to Freedom with his parents, married Matilda, daughter of Elihu Daggett, who came from North Attleboro, Mass., in 1811, and settled on the farm now owned by David James. Mr. and Mrs. Austin had eleven children, of whom six are living: Melvin J., Caroline (Mrs. Andrew Jackson), Almira (Mrs. Sylvester Jackson), Elroy D., Louisa (Mrs. Lysander Baldwin), and Edgar Austin. Elroy D. Austin, born in Arcade, N. Y., Feb. 7, 1836, was a farmer until 1885, when he purchased the grist-mill at Sandusky which he still owns. He married Janette, a daughter of Stephen Findlay, who came from Scotland in 1833. Children: Sarah (Mrs. George Norton), Arthur E., Elizabeth (Mrs. John E. Peck), William F., and Burton.

Charles Beebe, from Vermont, came to Arcade with his family about 1815, making the journey with an ox-team. In 1818 he moved to Freedom and settled on the farm now owned by his youngest son, Wellington, who resides at Aurora. Mr. Beebe had eleven children. Charles Beebe, Jr., born in Arcade, was one year old when his parents came to Freedom. He married Harriet Mead; children: Marion (Mrs. C. S. Pinney), Frank, Verlette C., Ella, Earl, and Mabel (Mrs. Elmer Gould). Frank Beebe was born in Freedom, and for his first wife married Mary, daughter of Joshua Edwards; children: Lura and Alice. He married, second, Alida A., daughter of Albert and Melvina Dawley, and they have one daughter, Emma.

Frederick Beekman, a Revolutionary soldier and a man of Dutch descent, came to this town in 1820, where he died at the age of 109 years, 6 months, and 5 days. His wife Susan died two years prior aged 105 years, 8 months, and 8 days. Their son Christopher came with them and spent most of his life here. Of Frederick Beekman many interesting stories are related. He was thoroughly imbued with the spirit of '76, and early on Fourth of July mornings, with his old "howling-piece" on his shoulder, he would sally forth and rouse his neighbors with a grand salute, following it with a "Hurrah for Washington, Gates, Putnam, and Lee, und all der brave men who fought for libertee!" He was patriotic and became a sage for Dutch wit and repartee.

Barnes Bixby came from New Hampshire in 1817 and settled on the farm now owned by David R. Phillips, where he encountered all the hardships of a pioneer. He married Hannah Bixby; children: Daniel, William, Ann, and Lucy. Daniel Bixby, born in 1816, was not quite one year old when the family came to Freedom; he was a farmer, and married Vastia Root. Children: Anson E. and Anna J. (Mrs. A. Woodley). Anson E. Bixby, a farmer, married Margaret Woodley; children: David E., Harry J., and Carl A.

The Cheney family is an early and reputable one in New England, and is of English descent. As early as 1680 the Cheney family were residents of Roxbury (Boston Highlands), Mass. Subsequently some of them settled in New Hampshire, and their descendants are among the prominent people of that State. Josiah Cheney, son of Ebenezer, came from Chesterfield, N. H., to Livingston county, N. Y., in 1820. In 1823 he removed to Freedom, where he built the first woolen-mill in the town in 1824 and operated it until 1836, when he engaged in farming, and continued in this vocation the remainder of his life. He died in October, 1865. He was a member of the militia and held town offices. Mr. Cheney married Harriet, daughter of Lyman Scott, of Chesterfield, N. H. Their children were Harriet (Mrs. Myron Holmes), deceased; George, deceased; Jane (Mrs. Darius Beebe), deceased; Harrison; Wallace, of Java, N. Y.; Walter L.; and Wellington M., a physician of Dansville, N. Y.

Lt.-Col. Harrison Cheney was born in Freedom, Jan. 3, 1830. After receiving his education in common schools and in Arcade Seminary he taught nine winter terms of district school and labored on his father's farm in summer. But this quiet farmer's life was not to continue. At the breaking out of the Civil war he was too true a patriot not to be aroused to action, and in Aug, 1862, he recruited every man of Co. D, 154th N. Y. Vols., and had more applicants than he could receive. It is said that "he was the only man who recruited, personally, every man of a company in this State." He was commissioned captain of the company at its organization. He was engaged at the battle of Chancellorsville and was captured by the enemy at Gettysburg. On the ninth day after his capture, while marching under guard through a piece of woods near Martinsburg, he broke from the ranks and ran, was hotly pursued into the woods, but escaped, and was a fugitive for twenty-two days before he reached the Union army. Captain Cheney was promoted major in Feb., 1865, and lieutenant-colonel in March, 1865, and was mustered out at the close of the war in June, 1865. Colonel Cheney married, first, Mary J., daughter of Harvey Foote, of Deerfield, N. Y. Mrs. Cheney died in 1891. Their children were Ella M. (Mrs. Cassius C. Wood), Mary E. (Mrs. Walter L. Knight), and Harry F. He married, second, Frances D. James, of Freedom.

Colonel Cheney has been prominent in his town and his district, which he represented in the Assembly in 1876 and 1888. How well he performed his duties can best be told by quoting from the "Review of the Assembly." He is spoken of among the most earnest working members, and "as a man of tone and character he had no superior. Far above the wily machinations of bad men, he had the interests of the people at heart, ever watching and working for sound legislation and good government. With this class of men in our legislative halls we should soon feel a welcome relief from the sad depression into which incompetent and dishonest men have plunged us; and we could once more enjoy the privileges and blessings of an honest prosperity." Colonel Cheney made agriculture his vocation after the war, and since 1881, with the exception of three years, he has held the position of railway mail clerk. Courteous, affable, kind-hearted, and dominated by strong Christian principles, he has ever been a popular citizen and official, and holds a high place in the regards of his numerous friends. He rightly stands among the representative men of Cattaraugus county, and in the written words of Dr. Van Aernam to him: "You helped in clearing the forests of Cattaraugus, helped in opening up its roads, aided in establishing its schools and churches, aided in crushing out the Rebellion, and I think it is due to yourself and your special friends as well as the public that your memory should be perpetuated in its history."

Walter L. Cheney was born in Freedom and has always been a farmer. He married, first, Frances, daughter of Charles Beebe, Sr., and had one son, Willie T., of Pike, N. Y. After her death he married Jane, widow of Capt. Alfred H. Lewis, by whom he has two children, Hattie E. and John W.

William Crossman and two brothers came from England to Connecticut at an early day and subsequently settled in the town of Williamsport, Pa. He married Sally Workman and just before the War of 1812 removed to Pavilion, N. Y., where he died. Amos Crossman, his son, was born in 1788, married Alice Stoddard, and in Nov., 1828, came to Freedom, where he bought 244 acres of land, on which there was a log house. He died in 1870 and his wife in 1868. Of their seven children six are living: Joel, Lurena (Mrs. Lyman Richardson), Amos, Oren, Alice L., and Omar. Amos Crossman married Olive E. Wait and has two children: Homer S. and Lettie A. (Mrs. A. B. Childs). He lives in Cadiz in the town of Franklinville. Omar Crossman was supervisor of Freedom in 1880 and 1881.

Elbert Cummings, son of Luther, who came from Herkimer county to Yorkshire and soon afterward settled in Freedom, was born on the farm where he now lives Oct. 5, 1844. In 1877 he started a market garden and now has a little more than thirty acres annually in garden truck. He married Cora, daughter of Gardner Sheldon; children: Nat. G., Della A., and Howard L.

William Edwards, son of Thomas, was born in Wales, emigrated to America in 1855, and resided at Centerville, where he followed farming until 1867. He then removed to Sandusky and was a merchant's clerk until 1878, when he opened a general store. He married Sarah A. Evans; children: Stephen A., George F., Cary T., and Lois M. Stephen A. is engaged in the insurance business at Sandusky. He married Mallie E., daughter of Miles and Amanda Lewis, and has one daughter, M. Eleanor.

Edward Gibbin was born in Wales and came to America in 1851, locating in Farmersville. He married Phebe Williams; children: Hattie (Mrs. R. G. Lewis), Sarah (Mrs. Jesse Brown), Ann (Mrs. Byron Leonard), James, Phebe, William, and Mattie (Mrs. William Brown).

Sylvester Haskell, son of Daniel and Mary (Rich) Haskell, was born March 7, 1816. He learned the tailor's trade, which he followed in Youngstown, Niagara county, and in 1843 came to Freedom and engaged in farming. With the exception of one year he has since lived in this town. In 1862 he purchased of Abram Van Deusen the farm on which he now resides. He married Julia A., daughter of John Crandall; children: Eugene (deceased), John T., George W., Calvin, and Dwight W. George W. Haskell was born in Holland, Erie county, June 2, 1843, and in 1864 enlisted in Co. C, 13th N. Y. H. A., serving until the close of the war. He returned to Freedom and engaged in farming, and in 1889 purchased the hardware store in Sandusky of E. J. Cheney, which he sold in 1890 to H. M. White. Mr. Haskell married Hettie, daughter of Sampson W. Owens; children: John W., Alfred E., and Sherman S. Calvin Haskell, born in Holland, N. Y., Feb. 28, 1847, lived on the farm with his father until 1879, when he opened a livery and carried the mail from Freedom to Arcade, continuing until the Tonawanda Valley & Cuba railroad was completed. In April, 1886, he disposed of his livery business and became a conductor on this railroad, which position he still holds. He married Rose, daughter of John C. Law; children: Nettie J. and Eugene.

Eber Holmes, from York, Livingston county, came to Freedom in 1827. He was a man of great energy and enterprise, and soon after he settled here he built a grist-mill on the site of Fred Gales's mill in Sandusky; about the same time he built a saw-mill on what is known as the John Law estate. Subsequently he opened a general store at Sandusky, built an ashery, bought the farmers' ashes, and made potash. Mr. Holmes was a very popular man and served as supervisor ten years. Myron Holmes was supervisor in 1847.

Enoch Howlet located in Freedom in 1810, settling finally where a son now lives. Coming from Bradford, N. H., he returned to that place almost immediately, but came hence and made a permanent settlement in 1812, remaining until his death in 1856. He was a prominent man and highly respected, and at the first town meeting was vested with four local offices. On the farm now owned by G. A. Waterman he erected the first saw-mill in the town, kept also the first store and inn, and in 1831 was appointed the second postmaster, which office he held at the time of his death. He was also supervisor and justice of the peace. His first wife was Susan Metcalf, who bore him five children; his second marriage was with Sally Coudery, by whom he had three children.

William Jackson, son of John, was born in Essex county, N. Y., Jan. 25, 1810. His parents moved to Columbia, Herkimer county, in 1811, and to Cattaraugus county in 1833, settling first in Machias. He purchased the farm where he now lives and moved onto it in 1841. He married Elizabeth Cornes; children: Rev. Benjamin F., Dr. William H., Elizabeth (Mrs. J. Henry Shal-lies), Delphia B. (Mrs. Daniel H. McMillan), and Charles E.

Levi Jones, from Greenwich, Mass., came to Freedom in 1824 and made the first settlement on the farm now owned by David Cramer. He married Rachel, daughter of Elisha Newcomb, of Massachusetts; children: Josiah, Elisha, Levi, Elizabeth, William, Elbert, George, Selina, Marshall, and David. Levi Jones, Jr., born in Massachusetts, was nine years old when his parents came to Freedom. He was a cooper and a mason, trades which he followed several years. He married Sophronia, daughter of William Hatfield; children: Horace W., Elisha, Parley C., W. Henry, Elliott, Fayette, Mamie, Adelbert, Mary, Runy, and Luther. Since Mr. Jones has lived in the town he has assisted in killing several bears, one panther, and many deer. W. Henry Jones was born in Freedom and has conducted a meat market for several years. He married Mary-Harper; children: Mildred, Isadore, Myrtie, and Florence.

Morris M., Jones, a native of Wales, emigrated to America in 1827 and first settled in Oneida county. Mr. Jones removed to Freedom in 1854, where he is a farmer. He married Elizabeth Richards, of Wales, who was the mother of his children Mary (deceased), Thomas, Richard, and Catherine (Mrs. Millard Ellithorpe). Mrs. Jones died and he married, second, Ann Jones, by whom he has a daughter, Jennie, wife of Bishop Lincoln, of Yorkshire.

Daniel Lammie was a prominent factor in the town's prosperity. He was its supervisor in 1851, 1852, 1857, and 1863-66, in all seven terms, and served during the war period with signal ability. John Lammie held the same office five years from 1875 to 1879.

William Law, a native of England, deserted the British army in the War of 1812 and settled in Washington county. He married Fanny, daughter of John Congdon, and both families came to Freedom in 1825. His children were Eliphalet, John C., and Mary A. John C. Law was born in Washington county about 1821 and married Emeline, daughter of Lemuel Rounds. In 1864 he moved to Sandusky, where he died July 22, 1892. His widow and children survive him. Children: Denis, Rose (Mrs. C. Haskell), Cora (Mrs. B. B. Lewis), and Ada (Mrs. George Davis).

Harvey Lanckton, son of Seth and a native of Massachusetts, born Nov. 11, 1797, settled in Freedom in 1842, and purchased the wool-carding and cloth-dressing-mill of Josiah Cheney and Guy C. Mead on the present site of the Hayden woolen-mills at Sandusky. He had previously lived in Holland, where he built a saw-mill and woolen-mill, and in Hurdsville, where he had conducted similar business. After a few years in Sandusky he sold to his son Albert, who transferred the property to Hayden. Harvey Lanckton purchased a saw-mill of Elias Wood, rebuilt it, and with it built a furniture and undertaker's shop. He constructed the hearse that he used, which was the first one in the town, and continued the furniture and undertaking business till his death in 1870. Mr. Lanckton married Eunice Chapin. Children: Albert, Ann C. (Mrs. George Cheney), deceased, Rosetta (deceased), William Mearns, Emeline and Elvira (deceased), Millard F., Maynard W., and Harriet (Mrs. L. H. Ferrand). Mr. Lanckton was succeeded in business by his sons Millard F. and Maynard W., who continued together until 1878, when Maynard W. retired and is a merchant at Delevan. M. F. continues alone.

Laban Lewis, son of Reuben and Mary Lewis, was born in Chesterfield, N. H., Sept. 17, 1787. In 1810 he married Sarah Tarbell, of Groton, Mass., who was born Jan. 1, 1793, and by her he had fifteen children, of whom only William F., of Arcade, N. Y., was born in Freedom. Laban Lewis was a soldier in the War of 1812. He came to Freedom from Sherborn, Mass., in 1832, and settled in the east part of the town. Mr. Lewis died Nov. 26, 1861; Mrs. Lewis survives him at the age of ninety-eight years and receives a widow's pension. She resides with her daughter Calista M. (Mrs. Barnard Wilder) in Armada, Mich.

Jerome B. Lewis was the second son of Nathan and Sally Lewis, was born on the 10th of October, 1830, in the town of Penfield, Monroe county, N. Y., and at the age of three years moved west with the family and settled in Rushford, Allegany county. He married in December, 1852, at Freedom, Mary E., daughter of John B. and Gertrude M. Van Dusen, who came west from Otsego county and settled in the town in 1835. In the spring of 1853 he moved onto a farm of 157 acres situated about one and one-half miles east of Sandusky village, which he had bought the year before, and which he still owns. Remaining there until the fall of 1855 he rented the farm and moved with his family to East Rushford, Allegany county, to operate a saw-mill. As a result of their marriage two daughters and one son were born to them: Lillian, Burton B., and Iva. In the fall of 1858 he removed to his farm in Freedom, remaining there until the spring of 1862, when he moved to Sandusky to engage in the saw-mill and cheese-box business with William V. Smith and John L. Wilder, running the mill which is at present owned and operated by Thomas S. Sparks. In the spring of 1866 he, in company with John L. Wilder, built at Sandusky the first cheese factory erected in the town, and at present is operating ten factories.

Burton B. Lewis, born at East Rushford, Allegany county, Sept. 3, 1856, was educated in the common schools of Sandusky, at Ten Broeck Free Academy in Franklinville in 1872, at Arcade Academy in 1873, and at Bryant & Stratton's Commercial College at Buffalo during the fall and winter of 1876-77. He worked at cheese making from 1870 to 1876, attending school during the fall and winter of each year, and is now engaged with his father in the manufacture of cheese as cashier and book-keeper of the Sandusky Combination Cheese Factories. He was married to Miss Cora V. Law, daughter of John C. and Emeline Law, of Sandusky, Sept. 24, 1878, and has a family of six daughters: Leah, Lora, Ruth, Mary, Genevieve, and Margary. In politics Mr. Lewis has always been a staunch Republican. He was elected to the office of town clerk of Freedom in 1878, 1879, 1880, and 1881, and was supervisor in 1882 to 1889 inclusive and again in 1892-93. He was a member of the County Committee in 1884 and 1889, was nominated by his party to the office of member of Assembly in 1889 and elected over E. B. Jewell, Esq. (Democrat) and Paul B. Griffin (Prohibitionist) by a plurality of 457, and was again re-nominated in 1890 and elected over Charles W. Phillips (Democrat) and H. B. Morgan (Prohibitionist) by a plurality of 563. Mr. Lewis is quite largely interested in real estate operations in Buffalo, and is an estimable citizen enjoying great personal popularity.

Capt. Alfred H. Lewis was born in Perrington, N. Y., and came to Freedom with his parents. He enlisted in 1861 in Co. D, 64th N. Y. Vols., was engaged in seventeen battles, and for meritorious service was promoted to sergeant, to lieutenant, and to captain, and was killed at the battle of Gettysburg. He married Jane, daughter of Sampson Owens, who came from Wales in 1838; they have one daughter, Kittie (Mrs. Hugh W. Davis,) of Salamanca.

Griffith Lewis, a native of Wales, came to America in 1844 and to Freedom in 1849. He married Ann, daughter of Thomas Williams, of Remsen, Oneida county; children: Thomas P., Richard G. (proprietor of the hotel at Sandusky), John G., and William G.

Perry E. Merrill, son of Smith and Melinda Merrill, was born in Freedom, June 30, 1845, was educated in the common schools and in Rushford Academy, and in 1870 entered the office of W. A. Day, of Franklinville, as a student of dentistry. After learning the profession he entered into partnership with Mr. Day, and in April, 1872, opened an office at Yorkshire Center, continuing there until 1873, when he came to Sandusky, but still continues the Yorkshire office. In May, 1877, he opened a drug store. Mr. Merrill in 1878 was elected justice of the peace, and after serving nearly four years was appointed notary public. He was appointed postmaster under President Harrison and is the present incumbent. Jan. 10, 1877, he married Mary I., daughter of Sereno and Lucinda Loomis, of Arcade; children: Eugene L. and Floyd S.

Rufus Metcalf, a simultaneous settler with Earl Sawyer and Jonas C. Irish in 1811, and whose brother Gregory located in the southeast part of the town in 1812, became somewhat famous during the Mormon meetings of 1835, for it was at his house that the leaders made at times their headquarters and early converted him and his family to Mormonism. Mr. Metcalf followed them to Ohio. He was one of the first cheese manufacturers and his son Rufus was the first white child born in Freedom, his birth occurring Dec. 24, 1812.

Evan Morgan was born in Wales, where he married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Griffith. He came to America in 1830 with his wife and six children and settled in Oneida county; in 1850 he removed to Freedom, where he engaged in farming. Children: Thomas, John, Jane, Evan, Margaret, Joel, and Isaac. Isaac married Martha, daughter of John Hooper, and is a farmer; children: John, Richard, Thomas, Charles, and Albert.

Samuel Norton came from Barnston, P. Q., in 1838, and by trade was a millwright. He married Orphia Heath; children: Hiram, Harriet, Olive, Sally A., Amanda, Elon Alonzo, Melvina, Samuel, Clarissa, and Mary. Elon Alonzo Norton married Sarah, daughter of Elias Wood, and they have two sons and two daughters. The sons, Arthur M. and George C., are the proprietors of the Norton lumber mills at Sandusky. Arthur M. Norton was born in Farmersville, where he resided until his parents returned to Freedom in 1856. In April, 1865, he enlisted in Co. G, 81st N. Y. Vols., and served until the close of the war.

John Peet, a native of England, came to America and located first in Oneida county. In 1837 he moved with his family to Freedom and settled on the farm now owned by J. J. Davis. He married Mary Davis. Five children survive them both, viz.: Evan, George, William, David, and John. John Peet was born in Oneida county March 24, 1833. He is a farmer and has served several years as assessor of Freedom. He married Sarah, daughter of Thomas W. Owens; children: Martha (Mrs. Melvin Leonard), Mary (Mrs. John L. Gibbs), Arthur O., John E., Eva S., and Fannie.

Col. Earl Sawyer, with Jonas C. Irish and Rufus Metcalf, became a settler in 1811, coming here from Vermont. In 1822 he erected the first frame dwelling, was the first town clerk and an early justice of the peace, and was one of the first to introduce improved farming implements. In other ways he was first and foremost. J. W. Sawyer was supervisor of Freedom in 1867.

Nelson Shallies, son of Joseph, came to Freedom from Woodstock, Vt., about 1840. He was first a blacksmith here and then a farmer, and married Ellen Cheney; children: Emily (Mrs. J. Vallance), Elbert C., Edgar M., Ella (Mrs. A. Carter), and J. Henry. J. Henry Shallies was born near Freedom, was educated at Arcade and Ten Broeck Academies, and has followed civil engineering and school teaching. He was elected in 1878 to the position of school commissioner for a term of three years and re-elected for another term in 1881, and was supervisor of Freedom in 1890 and 1891. He married Libbie, daughter of William Jackson; children: L. Ethel and Eleanor B.

Ezra B. Strong, a native of Vermont, came from Monroe county to Farmersville in 1832, settling on the farm now owned by Mrs. Bradford Jones. He married Eleanor, daughter of Matthias Lane. Eleven children were born to them, of whom eight are now living, viz.: William, Sally (widow of Henry Chaffee), Josephine (Mrs. Danforth Shattuck), Reuben, Joseph (captain in the 28th Iowa Inf.), Walter, Lucy (Mrs. Hellman), and Jacob L. Jacob L. Strong, born in Monroe county, came to Cattaraugus county in 1832, is a farmer, and married Phebe Louise, daughter of James Phelps; children: Osee James, William W., Eugene H., Jacob L., Phelps G., Ezra B., and Mary L., all of whom reside in Freedom. Mr. Strong and his six sons all vote in the same election district. He has been a deacon of the Baptist church over 30 years.

Francis White, a descendant of Rev. John White, who came from England to America in 1635 and settled in Cambridge, Mass., was born in Connecticut, came to the Mohawk valley and thence to Springville, N. Y., in 1809, and was one of the first school teachers in the county. He also taught singing school and frequently took his pay in wheat. In 1844 he moved to Yorkshire and engaged in farming, which he followed until his death in 1876. He married Emma, daughter of Jacob Rushmore, of Springville; children: Roderick (at one time State senator), Justice, Francis, Jacob, and Isaac. Isaac White was born in Springville, was educated at Springville Academy and subsequently taught school, and about 1830 went to Scotland, Canada, to teach, being also engaged in the mercantile trade. He married Anna, daughter of Chauncey Smith, of Burford, Canada, and was a farmer at the breaking out of the Patriot war in 1836. Taking sides with the Patriots he had to flee the country; the Tories made a vain attempt to capture him, but he escaped to Buffalo at night in a wagon secreted under some household goods which he saved. He settled in Arcade and engaged in the manufacture of woollen goods. In 1844 he removed to Yorkshire, where he died in 1887. Children: Lucinda (Mrs. C. J. Phelps), James, and Marana (Mrs. William Cunningham), who reside in Boston, Canada; Hiram M.; Chauncey J., of Arcade; and Elouise (Mrs. E. J. Runyon), of Yorkshire. Hiram M. White, born July 4, 1845, was educated in the common schools, and in 1863 went to the Pennsylvania oil fields, where he worked five years. He then came to Arcade, where he learned the tinner's trade, which he has since followed. In 1890 he came to Sandusky and purchased the store of G. W. Haskell. He married Kate E. Conroy (deceased), who bore him one son, Charles F. He married, second, Lottie B. Thompsett.

William E. Williams, born in Wales, emigrated to America about 1833, and was a farmer at Trenton, Oneida county, until 1847, when he removed with his family to Freedom. Mr. Williams married Margaret Lewis and six children survive them: Laura (widow of John Higgins), Ann (Mrs. David D. Davis), Samuel W., William W., John W., and Ellen (Mrs. Romaine Benjamin). John W. Williams was born in Trenton, N. Y., came to Freedom with his parents, and was engaged in farming until 1877. In 1882, in company with H. H. Owens, he purchased the store at Freedom, where Mr. Williams was appointed postmaster in 1883, being the present incumbent.

John Worthington, who settled in Freedom in 1818, had eight children, of whom Thaddeus, a farmer, was born in Waterloo, N. Y., was one of the first members of the M. E. church of Sandusky, and had ten children. His son John, a native of Freedom, being born here June 9, 1834, has been most of his life a farmer and a prominent man in his community.

CHAPTER XXX.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF GREAT VALLEY.

GREAT VALLEY was erected into a township from the town of Olean on the 15th of April, 1818, and then comprised what are now the towns of Great Valley, Allegany, Humphrey, and Carrolton, and a part of the Allegany Indian reservation. The towns of Allegany and Humphrey were set off under the name of Burton on April 18, 1831, and Carrolton was formed on March 9, 1842. In 1847 a portion of the Indian reservation was taken off, leaving Great Valley with its present area of nine miles north and south and six miles east and west. It includes the whole of town three and the north half of town two of the fourth range of the Holland survey, comprising 33,715 acres of assessed land: It is bounded on the north by Ellicottville, on the east by Humphrey and Allegany, on the south by Carrolton, and on the west by Salamanca and Little Valley.

An interior town lying a little south of the center of the county its surface in many parts is uneven and hilly, yet the hills, except in a few sections, are susceptible of cultivation and possess a fertile soil and good water. The highest summit is near the southwest corner and is about 1,300 feet above the bed of the Allegheny river. The township is drained by Great Valley creek, which enters this town from Ellicottville, between lots 29 and 42, and flowing southerly and southwesterly through the villages of Great Valley and Peth empties into the Allegheny near the southwest corner of the town, through which the latter flows northwesterly. Both these streams have several tributaries, the largest being Wright's creek, which enters the center of the east boundary line from Humphrey and flows west into Great Valley creek some three miles below Great Valley village. Into Wright's creek flows Willoughby creek from the south and several other streams between that one and its mouth. Along Great Valley creek is a broad and fertile valley, thickly settled and picturesque, from which the township derives its name. This is traversed its entire length in this town by the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad, which has stations at Great Valley and S. & B. Junction. For a half-mile on either side of the Allegheny river, in the southwest corner of the town, lies a portion of the Indian reservation.

The soil in the valleys is a gravelly loam and on the uplands a clay admixed with disintegrated slate and shale. Most of it, however, is susceptible of high cultivation and produces excellent crops. A considerable portion was originally covered with a dense growth of pine timber, which has nearly all succumbed to the woodman's axe and is succeeded by well-cultivated farms. In the early settlement of the town the principal occupation of the people was lumbering. At the present time farming is the leading industry, with dairying the chief branch, though fruit and stock raising are carried on quite extensively.

The first permanent settlement in the town was made by James Green at Kill Buck in 1812. Green was from New Hampshire and located first at "Olean Point." He erected at Kill Buck in 1812 the first saw-mill and opened in 1813 the first tavern in Great Valley. He also put in operation the first grist-mill in 1816, which was used until 1888. He finally moved to a point on the Ohio river, where he died. Among the early settlers were Daniel McKay, Benjamin Chamberlain, Mr. Hibbard, and John Green in 1813; Laurin Norton and Lewis Worcester in 1814; Orin Pitcher, Judge Francis Green, Richard Green, Betsey Green, Daniel Farrington, Edward Bryant, Dennis Bryant, and Leonard Spaulding in 1815; Ira Norton, Col. William Baker, Nathan Howe, David Farnum, and David Gregory in 1816.

Among those who settled within the present limits of Great Valley between 1816 and 1823 were Isaac Phillips, Abram Mudgett, Charles Ward, Ebenezer Willoughby, Joseph McCulloch, Abram Wright, Richard Wright, Thomas Hewett, Jeremy Wooster, Henry Wooster, Abial Rolph, David Markham, Mr. Moody, Matthew Gibson, Benjamin Chamberlain, Sr., Lovell Gibson, Joel Fairbanks, Freeman Bryant, Benjamin Bacon, Arza Searl, Mr. Sawyer, Moses Chase, John Cronkright, Isaac Lawton, B. McCoy, and John Ellis. Andrews L. Norton is the only person living in town who was born here before 1820.

Col. William Baker settled at the mouth of Great Valley creek, where he opened a tavern, which became a popular resort for lumbermen. Marcus Leonard kept another inn on the opposite side of the creek a few years later. The Chamberlains were prominent citizens. Benjamin became county judge (see page 275) and others of the family held various positions of trust. The father, Benjamin, Sr., served as a soldier in the Revolution under the name Benjamin Chambers and was a pensioner until his death in 1855.

The town at one time or another had as citizens a number of men who attained positions of eminence in the county, State, and nation, and who are noticed in other pages of this volume. Francis Green became associate judge of Cattaraugus county in 1817 and James Green in 1821. Jeremy Wooster was the first surrogate of the county in 1817, holding the office in all four terms by appointment. Henry Wooster and Benjamin Chamberlain were sheriffs and Nelson I. Norton served as member of Congress one full term. Arunah Ward was county coroner one term, superintendent of the poor nine years, and surrogate one term. Five ministers of the gospel have gone forth from Great Valley to preach. A. A. Gregory was sheriff and member of Assembly, and Wesley Flint went to China as consul. Chauncey J. Fox was successively a member of both branches of the State Legislature.

The first white child born in the town of Great Valley was Ira Green in 1813 and the first death was that of Mrs. Hibbard the same year. The first sudden death was that of a Mr. Moody in 1818, he being instantly killed by lightning during a thunder storm while sitting in the door of his house on the Otis Rhoades farm. His little girl, whom he was holding in his arms, escaped injury. The first school was taught at the house of James Green in the winter of 1817-18 by Joel Fairbanks; the first school house was built at Peth in 1820. James Green kept the first hotel at Kill Buck in 1813; he erected the first saw-mill in 1812 and the first grist-mill in 1816, both at or near Peth on Great Valley creek. Lewis Wooster opened the first store in 1815. The first religious services in town were held by Rev. John Spencer, a Congregational minister, at the house of Orin Pitcher in 1815, a church being organized the same year with eight members. The first woolen-mill (carding machine and cloth-dressing) was established at Great Valley Center by Joseph A. Bullard and John Perkins in 1828. The first physician was Dr. James Trowbridge (see page 137). It is supposed that the first marriage occurred in 1818, the principals being Matthew Gibson and Esther Markham.

For many years the Indians had a council house on the reservation at "Horseshoe Bend," some two miles above Kill Buck on the Allegheny river, where they met periodically to worship the Great Spirit and hold other Indian ceremonies. On the present site of the hamlet of Kill Buck there formerly existed an Indian village, in the midst of which lived the chief, from one of whom, Daniel Kill Buck, the place received its name.

One of the first public highways in the town was the stage road from Buffalo to Olean. This passed down the valley along Great Valley creek to the postoffice of Peth and thence turned east, following the valley of Wright's creek to Chappellsburg and thence to Olean. Another road was crudely opened along the north bank of the Allegheny at an early day, and this was superseded by a State road authorized by the Legislature in 1841 and constructed soon afterward. When the Erie railroad was completed in 1852 a plank road from Ellicottville to the Allegheny river was built and used for a few years, but was finally abandoned, as it failed to pay the expense of repairs, etc. The New York, Lake Erie & Western railroad passes through the southeast corner of the town and has a station, Kill Buck, at the mouth of Great Valley creek. The Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad follows the valley of Great Valley creek from a short distance above Kill Buck, north, and has two stations in this town, S. & B. Junction and Great Valley.

By some fatality the early records of the town are lost and consequently it is impossible to give the proceedings of the first town meeting. The first supervisor, elected in 1818, was James Green; the others have been as follows:

Supervisors.—James Green, 1818-19; Henry Wooster, 1820-23, 1827; Charles Ward, 1824-26; Francis Green, 1828, 1838, 1840, 1842; Seth Cole, 1829, 1831; Richard Wright, 1830; John Green, 1832; Benjamin Chamberlain, 1833-35, 1841; Alonzo Hawley, 1836-37, 1839; Horace Howe, 1843; William Cross, 1844, 1857-60; David Chamberlain, 1845-48; Eli Ellsworth, 1849; Alexander Chambers, 1850; Daniel Furrington, 1851-52; Francis E. Baillet, 1853-55; James Nelson, 1856; Charles Burnside, 1861-62; A. L. Norton, 1863-64; Bethuel McCoy, 1865; Morgan Thorp, 1866-71, 1874; Myron W. Hicks, 1872-73, 1875, 1883; J. Edward Bemis, 1876; Michael H. Cullinan, 1877-78; Wilson N. Howe, 1879-82; John E. Chase, 1884; Ephraim Fitts, 1885; Frank Snow, 1886-91; William S. Morton, 1892-93.

Joel Fairbanks is credited with being the first school teacher, in 1817, within the limits of Great Valley. From school rooms in private dwellings and school houses of logs in early times the school system has developed into its present degree of excellence, and the town today has ten school districts with commodious and efficient buildings. In point of efficiency and value they compare favorably with those of other towns in the county. In 1820 the town had a population of 171; in 1850, 1,638; in 1880, 1,859; in 1890, 1,705.

The great natural curiosity of Great Valley is a "breathing well" on lot 11 in the eastern part of the town. In 1841 Nicholas Flint attempted to dig a well near his dwelling, and after reaching a depth of forty feet and finding no water he stoned it up and covered it over, hoping that water would come in during the wet season. But no water came. Subsequently he discovered a strong current of air pressing up through the crevices in the platform. He inserted a pump-log with a two-inch bore in the close-fitted decking. A current of air is continually blowing out of or pressing into the well with more or less force, and a whistle placed in the bore of the log is often heard half a mile away. At times the current is steady in one direction for half or even a whole day, but generally it changes frequently, serving the purpose of a barometer: blowing out indicating fair or settled weather and breathing in denoting a storm. The bottom of the well is about twenty-five feet below the bed of the creek near by. Scientists have been unable to account for this strange phenomenon.

At a very early day a terrific hurricane passed over the south part of the town, leveling the forest in its path and causing considerable destruction. From the fact that it passed up a small brook emptying into the Allegheny near Carrollton that stream has been called Windfall creek.

Evidences of an ancient race of people have been discovered within the limits of Great Valley, a notable event being the finding of several large skeletons about 1850 in the garden of Chandler Chamberlain. The bones exhumed were extremely large and were evidently those of giants.

This was originally and emphatically a lumbering town. From its first settlement to within a decade or two the manufacture of lumber was the chief industry, but upon the denudation of the hills and valleys of their primeval forests the attention of the inhabitants was directed to other channels, and today agriculture has come to the front. A few mills yet remain, the last evidences of a former period of activity. A number of cheese factories have been built as dairying developed, the first one being erected in 1858 on lot 11.

The saw-mill of C. B. Potter was built by J. W. Staunton in 1844. It is operated by water-power and cuts from 6,000 to 10,000 feet of lumber daily. Burton Curtis's lath and saw-mill, operated by water, was built in 1882 and has a capacity of 4,000 lath and 3,000 feet of lumber per day. Michael H. Cullinan has a steam saw-mill in the west part of the town in which he employs twelve men and cuts 15,000 feet of lumber daily. J. A. Cleaveland owns a steam saw and shingle-mill on Wright's creek. The original of this mill was built by Babbitt & Mason about 1872 and was owned by various persons until 1880, when it was purchased by its present proprietor, who removed and rebuilt it in 1888, the present capacity being 12,000 feet of hardwood lumber and 10,000 shingles per day. In 1885 Gould, Hale & Co. started a chair factory at Kill Buck which they operated one year, when it was sold to Ephraim Fitts, who converted it into a saw and planing-mill, the motive power being steam. Its daily capacity is 10,000 feet of lumber. Connected are three planers, a shingle machine, three lathes, one bolting machine, and a full equipment of chair-making machinery.

In 1875 Louis Torge came to Kill Buck and purchased the old brewery property. The buildings were burned in 1884 and rebuilt the same year. The plant is now operated by William W. Torge, who manufactures a large quantity of soft drink annually.

Horton A. Ostrander came to Kill Buck in 1871 to take charge of the steam saw-mill* for J. M. Bemis & Co., in which position he continued until 1875. From 1876 to 1884 the mill was burned three times. In the latter year it was purchased by Mr. Ostrander, who now employs twenty-five or thirty men. Its capacity is 30,000 feet of lumber daily. S. M. Rickards's steam saw, shingle, and planing-mill in Great Valley village was built in 1886 by H. P. Colman and Mr. Rickards, Mr. Colman retiring from the firm the same year. The capacity is 4,000 feet of lumber and 8,000 shingles per day. The Great Valley mills, owned by R. F. Gilman, consist of a grist-mill, a saw-mill, and a shingle-mill. The former was built in 1880 and burned in 1882, the present mill being erected the same year. The whole are operated by water-power and have a good equipment. The grist-mill of Gideon Searl, in the south part of the town, was built by John Ellis in 1852. It stands on the site where James Green erected the first grist-mill in town, the old building being still used by Mr. Searl for a barn. It is operated by water-power and has two runs of stone.

Almost from the first settlement of the town Great Valley has had specified burial places for her dead. Several cemeteries are appropriately chosen in various localities, among them being one at Kill Buck, another near the Humphrey line northeast of Great Valley village, still another in the Willoughby neighborhood, and a fourth, the Catholic cemetery, at Kill Buck. The Great Valley Cemetery Association was organized September 2, 1871.

Great Valley is a post village and station on the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad, and near the center of the town on Great Valley creek. It contains a church edifice, two general stores, one hotel and livery, a flouring-mill, two saw-mills, two blacksmith shops, two shingle-mills, a meat market, a cheese factory, and about 150 inhabitants. Here was located the Plank Road or Half-way House before the advent of the railroad. The postoffice was removed to this place from Peth soon after 1870, the first postmaster here being Myron W. Hicks.

Kill Buck is the oldest settlement in the town Great Valley and also the original site of quite an Indian village. It is a station on the Erie railroad two miles east of Salamanca and contains two church edifices, a post-office, two stores, saw-mill, a saw and planing-mill, bottling works, meat market, and some 200 inhabitants. The postoffice here was established about 1836. Among the earliest postmasters were Marcus Leonard and William Cross. Leonard kept the office on the west side of Great Valley creek; it was subsequently removed to the east side, where it has since been continued. Among the early merchants were Daniel and Horace Howe, Marcus Leonard, Hiram Smith, and Cross & Ellsworth. Andrew Merkt had a brewery and hotel several years and was succeeded upon his death in 1860 by Lewis P. Brewer. Both were burned in 1865. Oscar Senear and Francis Green, Jr., in 1856, built a store on the site where formerly stood the wigwam of Kill Buck, the Indian chief from whom the village received its name.

Peth is a hamlet on Great Valley creek a little below the mouth of Wright's creek, and a station on the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad. It was formerly a place of considerable activity and contained the first postoffice (1830) in the town, the first postmaster being Benjamin Chamberlain, who was succeeded in 1833 by Francis Green. Ira and A. L. Norton then successively held the position. The last incumbent was Frederick Cramer, and soon after his appointment the office was moved to the point then known as the Plank Road House, the official designation being Great Valley. An effort was subsequently made to re-establish the postoffice at Peth under the name of Great Valley Center. George E. Howland was appointed postmaster, but the project never got any further. It was here that Lewis Wooster opened the first store in the town in 1815.

Sugartown postoffice was recently established in the northeast part of the town with Mrs. Helen Sherman as postmistress.

Religious services were held in Great Valley at a very early period and were of the Congregational order. Rev. John Spencer, a missionary who held meetings and organized churches in many other towns in western New York, was the first minister of the gospel to conduct religious exercises here, the first meeting being held in 1815 in Orin Pitcher's dwelling house. Until 1820 services were conducted in private residences, in barns, and even in the woods, but after that year the worshipers usually repaired to school houses and soon afterward to church edifices. Rev. Mr. Spencer organized a church society in the school house at Peth soon after his advent there and continued to minister to the congregation until 1825, when he ceased his labors. Rev. Mr. Willoughby afterward preached occasionally and about 1835 the society united with the Methodists in holding meetings. Notwithstanding the fact that Rev. Mr. Spencer was a Congregationalist the doctrine of this first society seems to have been Presbyterian. By deaths, etc., it finally became extinct.

A Baptist church was organized at Kill Buck, in the dwelling of Charles Ward, November 4, 1831, with Ira Burlingame as moderator. There were eight members and Rev. Samuel Brayman was the first pastor. Among his successors were Rev. Ebenezer Vining, E. Going, Benjamin Cole, Daniel Platt, and Records Vining.

The Humphrey and Great Valley Free Baptist church at Sugartown was organized in 1858 by Rev. D. W. McKoon, the first pastor, with thirty-five members. In 1874 their first and present house of worship, a wooden structure, was erected at a cost of $2,000, the present value of their church property being $2,500. It will seat 250 persons. The membership numbers eighty-four and the present pastor is Rev. F. D. Ellsworth. The Sunday school has an average attendance of thirty-five members.

The Freewill Baptist church at Great Valley Center was formed in 1860 by Rev. R. D. Hays, the first pastor. Their original membership was nine. In 1879 the present edifice was built, of wood, at a cost of $1,100; it will seat 250 persons; the church property is now valued at $1,500. The society has sixty-five members with Rev. Mr. Varnum as pastor. The Sunday school has about seventy members.

The Willebough church of the United Brethren in Christ, located in "Shin hollow," was organized by Rev. H. H. Barber in 1869 with nineteen members, the first pastor being Rev. J. W. Gage. Their house of worship, a frame edifice, was erected in 1878 and a parsonage and barn were built of the same material in 1891-92, the church costing about $1,000. The present value of the entire church property is $1,600. The edifice will seat 150 people, the society has seventy-two members, and Rev. W. A. Bennett is the present pastor. The society has three Sunday schools with a total enrollment of 180 scholars, the aggregate average attendance being 123. Only one of these schools remains open throughout the year. This church embraces the appointments of Great Valley, Shin hollow, and Bear hollow.

The Methodists organized a class at Peth as early as 1830, Rev. Mr. Nevins and Rev. Mr. May being the first preachers. Of this society Judge Benjamin Chamberlain became a member about 1845 and gave liberally to its support. A similar class was formed at Kill Buck about 1858 or 1860 of which Rev. J. R. Alexander was pastor for several years. The present M. E. Society there was organized in 1871 by Rev. Mr. Barnhart, the first pastor, and their frame house of worship was erected the same year at a cost of $2,000. It will seat 150 persons and with the grounds is valued at $1,500. The society has six members with Rev. Mr. Spencer as pastor.

The St. John's Roman Catholic church edifice at Kill Buck was erected in 1872. It is of wood and will seat about 250 people. The building originally cost $2,400; the present value of the church property is $1,200. Of this parish Rev. Mr. Burns was the first pastor; the present one is Rev. P. Berkery.

Rust post, No. 357, G. A. R., was organized by Col. E. A. Nash on March 30, 1883, with eleven members, the present number being sixty-eight. The first officers were R. C. Adams, commander; E. Hurlburt, S. V. C.; Melbourne Wilcox, J. V. C.; Augustus Wilcox, Q. M.; F. Wood, surgeon. The present officers are Melbourne Wilcox, commander; E. R. Huff, S. V. C.; Edwin Wilcox, J. V. C.; John Markham, adjutant; Otis D. Rhoades, Q. M.; Stephen Palmer, surgeon; Augustus Wilcox, chaplain.

Great Valley Lodge, No. 603, I. O. G. T., was organized May 23, 1891, with twenty-eight members, the present number being forty-five.

Great Valley Union, No. 144, E. A. U., was instituted September 4, 1880, with twenty-five members.

Nicholas Bonsteel, son of Philip, was born in Columbia, N. Y., Aug. 24, 1797. His first wife was Polly Squires, who bore him five children. In 1829 he settled in East Otto and the next year married Angeline, daughter of Solomon Fordick, of Boston, Erie county, by whom he had four children, of whom three are living: Edwin, Ursula D., and Morris T. March 25, 1844, Mr. Bonsteel removed to this town and settled where his children now reside. Edwin Bonsteel married Eliza A., daughter of John Rowland; children: Arthur U., Ernest L., Orrin J., Dora L., and Anna B. The Bonsteels in America are descended from Nicholas Bonsteel, who came from Germany to Kinderhook, N. Y., before the Revolutionary war.

David M. Brown, a native of Londonderry, N. H., was born March 10, 1793. He removed thence with his family to Napoli in 1832 and erected a saw-mill the following year. His wife was Polly Senter; children: Lucinda, Sheldon P., Sarah, Mary, Lorane, Quincy A., and Andrew J. In 1842, while on a visit to brothers on the coast of Maine, Mr. Brown secured the carcass of a whale forty-eight feet in length, which he had prepared and transported on wagons and canal boats, exhibiting it throughout the country. He finally sold it for $8,000, and it is still exhibited as a curiosity.

Solander Carver was for many years a respected resident of Great Valley. He was a son of Parley G. Carver, who came to the town from Smyrna, N. Y., in 1832, settling on the farm where he died three years later. Solander Carver acquired a modest competence by the slow process of accumulation of the surplus income from a small farm and dairy. His word was as good as his bond. He married Rebecca Gibson, who survives him. He died Feb. 14, 1893.

Nathaniel Chase came from French Mills, N. Y., to Springville, Erie county, in 1812, and built the first grist-mill in that town. He returned to Plattsburgh that year and removed to Great Valley in 1816, making the first settlement on the farm now owned by Walter Walworth, Sr. Mr. Chase was a millwright by trade and assisted in the erection of nearly all the early mills in the town. His first wife bore him two children, Reuben and John. His second wife was Sophia Colwell; children: Moses, Robert, Ira, Jacob, Martin, Lucend, Marinda, Naomi, and Eunice.

Robert Chase was born in Vermont and served in the War of 1812, being present at the battle of Plattsburgh. In 1818 he came to Great Valley, where in 1827 he was injured by a falling tree; he died in 1834. Mr. Chase married Sally Estey; children: Harley, Julia, Lorenzo, Joseph, and Susan.

Reuben Chase, from Wayne county, came to Great Valley in 1827 and bought of Nathan Howe the farm now owned by Thomas Lounsbury. He married Hannah Estey and had two sons, Lyman and Orrin. Orrin Chase came to this town in 1845, and with him came three sons—Alexander, Reuben, and Augustus—and one daughter, Clarissa; another son, James, was born in Great Valley. Alexander Chase married Mariette McIntosh; children: Orrin, John E., Ruloff, Adeline, Annie, and Clara. John E. Chase was supervisor of Great Valley in 1884.

Robert Chase was born in Great Valley, June 13, 1824, has always resided here, and for several years followed rafting. He married Mariette, daughter of Brainard Cleaveland; children: Charles, Manley, and Horace.

Brainard Cleaveland, son of Aaron and a native of Connecticut, came with his parents in 1825 to Wyoming county and thence the same year to Machias. In 1833 he removed to Humphrey, and in 1865 came to Great Valley to reside with his son Aaron. He married Betsey Eddy; children: Andrew, Aaron, Alonzo, Joseph, Isaac, Mary A., and Mariette. Aaron Cleaveland married Catharine, daughter of Joseph Learn, of Humphrey; children: Laura L. (Mrs. N. D. Walworth), Nettie A. (Mrs. Eli Butler), Mary C. (Mrs. P. J. Daggett).

Alonzo Cleaveland was born in the town of Machias. He married Lydia, daughter of David Wheeler, one of the first settlers of Humphrey, and has had seven children, of whom three are living: Brainard, Isaac, and Joseph A.

Frederick S. Cramer, son of Sebastian, was born in Saxony, Germany, May 2, 1839. His parents died while he was young and at the age of fifteen he came to America, settling in Tonawanda, where he was engaged as a clerk until 1869, when he removed to Great Valley and bought the store now owned by William Morton. Here he was in trade and had the postoffice for six years, when he began the avocation of a farmer. He married Margaret Hicks.

Edmond Cullinan, born in County Clare, Ireland, came to America about 1840 and settled first in Elmira. He subsequently removed to Pennsylvania and in 1856 located in Great Valley, where he cleared a farm on which he now lives. By his wife, Ann Kerney, also of County Clare, Ireland, he had eleven children, only one of whom survives. Their son, Michael H. Cullinan, married Sarah, daughter of John Carr, of Cattaraugus; children: Mary, Margaret, and Teresa. He served as supervisor of this town in 1877 and 1878.

Nicholas Flint became a settler in Great Valley in 1828, coming from Cherry Valley, N. Y. He married Phebe, daughter of Ebenezer Willoughby; children: Weston, Orville, Agnes (Mrs. K. Kelsey), Esther (Mrs. Lewis J. Parker), Sarah (Mrs. Adrian Fay), and Irving.

Henry Folts, son of Sylvanus, was born in Frankfort, N. Y., and came to Ashford in 1840, where he followed farming until 1855, when he removed to Great Valley and bought the farm where his family now resides. He married Mary E. Hess; children: Daniel H., William H., Marietta (Mrs. C. G. Miller), and Georgianna.

Judge Francis Green (see page 273) about 1812 removed from New Hampshire with his wife, seven sons, and two daughters to Great Valley, and located on a large tract of land which (except the old homestead) was afterward apportioned to several of his children. And a singular coincidence is that Judge Green, his wife, and all of his children except one daughter lived and died upon that tract of land, and are buried in the same cemetery located thereon. The last survivor of the family was Benjamin, who died January 23, 1892, aged eighty-one years and four months. Benjamin Green was for about thirty-five years a consistent member of the M. E. church. His wife, who survived him, was Harriet Simmons; children: Joseph, John, Mary, and Demon. James Green was supervisor of Great Valley in 1818 and 1819 and John served in that position in 1832. The latter was also magistrate four years and postmaster at Great Valley nine years. He died Sept. 4, 1874.

Reuben Halladay came from Black Creek, N. Y., to Humphrey in 1852, and removed to this town two or three years later. He married Irena Benjamin and had eleven children.

George Hess was a son of Capt. Honyost H. Hess, a captain for eight years in the war of the Revolution, and was born in Herkimer county Dec. 18, 1788, and served in the War of 1812. He came to Ashford in 1841 and settled on the farm now owned by Andrew Frank; he married Mary Clapsaddle; children: Joseph, Mary E. (Mrs. Henry Folts), Nancy (Mrs. Jedediah Walker), Michael E., and George W. Elias W. Hess was drafted March 17, 1865, in Co. I, 65th N. Y. Inf., and was discharged June 28th following; George W. Hess enlisted from Ashford. The family trace their ancestry back to John Hess, of Hesse Castle, Germany, who came to America in 1710, settling in Palantine, N. Y. His son Augusdenus, born in 1719, married Mary Benson; children: Christina, Honyost, Nicholas, Conrad, Henry, Daniel, and Eva. Augusdenus was killed by the Indians at Fort Herkimer in 1782. Honyost was born Nov. 3, 1758, and married Catharine Edic; children: Nancy, George, Catharine, Elizabeth, Polly, and Margaret.

Abel Hicks, born in Providence, R. I., June 14, 1795, was for several years a captain on Lake Ontario and subsequently lived in Geneva, N. Y., where he married Jane McCurdy. In 1825 he came to Lyndon, where he lived forty years. He had eight children. In April, 1865, he came to Great Valley and kept hotel for two years, retiring finally to a small farm, where he died Jan. 20, 1872. His son Myron W. was born in Lyndon, Oct. 16, 1836, and came with his father to Great Valley in 1865. He was for some time a merchant, postmaster, and supervisor, holding the latter office in 1872, 1873, 1875, and 1883. His daughter Sophia is the wife of Ernest Bonsteel.

— Nathan Howe, son of Capt. Howe, was born in New Hampshire and came to Great Valley with his father when a small boy. The family settled at Kill Buck. Nathan married Nancy, daughter of Philip Mudge, of this town, and about 1822 moved to Humphrey, where he was the first settler on what is now known as Howe hill. He had seven children, of whom four are living: Mary (Mrs. Eli Bateman), Wilson, Cynthia (Mrs. Alonzo Niles), and Emily (Mrs. F. J. Harris). Mr. Howe was a strong anti-slavery man and was active in the operations of the underground railroad. Wilson N. Howe was supervisor of Great Valley from 1879 to 1882 inclusive.

Malancthon J. Howe, son of Joel, was born in Lyndon in 1848 and on Sept. 5, 1864, enlisted in Co. B, 1st N. Y. Dragoons, serving until the close of the war. He was taken prisoner near New Market by Mosby and was confined three and one-half months in Libby prison, his weight during this time being reduced from 160 to 80 pounds.

Isaac Lawton came to this town in 1827 and located on Great Valley creek on the farm now owned by Alexander Roy, where he built the second saw-mill in the town.

James Leggett, born in Dublin, Ireland, came to America in 1850, settling in Cattaraugus county. In 1866 he moved onto the farm he now occupies. He married Sarah Cullen; children: Lizzie G., Effie M., Nellie, James, Frederick.

Enoch Marvin, son of James and a native of Otsego county, came to Ellipticville in 1820, where he followed his trade of millwright. He married Frances Doty and had seven children. A son, Ferdino, was a soldier in the Rebellion, is a carpenter, and married Elizabeth, daughter of Jacob H. Frank; she was the first white child born in Ashford.

Patrick McNamara, son of Dennis, was born in County Clare, Ireland. Coming to America in 1850 he settled in Great Valley, which has since been his home. He married Mary Carey; children: Elizabeth L., John F., Peter C.

Hugh Morton, son of Hugh, was born in Scotland, married Jane Lindsey, and had born to him eight children, of whom six grew to maturity, viz.: Eliza, Hugh, Peter, John, Robert, and Gaven. His second wife was Sarah Simmons, who bore him twelve children. Mr. Morton came to America in 1839 and to Great Valley the following spring, settling at Peth. Hugh Morton married Maria Ray and has five children: John, Eva, Frank, Hugh, and James.

William Morton, son of Hugh Morton, was born in Killbride, Scotland, in 1816. At the age of twenty-one he moved to London, where for fifteen years he was engaged in mercantile business. In 1854 he came to America and located in Great Valley on the farm he still occupies. He married Margaret, daughter of John Scott, of Scotland, and to them have been born seven children, only three of whom are living: William S. and Robert W., both merchants, and Mary M. (Mrs. Joseph Green). William S. Morton was born in 1858 and in 1884 he formed with his brother Robert W. a partnership in the mercantile business. He married Ella Weager, of Randolph, and has one son, Howard D. Mr. Morton was elected supervisor in 1891 and re-elected in 1892 and 1893. Robert W. Morton was born in 1860 and married Lana, daughter of Asa Stevens; children: Gilbert A. and Lester L.

Jonathan Nobles was an early settler in Great Valley, and with him from Angelica, N. Y., came his son Spencer T., both of whom settled at Kill Buck. Spencer T. married Betsey, daughter of Luther and Sally Demming; three of their five children are living: Daniel, Stelbert E., and Nellie (Mrs. M. T. Ryan).

Ira Norton was born in Goshen, Conn. His sketch appears in Hinsdale. His son, Andrews L. Norton, born on the farm on which he now lives April 27, 1818, married Polly A. Bacon and has six children. He is now the only survivor of the early settlers living in that section. He was postmaster for several years and in 1863 and 1864 was supervisor of this town. Mrs. Williams, daughter of Ira, resides at Corydon, Pa. E. D. Norton, the youngest of Ira's sons, born in Great Valley in 1825, is a resident of Yorkshire. The first twenty-five years of his life were spent in Great Valley; he then removed to Bradford, Pa., where he lived fifteen years, where he was honored by his townsmen by important official positions and was a member of the Board of Commissioners that, under a special act of the Legislature, issued the bonds of the town to pay soldiers' bounties. Afterward for four years he was a resident of Owatonna, Minn., where he served one term as member of the city council. He returned to this county and settled in Yorkshire in 1877.

William W. Norton was born at Great Valley in 1822. Although reared on the farm, and having only the limited advantages for an education in those early days, at the age of thirty he commenced his preparation for the ministry in the Congregational church. His first charge was in Ashford, where he remained two years, when he removed to Otto and was pastor of that church ten years. He went thence to New Richmond, Wis., and subsequently organized a church in Alexander, Minn., where he remained five years. The last few years of his life he spent in Northfield, Minn. Considering the educational advantages of those early days his ministry was remarkably successful. Money was not plenty then and books were expensive, and in this family of nine children one copy of the old English Reader went down through the whole line, and that book is now in the possession of E. D. Norton, of Yorkshire.

Horton A. Ostrander, son of John B., was born in Dryden, Tompkins county, Dec. 22, 1840. Working in the saw-mill of his father until 1856 he then went to Lake Simcoe, where he followed lumbering until 1859, when he returned to Dryden. From 1864 to 1871 his energies were spent in the pineries of Michigan; he then came to Kill Buck and took charge of the mill of which he is now proprietor. Mr. Ostrander married, first, Jane Mandeville, and, second, Mary R. Noxon, by each of whom he has a daughter, Belle and Edna.

John Potter, born in Gainesville, N. Y., April 1, 1815, came to the town of Otto in 1835, where he married Mary A. McIntyre. He was a farmer and a carpenter, and in 1842 removed to Great Valley, where he lived until 1844, when he went to Ellicottville, where for several years he ran a sash and door factory. In 1861 he returned to this town, following since the carpenter's trade and farming. Mr. Potter had an only child, Charles B., who enlisted May 13, 1861, in Co. I, 37th N. Y. Inf. Vols., going out as third sergeant and being promoted to second lieutenant. This was the first company to leave Cattaraugus county for the war of the Rebellion. Charles B. was assigned on September 13, 1862, to Co. I; was made first lieutenant Dec. 2, 1862, and assigned to Co. H; and after the battle of Chancellorsville was captain of Co. K, holding the position until July 1, 1863, when he was mustered out. Re-enlisting Feb. 16, 1865, he was commissioned captain of Co. F, 194th N. Y. Inf., and was again mustered out May 3, 1865. He married Frances Williams.

Jonas Randall was a native of Genesee county. He subsequently resided in Concord, Erie county, and in 1840 came thence to East Otto. He married Mary Prindle, who bore him two children, Leonard and Martha (Mrs. William Seeley). Leonard Randall was born in Batavia and came to Cattaraugus county with his father. March 17, 1865, he enlisted in Co. K, 65th N. Y. Vols., and served until the close of the war. In 1866 he purchased and moved onto his present farm in Great Valley. He married Julia, daughter of Jacob Frank, of Ashford; children: Ida (Mrs. Theron Rust), Eva (Mrs. Clarence Washburn), Cora (Mrs. Daniel Washburn), and Charles.

John G. Rohrich is a son of John Rohrich, of Ellicottville, and was born in Wurtemberg, German, in 1841. Emigrating to America in 1850 he located in Ellicottville in 1852, where he resided until 1885, spending, however, some ten years of that time on the lakes. Mr. Rohrich held several town offices and in 1880 constructed the first iron bridge in the town of Ellicottville. In 1885 he came to Great Valley and purchased his present farm, being also engaged in lumbering. He married Anna M., daughter of John G. Brown, who came from Germany in 1852. Children: Ida (Mrs. John Ehman), Charles, Emma (Mrs. Ernest Dietrich), Carrie, and George.

Alexander Roy came from Scotland to Wyoming county in 1833 and thence to Humphrey in 1839, locating there on the farm now owned by Henry Clark. In 1858 he moved to Great Valley. He married Celestia Dennis; children: Marion (Mrs. Augustus Adams), Jane (Mrs. Israel Rickards), Maria (Mrs. Hugh Morton), Ellen (Mrs. Edwin Blodgett), and Anna (Mrs. Jacob Barker).

Michael T. Ryan was born in Bradford, Pa., on the 4th of Oct., 1858. He is the son of James and Margrette (Dunlay) Ryan, who moved into Hinsdale in 1859 and in 1871 removed to Great Valley, where they afterward resided, respected residents and esteemed citizens. Mrs. Ryan died in April, 1883. On Feb. 25, 1889, Michael T. Ryan married Miss Nellie A. Nobles. He has been town clerk and was postmaster of Great Valley during Mr. Cleveland's first term. Feb. 22, 1883, in partnership with C. A. Case as M. T. Ryan & Co., he succeeded H. J. Smith in the general mercantile trade at the village.

Arza Searl, son of Gideon (see Franklinville), was born in Whitehall, N. Y., and at the age of twenty-two came to Franklinville. The next year, 1825, he removed to Great Valley, thus becoming one of the earliest settlers of the town, where he spent his life and died in 1884, aged eighty-three years. His wife was Ann, a daughter of Stephen Wood, by whom he had eight children.

Caleb Snow was one of the early settlers of Great Valley, coming to the town from his native State—Vermont—about 1830, and making the first settlement in what is now called Bear hollow. He married Polly Avery; children: Abigail, Lydia, Roxana, Hiram (drowned while young), and Levi. The latter was born May 12, 1825, married Jane Du Bois, of Humphrey, and was the first settler on the farm where Frank Snow resides; and where he died. Children: Frank, Kate (Mrs. F. Manhart), and Sarah (Mrs. Horace Sibley). Frank Snow, born Dec. 22, 1851, was elected supervisor each year from 1886 to 1890 inclusive, and has served as justice, etc.

Seamour Wilcox came from Bath, N. Y., to Hinsdale in 1829. Until 1836 he resided in various places, but in that year he came to Great Valley and settled on a farm. He married Sally, daughter of Enoch Sargent, who bore him ten children, of whom these are living: Emma (Mrs. William Chamberlain), Augustus, Isaiah C., Edwin, Mary (Mrs. Byron Hinman) Melvin, and Melbourne. All these sons served in the Civil war, also Hiram, who died there.

Melbourne Wilcox was born in Humphrey, Jan. 25, 1842, and soon afterward his parents moved with their family to Great Valley. Oct. 30, 1861, he enlisted in Co. I, 6th N. Y. Cav., and served three years. At the battle of Gettysburg Mr. Wilcox was wounded in the head by a minie-ball, fracturing the skull so seriously that five pieces of bone and about a spoonful of brains were extracted. He married Amanda, daughter of Harvey Kean; children: Leona A. (Mrs. John Rider) and Albert M.

Mark Williams came from Chesterfield, Mass., to Ellicottville in 1829, and by occupation was a carpenter. He married Polly Staunton, of Massachusetts; children : Dexter, Elisha, Samuel C., Royal, Frank, Almira, Theresa, Martha, Aurelia, and Mary.

Charles Williams came to Ellicottville from Chesterfield, Mass., in 1832, bringing with him six sons and two daughters, viz.: Charles, Spencer, Amasa, Lyman, Horace, Hiram, Eliza, and Sarah ; another son, Burton, was born to him in Ellicottville. Spencer Williams came to Great Valley in 1847 and purchased the saw-mill owned by John W. Staunton, near the north town line.

Ebenezer Willoughby, son of Rev. Ebenezer Willoughby, of Kingsbury, N. Y., came to Great Valley in 1823 and purchased of Matthew Gibson the farm now owned by Mark Church. He married Esther, daughter of Abraham Wright, and had three children, of whom Phebe is the widow of Nicholas Flint.

George Witherell settled in Great Valley in 1835, coming from Java, N. Y. In 1838 he removed to Ellicottville, but in 1840 returned to this town, buying the farm now owned by C. B. Potter. He married Mary E. Lockwood and had born to him four children, only one of whom, George J., is living. George J. Witherell came to Kill Buck in 1852 as clerk for J. W. Phelps. In 1874 he engaged in mercantile business for himself. He has been postmaster for eleven years and has held various other offices of trust. Mr. Witherell married Margaret A., youngest daughter of John C. Cross, an early settler of Otto. Children : Mary E. (Mrs. William Knorr), Giles H., George, and M. Gertrude.

James Wood came to New Albion from Utica in 1851, and died there three years later. He married Eunice Campbell ; children : James F., Wallace, Gilbert, Fidelia (Mrs. Reuben Colton), Sarah, Mary J. (Mrs. Adelbert Hall), and one deceased. James F. Wood enlisted Sept. 11, 1861, in Co. F, 64th N. Y. Inf. Vols., and served three years, being discharged Sept. 11, 1864.

Abraham Wright, son of Dea. Abraham, was born in Cambridge, N. Y., Dec. 20, 1778. His wife was Lydia Guy, whom he married March 23, 1815, and their son John G. enlisted Sept. 5, 1864, in Co. A, 188th N. Y. Vols., and was discharged July 11, 1865. Another son, James, served in the 6th N. Y. Cav. and died in Wellsville, N. Y., July 6, 1873. Abraham Wright came to Great Valley in 1819. His brother, Col. Richard Wright, came to Cattaraugus county about the same time and held several offices of responsibility. He qualified as associate judge of the County Court on March 23, 1836, and was elected sheriff of Cattaraugus county in 1837 ; he was supervisor of Great Valley in 1830 and of Burton (now Allegany) in 1836 (see page 280).

CHAPTER XXXI.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF HINSDALE.

HINSDALE derives its name from the southwestern town of New Hampshire in the fertile valley of the Connecticut. In 1819 the counties of Chautauqua, Cattaraugus, and Niagara (the last named then embracing also what is now Erie county), formed one Assembly district and elected two members, the elections being held in April and continued three successive days. E. T. Foote, of Jamestown, and Oliver Forward, of the village of Buffalo, represented this district in the winter of 1820. At the time of their election the towns of Franklinville, Great Valley, Little Valley, Olean, and Perrysburg embraced the entire county of Cattaraugus and the total population was 4,090. Mr. Foote, in a letter to the town clerk and supervisor of Hinsdale dated March 14, 1873, writes:

"When I was elected there was not even a regular weekly mail from Chautauqua county through Cattaraugus county, and I did not learn the result of the votes in Olean until ten days after the election, and then by the way of Buffalo. The mail was then not infrequently from seven to ten days passing from Albany to Jamestown. The latter part of March a petition was received, I think from Lewis Ward and others, of Olean, for a division of said town into two towns; the new town to be called Fayette. All the papers were in legal form and a bill was reported favorable to the prayer of the petitioners. Near the close of the session the bill came up in its regular course before the committee of the whole, when a member objected to the proposed name of the new town, as there was already a town of that name in Seneca county and a post village Fayetteville in Onondaga county. I was called on to give a name to the proposed new town. There was no time to write to Olean for instructions. The bill must be passed or wait a year. Neither my colleague nor the members of the committee had a name to propose, and that duty fell upon me. I determined to give it the name of an old and respectable New England town and the birthplace of my beloved mother, which is Hinsdale in New Hampshire, an old and respectable town easily written and easily pronounced. The name Hinsdale was inserted in the bill by unanimous vote, and the law passed on the last day of the session, April 14, 1820."

The town of Hinsdale, N. H., was organized in 1753 and named in honor of Col. Ebenezer Hinsdale, one of its founders and a large proprietor of the township. He was conspicuous for his bravery in the French and Indian wars, and built Fort Hinsdale in his town as a defense against the assaults of the Indians. He died January 6, 1763.

The town of Hinsdale, N. Y., lies upon the east boundary and southeast of the center of Cattaraugus county. It has an area of 24,786 acres and embraces parts of towns two and three in the fourth range and two and three in the third range of the Holland survey. It is bounded on the north by Ischua (erected from its territory February 7, 1846, as the town of Rice), on the east by Allegany county, on the south by Portville and Olean, and on the west by Allegany and Humphrey. Its principal streams are Ischua creek, which enters the town about the middle of the north line and flows south, and Oil creek, which enters the northeast corner and flows southwest, the two uniting at Hinsdale village and forming Olean creek, which flows south through a broad and fertile valley and empties into the Allegheny river at Olean. Haskel creek in the eastern part flows southerly through a beautiful valley into the Allegheny near Weston's Mills. There are others, once mill-brooks, that drain the western part of the town and flow into Olean creek. The surface is hilly except along the creeks. The summits of the highest ranges of hills are 500 or 600 feet above the valleys.

The venerable John Putnam, son of Peter Putnam, states that his father settled on lot 42, township three, range three, of the Holland purchase, on January 1, 1811, where John was born August 10th following. He further emphatically declares that he knows his father was the first settler in the town of Hinsdale and that he (John) was the first white child born within its boundaries. In Everts's "History of Cattaraugus County" the first settlement in the town is accorded to Zachariah Noble and his brothers Horace and Charles in 1806. Zachariah did live on lot 7, township two, range four, but it is impossible to learn anything of his brothers. In 1810 Peter Putnam found Zachariah Noble at Olean, an unsettled and unmarried man who joined him in purchasing lumber, and together they rafted it to Cincinnati. Putnam returned to Olean (now Hinsdale) and settled on lot 42. Zachariah Noble returned, married, and later settled on lot 7. He eventually removed to Williamsport, Pa., with his son Seymour J. The "oldest inhabitants" remember him well, but know nothing of his mythical brothers; neither do their names appear on the books of the Holland Company as purchasers of land in 1806. As their claims of priority as settlers is founded only in tradition we are inclined to take as better history the declaration of John Putnam. The story of Mrs. Hicks's, related in Everts's History, in which she states that on Olean creek, in the south part of Hinsdale, there was an organized school with a school house where she (then Miss Murray) taught in 1810; that in the same season she attended a party at Olean given by Major Adam Hoops, whom she describes as a bachelor and a woman-hater; and further that there were then but three families living in Olean, is evidently a gross exaggeration. Indeed there is much evidence extant to contradict it. In 1810 the town of Olean had a population of 458.

In the winter of 1816 William Chamberlain, with his wife and sons Cornelius, Ira, Hazen, and William, came from Barton, Vt., and settled on Olean creek opposite the residence of Warner Smith. On this site a few apple trees are still standing. In 1883 the late Ira Chamberlain gave the following recollections of the settlers in 1816:

Zachariah Noble resided where Warner Smith lives on lot 7, township 2, range 3, but the road was then between the bed of the abandoned canal and the creek. Noble then had about ten acres cleared. Next south was a Mr. Hinman, brother-in-law of Wyllys Thrall and Jedediah Strong. On lot 5 there were a few acres cleared and a frame barn, but no family has ever lived on the lot. Joshua Wicks lived next south of Hinman and had a clearing of ten or twelve acres. Jedediah Strong lived where Hiram Webster now lives. The old house was burned and is replaced by Mr. Webster's present fine residence near the old site. He had a frame barn and twenty or thirty acres cleared. There was a plank school house standing in or near the line between the Webster and H. W. Smith farms. The first settler north of Z. Noble was Elisha Humphrey. His house stood a few rods northerly from the gravel-pit used in constructing the canal. He became the owner of lots 4 and 6, afterward known as the Riggs lot. The next north was Ezra Thornton, who lived in a frame house and owned lots 9 and 11, town 2, and kept a tavern. Thornton sold to Reuben Scott, who continued the public house. John Foot lived on the west side of Olean creek on lot 8, town 2. He had ten or twelve acres cleared and a log house. He was a brother-in-law of Z. Noble. Elisha Foot lived on the south half of the same lot and had a small clearing. Lambert Fay was living in an unpainted plank house on lot 10, now owned by J. H. Beers. Clemon Fay took up lot 12 and commenced clearing it. There was no road north of his lot on the west side of the creek, nor was there any settlement in Fay hollow. There was a log house on the north half of lot 11, where Israel Curtis lived, while Thornton lived in the tavern below. Robert Hines lived in a part log and part frame house and kept a tavern on the Norton farm (lot 1 of section 4). Harvey Parker lived next north on lot 3 of the same section and had a frame or plank house. Capt. William Smith succeeded Parker, and also kept a tavern. The only house then in the present village of Hinsdale was that of Lewis Wood, a long story-and-a-half building, where he kept a tavern. Henry Conrad succeeded Wood about 1821 and kept the tavern there for several years. Mr. Conrad was of German parentage and a native of Easton, Pa. Under a rough exterior he carried a benevolent and tender heart. Emery Wood came in soon after. Emery Yates lived in a log house at Scott's Corners. Peter Putnam lived on lot 42, town 3, in a frame building. The next settler easterly towards Cuba from Conrad's tavern was a Mr. Grimes, whose house was on a knoll. Some apple trees still standing mark the location. Lewis P. Metcalf later occupied the place. The next place was then occupied by Orrin Hull and is now owned by G. M. Brown. Easterly from this was Mr. Wasson and next and last before reaching the Cuba line was a Mr. Bennett.

At this time (1816) there was neither a road nor a settlement in Fay hollow or on Dutch or Yankee hills. Other prominent early settlers were Capt. Thornton Wasson and his sons Thomas T., Elihu M., and Thornton, Jr., who came in 1820. The same year Robert Hines came from Bloomfield, N. Y. He was the first town clerk and was a tavern keeper. Lambert Fay settled on section 3, in the fourth range, of which Aaron Houghton, from New Hampshire, also had a part. Jacob Chamberlain, Alexander Campbell, and William Hungerford all came in 1820. Tunis D. Bush, William Smith, David D. Howe, Moses W. Butterfield, and Col. Emery Wood (brother of Lewis, Wheelock, and Manning Wood) came about the same time. Colonel Wood was the first merchant and the first postmaster in 1825. Hollis Scott, who came in 1830, was the second merchant and represented his county in the Legislature of 1839. William Vinton kept a tavern in the village at an early date. Hon. Alonzo Hawley was a merchant and a prominent citizen. He represented his Assembly district in the Legislature in 1841 and in 1843. Alexander Storrs was a prominent citizen and a lawyer (see page 331). Hon. Nelson I. Norton, a partner in mercantile business with Mr. Hawley, served in the Legislature of 1861 and represented his district in the Forty-fourth Congress.

Peter Putnam built the first frame barn in town and in 1816 Lewis Wood erected the first frame house. Lewis Wood and Emery Yates brought the irons for the first saw-mill, which was constructed in 1814, on their backs from Bellefonte, Pa. Gardner Bullard in 1829 is credited as having built the first wool-carding and cloth-dressing-mill. The postoffice in Hinsdale was established in 1825 at the store of Emery Wood, who was the first postmaster. Seymour Bouton, a lad, carried the first mail from Olean to Angelica. Hugh Magee and his brothers were the contractors. Hinsdale was then favored with a semi-weekly mail. At the raising of Lewis Wood's saw-mill in 1814 a Mr. Redfield was accidentally killed by falling timber. As near as can be ascertained this was the first death in town. His widow married David D. Howe, who built the State road from Hinsdale to Angelica. Howe in his business transactions had become involved in a debt to a man named Church, of Allegany county. Howe was not able to meet the demands against him and Church began an annoying method of collecting. He got a claim on all Howe's growing crops, marched into his garden, pulled up his vegetables, and carried them away before his eyes. This was more than Howe could bear, and in the frenzy of exasperation he seized his rifle, mounted his horse, and rode into Allegany county. That night Church was shot. Howe was convicted of his murder and was hung in Angelica in 1824.

The valleys and foot-hills in Hinsdale, like other towns in the southern part of the county, were originally covered with a magnificent growth of pine trees, and until these were converted into lumber and rafted to market lumbering was the leading industry. Agriculture has superseded it; the dairy is foremost, and at the factories mainly the milk is made into cheese. Good crops of grain, vegetables, and fruit are also raised.

The old State road, constructed in 1817 at the expense of the State, is a fine highway and has been constantly used since it was first opened. The people enjoyed all the advantages to be gained by the navigation of the Genesee Valley canal from its completion in 1856 until it was abandoned in the fall of 1878. It never was a highway for the farmers' produce. William O. Leland states that in one autumn he shipped two boatloads of oats from Hinsdale to Albany, which was the first and only shipment of grain by canal from Cattaraugus county. The New York, Lake Erie & Western railroad enters the town from the east, near the northeast corner, and follows the valley of Oil creek to Hinsdale village, where there is a station, the land for which was donated to the company by the citizens. The road thence continues down the valley of Olean creek through the town. The Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad enters the town from Ischua at about the middle of the north line and follows down Ischua creek to its junction with Oil creek opposite the village, thence down the west bank of Olean creek and crosses the south line of the town into Olean. This road has a depot opposite the village and a branch road to Rochester that follows mainly the line of the old canal.

Hinsdale was formed from Olean on April 14, 1820, and the first town meeting was held on the first Tuesday in March, 1821, when these officers were elected: Israel Curtis, supervisor; Robert Hinds, town clerk; Thornton Wasson, Sands Bouton, Jedediah Strong, assessors; Henry Gross, collector; Jedediah Strong, Lewis Wood, overseers of the poor; Charles Price, Harvey Parker, Emery Yates, commissioners of highways; Henry Gross, Lambert Fay, Simeon Hicks, constables; Lewis Wood, Alexander Campbell, Israel Curtis, commissioners of common schools; Sands Bouton, Robert Hinds, school inspectors; Lewis Wood, poundmaster; Robert Hinds, William Hungerford, Simeon Hicks, Peter Putnam, Israel Curtis, Jonathan Davis, Henry Gross, overseers of highways and fence viewers. Officers since 1821:

Hinsdale village, near the junction of Ischua and Oil creeks, is a station on the New York, Lake Erie & Western railroad and at the junction of the Buffalo and Rochester branches of the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad. It contains a postoffice, a church (Methodist Episcopal), a Union Free School building, six or seven stores, one hotel, the usual mechanic shops, a feed, cider, and saw-mill, and about 400 inhabitants. It is located in a broad and beautiful valley with high hills on either side, and was once a center of a flourishing trade. Among its early industries was a tannery and a wool-carding and cloth-dressing-mill.

Haskel Flats, on Haskel creek in the southeast part of the town, is a pretty hamlet containing a postoffice, a new Union church edifice, two stores, a school house, a blacksmith shop, a cheese factory, and thirty-seven families embraced in the school district. A settlement was first begun here by Charles Stewart as early as or before 1830. Other settlers in that year were Jacob Bowers, William Hungerford, Christopher Keller, Aaron Osmun, Thomas Sherlock, and William Wesler. In 1832 the following with their families had settled in the neighborhood: Jacob Snyder, John Willover, Roswell Benham, George Peck, Henry Burton, Thomas Scott, Jacob Masker, Isaac Masker, David Dillon, John Lefever, Robert Evans, Amos L. Hedden, William Howe, Oliver Phillips, and John Wood. William Hungerford was the wag, carpenter, joiner, and mason of the neighborhood. He was a strong, stalwart six-footer who could hew the timber and erect from cellar to garret a stout edifice. John Willover was the leading business man. This settlement remains unusually harmonious; for the past twenty years only one suit at law has been tried in court between any of its citizens. John Lefever built the only hotel at Haskel Flats. He sold to Ambrose Salisbury, who continued it until he died.

Scott's Corners is a hamlet on Ischua creek a mile north of Hinsdale village. It derives its name from Hollis Scott, a merchant and business man who settled here in 1835. It contains one church (Baptist), a cheese factory, a grocery, and about 100 inhabitants. Lewis Wood settled here in 1813 or 1814, and was the original owner of the site. He built the first saw-mill in Hinsdale at this place in 1814.

David T. Maxwell's mills in the village of Hinsdale are operated by steam and are equipped with machinery for sawing all kinds of lumber and shingles, planing and matching, grinding feed, and making cider.

William B. Reynolds's steam mills about a mile south of Hinsdale village, on Olean creek, do custom work in sawing, planing, matching, sawing shingles, and grinding feed. He was born September 26, 1844, and has been a manufacturer of lumber all his business life. He was a sawyer in Minnesota four years, but has spent most of his life in Hinsdale.

About 1816 a plank school house was erected on or near the line between the Webster and H. W. Smith farms. The first frame school house in town was erected at Scott's Corners in 1818. In 1825 Hinsdale, then including the present town of Ischua, had a population of 382, which was increased to 1,543 in 1835, when it contained sixteen common school districts and 663 children of school age. The town received from the State as its proportion of the public money $169. In 1890 the population was 1,258. The town has eight school districts and a school house in each of them. The aggregate valuation of the school buildings and sites was $5,500; the assessed valuation of the districts was $506,413. The amount of public money received from the State was $1,133.79; the amount raised by local taxation was $1,938.16. The whole number of scholars was 366 and ten teachers were employed.

Rev. W. M. Fay became the pastor of the Baptist church at Scott's Corners, and in 1843 he originated the visionary project of founding a school of extraordinary size to be self-sustaining by the manual labor of its students. The main structure was to be erected at Scott's Corners and a smaller and auxiliary building was to be built in Hinsdale village, with a covered walk between them. The institution in embryo was called the "Manual Labor Institute." The Freeman and Messenger newspaper was started in its interest with Edwin Fuller as its editor. Mr. Fay scoured the country and solicited subscriptions in behalf of the project and sold scholarships at $25 each. The people of Hinsdale contributed liberally and funds sufficient to begin the smaller structure at Hinsdale were collected, and the work of construction was commenced, when Mr. Fay became involved in a scandal which so damaged his moral and religious character that he fled from the town. The inhabitants of Hinsdale completed the building and opened it to the public as the Hinsdale Academy, October 30, 1843. It flourished for a time and the building became the property of the school district of the village, and is now used for a Union Free School and the town hall. The school has recently been placed under the superintendence of the Regents of the University of the State. Three teachers are employed: primary, intermediate, and academic.

In 1819 the Olean Methodist circuit was formed and included Hinsdale. Rev. Reuben A. Aylesworth "rode the circuit" and formed a class at Hinsdale, and since that time the Methodists here have not been without a "stated supply." No regular church organization was effected until 1849, when the First Methodist Episcopal church of Hinsdale was formed and incorporated. From then until 1863 it formed a part of the Olean and Cuba charge; afterward it had an independent existence. December 13, 1852, the society was re-incorporated. In 1850 the present house of worship was erected at a cost of $2,500. The parsonage was built in 1865. The entire church property is valued at $4,500. The site is held by a warrantee deed, with full covenants, executed by Emery Wood and Permelia, his wife, which conveys to John C. White, William S. Morris, Wells Lyman, Seymour J. Noble, and Lorenzo Yates as trustees for $1,000, with the understanding that the house, when not occupied by the Methodists, shall be free to any other denomination. The society has eighty-three members and an Epworth League of fifty-three members. Rev. J. M. Leach is pastor. The Sunday school is attended by 125 scholars.

The Baptist church of Hinsdale, at Scott's Corners, was organized by Rev. Eliab Going in 1830, in A. M. Farwell's barn, and consisted of eight members: Peter Putnam, Charles C. Hatch, Mrs. Mary Putnam, Mrs. Anna K. Hatch, Mrs. Lydia Farwell, Mrs. Elizabeth Farwell, Mrs. Sarah Davis, and Mrs. Lucretia Miner. Rev. Eliab Going was their first pastor and remained many years. Meetings were first held in the school houses and sometimes in barns. February 8, 1834, the society was incorporated. In 1844 the present church edifice was erected, of wood, and is now valued, including grounds, at $250. It has a seating capacity of 250. Rev. Orlando Jeffrey is the pastor. The present membership is 107. The Sunday school has eighty-seven pupils.

The Baptist church of Haskel Flats was organized October 18, 1854, by Rev. H. S. Card, the first pastor, with five members, the present number being fifty with Rev. D. H. Dennison, pastor.

The Methodist Episcopal church of Haskel Flats was organized in 1840 by the formation of a class comprised of Robert Evans, Thomas Scott, Isaac Masker, and their families. Other early members were Samuel Fletcher, Robert Graham, Abial Washburn, John Lefever, and their families. Rev. Mr. Searles is credited as being the first pastor. Rev. Comfort is also mentioned as one of the early pastors, and possibly was the first. The church now has fourteen members with Rev. J. M. Leach, pastor.

Neither the Baptist nor the Methodist society had a house of worship until the people of the neighborhood unitedly built a very pretty edifice in 1891 at a cost of $2,600. This building is known as the Union church, and is alternately occupied by the two societies. The value of the structure and grounds is estimated at $3,000. The Union Sunday school is attended by 75 pupils.

St. Peter's Protestant Episcopal church of Hinsdale was organized January 3 and incorporated January 12, 1871. The society occasionally holds services in the Methodist church. They are without a rector.

Hinsdale Lodge, No. 540, I. O. O. F., was instituted March 8, 1886, by C. D. Tuttle, D. D. G. M. The first officers were E. N. Pierce, N. G.; S. Reynolds, V. G.; M. P. Derby, secretary; J. S. Larabee, treasurer.

Hinsdale Lodge, No. 175, A. O. U. W., was instituted September 20, 1878, and the first officers were P. F. W. Sydenham, M. W.; L. Y. Miller, foreman; G. W. Capron, O.; L. C. Scott, recorder; A. L. Walker, financier.

Hinsdale Union, No. 49, E. A. U., was organized February 27, 1880, with twenty members. Its first officers were: Chancellor, A. K. Corbin; advocate, Mrs. F. D. Leland; president, J. H. Gould; vice-president, Mrs. M. Green; treasurer, M. Green; secretary, M. Older. The present membership is 108. Its officers are: Chancellor, C. J. Green; advocate, Mrs. M. L. Goodrich; president, H. J. Conrad; vice-president, Miss N. Sherlock; treasurer, M. Green; secretary, Mrs. E. A. Judd; chaplain, E. A. Judd.

George D. Bandfield, of English descent and New England stock, was born in Canadea, N. Y., in 1811. His father died soon afterward and in 1813 his mother came to Hinsdale. At the age of fourteen he was a raftsman and at sixteen was a river pilot, which he continued until 1867. He bought a farm of 214 acres in Oil creek valley which he sold for oil purposes in 1865, and the ensuing year he purchased a farm of 128 acres on Olean creek, where he died in Feb., 1892. He was interested in military and town affairs, was captain of militia, and was familiarly known as "Captain Den." He was highway commissioner and assessor a long time and justice of the peace eight years. He was a prominent Mason and was buried with Masonic honors. About 1835 he married Orpha S. Marsh, who died in Jan., 1866. He married, second, Harriet E. Jones. Children: Orpha A. (Mrs. Charles D. Murray), George H., Nelson D., and Frances E. (Mrs. Calvin R. Bowen).

George H. Bandfield was born May 18, 1841. He graduated from Rushford Academy and taught common schools three terms. In Aug., 1862, he enlisted in the Marine Corps and served sixteen months on board the Vanderbilt, and visited Rio Janerio, Sidney in Australia, Cape Colony, and the West India Islands. In 1864 he was transferred to the U. S. ship Brooklyn and served in the Gulf Squadron under Admiral Farragut. He was also with Admiral Porter at the siege of Fort Fisher. He engaged in the hardware and tin trade in 1866 and in 1867 was elected town clerk, holding the office six years, and represented Hinsdale as supervisor in 1873 and 1874. In 1876 he was elected justice of the peace and has since held that position. In 1866 he married Eleanor, daughter of David Sessions. She died March 14, 1879. Children: Ellen (Mrs. Orrin Doud), Franc E., C. Dow, and Blanche B.

John H. Beers, son of Wakeman and Clarinda (Withey) Beers, was born in Bolivar, N. Y., in 1860. He was raised on his father's farm and was educated in the common schools and in Friendship Academy. He came to Hinsdale with his parents in 1882 and settled on the farm in Pleasant valley he now owns. His father died in Bolivar in 1888, where Mrs. Beers resides. Beginning in the fall of 1888 John H. had one year in the grocery trade and in conducting a meat market with D. E. Johnson. Mr. Beers is serving his second term on the Board of Education. He is a contributor to the Methodist church and votes the Democratic ticket. In March, 1887, he married Addie E., daughter of Lovinus and Minerva Osmun.

Roswell Benham, a native of Vermont, was born Jan. 3, 1794, and died in Nov., 1871. He came from Ohio to Haskel Flats in Hinsdale about 1830 and settled near where his son Alden now lives. He reared eight children. His wife was Lucinda Colman, whom he married Jan. 9, 1817. His son Alden was born in Locke, N. Y., Dec. 5, 1820, married Lydia A. Hortwick, and first settled in Ellisburgh, N. Y., where he was a farmer. In 1835 he returned to the Haskel neighborhood. About 1874 Mrs. Benham died. Children: Josephine (Mrs. Albert Adams), Eunice (Mrs. Melvin Pixley), Lewis, and Ezra. In Sept., 1886, Alden Benham married Mrs. Hannah A. Parker.

Lucius Benham, son of Roswell, was born in Reading, N. Y., Nov. 4, 1831, and married Rosina Pixley, July 9, 1876, who was born in Farmersville, May 11, 1846. Mr. Benham remained with his parents until their decease. His children are Theda M., Edith O., Clayton L., and Nellie Pearl.

Varnum Burton was born in Ulysses, N. Y., July 11, 1808. His father, Isaiah Burton, a native of Hopkinton, R. I., was a Revolutionary soldier. Varnum married, in Dryden, N. Y., Sylvia Mix, and first settled there as a farmer. They came to Hinsdale, where he arrived with his wife and three children Feb. 9, 1841. Since then he has been a farmer. He has raised eight children. George W., his oldest child, was born in Dryden, N. Y., June 14, 1833, and married Phebe Reynolds, July 6, 1854. He is a farmer and mechanic. Children: Eliza, George, Willis, James, Ella, Fred, and Bela.

Franklin M. Burton, a native of Hinsdale, born May 23, 1843, enlisted in March, 1864, in Co. D, 179th N. Y. Vols., and at Elmira was detailed for service in the general hospital, where he was engaged about thirteen months, and where he was disabled in his right hand by poison. He is a pensioner. In the fall of 1865 he married Mary, daughter of John Miller. Children: a daughter and a son.

John T. Casey, a native of Ireland, was born Feb. 7, 1835. In 1849 he emigrated to America with his parents, four brothers, and two sisters, and settled on a farm near Oil creek in Hinsdale. At the age of twenty-one he married Margaret Foley and became a section foreman on the Erie railroad. He died Oct. 25, 1889. He had a good education, was well versed in music, and was a fine violinist. He was overseer of the poor three consecutive years. Children: Josephine (Mrs. C. Skinner), Nora E., Timothy, Mary J., Rev. John.

Rev. Reuben Cherryman, son of William and Elizabeth (Jenner) Cherryman, was born in Linfield, England, Aug. 31, 1814. In 1824 his parents with their family emigrated to America in a sailing vessel, coming to Pittsford, N. Y. Reuben remained with them until 1834, when he came to Ischua (then a part of Hinsdale) and settled on a farm of 100 acres on Yankee hill. Dec. 13, 1834, he married Hannah M. Hackett, who was born in Plymouth, N. Y., Dec. 6, 1811. He was finally licensed to preach by the Baptist church of Hinsdale, and preached in the school houses and occasionally in barns in the surrounding neighborhoods. He studied with Rev. Absalom Miner at Rushford about two years and was ordained an elder in the Cattaraugus Baptist Association at Rushford in 1841, of which he has been corresponding secretary nearly thirty years. He has been pastor of the Baptist churches at Farmersville, Richburg, East Otto, and Scott's Corners, where he settled in 1862, and where he was first licensed to preach. After a pastorate of sixteen years with this church he resigned and is now retired. Children: Harriet E. (Mrs. Myron Older), Emerancy A. (Mrs. J. E. Robeson), and Ann Augusta (Mrs. P. A. Leonard).

John Conrad, a native of Pennsylvania, came from Tompkins county to Dutch hill in Hinsdale about 1822 with his wife, seven sons, and four daughters. He purchased 320 acres, which he subsequently sold, and settled on Haskell flats, where he died. His second son, Daniel, born in 1804, married Mary Hawley and settled on 100 acres of the original 320. He had eleven children. He died in 1865 and his wife in 1884.

Abram M. Farwell, born in Fitchburg, Mass., Nov. 28, 1780, married, in Brookline, Lydia Jackson in 1800, who was born Oct. 8, 1780. In 1814 he came as a peddler to Hinsdale and article 400 acres of pine timber land on Ischua creek north of Scott's Corners, where he built a log cabin, and then returned to Massachusetts. In 1815 he came with his wife and eight children and his goods in two heavy wagons, and was accompanied by three millwrights. He constructed a saw-mill, and his mill-pond eventually became a reservoir for the Genesee Valley canal. Mr. Farwell was first a Democrat and cast his first vote for Thomas Jefferson; he joined the Republican party and voted last for Lincoln. He died Jan. 12, 1868. Mrs. Farwell survived him until Jan. 3, 1874. Only four of their ten children are living; their six daughters were all teachers.

Benjamin M. Fay came to Hinsdale in his childhood. The family settled in the neighborhood known as Fay hollow. Benjamin was an expert hunter, and was a farmer and a lumberman. He married Phebe A. Shaver (deceased) and had four children. Their daughter Louisa married Spencer S. Peake, a farmer and milk dealer. Children: E. Earle, Lua A., Lilla E., and Mearl B.

Mr. Peake enlisted in Co. K, 85th N. Y. Vols., in April, 1861, served three years, and re-enlisted as a veteran in the same regiment. He was a prisoner twelve months, was wounded at the battle of Plymouth, N. C., and was promoted second lieutenant.

Martin L. Gile came to Hinsdale from Groton, N. Y., in April, 1850, with his wife and seven children, settling where he now lives. During his long life he has assisted in building five Methodist churches. He has been three times married and the father of thirteen children; ten of them are Adaline (only child by his first marriage) married S. G. Clark; Permelia C. (Mrs. Dr. Ira Brownson and now Mrs. W. O. Leland); Martha (Mrs. George W. Davis), deceased; Adelia C. (Mrs. M. F. Newville); Almira C. (Mrs. S. A. Fay); Merritt A.; Caroline A. (Mrs. L. R. May), deceased; Clara P. (Mrs. S. M. Wood); Orthello P. (married Mary Burlingame); William R. (only child of his present wife).

Merritt A. Gile was born in Groton, N. Y., Dec. 3, 1848, and came to Hinsdale with his parents in 1850. He was educated in the common schools and reared a farmer. In 1864 he enlisted in the U. S. navy, serving on the ship Undine at Paducah at the mouth of the Tennessee river. Two weeks later they were attacked by Gen. Hood's army. The commanding officer and several others were killed, and the vessel was captured, but the crew escaped by wading to the opposite shore and tramping 160 miles through the woods, rejoining their squadron at Mound City at the mouth of the Ohio river. Mr. Gile was present at the evacuation of Mobile and was often under fire. Since returning home he has been a farmer adjoining his father. He is a staunch Republican and has served as assessor six consecutive years. He was one of the organizers of the Union Free School of the village and is a member of the Board of Education. He and his wife are members of the Methodist church, of which he is a trustee and the recording steward. May 3, 1867, he married Viola M., daughter of Jeremiah and Lovina (Learn) Raub; children: Edith L. (Mrs. Alexander Adams), Catherine A., Fred M., Thenia M., and Vincent H.

Jesse W. Gould, born in Barton, Vt., June 25, 1797, married in Irasburgh, Vt., Sally Smith, who was born there Aug. 12, 1794. In 1825 they came to Hinsdale, settling on Ischua creek, where he owned a saw-mill and was also a farmer. In 1839 he bought a farm in Franklinville on Ischua creek where Mrs. Gould died April 14, 1846. He died in Potter county, Pa., Dec. 22, 1859. Only four of their ten children are living: Euphemia (Mrs. Horace Gage), Abner, Horace, and James M. The latter was born in Hinsdale in 1832, and has a farm on Olean creek. Sept. 28, 1859, he married Sophia, daughter of Sylvester Sherwin; children living: Lucy L., Emmett M., Leona E.

Moses Haney, son of Archibald, a Revolutionary soldier, was a native of Berks county, Pa., was born in 1802, and married Laura Clarey, a native of Leverette, Mass., who was born in 1801. They first settled in Le Roy. In 1839 they removed to Hinsdale and settled on Oil creek. In 1840 they removed to the "Locks" near Scott's Corners. Mr. Haney was a mason and also conducted an ashery, where he manufactured potash and pearlash. He carried the first mail from Olean to Jersey Shore, and was a week making the round trip on horseback; he made regular trips for over eleven years. He was a farmer the last twenty-five years of his life. He and Mrs. Haney were members of the Presbyterian church of Cuba. He was an old line Whig and later a Republican. He died Feb. 5, 1882; she died Feb. 19, 1866. Children: Amelia, born in 1836, married William W. Gould, Sept. 14, 1862; William J., born Sept. 14, 1839, enlisted in 1861 in the 85th N. Y. Vols., served through the war, was captured at Plymouth, N. C., was incarcerated in Andersonville and Florence prisons, and is now a locomotive engineer; Stanley H., born in 1845, went to Kansas in 1868 and became division superintendent of the Topeka & Santa Fé railroad, and died in California in 1887; and a son who died in infancy. Sept. 1, 1862, William M. Gould enlisted in Co. I, 154th N. Y. Vols., leaving his bride a week after his marriage to go to the front. Being disabled by exposure he was sent to the hospital, where he died Jan. 23, 1864.

Amos Lampson Hedden, son of Martin, was born in 1809. His father was an early settler and a farmer near East Lansing, N. Y. Amos L. married, in Tyrone, N. Y., Maria Johnson in 1832, and in the spring of 1833 he brought his bride to his home at Haskel Flats. He had purchased 100 acres of woodland in Clarkson, Allegany county. When he arrived he found that the "great tornado" had passed over his lot and swept down in a body three-quarters of his purchase. The fallen timber dried, burned, and in three or four years he had good crops of grain. In 1846 he had added lands adjoining in Hinsdale, on which he built what was known as the red house, where he spent the remainder of his life. He served as justice of the peace about five years. Both were members of the Baptist church. He died on Nov. 5, 1868, and Mrs. Hedden on Sept. 20, 1881. Children: Sarah J. (Mrs. James Brown), died at Haskel Flats in April, 1879; John, born April 10, 1837, married Matilda Witter, Dec. 21, 1858, who was born Feb. 25, 1838, and settled on the old homestead, and has four sons and four daughters: Almira (Mrs. Samuel Rood); and William H. H. John Hedden's daughters and oldest son are members of the Baptist church and he has been one of the deacons ten years.

Jefferson Hosley is a native of Massachusetts and was born April 12, 1817. He married Electa Walker in 1840 and in 1841 came from Friendship to Haskel Flats in Hinsdale, settling on the farm where they now live. He purchased 100 acres at $3.50 per acre and has cleared 300 acres, planted orchards, and aided in building school houses and the church edifice in his neighborhood. He has served his town as assessor and highway commissioner, and in politics is a Republican. He is the senior deacon of the Baptist church of Haskel Flats. Children: Cady R.; Henry C., born Oct. 24, 1845; and A. Warner, born in 1848, died at the age of twenty-six.

Cady R. Hosley, son of Jefferson, was born April 23, 1842. He is an extensive farmer. Feb. 19, 1863, he married Elizabeth J. Snyder, who was born July 18, 1845. Children: Philip Sheridan (a graduate of the Westbrook Commercial College), Luella M. (Mrs. Joel Adams), Edgar R., Mabel Electa.

The Judd family in America descends from Thomas Judd, who came from England to Cambridge, Mass., in 1633 or 1634. In 1636 he removed to Hartford, Conn., and about 1644 again removed to Farmington, where he was one of the eighty-four original proprietors of that township. Thomas Judd was one of the first two deputies who represented Farmington in the general court in May, 1647. He was a deacon of the church and familiarly styled Deacon Judd. He had six sons and three daughters. His fourth son, Benjamin Judd, born about 1642, married Mary, daughter of Capt. William Lewis, of Farmington. He had three sons and five daughters, and died in 1689. Jonathan, youngest son of Benjamin, baptized Sept. 22, 1688, married Hannah Diggins, Nov. 27, 1712, settled in East Middlebury in 1716, and died Aug. 28, 1725. Jonathan Judd's posterity are very numerous. He had five sons and three daughters. His youngest child, Daniel Judd, was born Oct.

10, 1724, lived in Colchester, married Lydia Jones, March 14, 1751, and died Oct. 23, 1807. He was twice married and had eight sons and two daughters.

Daniel Judd, Jr., first son of Daniel Judd, married Mehitable Clark, Nov. 13, 1771, settled in Colchester, was in trade in Marlborough in 1783, and about 1800 removed to Pompey, N. Y., where he died in 1830. He had four sons and five daughters. Daniel Clark Judd, first son of Daniel, Jr., was born Oct. 18, 1772, married Debby Hatch, Sept. 9, 1796, who died June 19, 1816, and in Dec., 1816, married, second, widow Jerusha Finley. After his first marriage he successively resided in Williamstown, Mass., Pompey, Bergen, and Middlebury, N. Y., and died with his son David in Warsaw, N. Y., in 1850 or 1851. He had been a joiner, farmer, and surveyor and had seven sons and six daughters. Daniel Judd, fifth son of Daniel Clark Judd, was born in Pompey, N. Y., Sept. 27, 1807, married Hannah A. Armstrong, May 3, 1843, who was born in Lansing, Cayuga county, March 29, 1818, and settled at once in the village of Hinsdale. Mr. Judd was an energetic and enterprising business man. He was an extensive contractor in the construction of canals and railroads and also conducted a general mercantile business. He was also an inventor and patentee of several machines, among them being a valuable excavator used by him and his son. He died Oct. 1, 1877. Mrs. Judd survives and resides on the homestead, where she settled in 1843. Children: Ellen M. (Mrs. Rev. D. F. McDonald), deceased, Ethan Allen, and Charles D. Ethan Allen Judd, born Oct. 25, 1845, was a merchant's clerk in Hinsdale and in Olean for twelve years, and since then he has been either foreman or contractor on public works. Oct. 17, 1872, he married Neola P., daughter of John H. Gould, of Hinsdale. Charles D. Judd, born Sept. 4, 1852, married Flora, daughter of Hon. S. N. Wood, and is assistant cashier of the First National Bank of Olean.

Jacob Learn, of German descent, was born in Easton, Pa., Aug. 10, 1794. He married Catharine Moyer and in March, 1824, came to Ischua and settled where Frank A. Learn now resides. He and his brother George bought on a single contract 320 acres which they divided into two equal parts. This contract was given to the Holland Land Company, and when their successors attempted to force its collection it precipitated the famous Dutch Hill war. Jacob Learn died Feb. 24, 1884; Mrs. Learn died five years earlier. Children: two died in infancy; Thomas enlisted in the Union army and lost his right arm at the battle of Fair Oaks; Lovina (Mrs. Jeremy Raub) died Dec. 27, 1891; John C. married Miss Keziah Green, lived on the homestead, and in Aug., 1884, removed to his present home; Peter is a dentist and farmer in South Dakota; Margaret (Mrs. Frederick Head); Jacob, Jr., served under Grant at the siege of Vicksburg and died on a transport of typhoid fever; Reuben is a dentist in San Francisco; Albertus married the daughter of George Learn and died in Nov., 1890; and Morris enlisted in the Union army in 1864, and married Rosa Babcock and, second, Hattie Kenyon. John C. Learn enlisted in 1864 in the 188th N. Y. Vols., and was discharged in June, 1865. He was at Petersburg and before Richmond and saw General Lee surrender.

William O. Leland, son of Asa, is a native of East Otto and was born May 4, 1827. He was educated in the common schools and in Hinsdale Academy, and taught the district school at Haskel Flats one term. In 1846 he began mercantile business, which he has continued with partners and alone to the present time. About 1866, with his oldest son, he organized a private bank at Springville, which in 1884 they changed to a national bank with a capital of $50,000, of which Mr. Leland and his sons now own the controlling interest, the name being the First National Bank of Springville. The officers are W. O. Leland, president; H. G. Leland, vice-president; E. O. Leland, cashier; F. D. Leland, assistant cashier; and F. W. Leland, teller. Mr. Leland served as a Republican representative of Hinsdale on the Board of Supervisors in 1858, was postmaster twenty-four years and deputy postmaster four years, and has served as a delegate at the district, county, congressional, and State conventions. His children are four sons and Gertie A. (Mrs. M. E. Pierce).

Nicholas Linderman was born in Tompkins county Nov. 22, 1803. He married there, Jan. 6, 1831, Rebecca Whitlock, who was born May 11, 1807. He built a log cabin on Buzzard's hill in Ischua, cut a road to it, and brought hither his bride. He had a deed of 100 acres of land timbered with hardwood and valuable pine, which he converted into shingles, lumber, ashes, and black-salts, which he hauled to Buffalo. He was a man of the old school style. He died where he first settled aged eighty-three years: Mrs. Linderman died March 10, 1849. June 3, 1849, Mr. Linderman married Mrs. Sally C. (Hyde) Winters, who died in 1888. Of his eleven children five sons and three daughters are living. Ezekiel Linderman, born on the homestead Jan. 9, 1833, remained with his father until 1860. April 3, 1860, he married Adaline Frantz and settled on his farm in the southwest part of Ischua. He now resides in Pleasant valley on Olean creek in Hinsdale. Mrs. Linderman died in 1869. Feb. 18, 1872, he married Gertrude Kent. Children: Ella G. (Mrs. C. E. Brooks), born Feb. 16, 1864, and Phebe Rose, born Dec. 1, 1878.

The Marsh family in America are of Welsh descent and first settled in Massachusetts. Nelson H. Marsh was born in Vermont. In 1825 or 1826 he came with his sisters Orpha, Rosetta, Rhoda, and Susan to Hinsdale. His sisters were all teachers. He located a farm on Olean creek, and married Emily Fosmer, who is now the wife of Edward Smith.

William May, a native of Massachusetts, married Rhoda Andrews in Homer, N. Y. She was born in Hartford, Conn., Feb. 11, 1788. In 1825, with six children, they settled on a farm of 139 acres on Dutch hill in Hinsdale, purchasing the interest of Jonathan Allen and receiving his deed from the Holland Land Company. He made black-salts and pine shingles. He died in May, 1840, and his wife in April, 1845.

Abraham Miller was born in Hamilton, Pa., Sept. 8, 1812. In the spring of 1827 he came to Hinsdale with his brother, Peter Miller, who had a wife and two children; and settled on Dutch hill. The only road from Olean then was a path indicated by blazed trees. Remaining with his brother until eighteen years of age he then began business for himself as a sawyer. Sept. 28, 1842, he married Vesta A., daughter of Julius C. Underwood, a pioneer of Machias. He was a farmer on Dutch hill about three years and then went to Pennsylvania as a sawyer. Returning to Hinsdale in July, 1853, he settled in 1857 on a farm on Olean creek where E. Linderman now lives. He now resides in the village. Children: Laurentine Y., Lorentus, Henry C. (died in 1875), Sarah H. (Mrs. Edgar Norton), and Vesta (Mrs. N. H. Marsh).

Laurentine Y. Miller was born in Hinsdale, Dec. 9, 1843. He married Evaline, daughter of Thornton and Charlotte (Smith) Wasson, and in the fall of 1863 he enlisted in the U. S. navy at Brooklyn and served on board of several war vessels. He participated in a number of engagements on the South Carolina coast, and was discharged Aug. 29, 1865, at Washington navy yard. March 19, 1866, he left for the gold fields in Montana, going by the Nicaragua route and reaching Walla Walla on the 14th of May, 1866. On the summit of Bitter Root Mountain on June 18th he found the snow eight feet deep. He finally reached Bear Gulch on July 15th, where he was a miner until November. He then crossed the main divide of the Rocky Mountains alone, arriving at Confederate Gulch, where he was a gold miner five years. In the fall of 1871 he returned to Hinsdale and was married in the winter ensuing. March 29, 1872, he started west again and about April 4th was en route to the summit of the main range of the Rocky Mountains. He arrived at Deer Lodge City on July 10th by again crossing the Rockies, and in August he went alone 200 miles to his old mining location at Confederate Gulch. In the winter of 1874 he returned home again, and since then has made several trips through the west and northwest and spent two years more in the mines of Colorado. Mr. Miller is an efficient worker in the Republican party. He is now serving his sixth consecutive year as supervisor of Hinsdale.

The Norton family belongs to the pioneer and prominent families of Cattaraugus county. Early in the century (1807) Ira Norton, a native of Goshen, Litchfield county, Conn., born Oct. 6, 1783, with his wife, Lucy (Perkins) Norton, and one child, emigrated to Franklinville. This section was then known as the far west. Mr. Norton located on the east part of lot 21, township 4, range 4. A few years later (1810) he became a resident of Great Valley and settled on lot 38, township 3, range 6, which contained 136 acres. Here this noble pioneer devoted himself to the improvement of his land, not neglecting, however, the religious interests of his co-workers in the settlement. He was a true scion of the New England Nortons, who were thoroughly imbued with religious zeal and fervor, and conspicuous as clergymen and church leaders. The first meetings of what was afterward the Presbyterian church of Great Valley were held in Mr. Norton's house, and here with others Deacon Norton and his wife worshiped until a school house was built. He was a firm anti-liquor advocate, and was the first person in Great Valley to dispense with liquor at raisings, which was done at the erection of his own house. Mr. Norton was a man of ability and integrity, which was soon recognized by the people, and he was elected to offices of trust, among them justice of the peace and supervisor. July 26, 1820, he was qualified as associate judge* of the County Court. The duties of these official trusts were discharged with dignity and satisfaction. After a long life of usefulness Judge Norton died in 1866, aged eighty-three years, "full of years and full of honors." For a half-century his home had been in Great Valley, and the unbroken wilderness was now transformed into fruitful fields and pleasant homes. "He loved his God and the Old Flag, and lived to see it float over the whole of the United States." Of his fourteen children nine attained maturity. The Norton homestead is now occupied by his oldest surviving son, Andrews L. Norton; another son, E. D. Norton, is a resident of Delevan in Yorkshire: to both of these gentlemen we are indebted for material for this sketch.

Hon. Nelson I. Norton, third son of Ira and Lucy (Perkins) Norton, was born in Great Valley, March 31, 1820, on the Norton homestead. His boyhood was passed on the farm, aiding in its multifarious labors, and attending to his studies when opportunity offered. He acquired more than an ordinary education, and became well versed in political and historical matters. He taught common schools two winters, but preferring mercantile life he entered the store of Morris & Hawley at Hinsdale in 1841 as clerk. In this relation he passed some years, then became the mercantile partner of Alonzo Hawley, and later conducted merchandising alone until 1851, when Mr. Hawley purchased the business. Mr. Norton then retired to his farm in Hinsdale (now the home of Mrs. Norton), where he devoted himself to its management. Here his death occurred Oct. 28, 1887, after forty years' residence in the town. Mr. Norton was an "old line Whig" until the formation of the Republican party, when he became an active member of that organization. His influence was early and prominently felt in the civil and political circles of his town and county. Possessing fine natural abilities, and being a ready, fluent, and gifted speaker, he was often "on the stump," where, aided by his popularity among the people, he did effective service. He was chosen justice of the peace early and was a capable, impartial, and satisfactory magistrate for twenty years. He was in positions of great responsibility during the Civil war. Serving on the Board of Supervisors in 1860, 1865, 1866, and 1867, and representing his Assembly district in 1861, he was brought face to face with the great problems connected with that historic period, and did good and patriotic service. In 1872 he was chosen presidential elector and was called by the people of his congressional district to represent them in the Forty-fourth Congress. To this latter highly important office he did not seek a renomination, as his personal friend, Alonzo Hawley, desired it and was a candidate for the place. In all these positions Mr. Norton manifested a keen insight into men and their motives, a facility in discriminating the true from the false, and faithfully performed the high duties devolving upon him. He united with the Congregational church at Great Valley in 1820 and held to its principles and tenets through life. He made many friends and retained them by his genial personality.

Mr. Norton married, Feb. 15, 1847, Mary E., daughter of Elias and Dolly (Fletcher) Parker,* of Arcade, Wyoming county. She was born Jan. 23, 1820. Their children were Ella L. (Mrs. Oscar L. Dyer), who died in 1870, leaving one child, Belle, who married O. F. Witter, of Hinsdale, is a graduate of the Olean High School, once won a scholarship in Cornell University in a competitive examination, and has been a successful teacher; Elbert N. (killed by a horse in 1870); Herbert A.; Leonard R. (died in infancy); Anna M. (Mrs. Franklin Hess), who has one child, Eastman, and resides in Fort Fred Steele, Wyoming; William S.; and James N.

William S. Norton espoused newspaper work, shortly after attaining his majority in 1880, as local writer on the Olean Democrat. He was next local news-gatherer and telegraph editor on the Olean Morning Herald and in 1884 took charge of the local department of the Olean Evening Times, remaining there until November, 1885. In June, 1886, he assumed the conduct of the local department of the Olean Evening Herald and held the position until Sept., 1887. The next winter he performed satisfactorily the arduous labors incumbent on the sole proof-reader of the Buffalo Evening and Sunday News. In 1890 he, with D. McMillan, established the Olean Sunday Hatcher, of which he soon became sole proprietor until March, 1891, when he discontinued its publication to accept a responsible position on the Buffalo Courier. He is now the head, in point of salary and term of service, of the Courier's reportorial

*Mr. Parker and his wife were natives of Westford, Mass. They resided in Cavendish, Vt., near the Connecticut river, for some years, but came to Arcade in its early days, the journey with their own teams requiring three weeks' time. staff. He married Nettie C. Wait, has three children: Zora L., Ralph R., and Iva, and resides in Buffalo.

James N. Norton was born in Hinsdale, Oct. 13, 1862. He was educated at the common schools supplemented by attendance at Rochester Business University. After graduating here in 1882 he became book-keeper for Barse & Willover at Great Valley. On the death of Mr. Barse in 1885 he became the partner of Mr. Willover in the firm doing business as C. Willover. In 1887, in connection with Mr. Willover and G. A. Woods, Mr. Norton formed the firm of C. Willover & Co., as lumber dealers and manufacturers of lumber, at Morrison, Pa. In 1889 Mr. Willover retired and the Morrison Run Lumber Company, consisting of J. C. French, J. N. Norton, and G. A. Woods, was formed. This company established a general store at Morrison in connection with their lumbering, which, on Mr. Norton's retirement from the company a few months later, was purchased by him and A. E. Foster. Jan. 1, 1892, Mr. Norton purchased Mr. Foster's interest and now carries on three mercantile establishments in three different places—Morrison, Dunkle, and Newtown—in which he does an annual business of from $60,000 to $70,000. The postoffice at Morrison was established in 1888 with Mr. Norton as postmaster. He still holds the position. Mr. Norton married, July 19, 1888, Clara, daughter of A. B. and Eliza (Guthrie) Bullard, of Salamanca. They have three children: James R., Ellen B., and Neva.

Bela Norton, son of James, was born in Norway, N. Y., Oct. 21, 1797. He was a farmer in Herkimer county until 1839, when he married there his second wife, Mrs. Mary Fort, Jan. 24, 1839, and with his family removed to Hinsdale and settled on the farm now owned by his son, Edgar Norton, where he died Jan. 30, 1870. Mr. Norton was a man of fine natural abilities. He was a Democrat in politics, was prominent in town affairs, and was supervisor in 1850, 1851, 1852, and 1853. Of his ten children eight are living; all his six sons were Democrats. Edgar Norton, second son of the second marriage, was born on the homestead, which he still owns, May 19, 1845. Nov. 29, 1871, he married Sarah H., daughter of Abram Miller; children: Fred E. and Clarence H.

Aaron Osmun was born in Lansing, N. Y., July 28, 1805. He married Catherine Cary in 1821 and in 1830 they settled on Keller hill in Hinsdale, where he spent the remainder of his life. He purchased his wood lot of 100 acres at $1.25 per acre, and eventually cleared 350 acres of land. He died Jan. 15, 1889. Mrs. Osmun died in June, 1891. One son, three daughters, twenty-seven grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren survive them.

Peter Putnam, the first settler of the town of Hinsdale and a cousin of General Putnam, of Revolutionary fame, was born in 1776. In 1804 he married Mary Walters in Almond, Allegany county. In 1810 he went to Olean, where he made a raft and with his family aboard and his brother for a pilot started down the Allegheny, intending to sell his lumber in Cincinnati and settle there. In that city his family were all ill with fever and ague. With them he returned to Olean with a span of horses and a wagon loaded with his property. Jan. 1, 1811, he settled in the woods where George Scott now lives. His nearest neighbor on the south was at Olean and on the north at Franklinville. He raised a log house with the help of the Indians, who had a camp near by. He was a great hunter, was an industrious pioneer, planted the second orchard in Cattaraugus county, and raised the first frame barn in Hinsdale. He died in Feb., 1844; Mrs. Putnam died Dec. 22, 1842.

John Putnam, oldest son of Peter, was born in the log cabin on the homestead Aug. 10, 1811, and is distinguished as the first white child born in Hinsdale. Jan. 1, 1839, he married Sarah A. Learn, and Jan. 5, 1841, their son Joseph M. C. was born. Mrs. Putnam died Jan 15, 1841. May 9, 1843, he married, second, Mary A. Learn. At his marriage Mr. Putnam settled on the homestead: in 1840 he rented that and settled on a farm in Humphrey. His health failed in 1877 and they moved onto the home Mrs. Putnam had purchased at Scott's Corners, where they now reside. Mr. Putnam was justice of the peace in Humphrey sixteen consecutive years.

Worden Salisbury, son of Ambrose and Sylvia (Morgan) Salisbury, was born in Scott, Cortland county, Dec. 12, 1830, and has always been a farmer. About 1844 he came with his parents to Haskel Flats. July 1, 1853, he married Sophia S., daughter of William G. and Azubah (Cummings) Todd, and about 1860 they settled where they now reside. They are members of the Methodist church. Children: Hugh S., Nettie Belle (Mrs. W. Brown), Guy W.

Abner Smith was born in Littleton, N. H., March 7, 1791. His father served through the Revolutionary war. About 1816 he came from Irasburgh, Vt., to the Holland purchase. In 1820 he married, in Hinsdale, Lucia Yates. He became a lumberman and piloted his own rafts and others down the Allegheny. He was also a farmer, and resided on a fine farm on Ischua creek and later purchased another farm with a hotel in Ischua village and conducted both about twenty years. Mrs. Smith died in 1855. He soon afterward went to Iowa and died at the home of his oldest son, Abner W. Smith, March 7, 1873. His children all removed to western States except Charlotte M. (Mrs. Thornton Wasson.) Their daughter Evaline married L. Y. Miller.

Jacob Snyder came to Haskel Flats from Lansing, N. Y., as early as 1832. He married in Tompkins county Mary Learn, whose grandparents were killed by the Indians at the Wyoming massacre. They settled on the farm owned by Mr. Baker. Of his eight children four are living. The youngest, Elizabeth J., is the wife of Cady R. Hosley. Mr. Snyder sold his farm and retired to Cuba, N. Y., where he died in Nov., 1875.

Barzilla B., son of Nirum and Sylvia (Bradley) Storrs, was born in Franklinville, March 23, 1846. He has made school teaching his vocation, and has taught about twenty-seven terms. He is now a merchant, teacher, and justice of the peace. June 16, 1872, he married Ettie L. Main and has two children.

William G. Todd, son of Daniel Todd, the first white child born in Homer, N. Y., was born in his father's native town and married there Azubah Cummings, a native of Connecticut. They were among the pioneers of Friendship. About 1843 he removed to Haskel Flats and settled on the farm where Cady Hosley now lives. He drew the frame of his house and materials to cover it from Friendship. He first built a small horse barn, and because he would not furnish whisky while raising it he spent two days in putting it up. He was captain of militia, served as justice of the peace, and was a member and one of the founders of the Baptist church at Haskel Flats. He died about 1854.

Alfred C. Torrey, of sturdy New England origin, was born in East Java, Wyoming county, July 8, 1838. His father, Rev. Timothy Torrey, was a native of Bethany, Vt., was a soldier in the War of 1812, and came with his father, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, to Wyoming county in his boyhood. A. C. Torrey's mother's parents were natives of Connecticut. She was a daughter of Daniel Curtis, who also settled in Wyoming county. Timothy Torrey was an itinerant Methodist preacher and traveled on a large circuit among the pioneer towns. Alfred C. Torrey came to Hinsdale with his parents about 1850. He began business for himself as a manufacturer and dealer in pine shingles. Later he was a carpenter and builder. He has also been engaged in the oil regions and for the past nine years he has been a merchant. June 25, 1859, he married Susan Powers; children: Ella J., A. Leroy, and Theresa (Mrs. Dr. A. K. Corbin).

David Webster, son of Isaac Webster, was born in 1783. He served three months in the War of 1812 and his father was a soldier and pensioner of the Revolution. David married in Dutchess county, about 1804, Hannah Gifford, and at once went to Fabius, N. Y., where he was a farmer until Dec., 1833, when he came to Hinsdale, settling on Olean creek, where he resided until his death in Nov., 1851. Mrs. Webster died about 1848. Of their thirteen children twelve attained mature years; four are living and only the youngest son, Hiram Webster, resides in Hinsdale. He was born in Fabius, Feb. 7, 1827, succeeded his father on the homestead, and married, first, in January, 1850, Lucinda, daughter of Lewis Fay. She died May 9, 1868, having borne one son, deceased, and a daughter, Addie L. Jan. 18, 1872, he married Mrs. Miranda (Bishop) Crosby. They have one daughter, Clara M. Mrs. Webster has a son, Emmet H. Crosby, by her first marriage. He has served as assessor nine consecutive years and votes with the Prohibitionists. He is prominent in the M. E. church, of which he, Mrs. Webster, and the oldest daughter are members. He is one of its stewards and trustees.

R. Gifford Webster, a native of Pompey, N. Y., was born Feb. 7, 1810. He married Marinda Quimby in Fabius in 1832 and in 1834 removed to Fay hollow in Hinsdale, where he cleared a farm of 106 acres, which was his home for more than half a century. He died Jan. 28, 1892. His widow survived him only ten weeks. Eight of their ten children are living: Henry, Marian (Mrs. C. A. Smith), Harriet (Mrs. Morian), Henrietta (Mrs. Osgood), Jennie C. (Mrs. Davis), Marcella (Mrs. Rogers), Ann M. (Mrs. Densmore), and Bela. Bela Webster has a farm adjoining the homestead. Sept. 11, 1872, he married Emma Pelton. Children: De Witt D., born June 4, 1874, and Cora May, born April 18, 1878.

John Willover was a native of New Jersey and descended from sturdy Holland ancestry. He was born in Essex county, N. J., in 1806. His father settled on lease lands, where he accumulated a little property, and emigrated thence to Tyrone, N. Y., when John was a lad of seven years. There he cleared a farm and died. John Willover married, in Tyrone, Miss Esther Frost about 1829. In 1831 he settled at Haskel Flats in Hinsdale, and very soon after built a saw-mill on Haskel creek, the first in the neighborhood. Later he purchased another farther down the stream built by Oliver Phelps, and conducted both some years. The valley was covered with a fine growth of pine trees and he became an extensive manufacturer of pine lumber and shingles, which he rafted to market down the Allegheny and Ohio rivers. Besides his lumber business he cleared three good farms. He came to the wilderness without means except a yoke of oxen, which drew his family and goods from Tyrone. But he had energy, courage, perseverance, and industry. In his business life he gave employment to a host of men and was the means of helping the industrious poor to help themselves. He purchased timber land, reserved the pine timber, and sold the soil to those who wanted homes. Mr. Willover was the prominent person in his neighborhood—a man of sterling integrity and high character. He was a Whig in politics and joined the ranks of the Republican party at its formation. He was the first supervisor of his party in town, in 1856, and was re-elected in 1857. He died Jan. 17, 1873. Mrs. Will-over died March 5, 1888. Children: Christopher; Hetty A. (Mrs. Fair), of Oil City, Pa.; Hannah E. (Mrs. Canfield), of Ohio; Julia E. (Mrs. Ward), of Allegany, N. Y.; and Lucy M., who died at the age of sixteen years.

Abram Willover, brother of John, was born in Tyrone, N. Y., about 1804, married there Miss Emeline Coon, and came to Haskel Flats about 1832. He was a natural mechanic and could turn his hand to any job of woodwork. He was a first-class carpenter and joiner and a good millwright. In 1839 he settled on the woodland farm on which his son Abram now lives, and there had the double occupation of house building and farming. He cleared up his farm, planted an orchard, and died in 1852. Mr. Willover was a genial and agreeable companion who could give and take a joke. He was a very good neighbor and quite popular with the people, and served as constable several years. Mrs. Willover remained his widow and survived until July 17, 1891, aged eighty-two. Children: Julia (Mrs. James B. Norton), of Salamanca; Halsey, a farmer in Ischua; Martin V., who enlisted in Co. K, 85th N. Y. Vols., was captured at Plymouth, N. C., was confined in Andersonville prison, and died in Florence; Annie (Mrs. William Smith), deceased; William, a soldier in the 154th N. Y. Vols. who marched with Sherman to the sea and was discharged at the close of the war; John, a soldier in the 154th N. Y. Vols. and a prisoner three months in Belle Isle; Elizabeth, who died at the age of seventeen; Eveline (Mrs. George Durfee), of Portville; and Abram. Abram Willover has served as constable, has been engaged in the oil regions of Bradford, Pa., and married Miss Anna Reynolds. He purchased the homestead of the heirs, and administered to the comfort of his aged mother the last eight years of her life. Upon this old farm he still resides.

Christopher Willover, oldest son of John Willover, was born at Haskel Flats, April 8, 1832. He was educated in the common schools and in Grand River Institute, a branch of Oberlin College, in Austinburgh, Ohio. He began his business life as the financial manager in taking a raft of lumber down the river and at the same time worked as a raftsmen. He spent the next three years as tallyman and measurer of lumber. In 1858 he began the business of buying lumber on commission, which he followed until 1865, when he became a buyer on his own account and has since been a heavy dealer and many times a bold speculator. He was the partner of the late C. V. B. Barse, of Olean, in the lumber business from 1864 until the latter's death. Mr. Willover is a man of more than ordinary business ability, is an able financier, and has the energy to accomplish whatever he attempts. In his long course in business he has sustained heavy losses, but mainly because he is generous to a fault. His disinterested benevolence has led him to entangle himself in the business of his friends and has obliged him to pay their debts. In his own ventures he has planned well. His real estate embraces more than a thousand acres. He has a fertile farm at Haskel Flats, where he has a beautiful home. He is popular, gives his aid and influence to forward every good object, and has lately contributed the larger half towards the erection of the elegant Union church of his neighborhood.

Mr. Willover was elected a justice of the peace in 1856 and served a term of four years. He represented Hinsdale on the Board of Supervisors in 1870, 1872, and 1881. Jan. 4, 1860, he married Miss Mary T. Quin, who was born in Newport, Chemung county, Sept. 11, 1834. Children: Winnifred S., born July 27, 1861, married Dana Osmun, a farmer of Haskel Flats; John H., born July 15, 1863, died in infancy; Frank E., born Aug. 13, 1865, married Myra Hedden, and is a farmer on the homestead; Lucy A., born Oct. 14, 1869, married Charles H. Fuller, a farmer on Keller hill; and John C., born Oct. 7, 1870, a member of the firm of Phelps, Sibley & Co., of Cuba, N. Y.

Emery Wood, son of Wheelock Wood, was born in Gainesville, N. Y., Nov. 13, 1797. He was raised on a farm and attended the primitive common school four weeks, but by improving his leisure moments he became an expert mathematician, grammarian, and historian. At the age of fifteen he enlisted as a fifer in the War of 1812 and served three months. In the summer of 1813 he again entered the "tented field" as a substitute and in July ensuing was made a prisoner at Black Rock and sent to Halifax, where he was confined until June, 1814. In Sept., 1814, he joined the American army and was captured at the battle of Fort Erie and carried to Quebec, where he remained a prisoner till the war closed. In 1817 Mr. Wood came to Hinsdale. He was very soon engaged in the lumber trade, and acquired a large territory of pine timbered lands, including more than half of the grounds now occupied by the village. In 1825 he opened the first store in Hinsdale and was the first postmaster of the town. He conducted an exchange or barter trade. At the time he opened his store and the first postoffice he held the offices of town clerk, justice of the peace, overseer of the poor, and colonel of the 226th Regiment militia. In 1829, 1830, 1831, and 1832 he represented his town on the Board of Supervisors. Colonel Wood's marked ability and public spirit were shown in forwarding every good enterprise, and especially in the educational interests of Hinsdale. He was a leader in founding the Hinsdale Academy, for which he donated the site, and generously patronized it in educating all his family. Sept. 16, 1819, he married Permelia, daughter of Royal and Rhoda Marsh, who was born in Vermont, Dec. 12, 1796. Colonel Wood died Feb. 24, 1875, and Mrs. Wood Nov. 18, 1872. Children: Frederick M., born June 19, 1820, died June 3, 1861; Hon. William H. (see page 334): Permelia M., born Feb. 12, 1824, married John H. Gould, and died Dec. 6, 1862; Lewis, born Sept. 19, 1826, accidentally drowned Oct. 7, 1828; Emery L., born Sept. 1, 1830, drowned July 16, 1837; Hon. Staley N., born May 22, 1832; Evelyn R., born July 2, 1834; and Hon. Wales W., born April 25, 1837, now serving his second term as county judge in Illinois.

Hon. Staley N. Wood received his education in Hinsdale Academy. He was a clerk for E. M. & T. T. Wasson at the age of fourteen, and clerked also for his father and brother and for the late Judge Martin, of Olean, until 1832 or 1853, when he became a partner in general merchandise trade with his brother Frederick in Hinsdale. In the fall of 1857 he was a salesman for A. & F. Reed in New York; in 1872 he was a partner with F. & L. B. Reed, their successors. All this time except two years he was a citizen of Hinsdale. During the late war he was a war Democrat, and Governor Fenton, as a compliment for his patriotism, sent him a captain's commission. Mr. Wood represented Hinsdale on the Board of Supervisors in 1868, 1869, 1877, 1878, 1879, and 1880. He ran for elector of General Hancock in 1868 and in 1866 for congressman of his district. In 1861, in 1875, and again a third time he was the nominee of his party for member of Assembly and at each election he greatly reduced the majority of his Republican opponent. He was also nominated for the office of treasurer of Cattaraugus county. April 19, 1883, Governor Cleveland tendered him the position of State assessor, which he resigned in March, 1892. June 2, 1853, he married Laura A., daughter of widow Mary Fort, now the widow of the late Bela Norton. Children: Mary P. (Mrs. F. D. Leland), George F., Ellen J. (Mrs. A. T. Nelson), Flora V. (Mrs. C. D. Judd), and Lewis B. Frederick Wood was supervisor of Hinsdale in 1854 and 1855.

Emery Yates, a native of Woodstock, Vt., came to Hinsdale from Gainesville, N. Y., about 1813 and settled at Scott's Corners where E. A. Hull now lives. He erected a saw-mill on Oil creek and engaged in lumbering. He also built a saw-mill farther up Oil creek on the site of the Tousley mill. He later established a boat-yard on Oil creek a little below his saw-mill at Scott's Corners, and there built flat-boats. He was also an expert in constructing mill-dams. He died at Scott's Corners.

Emery W. Yates, oldest son of Emery Yates, was born at Scott's Corners, Nov. 20, 1815. He began the trade of carpenter and joiner at the age of sixteen and followed that avocation until approaching old age. He has never had a home outside of his native town. He cast his first presidential ballot for William H. Harrison and has never missed a vote at a general election. He married Polly Coats, Dec. 14, 1836, who died Nov. 22, 1891. Of their five children two sons are living: Theodore H., a veteran of the late war, and Edgar N. Warren C. enlisted in 1861 and died in Andersonville prison.

Lorenzo Yates, son of the pioneer Emery, was born at Scott's Corners, Dec. 23, 1819. He learned the trades of carpenter, joiner, and millwright, which he followed until 1854, when he engaged with S. Augustus Mitchell, of Philadelphia, the celebrated map publisher, and was his general agent six years. He was then general agent for four years for several publishers, and since 1864 has led a retired life. Aug. 18, 1846, he married Abigail, daughter of John E. Wright. She was born in Richfield, N. Y., July 6, 1823. Five of their seven children grew to maturity: Lucy (Mrs. Henry J. Conrad), Carlton E., Julia (Mrs. M. L. Goodrich), Allen, and Eva E. (Mrs. G. E. Hogg).

CHAPTER XXXII.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF HUMPHREY.*

HUMPHREY was erected from Burton (now Allegany) on May 12, 1836, and was named for Charles Humphrey, of Tompkins county, then speaker of the Assembly. The town is situated nearly in the center of the county, and is described in the Holland Land Company's survey as town three, range five. It is bounded on the north by Franklinville, on the east by Ischua and Hinsdale, on the south by Allegany, and on the west by Great Valley, and contains 22,583 acres of land, nearly all sloping uplands. It is traversed from north to south by two distinct ranges of hills which raise their summits many hundred feet above the level of the Allegheny river. Some of these hills were settled at an early day and were named after the men who cleared away the primeval forest and made homes thereon. The town is drained by three streams of considerable size: Sugartown creek, in the northwest part, a tributary of Great Valley creek; Wright's creek, flowing south through the center, an affluent of the same stream; and Five Mile run, in the southeast part, emptying into the Allegheny river near Allegany village. These springs are fed and maintained by springs of pure soft water which flow from the hillsides in every part of the town.

Russell Chapell was the first settler in Humphrey. He came from Schenectady county in 1815 and settled on lot 56 in the Sugartown valley. After a long and weary journey through a howling wilderness he selected a location in this beautiful valley and built a log house near where Richard Leaning now lives. After a few years he sold his place and moved over the divide into the valley of Wright's creek, where he founded a settlement known far and wide as Chapellsburg. Mr. Chapell made good improvements and built a tavern that was a noted stopping-place on the old stage route from Buffalo to Olean. This was for a long time the most important point in town and was the scene of many a high carnival in the time long ago. Mr. Chapell was postmaster a long time and held various town offices. He died May 30, 1857, aged seventy-two years. His wife Phoebe died February 3, 1863, aged eighty-three years. Soon after Mr. Chapell's arrival he was joined by Thomas B. and Pauline Shepard, a son and daughter of Mrs. Chapell by a former marriage.

Richard Wright came from Washington county in 1819, settled in Great Valley, built a saw-mill on Wright's creek, and made other improvements. He soon sold this property to David Chamberlain and bought Mr. Chapell's place in Sugartown. He made extensive improvements at this place and built a fine house and good barns; the house is yet standing and is occupied by Richard Leaning. Mr. Wright was a man of note—was a colonel of militia, county sheriff, and for a long time associate judge of Cattaraugus (see p. 280). Capt. Nathan Howe was an early settler of the Sugartown valley, but did not remain long; he removed to near the mouth of Great Valley creek, where he had a saw-mill. Alonzo Berry and William Baxter were also early settlers in Sugartown. Mr. Berry settled on the sidehill between Sugartown and Humphrey Center. His son, Milo Berry, has been justice of the peace thirty years and justice of sessions for the county. His oldest son, Frank Berry, is the present supervisor of the town.

Stephen and Benjamin Cole, brothers, came from Phelps, Ontario county, in 1822, with only one dollar in money and their little all tied up in a bundle. They made the trip on foot and located on lot 38. They built a cabin near a spring on the sidehill a little southwest of the Humphrey Center cemetery. It was floored with split timbers and roofed with elm bark. They were soon followed by their father, the Rev. Benjamin Cole, who was born in County Tipperary, Ireland, and was the first Irishman to settle in the town. He was educated for a Catholic priest, but ran away from home and enlisted in the British army. He came to this country with Lord Howe's troops during the Revolutionary war and at the battle of White Plains he deserted and joined the American army, and fought with it to the close, after which he married Rachel Salisbury and became a Baptist minister. He died in Humphrey on January 2, 1834, aged eighty years. His sons Seth and Elijah came to the town with him. Seth was twice elected supervisor of Great Valley before Allegany and Humphrey were taken off. Stephen S. Cole married Lemira, daughter of Alonzo Berry. Their oldest son, Marvin S. Cole, was a prominent educator of the county and is now station agent at Machias Junction; their youngest son, G. W. Cole, is a lawyer at Salamanca. Stephen Cole was the first supervisor of Humphrey and held that office nine consecutive terms and eleven terms in all. In 1851 he was elected a member of Assembly for the First District of Cattaraugus county. Benjamin Cole remained a bachelor. They both resided near each other in Humphrey until the summer of 1877, when they died in the same house within two weeks of each other. Foster B. Salisbury, a cousin of the Coles, came about the same time and settled on lot 37. He built his cabin on the flat southeast of the present residence of Patrick O'Brien. He erected the first saw-mill in town. It stood on the creek within a few rods of Mr. O'Brien's house. He afterward built a grist-mill and a steam saw-mill at Humphrey Center. He held nearly every office in the town, and succeeded Stephen S. Cole as supervisor, holding the office nine terms in all. At the first town meeting he was elected justice of the peace, assessor, school inspector, and overseer of road district No. 2. He died at Humphrey Center on September 11, 1871, aged sixty-eight years. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. Benjamin Cole. She was the mother of his son Barnard and died in 1864. Afterward he married Miss Elizabeth Thomas, who was the mother of his other son, Frank B. Barnard Salisbury was supervisor of the town four consecutive terms (1876-79) and is now editor of the Ellicottville News at Ellicottville. Frank B. Salisbury is connected with the Western New York & Pennsylvania railway service at Rochester.

Almon Guthrie, whose wife was a sister of Foster B. Salisbury and a cousin of the Coles, came at the same time and first settled on the bank of the creek on lot 37, across the road from the present residence of William Reed. He soon removed down the creek about two miles, and built a log house that stood in an orchard just back of the dwelling of his son, Edwin Guthrie, on lot 51. Mr. Guthrie was supervisor of the town three terms and filled many other town offices. He reared a large family, nearly all of whom are still living in the immediate vicinity of the old homestead, and all of whom grew up to be honorable and respected citizens of their native town. Danforth Marsh settled on lot 37 where Myron Berry now lives and Oliver Marsh on lot 38 where Leroy Litchfield resides. John L. Sexton lived on the top of the hill on the present farm of Thomas Kenney, northeast of the residence of Frank Snyder. Seth Cole settled near a spring 100 rods southeast of the Center.

Hatfield Cooper located on lot 29 where D. Gill now lives; Caleb West on lot 39 and Oliver Scott on lot 40; Richard Bozard on lot 6; and Joseph Learn came in an early day and settled on lot 7. Learn cleared a large farm and by hard work and great energy accumulated a nice property. His youngest son, George P. Learn, has represented Humphrey three times on the Board of Supervisors and is one of the leading citizens of the town. Thomas Barker was one of the first settlers. He was supervisor one term; his son, Marshall Barker, also held the office a year and is now a prominent business man. L. B. Pierce settled on lot 6. He raised a large family, some of whom are still living, respected citizens of the town. His son, H. A. Pierce, is a justice of the peace and a prominent business man, and Fred Pierce, a son of H. A., has been supervisor of the town three terms.

Other early settlers were Henry Reed, Abijah Rowley, and Abraham Wright. Francis Matteson, James Hitchcock, Eri Tracy, Parker and Freeman Hale, G. Worden, Freeman and Horace Hitchcock, and Barber Wilber came from Onondaga county and settled on Five Mile run. Russell Chapell put in the first crop of grain on lot 56 in 1816 and kept the first tavern and was the first postmaster.

Foster B. Salisbury built the first store, which was stocked and kept by Sawyer & Foote at Humphrey Center. The first goods were hauled on wagons from Buffalo by Joseph Learn and Richard Bozard. Jeremiah Crandall paid for the first piece of land in town, being five acres on lot 37, now owned by H. A. Pierce. Nathan Howe and Samuel Reynolds settled on Howe hill. Simeon Bacon was the pioneer of the valley east of Chapellsburg where Patrick Ryan now lives. David Wheeler came from Junius, Seneca county, about 1830, and settled on lot 38. His wife was a sister to Hatfield Cooper. Their oldest son, David Wheeler, Jr., married Sarah, youngest daughter of Rev. Benjamin Cole. They settled on lot 31 and raised five boys and four girls. The oldest three boys—John, Seth, and William H.—served through the Rebellion; the oldest daughter, Mary, is the wife of Joseph B. Miller, who was twice supervisor of the town, justice of the peace, etc.

The forest was swarming with wolves, bears, and other wild animals that killed the settlers' sheep and carried away their pigs. Nathan Howe found a big bear in his pig-pen trying to capture his hog. Howe attacked bruin with an axe and after a desperate fight succeeded in killing him. Almon Guthrie was awakened one night by a commotion among a litter of pigs that occupied a shed near the house. He got up and looking out of the window saw a very large bear chasing the pigs around the house. Mrs. Guthrie carefully opened the window and Mr. Guthrie shot the bear. Ransom Green killed a bear weighing 400 pounds in his corn on the place now owned by Charles Fay. A pack of wolves visited the cabin of the Cole brothers one night and succeeded in getting on the roof. As the Coles had no gun they drove the wolves off by throwing fire-brands at them. David Snow and John Logan, two Indians living on the bank of the Allegheny near where Kill Buck depot now stands, claimed Humphrey as their hunting ground at the time the first settlers came into the central valley. These Indians had a heavy brush fence running across the valley from the point of Mount Tom to the opposite hill, near where the store of James Devine now stands in Humphrey Center. This fence obstructed the free passage of animals up and down the valley, while the Indians, secreted at a convenient point, could easily shoot them. John Logan presented the first claim for a bounty of $20 on a wolf killed in the town. At the same time David Snow presented a claim of $7.50 each for five whelps and both Indians claimed the entire amount. Justices Wright and Salisbury, before whom the claim came, settled it by giving Logan the bounty on the wolf and Snow the bounty on the whelps. John Green, of Great Valley, captured seven young wolves in the butt of a hollow pine tree which stood at the side of the road opposite the Humphrey Center cemetery, upon which he secured the bounty of $7.50 each. Hatfield Cooper was the first white man to kill a wolf in the town. John Logan and David Snow claimed the bounty on the ground that it was killed on their hunting ground. They went so far as to bring suit before Justices Richard Wright and Stephen S. Cole. John Green, of Great Valley, was counsel for the Indians and Foster B. Salisbury for Cooper, who finally got the bounty. Samuel Cooper, a son of Hatfield Cooper, was a great hunter. He once told the writer that he killed thirty-three deer, one wolf, and twenty martin in one week. Soon after they came to Cooper hill he was hunting for deer and found a track that he followed all day without seeing the game, but in making a turn the animal crossed its own track and Cooper saw that he was being followed by an Indian. The next morning Cooper again took up the hunt and about noon the deer again crossed its track and Cooper saw that the Indian was still on his trail. He then stepped one side and hid behind a tree. Soon the Indian made his appearance with a gun carried handy, moving carefully through the brush. As Cooper was satisfied that the Indian was looking for him he shot and killed him. This occurred at a point about 100 rods due north from where Thomas Martin now lives, on Cooper hill. Cooper dug a hole and buried the body where it fell. John L. Sexton was the greatest slayer of deer, having killed over 300 during the few years he lived in town. The first deer he killed fell near the top of the bank about twenty rods below where Patrick O'Brien now lives, and rolled down the bank into the creek.

Rev. Benjamin Cole was the first pensioner in the town. He received $8 a month for services in the Revolutionary war; some of his papers, bearing the signature of John C. Calhoun, secretary of war, are now in possession of the writer. The first couple married in town was Edward Bryant and Pauline Shepard (aged sixteen), the ceremony being performed by the Rev. Mr. Dow at the residence of Judge Wright in Sugartown. They lived together four years and separated and Mr. Bryant died five years thereafter. Mrs. Bryant, at the age of twenty-five, married William S. Morris and lived to a very great age at the residence of her step-father, Russell Chapell. Her daughter, Mrs. W. J. Sherman, inherited the fine old place and now resides there. Jack Hall and Cornelia Rowley were married by Judge Wright and were the parents of the first white child born in the town. The first death was that of an emigrant who had camped on lot 56. He was buried on a knoll a little north of where the upper Sugartown cheese factory now stands. F. B. Salisbury put in the first cider-mill in Humphrey. It was run by water-power at his saw-mill. He also put in a turning lathe that was operated in one corner of his saw-mill, where he turned out bed posts and sides and chair posts and rounds and all other turned goods required by the settlers. David Wheeler, Jr., and Hector Pritchard were carpenters and they made the coffins required out of cherry boards. Dr. Augustus Crary, who was at one time president of the Geneva Medical College, was the first physician. He settled in Sugartown about 1825. His daughter Caroline married Dr. Calvin Chickering, who came about the same time, but did not live long. His widow married Dr. Virgil Reed, who practiced medicine until his death, which occurred in 1866. Drs. Crary, Chickering, and Reed all died on the same place in Sugartown. Mrs. Reed is still living at an advanced age on the old homestead where her father and two husbands died. Philemon O. Berry was the first lawyer in Humphrey admitted to the bar. F. B. Salisbury, Stephen S. Cole, and Milo Berry practiced law in justice's court. The first school was taught in Sugartown in a log house near where Mrs. Reed now lives. Mr. Marsh commenced the school, but the boys threw him out and the term was completed by John W. Howe, a son of Capt. Nathan Howe. Foster B. Salisbury taught a school in a log house that stood on the bank of the creek a few rods south of P. O'Brien's south line. The settlers paid him $10 a month by chopping wood for him on his farm. He boarded himself, cut his wood, and built his own fires. Miss Pauline Shepard taught a school in the same house. The first general Christmas gathering was held at the house of Russell Chapell in 1823, when the hardy pioneers got together and scraped turnips and ate baked potatoes and johnnycake. While returning from this merry-making F. B. Salisbury had a narrow escape from a pack of wolves. The favorite sports at raisings and logging bees were running, wrestling, and jumping. One of the difficult feats was to jump over a yoke of oxen. William Baxter, although a small man, was an adept at this. Seth Cole was the champion collar-and-elbow wrestler. Foster B. Salisbury stood six feet one inch bare-footed and weighed 195 pounds. He was never thrown at Indian-hug or back-hold and could jump ten feet on a smooth floor without weights. Benjamin Cole weighed over 200 pounds and was the champion chopper of all time. He felled one acre of heavy timber in one day on the place now owned by Aaron Cleveland in Sugartown on a $5 bet. Russell Chapell once poled a canoe loaded with flour and pork up the Allegheny river from Pittsburg, Pa., to the mouth of Great Valley creek, and nearly every one of the early settlers had the experience of carrying a bag of corn on their shoulders to the mill at Franklinville, a distance of ten miles. Danforth Marsh raised a family of seven boys, four of whom served in the Union army in the Rebellion. This family passed through nearly the whole of one winter with nothing to eat but potatoes and a little salt obtained from the brine in a pork barrel. The first road to Franklinville ran due north from Humphrey Center up the hill by the so-called red house, striking the present road near the town line.

Michael King and family were the first Irish family to move into the town, coming in 1840. Their son, Edward King, resides near Humphrey Center. James Cassidy and John Clark came about the same time. They were soon followed by Peter and Larry Lines and others. None of the natives of continental Europe have ever lived in the town except Germans and Swedes, and but few of these. The first and only colored family to make a permanent settlement in town was that of Thomas Sheffield. They were fugitives from Maryland and came about 1838, and lived in Humphrey until the passage of the fugitive slave law, when they went to Canada, but subsequently returned. Henry Sheffield and his sons Marshall and Wesley were gallant Union soldiers in the Rebellion. Andrew Lockie was the first blacksmith in town. He came about 1848. A man name Pearson made chairs from 1840 to 1850.

The first town meeting convened at the dwelling of Russell Chapell in the spring of 1837, nearly a year after the erection of the township. The first officers were Stephen S. Cole, supervisor; Thomas Barker, town clerk; John W. Dickinson, Foster B. Salisbury, Parker Hall, Almon Guthrie, justices of the peace; John W. Dickinson, Foster B. Salisbury, Parker Hall, assessors; Francis Matteson, collector; Jeremiah Crandall, John McWilliams, Thomas Barker, highway commissioners; Alonzo Berry, James Hitchcock, Parker Hall, school commissioners; John W. Dickinson, Foster B. Salisbury, John McWilliams, school inspectors; Philip Bonsteel, Almon Guthrie, overseers of the poor; S. Marsh, Ichabod Chapman, Samuel Reynolds, constables. Following are the principal town officers:

Supervisors.—Stephen S. Cole, 1837-45, 1849, 1854; Foster B. Salisbury, 1846-48, 1850, 1852-53, 1856, 1862-63; Thomas Barker, 1851; Archibald C. Crary, 1855; Almon Guthrie, 1857-58; Chase Fuller, 1859-60, 1866-67; Benjamin Crary, 1861; Parker Smith, 1864-65, 1869, 1871, 1873-74; Joseph B. Miller, 1868, 1881; Gilbert C. Sweet, 1870, 1872; Marshall Barker, 1875; Barnard Salisbury, 1876-79; George P. Learn, 1880, 1882-84; John E. Healey, 1885; Greeley Sweet (died and R. M. Leaning elected to fill vacancy), 1886; Fred F. Pierce, 1887-89; William S. O'Brien, 1890-92; Frank T. Berry, 1893.

Town Clerks.—Thomas Barker, 1837; Russell Chapell, 1838-39, 1843-47; Abraham Wright, 1840-42; O. Hitchcock, 1848; A. E. Sawyer, 1849-50; Stephen S. Cole, 1851, 1856; John C. Meacham, 1852-54, 1857; Austin Marsh, 1855; William S. Morris, 1858-60, 1862, 1864-65; H. M. Bozard, 1861, 1866; Chase Fuller, 1863; Marshall Barker, 1867, 1871-72; Ezra Marsh, 1868; W. J. Sherman, 1869, 1873, 1889; Milo Berry, 1870, 1874-75; Harvey Pierce, 1876; Samuel Moffitt, 1877; Cyrus P. Bozard, 1878-82; H. A. Pierce, 1883-84; E. M. Shaffner, 1885; W. H. Train, 1886-87; J. W. Moffitt, 1888; Truman C. Bozard, 1890-91; Charles S. Pierce, 1892-93.

Justices of the Peace.—1837, John W. Dickinson, Foster B. Salisbury, Parker Hall, Almon Guthrie; 1838, Stephen S. Cole; 1839, John W. Dickinson, John J. Northrup; 1840, Hale H. Crary, Foster B. Salisbury, Almon Guthrie; 1842 and 1843, Almon Guthrie; 1844, Stephen S. Cole; 1845 and 1846, Hale H. Crary; 1847, Almon Guthrie, Richard Wright; 1848, John Putnam, George Adams; 1849, James Bond, Hector Pritchard, Sanford Pierce; 1850, Hector Pritchard; 1851, Wilder Parker; 1852, Stephen S. Cole, John O. Pierce, C. Wilber; 1853, Foster B. Salisbury, Stephen West, George Adams; 1854, John Putnam; 1855, George Adams.

Stephen West, Almon Guthrie; 1856, Henry M. Bozard; 1857, Joseph B. Miller, Frederick Wright; 1858, Chase Fuller; 1859, John Putnam; 1860, Milo Berry; 1861, George C. De Golia; 1862, Chase Fuller; 1863, John Putnam; 1864, Milo Berry; 1865, H. A. Pierce; 1866, Chase Fuller; 1867, D. T. Raub; 1868, Milo Berry; 1869, Patrick Quinlan; 1870, Frederick Wright, H. A. Pierce; 1871, John Moyer, J. M. Whitney; 1872, Milo Berry; 1873, J. M. Whitney, Edwin Guthrie; 1874, Frederick Wright; 1875, Richard M. Leaning, Judson Bowen; 1876, Milo Berry; 1877, M. Wilber; 1878, Lafayette Sweet; 1879, Edwin Guthrie; 1880, Milo Berry; 1881, Harvey A. Pierce; 1882, Thomas H. Dowd; 1883, W. H. Train; 1884, Richard M. Leaning; 1885, Milo Berry; 1886, C. F. Bozard; 1887-89, Harvey A. Pierce; 1890, Milo Berry; 1891, Charles E. Whitney; 1892, G. W. Chamberlain; 1893, William H. Train.

Upon the organization of the town nine road districts were formed. This number has been increased as the settlements extended and at the present time the highways compare favorably with any other section of western New York. The leading industry of Humphrey today is agriculture. Dairying is given special attention and cheese making is carried on quite extensively. The Franklinville cheese factories, Nos. 6 and 7, are owned by E. H. Farrington and T. E. Sherman and have a separate capacity of 300 or 400 cows. There are others in the town equally as large. Fruit is also produced of excellent quality and in considerable quantities.

Lumbering in early days was an important industry and is still carried on in some localities. The first saw-mill on Wright's creek west of Chapellsburg was built prior to 1840 by Archibald M. Murphy, on land now owned by W. S. O'Brien, which did a large business for several years. Madison Kinyon was the next owner; then Thomas B. Shepard conducted it till Marshall Barker bought the mill in 1868 and sold it six years later to John B. Guthrie. In 1874 Mr. Barker built a dam and the present Guthrie saw-mill building, and sold it with the real estate to John B. Guthrie, who, with his sons Almon G. and Conrad J., has run it the past ten years. In 1893 they put in a new iron turbine wheel. A steam saw-mill was built at the Center on the old site of Foster B. Salisbury's saw-mill by William E. Learn in 1887, in which was also a shingle-mill, that did good business till it burned in 1890. David Van Tile built a grist-mill on Wright's creek at Chapellsburg in 1865 that did fair business for a while, but was finally abandoned. H. A. Pierce bought the building, removed it, and metamorphosed it into a barn.

The pipe line of the National Transit Company was laid through Humphrey in 1880, and along it a telegraph line was constructed in 1887 with a public office at Chapellsburg in the house of Marshall Barker, who has been the operator for several years.

A test oil well was drilled about 1878 by Golden, Fowler & Cody. When down about 1,500 feet Heathcoat, the contractor, declared strong indications of oil, but the next day the proprietors abandoned it as a "dry hole." A cloud of mystery still envelops the real facts.

The cemetery near the Baptist church at Chapellsburg contains half an acre of land which was deeded February 25, 1859, by Chase Fuller and Nancy, his wife, to Almon Guthrie, Madison S. Kinyon, and Parker Smith, trustees of the Chapellsburg Burying Ground Society, in consideration of $50. The present trustees are John B. Guthrie, Harvey A. Pierce, and William J. Sherman.

The public burying ground at Humphrey Center contains a half-acre of land given by Stephen S. Cole in 1871, when Foster B. Salisbury died and was the first person buried there. The remains of his wife and of her mother were also transferred from another ground to this. In the Marsh burial ground are the graves of Danforth Marsh and wife, Alonzo Berry and wife, Mrs. Ezra Smith, and other early residents.

The hamlet of Chapellsburg contains Humphrey postoffice, hotel, two stores, two churches, a public hall, a school house, wagon and blacksmith shop, telegraph office, and about a dozen houses. It is the oldest village in the town and stands on the old stage route from Buffalo to Olean. It was named in honor of Russell Chapell, its first settler, tavern keeper, postmaster, and most active and best-known citizen. It owes its existence to being the most central and accessible four corners in town. The first store here was kept by Hamilton Smith and the next by William Curran. In 1862 H. M. & C. P. Bozard built and opened a store and Marshall Barker succeeded them for about seven years in his present dwelling. Luman Miller, John Learn, Charles Sherman, H. A. Pierce, and Elmira Call followed. In 1875 H. A. Pierce built the store now occupied by H. A. Pierce & Son and in 1891 T. C. Bozard built his present store. The blacksmiths here have been Mr. Hallock, Orson Myrick, James Fenton, Allen Low, and Marshall Barker, who also has a wagon shop.

Humphrey Center, situated two miles north of Chapellsburg, contains a postoffice, a school house, a public hall, two stores, two blacksmith shops, a shoe shop, a cheese factory, and a score of dwellings. The postoffice was established in 1877 with James Moffit as the first postmaster, his commission being dated January 15, 1877. The first store in the town was opened here in Foster B. Salisbury's dwelling by A. E. Sawyer in 1849. The next year Mr. Salisbury built the store now used by James Devine. Its successive occupants have been Sawyer & Foote, John Meachum (the only merchant who ever sold liquor there), Foster B. Salisbury and Parker Smith, J. B. Miller, C. G. Miller, Rev. Daniel McKoon (1859), James Moffit, Miles Berry (1871 to 1874), James Moffit again for nine years, S. H. Butler, Daniel Healey, Leroy Litchfield, and James Devine since 1889. In connection with his mercantile business A. E. Sawyer built an ashery near where Chamberlain's blacksmith shop now stands, the only ashery ever operated in town, and sent out teams to collect ashes from house to house, paying for them from eight to twelve cents per bushel in groceries and cotton goods from his store. Mr. Sawyer's successor was John Meachum, who, about 1856, erected a building farther up the hill which contained a pearling oven, in which he converted potash into pearlsh. He built also a gassing room—a very tight apartment in which the pearls were placed on shelves and subjected to the deadly fumes of burning charcoal, sulphur, and other chemicals that produced a gas which changed the pearls to saleratus. The door of this room was firmly closed and made as nearly air and gas-tight as possible. Meachum continued this business as long as raw material could be procured in sufficient quantities. He also built the large house on the corner now called the Miller house, in which Richard Pritchard kept a tavern one year. In 1880 James Warren got a license and opened a public house in the same building for a single year; this was the last whisky license granted in Humphrey. A Mr. Wilcox many years ago opened a cabinet shop here and made considerable furniture for those times. Andrew Lockie and his son James as early blacksmiths were followed by John W. Samuel and Charles Moffit, who also had a wagon shop. The present blacksmiths are Leroy Litchfield and G. W. Chamberlain. By some residents at Chapellsburg and elsewhere the Center was formerly often called "Tickletown."

The first minister of the gospel in Humphrey, and the first to hold religious services in the town, was Rev. Benjamin Cole, who settled at the Center in 1824. Educated for the Catholic priesthood, which he abandoned, he joined the British army, came to America with Lord Howe, deserted, and became a Baptist minister.

The first Methodist Episcopal church of Sugartown, located in the southwest part of the town, was organized in 1839 with seventeen members by Hiram Sanford, who became the first pastor. Their house of worship, a wooden structure, was erected in 1874 and cost $4,100. The present value of the church property is $5,000. The edifice will seat 300 persons and the society has twenty-five members under the pastorship of Rev. J. B. White. It also has an interesting Sunday school. Mrs. C. C. Reed, in 1874, deeded to the society the house and nineteen acres she occupies, reserving, however, a life lease; she also gave them $2,000. The pastors have been as follows: Hiram Sanford, 1838; Anderson, 1839; Burlingham, 1840; Pickard, 1841; Herrsch, 1842-43; Hoyt, 1844; Havens, 1845; McEwen, 1846-47; Sanford Hunt, 1848-49; McCreary, 1850; Packard, 1851; Luce, 1852; Buck, 1853; Ely, 1854; Curry, 1855; Wells, 1856-57; Cooley, 1858-59; Gordon, 1860; L. A. Stevens, 1861; McIntyre, 1862; T. W. Potter, 1863-65; Alexander, 1866; Webber, 1868-70; P. D. Barnhart, 1871-72; George H. Cheney, 1873-74; M. D. Jackson, 1875; C. D. Rowley, 1876; Bowen, 1877; G. Van Vradenburg, 1878-79; Mervillo, 1880; E. G. Piper, 1881-82; J. D. Monroe, 1883; W. Post, 1884; J. W. Archibald, 1885-86; W. Holland, 1887; Tyler, 1888; Wilkinson and White, 1889; F. Bell, 1890; J. B. White, since 1891.

The First Baptist church of Humphrey was organized in 1845 by Revs. Samuel W. Titus, William Storrs, and R. D. Hays, with fifteen members. The first pastor was Rev. Samuel W. Titus, the present one being Rev. George W. Barnum. Their church edifice, a wooden structure, was built in 1875, cost $2,200, and will seat 250 people. The present value of the entire property is $3,000. The society has fifty-two members and a Sunday school of thirty scholars. The site on which this church stands was deeded to the society by Phebe Morris on December 10, 1872, for $100.

St. Pacificus Catholic church at Chapellsburg was organized with seventy members in 1855 by the Franciscan Fathers of Ellicottville. The first pastor was Father Pamfilio De Magliano, the present one being Very Rev. Joseph Butler, O. S. F. The parish has 170 members. Their church edifice was built of wood in 1855, cost $500, and will seat 200 persons. The present value of their property is $2,000. A Sunday school is conducted during the summer months. The church was regularly chartered in 1891.

The Union church edifice was built by the Christian and Baptist denominations on the line between Humphrey and Allegany, half of it standing in each town. An organization was effected in 1857 and the building was erected of wood in 1859 at a cost of $1,500, the present value of the property. The edifice will seat 200 people. There are twenty-five members under the pastorate of Rev. N. S. Langmade, and connected is a flourishing Sunday school. The site of this church was purchased of Robert Wilber and James Hitchcock. The first deacons were Nathan Wilber, Harrison Newell, Marcus Onan.

The W. C. T. U. of Humphrey was organized at the house of Mrs. E. T. Salisbury with eight charter members. The first officers were: Mrs. S. S. Reed, president; Mrs. Mary S. Guthrie, vice-president; Mrs. R. T. Wetherby, secretary; Mrs. B. T. Sweet, treasurer. The society now has 25 members.

Levi D. Bailey is the grandson of Daniel Bailey, who was born in England, came to America, settled in New Jersey, served in the War of 1812, and died aged 110 years. His son Levi E., born in New Jersey in 1809, came to Wayne county, where he married Elizabeth Drake, who was a descendant in the eleventh generation from William of Orange, and settled in Exeter, Pa., where Levi D. was born in 1833. Levi E. afterward lived in Steuben county, N. Y., over forty years and died in Bradford, Pa., in 1889 and his wife in 1891. At the age of sixteen Levi D. shipped from New Bedford on a three years' whaling voyage, visiting California on his way home. In 1853 he married Celia A. Stevens and settled in Tioga county, Pa., coming in 1857 to Carrolton, where he was a lumberman. In 1862 he enlisted in Co. A, 154th N. Y. Vols., and was in the battle of Fredericksburg, was disabled from further service from spinal disease, and was discharged in 1863. Mrs. Bailey went with her husband and served as a volunteer nurse in camp and on the battlefield. She had a tent after the battle of Fredericksburg known as Mrs. Bailey's tent, for which she neither asked nor received pay. Children: Armenia (Mrs. Levi Petrie), Ida M. (Mrs. Fred Card), George L. (married Harriet Turner—children: Carrie M. and Lennie), and James A. (died young).

Marshall Barker is the son of Thomas and the grandson of Phineas Barker, of French descent, who lived in Orwell, Vt., and married Amy Persons, of Dutch ancestry and a descendant from Anneke Jans of Trinity church property notoriety. Their son Thomas, born in Orwell in 1797, came to Humphrey in 1819. He was a shoemaker and brought a sack of boots and shoes and his kit of tools on his back, and bought land and settled in the west part of the town. He married Phebe, daughter of John Vaughn, of Washington county. Children: Edwin (died when four years old), Cordelia, Jane, Augusta, Mary, and Marshall. The latter was born April 17, 1838, was raised a farmer, and after the common schools attended Randolph Academy and Alfred Seminary. His father died in 1855. He remained on the farm and in 1859 married Ellen E., daughter of Thomas B. and Lucinda (Lewis) Shepard. Children: Ada M. (Mrs. Edwin Smith), whose children are Lee, Glen, Coilah, and Grace; Neolah, died aged nineteen; Frank W., now telegraph operator at Four Mile station who married Anna, daughter of Milo Berry, and has one child, Musette; and Jennieve (Mrs. Patrick Quirk), whose children are Ellen G. and Frances G. Mr. Barker traded the farm for his present home at Chapellsburg in 1865, in which he opened a store and was a merchant seven years and postmaster eleven years. In the meantime, being a natural worker in wood or iron, he became a millwright, wagonmaker, and blacksmith, and opened shops which he still operates. He also studied surveying, and in 1870 began its practice and still continues it. To aid a natural love for investigation he has one of the best collections of scientific works in the county. He was elected supervisor on the Republican ticket in 1875, since which he has acted with Greenback organizations. His religious views are with the Universalist faith.

Milo Berry is the son of Alonzo and the grandson of Jonathan Berry, of Franklin county, who came from Vermont. Alonzo moved to Leicester, N. Y., about 1815, where Milo was born in 1830 and came with his parents to Humphrey when two years old. Alonzo was a cooper by trade and made soon after coming here 100 pine sap buckets for Russell Chapell, who had a large sugar-bush in Sugartown. This job brought him $20 in cash. Mr. Berry married Anis Leonard; children: Joel, who died in White Pigeon, Mich., in 1857; Elmira, who died aged eighteen; Lemira, who married Stephen S. Cole and died in 1885; Alonzo, of Buffalo; Edwin, of Minnesota; and Milo. Milo learned his father's trade and had a shop at Humphrey Center. He married Catharine Stafford, of Ellicottville; children: Ursula V., Frank T., Myron (married Mary Consett, of Franklinville, who died in 1889, leaving two children, Frank and Earl), Addie (married Greeley Sweet, who died, and she married, second, James Devine), Anna (Mrs. Frank Barker), Judson, and Ella. Milo Berry, always a Republican, was first elected justice of the peace in 1860 and has held the office ever since, except in 1880. He has been town clerk four years, in 1881 and 1882 was justice of sessions, and was postmaster at Humphrey Center during Harrison's administration. Frank T. Berry, son of Milo, was born in Humphrey, July 4, 1853. When a young man he learned the trade of tool-dresser, at which he worked seven years in Bradford, Pa., going there in 1875. Jan. 1, 1882, he married Laura, daughter of Harvey A. Pierce, of Humphrey; children: Beulah and Hazel. When twenty-one years old he held the office of constable, which then paid $130 a year. He was elected supervisor in 1893.

Andrew J. Bozard is the son of Richard and the grandson of Christopher Bozard, who came with his brother John from Pennsylvania and settled in Humphrey about 1831. These two pioneer settlers were of Scotch-Irish descent and the eminence on which they located is still known as Bozard hill. Richard married Eleanor Learn; children: Henry M., Andrew J., Cyrus P., Barnard S. (died in Chicago), Ashbel L., Rebecca (Mrs. Harrison Newell), Joseph, Laura (Mrs. Eliab Barber), and Judson O. Andrew J. was born in Humphrey in 1832 and married, in 1861, Mrs. Sarah E. Pierce, daughter of Alphonso Winters, who had two children, George and Kelley, by her first husband. They have had one son, Alphonso. All three are dead, the latter two dying in 1864. Mr. Bozard's farm of 150 acres comprises a part of the original homestead. He is a Republican and has served a term as assessor.

Truman C. Bozard, eldest child of Cyrus P. and Julia (Pierce) Bozard, was born in Humphrey in 1862 and was raised a farmer. In 1889 he opened a store at Chapellsburg and was appointed postmaster May 15, 1891, serving now his fifth year. In 1890 and 1891 he was elected town clerk, and during the latter year built the store he now occupies. July 4, 1882, he married Eva L., daughter of William Butler, of Humphrey. Children: Rose E., Grace B., Ruley M., and Floyd C. Cyrus P., son of Richard and grandson of Christopher Bozard, was born in Humphrey in 1835. He is a farmer, but has been a contractor and builder, merchant, and postmaster in Humphrey. In 1861 he married Julia, daughter of Lyartus Pierce. Children: Truman C., Eddie H., and Blanche C. Mr. Bozard has been elected on the Republican ticket five times as town clerk and is now serving his second term as justice.

Vols., was promoted orderly-sergeant, and mustered out in June, 1863. He began teaching and was in the Olean schools seven years and principal of Olean Union School and Academy five years and of Limestone Union School three years. Owing to the partial failure of his sight he gave up teaching and went to railroading, being cashier at Eldred, Pa., two years. He came to Machias in August, 1883, and has remained there since as joint station agent for the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad and the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad.

George C. De Golia, whose ancestor came from France during the French and Indian war, was the son of James De Golia, of Prattsburg, N. Y., who was born in 1801, came with his family in 1830 to McKean county, Pa., and died in Smethport, Pa., in 1833. George C. moved the family to Bradford, Pa., now De Golia. In 1847 his mother married Jacob Vader. George C. worked in different places at his trade as carpenter and millwright. He was born in 1821 and in 1849 married Rebecca Webb, who died in Smethport, Pa., in 1850. In 1853 he married Electa L. Guthrie and in 1858 moved to Humphrey, where he bought in 1864 the farm on which they have since lived. The eldest of their three children, Andrew J., born in 1857, married Mary, daughter of John Cross, in 1880, and settled in Humphrey. Children: Blossom, Budd, Electa J., and John C. John A., born in 1859, lives with his parents, and George E., born in 1863, married Jennie Smallman, and is a traveling freight agent for the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad. Mr. De Golia was drafted in 1864 and sent a substitute. A Republican in politics he served one term as assessor and was justice of the peace from 1861 to 1865.

James Devine is the son of James and Margaret (Hatton) Devine, who came from Ireland to America about 1840 and settled in Humphrey in 1865. Their children were: Mary, who married Thomas Kinney, of Humphrey, and had six children; James; and Ellen (Mrs. Eugene Fee). James was born Feb. 22, 1857, grew up on his father's farm, attended common school and the Canandaigua Academy, taught school four terms, and was reporter for a time on the Olean Herald. From 1885 to 1887 he ran as mail agent from Hornellsville to Kent, O., in the discharge of which duties he was caught in a railroad collision at West Salamanca in 1858, receiving injuries in his back that disabled him for three years, for which the company paid him $2,500. In 1889 he bought the store at Humphrey Center, where he has been a merchant for the past four years. In 1890 he married Adeline, daughter of Milo Berry; children; Kittie and Margaret.

John W. Dickinson, son of John W., was born in London, England, and received a college education in that city. After completing his studies he determined to seek a home in the United States and came to New York city and thence to Schenectady, where he resided a few years. He there married Elizabeth Rowley, of that place, and both decided to make the almost unbroken wilderness of Cattaraugus county their future home. They came to the north part of Humphrey in 1826. He bought a farm in lower Sugartown, built a log house and barn, and successfully proceeded to make for himself a comfortable home. He built the first blacksmith shop in that region. He often delivered orations on public occasions and was a fire-major in the War of 1812. He was a man of good morals and a thorough temperance advocate, which in those early times was the exception, not the rule. He was elected justice of the peace and held his courts where the wrangling of the pettifoggers was sometimes interrupted by the hooting of an owl or the screech of some wild animal. He also taught a few terms of district and singing schools. There were seven children born to them, two of whom are living: Permelia Derby in Franklinville and Christina Berry in Great Valley. The others were Sarah T., Charles T., Abijah A., Eliza A., and Harriet.

Matthew P. Dollard, son of Patrick R. and Alice (Griffin) Dollard, was born in New York city, Nov. 15, 1838, and came with his father to Humphrey in 1856. Patrick R. bought of Abram Wright the farm which Matthew P. now owns. Matthew married, in 1859, Margaret P. Byrne, who was born in Watertown, N. Y., in 1843; children living: Alice (married John McCune and has children John and Daniel), Margaret, John P. (married Mary Flynn and has one child, Gertrude), Francis J., Helena, Edward, Stephen A., Philip, Mary A., Arastula, and Jane A. Two boys, Matthew and Patrick, died aged twelve and eight and four other children died in infancy. Mr. Dollard has been an efficient town officer and is now serving his sixteenth consecutive term as assessor. He is a Democrat and a trustee of St. Pacificus church.

Dr. Henry W. Dye, an eclectic physician, was born in Boston, Erie county, in 1816, read medicine with Drs. Emmons and Howe in Springville, and came to Franklinville in 1849 and to Humphrey in 1860. He lived on the Five Mile track and practiced in this town about two years. He went to Ashford and thence to Salamanca, where he died in 1889.

Frank F. Ford is the son of Loren and the grandson of Jacob Ford, who was born in Vermont in 1788, where his father, Isaiah Ford, had been an early settler. Jacob married Abigail Waters in 1808 and came to Cattaraugus county, settling in Franklinville when there were but three other families in that town. Children: Russell, Samuel, Loren, Harriet, David, Daniel, Nathan, Charles, Sarah, Permelia, and Mary. Loren was born in 1820 and married Jerusha Salisbury; children: Judson, of Olean; Gatus, died aged eleven; Frank F.; and Sylvester. Loren Ford, always a farmer, came to Hinsdale in 1853, where he still lives. Frank F. Ford was born in New Hudson, Allegany county, in 1851, and was raised a farmer. In 1872 he married Judith, daughter of Rufus Foote, of Hinsdale, and the next year bought his present farm of 195 acres in Humphrey, building the house in which he now lives in 1892. Children: Ernest, born in 1872; Clara, born in 1876, died in 1878; and Glen G. C., born in 1884. A public spirited Republican he has served his town as collector and highway commissioner.

His father was born in the same town in 1799 and moved his family to Humphrey in 1824. Children: John B., Electa L., Mary A., Fanny E., Clarissa E., Edwin, and Eliza R. He settled on Wright's creek, sold his farm to Foster B. Salisbury, and bought, lived, and died on land now owned by his son John B., who, when twenty-two years old, bought the first part of his present homestead. In 1849 he married Catharine V., daughter of Conrad Du Bois, of New Hudson, N. Y., whose grandfather was a French nobleman. She was born in Ulster county in 1822. Children: Elizabeth (Mrs. Albert Armstrong); Almon G. (married, in 1879, Mary Brown, of Great Valley); Electa L. (married Edson Hale in 1880), died in 1892; and Conrad J., who married, in 1878, Caroline Pratt, of Kendall Creek, Pa.; children: Cora A. and Leslie C. John B. Guthrie has been assessor three terms, overseer of the poor, highway commissioner, constable, and collector, and a Republican since that party was organized. His father had an ashery in early times where he made black-salts, which were called "Jackson money."

Edwin Guthrie, son of Almon and Betsey (Salisbury) Guthrie, was born on the homestead in Humphrey, Sept. 29, 1829, and is probably the oldest native of the town who still lives here. Betsey was the daughter of John Salisbury, of Phelps, N. Y., and her mother was a sister of General Bannister. After the common schools at home, and eighteen weeks at Hinsdale in 1847, Edwin attended the Union School at Vienna at a time when it was broken up by small-pox. When twenty-eight years old he married Mary S., daughter of Elisha Mack, of Bath, N. Y. In 1858 he bought a part of the farm which is still his home. Children: Eveline M. (Mrs. Spencer Whitney), Franklin S., Ida (deceased), Edwin (married Carrie G. Sill), Elisha W. (married Callie Dunning), Josephine B., Allen L., and Burdette J. Mr. Guthrie, originally a Republican, now a Prohibitionist, has served as commissioner of highways and for two terms as justice of the peace. He built and owns Guthrie hall.

Freeman Hitchcock is the son of Shadrach Hitchcock, who came from Rhode Island and settled in Fabius, N. Y. He married Betsey E. Coon; children: Hannah, Polly, Harriet, James, Shadrach, Huldah, Nancy, Elisha, George, Betsey, Horace, and Freeman. Freeman Hitchcock was born in 1829, in Fabius, and when young came to Humphrey and lived a year with his brother James, who came here early. About 1858 he bought his present farm on the Five Mile tract and in 1860 he married Ann M., daughter of Dr. Henry W. Dye, of Humphrey. Their first children were twins, George and Isabel. The former, now of Humphrey, married Maggie McCune; children: John, George, and Marian. Isabel married Sylvester Ford, of Hinsdale; children: Lena and Leona. The next child, Myrtie, married Charles McWilliams, of Olean; they have one child, Henry. Marion, their next child, died when five years old. The others are Katie B., Bessie E., Merriam H., William J., and Emma R.

Richard M. Leaning is the son of Richard Leaning, who married Mary Newmarch and came from Lincolnshire, Eng., in 1830, and settled in Otsego county. Children: Eliza, Elizabeth, William, John, Fanny, Mary, Rachel, Richard M., Helen, Wallace, and Lucina. Richard M. was born in Otsego county in 1834 and married, in 1853, Sarah, daughter of Theodore Stone, a pioneer of Mansfield, in which town Richard was a farmer from 1862 to 1870, when he bought his farm of 246 acres in Sugartown, where he now lives. Children: Marsella (Mrs. James Murphy), deceased; Emmagruue, died when four years old; Frank, died at the age of fifteen; Emma, died when four years old; Nellie (Mrs. Charles K. Moore), whose children are Erton L., Earl, Ada, and Anna; and Marsellus, of Ellicottville, whose children are Frank and Sarah. Mr. Leaning, a Democrat, has served six years as assessor and in 1886 was supervisor of Humphrey. He is a member of the Free Baptist church.

George P. Learn is the son of Joseph Learn, who came from Northampton county, Pa., about 1825, and settled in the eastern part of Humphrey. He married Mary Spragle, of Northampton county. Children: Miles J., of Franklinville; Caleb, of Allegany; and George P., who was born in Humphrey in 1835. When Mr. Learn first came to town his nearest neighbors east or west were three miles distant. Wild game was so plenty that he felt sure of shooting a deer whenever the family needed venison. He died in 1857 and his wife in 1872. George P. married Julia, daughter of David Ely, of Franklinville, in 1853. They have one child, William E., who married Bertha, daughter of Eugene F. Pierce, of Humphrey. They settled at the Center and have one child, Vera. George P. Learn, always a Republican, has filled most of the town offices in Humphrey; he was supervisor in 1880, 1882, 1883, and 1884.

Leroy Litchfield is the son of Orange Litchfield, who was born in Bethany, N. Y., in 1807, where he married Presina Greeno. Children: Harvey, Mary, Hiram, Leroy, Lucia, Emogene, and Rinaldo. In 1831 he removed to Randolph, where he still lives and where Leroy was born in 1838. The latter learned his father's trade of blacksmithing, which he followed till 1862, when he enlisted as first lieutenant in Co. H, 154th N. Y. Vols., and was in the battles of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. At the latter he was taken prisoner and for seventeen months suffered the tortures of Belle Isle, Libby, Andersonville, Savannah, and Milan prisons. Of sixteen comrade prisoners of Co. H he was the only man who lived to rejoin his regiment, with which he served till the close of the war. He married, in 1866, Carrie D., daughter of John and Mary Cooper. Mr. Litchfield is now the only living representative in Humphrey of the several Cooper families once so prominent and numerous here. Since the war Mr. Litchfield has followed his trade at the Center except one year, when he was a merchant and deputy postmaster. He has for the past year and a half run a daily stage and carried the mail from Humphrey Center to Great Valley Center.

Danforth Marsh raised seven sons and two daughters. Five of the sons—

John, Cyrus, Ezra, William, and Staley—served honorably through the Rebellion and all came home alive. Staley was shot through the body at Cedar Mountain and is an invalid.

George B. Matteson was born in Pompey Hollow, N. Y., in 1834, from whence his father, Francis Matteson, born in 1795, a son of Calvin, came in 1835 to Humphrey and died in 1862. Francis married Betsey Wickham. Children: Leroy W., William, Mary, Sarah, Layuern, Nelson, Richard, Orde-lia, and George B. The latter grew up trained to all kinds of farm work, lumbering, making shingles, and tended saw-mill in many towns in Pennsylvania. He is one of the few living men who has cradled six acres of wheat or has made from the log 2,000 shingles in a day. He married, in 1855, Eliza Ann McWilliams; children: Alonzo (died young), Elmer, Amy (who married Charles Welch, of Allegany, and has children Jennie, Lida, and Cora), John (married Iva, daughter of Ashbel Bozard), Olive (married John Day and has children Ella and Margueritte), and Olive (who died when eighteen years old—ten days after her marriage to Robert McCluer). Mr. Matteson's second marriage was to Roxania Talbot in 1882. He has lived on his present farm nearly forty years, has been assessor, and is a buyer of farm produce.

Oscar L. McKay is the great-grandson of Burnett McKay, of Genesee county, whose son Silas moved from Middlebury, N. Y., and settled in Mansfield in 1825. Silas McKay was the father of a noted family of nine sons, the eldest of whom, Liberius, the father of Oscar L., was born in Middlebury in 1819 and lived in Mansfield sixty-three years, dying there in 1888. By his first wife, Huldah Ball, he had three children, who all died young. By his second wife, Susan Johnson, of Ashford, his children were Oscar L. (born in 1839), Olive M., Martha A., Hanford, Eugene, and Louisa—all dead but the oldest and the youngest. Oscar L. enlisted in 1861 and joined the army under General McClellan; he was in the battle of Fair Oaks, was taken sick, and was discharged in 1863. He came home and married, in 1863, Martha A., daughter of Hiram Burroughs, of Mansfield. Children: Lucy J. (Mrs. Manley Chase), whose children are Ethel M. and Ralph; Grant D.; Glenn E.; and Bernette E. Mr. McKay has lived on his present farm in Humphrey for twenty years and has served three terms on the Board of Excise.

Newton C. McKoon is the son of Daniel W. and the grandson of Martin McKoon, of Vermont, whose father, of Scotch ancestry, was a lineal descendant from Martin Luther. Martin McKoon married Rhoba, daughter of John Williams, a noted Baptist preacher of Rhode Island and a descendant of Roger Williams. The children of Martin and Rhoba McKoon were in the sixth generation from Roger Williams and in the twelfth generation from Martin Luther. Daniel W. McKoon was born in Columbia, N. Y., in 1811, and married Jane Young, of the same place; children: Newton C., Cyrus, Mary Jane, Albert, David, Helen, and Rhoba. He was a Free Baptist minister and came to Cattaraugus county in 1857, where he preached in Little Valley, Humphrey, and various other towns, and died in Olean in 1871. Newton C. McKoon was born in Columbia, N. Y., in 1836 and came to Humphrey in 1859, settling on the farm in Sugartown that is still his home. In 1864 he married Ann, daughter of Benjamin Cray, who came in 1847 from Tompkins county to Sugartown, where he lived forty-three years and died in 1890. His wife was Rhoda Howe; children: Lemie H., Ann, and Albert. Newton C. was educated at Ellington Academy and taught school twenty-five terms. He was school commissioner two terms from 1872 and from 1885, was town assessor in 1869, 1870, and 1871, and in connection with the management of his farm has been a dealer in agricultural implements.

Mathias Mosman is the son of William Mosman, who was born in Germany in 1801, came to America in 1847, and settled in Erie county, where he died in 1881. Mathias came to Humphrey in 1854 and worked by the month for Rufus and Gilbert Sweet, buying of the latter fifty acres of land in 1860. In 1862 he married Mary E., daughter of James Ganung. Their eldest child, William J., married Gertrude Wagner and has one child, Coral. Sarah A. and Charles B. Mosman, the two younger children, are at home. In 1864 Mr. Mosman enlisted in Co. A, 188th N. Y. Vols., and joined the Fifth Army Corps. He was in the Weldon Raid, the first and second Hatcher's Run battles, and was present at Lee's surrender. He was discharged at Arlington at the close of the war. Originally a Republican he was one of ten men who organized the Prohibition party in Cattaraugus county, to which he still belongs. He bought his present farm of eighty acres in 1868 and built his new house in 1882. He was a member of the first Excise Board in Humphrey and has been a deacon of the Baptist church fifteen years.

William S. O'Brien is the son of Daniel and Teresa (Devereux) O'Brien, who came from Ireland and settled on Bozard hill in 1849. Children: Ann, Eliza, Patrick, Matthew, James, Maria, and William S. The latter, born in 1850, married, in 1878, Nora M., daughter of Daniel Quirk, one of the early settlers of Humphrey. William and his wife lived with his father till his death in 1885, when he sold the Bozard hill homestead and bought and built on his farm near Chapellsburg. Children: Daniel P., Francis J., William Leo, Ellen T., Teresa, Vincent A., Stephen P., and Ruth M. Mr. O'Brien served as Democratic supervisor in 1890, 1891, and 1892, and reduced the valuation $40,000.

Harvey A. Pierce is the son of Lyartus Pierce, who was born near Boston in 1795, and the grandson of Caleb Pierce, who was born in Hancock, Mass., in 1768, came to Fabius, N. Y., and died in 1838. Lyartus married Catharine Fosmer, of Fabius, and came to Humphrey in 1835, settling on Bozard hill on lot 6. Children: Henry B., Hiram, Harrison, Angeline, Harvey W., Harlow, Adeline, and Julia. Harvey was born in Fabius in 1830, was reared a farmer, and married, in 1852, Mary, daughter of Charles C. Woodruff, of Humphrey; children: Fremont C. (died at the age of seventeen), Fred F., Jessie (Mrs. Samuel North), Laura (Mrs. Frank Berry), Charles S. (born May 16, 1870, now a merchant at Humphrey and town clerk), and Mary L. (who died young). Charles S. Pierce married Emma, daughter of Myron Canada, who died in 1872 from exposure in the army. H. A. Pierce bought on lot 14 in 1852 and was a farmer for the next twenty years. In 1872 he opened a store at Chapellsburg and three years later built the store which he kept till 1892, when his son Charles S. became his partner, and he moved to his farm at the Center. During all these years Mr. Pierce has been one of the most active business men in town, and has served two years as town clerk, two terms as overseer of the poor, five full terms as justice, and as postmaster under Garfield.

Eugene F. Pierce is the son of Income S. Pierce, who came from Fabius, N. Y., in 1836 and settled on the farm of 131 acres where his son now lives. Learn), Charles A.,

Alonzo, Urial J., and Addie L. Mr. Pierce's father died in 1851 and his mother in 1891. Besides farming he deals in butter, eggs, and farm produce.

Mrs. Caroline C. Reed is the daughter of Dr. Augustus Crary (p. 125), whose grandfather, William Crary, of Wallingford, Vt., was the son of William Crary, of Scotch extraction, born in 1712, married Nancy Campbell, and died in 1790. His son William, born in 1759, married Sarah Ann, daughter of Benjamin Spencer, an eminent Quaker lawyer who lost 1,000 acres of land and a large amount of live stock and household goods by command of Gen. Ethan Allen during the Revolutionary war because he would not consent to go to war himself, although he sent into the army all of his sons who were old enough. William came to Dryden, N. Y., at an early day. His son Augustus was born in Vermont in 1788, became a physician, married Priscilla Hale in 1809, and came to Yorkshire in 1827 and to Ellicottville in 1831. Children: Caroline, Clark, Hale, Archibald, Jane, and Eugene, the latter and Mrs. Reed being the only survivors. Caroline married Dr. Calvin Chickering in 1831, who came to Humphrey in 1836, where he died in 1846. In 1847 she married Dr. Virgil Reed, who practiced in Humphrey until his death in 1866. Their only child, Frank Hamilton, born in 1849, died in 1876. Mrs. Reed joined the Methodist Episcopal church in 1839, to which she has been devotedly attached, giving to her own society over $4,000 and to the Methodist Society in Franklinville $2,000. She was born in 1810.

John A. Rider is the son of Henry Rider, of Massachusetts, who settled in Buffalo in 1820 and married Hattie Lothridge. Children: Elbridge G., William, Henry H., Roderick, and John A.—all dead but the last two. Henry Rider was a carpenter and house builder, and his son John A. also grew up a mechanic and became a ship carpenter. Buffalo, from 1835 to 1855, was celebrated for its ship yards, in which Mr. Rider worked on many noted boats, among which were the Queen City, Niagara, Buffalo, City of Buffalo, and the Western Metropolis, all of them side-wheel steamers running to Chicago. He married, in 1840, Melissa Jewett; children: Agnes (Mrs. Jerome Morris), Clara, and John A. Mr. Rider's second marriage was to Sarah Foy in 1866. The same year he came to Humphrey and bought his present farm of 154 acres. They have one son, Egbert F., born in 1872. Mr. Rider was a member of the Board of Health in Buffalo during the cholera season of 1858.

William J. Sherman is the son of Peter Castle Sherman, who was born in Charlotte, Vt., and was a descendant of Roger Sherman, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. Peter C. married Cynthia King, of English descent, who died in 1843. He died in 1865. William J. was born in Mt. Pleasant, Pa., in 1830, and went to Honesdale, Pa., in 1847, where he learned the tinner's trade. In 1850 he entered the employ of the Erie railroad as fireman on an engine. One day when the engineer was sick he drew the first car-load of timber for the celebrated Portage bridge. In 1853 he became an engineer, and left the Erie in 1855, went west, and was employed as engineer on a portion of what is now the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad in Illinois. On one of his regular trips, drawing a passenger train, his engine sank in the Mississippi Bottom marsh, four miles from Burlington, injuring him so that he was disabled for a year. It was five weeks before the engine was raised from the mud. In 1861 he returned and ran a passenger engine on the Erie until 1874, when he quit railroading. Since that time he has been a farmer and a hotel keeper in Humphrey in the same hotel opened by Russell Chapell more than half a century ago. Mr. Sherman is a very intelligent representative of the few remaining and fast decreasing force of veteran Érie engineers, rich in experience of the early days of railroading. He married, in 1853, Jane Tasker, of Little Valley, who died in 1863, leaving a nephew as an adopted son, now Charles T. Sherman, of Evansville, Ind. William J. Sherman's second marriage was in 1866 to Charlotte Morris, who was born in Hinsdale in 1839. Children: L. Mary, Romaine A., William B., and Annette L. Mrs. Sherman is the only daughter of William S. and Phebe P. Morris. William S. Morris was the son of Samuel and Charlotte (Mills) Morris, of Cazenovia, N. Y. Mrs. Morris was the step-daughter of Jacob and Phebe Shepard. She was born in 1803 in Schenectady, N. Y., and was married in 1819 to Edward Bryant, of Great Valley, where he died in 1823. Her second marriage was to William S. Morris in 1828, who died in Humphrey in 1868, aged seventy-one years. His wife died in 1882, aged seventy-nine years. Russell Chapell died in Humphrey in 1857, aged eighty-two years. His wife Phebe died in 1863, aged eighty-three years.

Russel Stone is the son of Alexander and grandson of Alexander Stone, both of Otsego county. His father married Nancy Utter and removed his family to Warsaw, Livingston county, where Russel was born in 1819, and in 1833 he came to Cattaraugus county and settled in Mansfield. Children: Mason, Nancy, Russel, Annis, Huldah, and Esther. Russel was a carpenter by trade, married Harriet Coe, and settled in Humphrey in 1851, where he has since been a farmer. Of their children Benjamin, the eldest, entered the army and died in the service; Albert married Mary Bacon in 1875 and has children Truman and Blanche; Eleanor (Mrs. Gale Nudd), of Humphrey, married, first, Milo Wilber, by whom she had one child, Gertrude; Chester married Elvira Kennedy, who has one child, Clarence; Rose (Mrs. Martin Wilber), of Humphrey, has one child, Forrest; Ida (Mrs. George Stimson) has children Hattie, Jennie, Mabel, and Floyd; and Homer married Alice Olmsted, has one child, Lewis, and resides in Yorkshire. Mr. Stone has lived on his present farm of seventy acres since 1862. His wife died in 1875.

Rufus S. Sweet was the son of Samuel Sweet, who was born in Rhode Island in 1794 and settled in Hartwick, N. Y., where he was foreman in a cotton factory and a preacher in the Christian denomination. He married Hannah Perry; children: Gilbert C., Sylvester D., Susan S., Mary A., Rufus S., Abel P., Maria E., and James J. In 1817 he removed to Erie county, N. Y., where he died in 1863. Rufus Sweet, his father, was born in England in 1763 and died in 1820. Rufus S. Sweet, born in Otsego county in 1826, married Betsey Train, of Collins, N. Y., in 1851, and in 1854 bought for $1,300 and settled on 350 acres of wild land in Humphrey, one hill of which is the highest point in Cattaraugus county. He built a log house and in 1870 his present residence. The best pine trees had been stolen for rails before he bought the land, but from what were left he made and sold over half a million shingles. His nearest neighbor was Richard Bozard. In 1860 his brother, Gilbert C. Sweet, settled on Cooper hill. Children: Patience S. (Mrs. William Reed), Henry G. (married Adeline Berry and died in 1860), Luella (Mrs. A. H. Manning), Samuel (married Jennie Southwick and lives on the old homestead), and R. Lincoln (married Ola Sherwood). Mrs. Sweet was the daughter of Elisha Train, who was born in Vermont in 1792, and married Lois Bowen, of Deerfield, Pa. Their second son, William H. Train, came to Humphrey in 1876 and has taught school in every district in town. Spencer, a younger son, lost his life in the Rebellion. Originally a Republican Mr. Sweet is now a Prohibitionist and in religious faith he has always been a staunch Universalist. Gilbert C. Sweet was supervisor of Humphrey in 1870 and 1872.

Charles Thomas was born in Ellicottville in 1828, where his father, Isaac Thomas, from Albany, N. Y., settled in 1820, removing in 1829 to the farm now owned by Newton C. McKoon in Sugartown. He married Eunice Chase, of Humphrey; children: Laura, George, Charles, Ira, Henry, Lucena, Elizabeth, Jennette, and Shepard, of whom three are dead. Charles married, in 1856, Sarah, daughter of Ichabod Chapman; children: Lillie S., Hattie E. (Mrs. Otis Bowen, of Randolph, who has two children), Lillie (Mrs. Lewis Bowen, who has five children), William W. (who died eight years old), and Mark T. (married Ella Davis and has one child, Mildred). Charles Thomas, in religious belief a Seventh Day Adventist and in politics a Republican, has been two terms overseer of the poor and five terms highway commissioner.

Stanley M. Whitlock is the son of William Whitlock, a soldier who was shot in the army, and the grandson of Thomas Whitlock, who settled in Ithaca from Ithaca, N. Y., about 1830. William Whitlock married Eliza, daughter of Dr. James Trowbridge; children: Euzetta (Mrs. Ernest Hollister), Stanley M., Clara (Mrs. Lester Linderman), and Henry. Stanley Whitlock was born in 1853, was reared on a farm, married Dora Linderman in 1877, and came to Humphrey and settled on his present farm of eighty-four acres in 1879. Children: Ray, Clair, and Bessie. Mr. Whitlock is active in town affairs and is now filling the office of assessor.

Charles E. Whitney is the son of Joseph M. Whitney, of Penn Yan, N. Y., who came to Sardinia, N. Y., and in 1843 married Arabella H. Warner, of Ashford. After living in East Otto and Ashford Hollow they settled in Great Valley in 1853, where Mrs. Whitney died in 1865. She was born in Keene, N. H., a daughter of Jerry and Phebe (Howe) Warner, of Scotch descent. Their children were Charles E., Eliza F., Warner J., Sarah E., Julia A., Spencer L., Fred M., Frank B., and George. Charles E. was born in 1845, in Sardinia, grew up on the farm with the usual common school advantages, and at the age of seventeen enlisted in Co. I, 154th N. Y. Vols., and joined the Army of the Potomac, fighting under McClellan, Burnside, Hooker, and Meade. In the battle of Chancellorsville he was severely wounded in his left thigh, after which he was captured and remained three days on the field, constantly under fire, without food or medical attention. After two weeks' imprisonment and eight months in the hospital he returned to his regiment and at Rocky Face Ridge, Ga., in 1864, was again captured and confined in Andersonville and other rebel prisons seven months, weighing but eighty-five pounds when he came out. He did no more active duty, is still lame in his shattered thigh, and receives a small pension. He married, in 1871, Sarah E., daughter of William C. Haggerty, of Humphrey. They settled in Kansas, where he was postmaster and justice of the peace ten years and also filled other town offices. Poor health brought them back in 1883 to this town, where his father had settled in 1866, and where he died in 1880. Children: Clara A. (Mrs. Frank H. Maher), Julia E., Fred H. (died in Kansas), Marian E., and Fannie A. Mr. Whitney has always been a Republican and is now justice of the peace.

Barber Wilber was born in Fabius, N. Y., in 1812, whither his father, Freeman Wilber, removed at an early day from Rhode Island. Freeman was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He married Mercy Kinyon; their sons were Kinyon, Freeman, Alanson, Robert, Amasa, Nathan, and Barber, all of whom came to Humphrey about 1830 and settled on the Five Mile tract, which is still largely peopled with their descendants. Barber Wilber married Mary Bennett in 1840; children: Caroline (Mrs. David Raub, who has one child, Nellie), Angeline, Milo, Maria, Corydon, Louisa, Stanley, and Olivia. The latter married Alonzo Barber and has one son, Henry. Four of these eight children—Angeline, Maria, Corydon, and Louisa—died in 1865, in one month, of diphtheria. Of the remainder all except Mrs. Raub are living with their father. When clearing his farm of 100 acres, on which Mr. Wilber has lived for over half a century, he made black-salts and shingles.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF LEON.

LEON was erected into a township from Conewango on the 24th of April, 1832, and contains an area of 23,023 acres. It is described in the Holland survey as town four, range nine, and is bounded on the north by Dayton, on the east by New Albion, on the south by Conewango, and on the west by Chautauqua county. The name is derived from the ancient kingdom of Leon in Spain and is claimed to have been given by James Waterhouse, the first supervisor and one of the pioneers. The town is broken into low hills except in the northwest corner, where the surface is level and marshy, and through which the east branch of Conewango creek flows southwesterly. The headwaters of this stream are in New Albion, and after flowing northwesterly through a part of Leon they unite in Dayton with a smaller tributary and form the east branch of the Conewango. The only other stream of note in the town is Mud creek, which rises in the eastern part, flows westerly and southwesterly, and empties into Conewango creek in Conewango. This was formerly called Butternut creek from the large number of Butternut trees growing along its banks; the stream afforded numerous mill-sites, which were extensively utilized in early days. The soil is a clay and gravelly loam, and much of it is well adapted to farming purposes. It was originally covered with a fair growth of timber, most of which was used for fuel and building. Very little pine was found in quantities to make lumbering profitable.

The first permanent settlers in Leon were James Franklin and his son James, who came from Monroe county in September, 1818, and located on lot 50. They erected a log house the same season. The son died in town in 1843. The same fall Abner Wise and his wife with their son Abner, Jr., settled on lot 49. Mrs. Wise was the first white woman in the town; she died aged seventy-seven. Mr. Wise, familiarly known as Captain Wise, died about 1838. With the Wises came Thomas W. Cheney, then fifteen years of age, all from Otsego county. Cheney became a Reformed Methodist minister and subsequently a Wesleyan, of which denomination he was at one time presiding elder. His son T. Apoleon was a man of considerable learning and wrote several books on geology.

Among the settlers of 1819 were Edmund Dudley, who was the first to article land in the town, his being the only piece articulated until 1822, and his selection being the west part of lot 41; and Robert Durfee, who located on parts of lots 50 and 57. In 1820 came Otis L. Durfee, a brother of Robert, who became a Baptist clergyman; Asa Franklin, who became the first inn keeper; William Bartlett, a millwright who built many of the early mills; and Alexander Oathout, John Bigler, Harlow Beach, Irenus Baldwin, William Morrison, and Luman Coe. In 1821 the settlers were Nathaniel Cooper, Elisha Cooper, Hazeltine Streeter, Eber Franklin, Richard Oathout (who taught the first school and built the first frame building), Levi Sykes, A. McDonell, Stephen Parish, John Battles, and others.

Between 1822 and 1830 came, among others, Ichabod Franklin, Whitman Franklin, Oliver Pool, Philip Bigler, Alpheus Stearns, Rev. Ezra Amadon, John N. Kierstead, Caleb Fairbanks, Norman Coe, Artemas Fairbanks, Fuller Gould, Samuel Daniels, David Ross, Zenas Barton, Salem Town, Benedict Russell, Ebenezer Collar, Gustavus Warner, Gaylord and Ashbel Kellogg, Dorus and Josephus Ingersoll, Justin Wells, Justin H. and James Wells (sons of Justin), the Kendalls, Charles Kysor, and John Easton.

The population of the town in 1830 was 1,139; in 1850, 1,340; in 1870, 1,204; in 1890, 1,104. Most of the early settlers were poor in worldly goods, but rich in energy, perseverance, and industry. It is probable that no part of the Holland purchase was originally settled by men with less available means than the section of country embracing this and adjoining towns. The first settlers made their living for the first year or two by boiling black-salts from the ashes of the timber removed from the land, and the salts had to be drawn on drays, usually by a yoke of bulls, to Fayette, now Silver Creek, or to some other place where a market could be found; and after small clearings had been made and a little grain raised there was no market for it except for home consumption. About 1840 the inhabitants began to turn their attention to dairying, which business has steadily increased to the present time, and which is now the leading industry.

The first birth in the new town was that of Edward, a son of Edmund Dudley, who was born July 26, 1820. The first marriage was that of Abner W. Wise to Laura Davison in 1820; she lived in Conewango. Rev. Ezra Amadon in 1823 erected the first frame barn, the second one being built in 1824 by Samuel Daniels. Richard Oathout in 1825 put up the first frame house—a building intended for a store, but never occupied for that purpose. The first death was that of Laura, a young child of John Fairbanks, in 1821; the first death of an adult was that of widow Mercy Gould in 1824. Asa Franklin opened the first tavern in 1822 and Ebenezer Collar built the first saw-mill on Mud creek in 1824. The first religious services were held at the house of Abner Wise in 1820 by Rev. Daniel Hadley, a Baptist minister from Chautauqua county. The first physician in town was Samuel Daniels, a Thompsonian practitioner. Dr. Joseph Wilson came in 1834 and in September, 1835, Dr. Everett Stickney settled here to practice his profession. Dr. A. A. Hubbell was one of the most noted physicians the town ever claimed as a resident. Pliny L. Fox and John F. Mosher were prominent lawyers.

The first town meeting was held at the house of Amasa Green on March 5, 1833, and these officers were elected: James Waterhouse, supervisor; Eleazer Slocum, town clerk; John Easton, David B. Whiting, Thomas Noyes, assessors; John Carpenter, collector; Joshua Fairbanks, Justin Wells, David Sweet, John Cooper, justices of the peace; William Kendall, Ahiman Ross, Theophilus Fairbanks, highway commissioners; John Carpenter, Justin W. Wells, Luther Kendall, constables; John N. Kierstead and Ezra Amadon, overseers of the poor; James Coe, sealer of weights. The supervisors, town clerks, and justices of the peace have been as follows:

Supervisors.—James Waterhouse, 1833, 1835; John Cooper, 1834, 1836, 1840-44, 1853; Gustavus Warner, 1837-39; Gaylord Kellogg, 1845, 1854; William H. Andrews, 1846-47; John Lang, 1848-49; Ezra W. Cooper, 1850-52; Ara Barton, 1855-56; James Casten, 1857-58; Isaac N. Smith, 1859-60; William Fancher (resigned and Harvey H. Holmes elected to fill vacancy), 1861; Edwin C. Durfee, 1862-64; John F. Mosher, 1865-66, 1877; Hermon V. Ingersoll, 1867-68, 1874; Edgar Shannon, 1869-70, 1875, 1881-82; Thomas Caneen, 1871-72; John A. Seekins, 1873; James F. Town, 1876; Henry J. Trumbull, 1878-80, 1886; Albert T. Fancher, 1883-85; Frank D. Caneen, 1887-88; Cyrus Rhoades, 1889-91; Francis A. Mosher, 1892-93.

Town Clerks.—Eleazer Slocum, 1833-34, 1839; Jabez Thompson, 1835-36; John Cooper, 1837-38; Nathaniel Cooper, 1840-41; Harvey H. Holmes, 1842-48; William Hurd, 1849-50, 1861-63; George Shannon, 1851; Ahiman Ross, 1852; Ellery Stone, 1853-55; Anthony Day, 1856, 1858, 1860, 1866; Ira R. Jones, 1857; John Fancher, 1859; Rufus A. Kellogg, 1864; William O. Tyler, 1865; Edgar Shannon, 1867-68; Henry J. Trumbull, 1869; H. J. V. Smith, 1870; Edward W. Clark, 1871-72; Almon L. Day, 1873-76; John E. Caneen, 1877-79; Thomas Caneen, 1880-83; James Ashdown, 1884-85; W. R. Murdock, 1886; M. J. Ackley, 1887-88; W. O. Harmon, 1889-93.

Justices of the Peace.—1833, Joshua Fairbanks, Justin Wells, David L. Sweet, John Cooper; 1834, David Sweet; 1835, Joshua Fairbanks; 1836, Frederick Noyes; 1837, Ashbel L. Kellogg; 1838, William Randall; 1839, Xury Blodgett; 1840, Frederick Noyes, John Carpenter; 1841, Benjamin Southwick; 1842, Michael Brenenstahl; 1843, Dorus Ingersoll; 1844, Frederick Noyes; 1845, John Lang, Ashbel Kellogg; 1846, John Lang; 1847, Dorus Ingersoll; 1848, Frederick Noyes; 1849, Corydon Morgan, John Carpenter; 1850, John B. Fairbanks; 1851, Dorus Ingersoll; 1852, John Rhodes; 1853, Corydon Morgan; 1854, Edwin C. Durfee; 1855, Harrison Judd; 1856, Leonard Clark; 1857, Almon L. Day; 1858, David Lang, Moses McMillan; 1859, Edwin C. Durfee; 1860, Moses McMillan; 1861, Almon L. Day; 1862, David Lang, Leonard Clark; 1863, William N. Herrick; 1864, Moses McMillan; 1865, Curtis Thompson; 1866, Miles Coe, David Lang; 1867, Moses McMillan; 1868, E. C. Durfee, David Jones; 1869, Gabriel J. Wood; 1870, H. M. Hunt; 1871, H. V. Ingersoll; 1872, David Jones; 1873, Albert L. Palmer; 1874, Melville M. Evarts, Gilbert L. Mosher; 1875, George W. Press; 1876, Marcus W. Cooper; 1877, Almon L. Day; 1878, William S. Easton; 1879, David Jones; 1880, Levi Blasdell, M. W. Cooper; 1881, H. J. Trumbull; 1882, David Jones; 1883, Melvin J. Ackley; 1884, David Jones; 1885, Richard Ingersoll, H. J. Trumbull; 1886, E. C. Durfee; 1887, J. C. Green; 1888, R. Milton Child; 1889, H. J. Trumbull; 1890, W. R. Murdock; 1891, J. C. Green; 1892, John F. Harrison; 1893, Allen Potter.

A log school house, 16x18 feet, was erected on the east part of lot 49 in 1822, and in this was taught that winter the first school in town, the teacher being Richard Oathout. The next spring a school was taught at the Center by Louis Grover and in the fall by Abigail Latham. The first school commissioners were Cyrus Daniels, Isaac Leach, and Collins Gibson, and the first inspectors were Leonard Clark, Johnson Noyes, and Richard Oathout. With the increase of population there has been a corresponding increase in the degree of efficiency of the town's school system. The old log school houses have been succeeded by neat and tasty frame buildings. The two-story structure at Leon Center was erected about 1877 at a cost of $2,000.

The first manufacturing industry established in Leon was a saw-mill placed in operation on Mud creek in the summer of 1826 by Ebenezer Collar. This was located at "The Hollow," and in 1828 became, with other interests, the property of Johnson Noyes, who put in a run of stones for grinding grain. Noyes also soon started a distillery and a wool-carding and cloth-dressing establishment. About 1832 Jabez Thompson purchased these various interests of Noyes and the place became quite widely known as Leon Mills. Thompson erected a grist-mill which for years has been the only one in town. In 1842 the dam was removed because of its causing an excessive overflow of contiguous land and a race half a mile long constructed to conduct the water to the mill. In 1838 Abner W. Wise built a saw-mill on Mud creek near the great spring which finally became the property of Ezra Amadon and burned. In consequence of the overflow the site had to be abandoned. About 1845 Amadon started another mill on the race a short distance west which was last operated by Edwin C. Durfee.

Among others who erected saw-mills in the town were Daniel B. Whiting in 1832; Matthew Franklin in 1845; Judd & Babcock in 1861; and Butcher & Kysor in 1864. The Judd & Babcock mill was located at East Leon and was operated by steam. It burned and in 1875 John A. Seekins moved some of the machinery to Leon Center, where he manufactured lumber and ground corn. This also burned in 1877.

Cheese factories were established in convenient localities as the development of the dairying interests demanded and for two decades or more cheese making has been the leading manufacturing industry of the town. Jenks & Ross built a factory at East Leon and Hunt & Caneen another at Leon Center both in 1866. The present number of factories in Leon is five, and these receive the milk from 1,100 or 1,200 cows.

The oldest highway in the town is Riga street, so called from the fact that many of its first settlers came from Riga, Monroe county. After the Jamestown road was opened the principal travel was transferred to that thoroughfare. In 1833 there were twenty-two road districts, the present number being about twenty-seven. Railroad facilities are afforded at Pine Valley, Cherry Creek, Conewango, and Cattaraugus.

The first tavern opened in Leon was kept by Asa Franklin on the old Kent road. In 1826 Luman Coe started another in a double log house which he subsequently moved to a frame building. Amasa Green became an inn keeper near Leon Mills about 1830 and in 1844 or 1845 Capt. William Fenton opened another tavern on the Jamestown road which became a famous stopping place for stages. Thomas Noyes had a hotel at the Center about 1834 which was used the longest and became the oldest hostelry in town. About 1837 John Cooper opened one which was later kept by Nathaniel Cooper.

In 1827 was opened at Leon Mills by Johnson Noyes the first store in town, and in 1830 Jabez Thompson started another at the same place in a building erected for the purpose and afterward used for a barn. In those days one of the chief articles sold was liquor. At Leon Center the first store was opened in 1833 by James Dunlap and the second one was started in 1843 by Ira R. Jones and Porter Dudley. In this village Edgar Shannon, the Coopers, and others were prominent merchants.

One of the most dastardly crimes ever committed in Cattaraugus county occurred in this town in June, 1841, when Richard Brown and his wife were murdered, the latter in the house and the former a short distance away. The couple had been married but three weeks and lived in a log house on lot 20 some two miles east of the Center. The murderer was a man named Bouhall, who was ostensibly one of the most active searchers for the criminal after the deed had been discovered. He was arrested and taken to the jail at Ellicottville, where, after several months, and despairing of escape, he confessed and detailed the crime and hung himself with a towel to the post of the bedstead in his cell. His object was to secure about $40 in money which the Browns had in their possession. To get it he intended to break into the house while both were away, but failing in this he first killed Mrs. Brown and then her husband. To conceal the double crime he advanced the theory that Brown had murdered his wife and left the country. The tragedy occurred on a Monday, but did not become public until the following Sunday morning, when the news was brought to Leon Center by Bouhall and others.

The first burial in Leon was made on lot 49 in 1821, the remains being those of Laura, daughter of Capt. John Fairbanks. In the absence of a minister the simple services on this occasion were conducted by Thomas Northrup, of Conewango. The next burial occurred in 1823, being that of Henry, a young son of Alpheus Stearns, who was scalded to death. The third burial was that of widow Mercy Gould in 1824, also on lot 49, hers being the first adult's death in the town. These interments led James Franklin to set aside and inclose a half-acre plat for a graveyard. The Leon Center cemetery was next opened and contains about an acre of ground. The East Leon Cemetery Association was organized March 18, 1878, with Richard Ingersoll, president, and Cyrus Ingersoll, secretary. Three-eighths of an acre of land was purchased from the farm of Ahimaaz Easton and the first burial made was a child of Richard Easton. Several removals from the cemetery in Dayton were subsequently made to this burial place.

In the early settlement of the town the principal business place for what was then the whole of Conewango was "The Hollow," on Mud creek, about half a mile north of Rutledge. In 1830 it became the town's polling place. It had an extensive water privilege, which was utilized for a saw-mill, a grist-mill, and a fulling-mill; there were also a distillery, an ashery, a hotel, and a grocery store, all of which, except the hotel, were under the general supervision of Johnson Noyes, who was the controlling owner of the site. In 1836 the distilleries were all closed in this town and in Conewango. The business interests subsequently passed to the ownership of Jabez Thompson and the place took the name of Leon Mills. At one time it was a lively business center, but its activity was finally diverted to Leon Center (Leon postoffice), near the center of the town. This village contains three church edifices, four general stores, two wagon shops, one planing-mill and turning-lathe, one blacksmith shop, a cheese factory, a school house, and about fifty dwellings. The postoffice here was originally established at and bore the name of Leon Mills about 1835. An early and probably the first postmaster was John Carpenter, who removed to Leon Center about 1840 and took the office with him. The name was soon afterward changed to Leon.

East Leon is a postoffice and hamlet in the northeast corner of the town and contains a store, blacksmith shop, and a few houses. The first postoffice in Leon was established as Pleasant Grove in the eastern part of the town, with William Kendall as postmaster, who held the position until after 1840. About this time it was changed to East Leon. Among its postmasters have been Jonathan Waldron, Oliver Waldron, Ezekiel Seekins, Harrison Judd, and William Seekins.

Peace Vale postoffice was established about 1862 with Ezekiel Butler as postmaster. S. C. Green held the position from 1865 to 1871, when the office was discontinued.

In the war of the Rebellion the town of Leon furnished, in proportion to its population, more soldiers than any town in the county and possibly in the State. It is said that it furnished also the youngest soldier in the army—Oren Kelsey, aged thirteen years. A comparatively complete list of those who served, and also of those who participated in the Revolutionary war or War of 1812 and subsequently became citizens here, is given in Chapter XV.

The earliest religious services held in Leon were of the Freewill Baptist order, and the first meeting occurred at the house of Abner Wise, on lot 49, in August, 1820, the preacher on this occasion and subsequently for two or three years being Rev. Daniel Hadley from Gerry, Chautauqua county. The first movement to organize a church was made by Rev. Ezra Amadon, a Reformed Methodist minister and one of the original founders of that denomination at Readsboro, Vt., in 1814. It was constituted of seceders from the Methodist Episcopal church who laid great stress on faith and perfection of character and the attainment of a higher degree of holiness. Elder Amadon came to Leon with his family in February, 1822, and at once began preaching the doctrines of the new order. In the following year a church was formed in the southern part of the town with eight members. In his labors the elder was greatly assisted by Thomas W. Cheney, a zealous young man and faithful worker who was afterward a minister in this church. The society continued to flourish until at one time it had over 100 communicants. In 1828 a church edifice was erected on lot 49, which is thought by some to have been the first frame church building in the county. It would seat 500 persons and was occasionally used by other denominations. Up to about 1840 the ministers succeeding Elder Amadon were Henry Amadon (son of Ezra), Thomas W. Cheney, Eleazer Ewers, and Uriah S. Lembocker. In 1840 the Reformed Methodists of the State invited or favored a union with the Wesleyans, but in this the Leon church did not collectively agree. Dissensions ensued, and the meeting house was abandoned and soon went to decay. The timbers, etc., were subsequently removed and no trace of its location remained.

In the north part of the town the missionary, John Spencer, held meetings of the Congregational order in the school house prior to 1825. Most of his followers, however, were Presbyterians. In 1823 Rev. Jonathan Blake, a minister sent out by the Baptist Home Missionary Society, held services at the dwelling of Robert Durfee and in the school house on lot 49. In the summer of 1824 he organized a church of his denomination with ten members and with Otis L. Durfee the first deacon. Mr. Durfee soon afterward removed to Pennsylvania and became a minister. The society was too poor to sustain a regular pastor and was scarcely able to maintain an organization. In 1834 a revival occurred and the society became the First Baptist church of Leon. In 1840 a frame edifice was erected at Leon Center at a cost of $1,200. This will seat 200 persons and is still used in a remodeled condition as a house of worship, the property being valued at $1,500. The society has fifteen members, with Rev. C. Boorman as pastor, and a Sunday school of thirty scholars.

The Methodist Episcopal church of Leon Center was organized November 23, 1835. Prior to this a class had been formed of which Simeon Harmon was leader, and the meetings were frequently held at his house. The church society was organized by twelve trustees and forty members, and Rev. John Scott was the first pastor. In 1836 a church edifice was erected, of wood, at a cost of $600, and in 1858 this was thoroughly repaired and a belfry and bell added. The present membership numbers thirty, with Rev. Mr. Dunkle as pastor, and connected is a Sunday school of forty scholars. The present value of the church property is $2,000. In this connection it is appropriate to note the formation of the first Sunday school in the town, which occurred at an early period in the history of this church. This was superintended during the summer by James Dunlap and discontinued upon the approach of cold weather. David C. Brand, about 1855, was the first superintendent of a Sunday school in the town that was continued throughout the year.

The Leon Free Methodist church was organized in the fall of 1874 with six members by Rev. J. W. McAlpine. In 1876 the old school house in the Center was purchased and used as a house of worship.

Soon after the distilleries in Leon and Conewango were discontinued this town became an excellent field for the organization of temperance societies. One of the first was Leon Division, No. 372, S. of T., which flourished for several years. Bouquet Lodge, No. 728, I. O. G. T., was organized in 1868 with E. C. Durfee as the first W. C. T. At one time it had over 100 members.

Fancher Post, No. 310, G. A. R., was organized November 24, 1882, with twenty members. It was named in honor of Capt. William Fancher of Co. K, 64th N. Y. Vols. The first officers were A. J. Eldridge, P. C.; D. T. Wood, S. V. C.; B. F. Cunningham, J. V. C.; James Ashdown, adjutant; G. O. Gorsline, Q. M. The post has twenty members with these officers: R. L. Barlow, P. C.; Amos S. Smith, S. V. C.; Patrick Foley, J. V. C.; E. W. Clark, adjutant; A. J. Eldridge, Q. M.

The Woman's Relief Corps, auxiliary to Fancher Post, G. A. R., was organized in October, 1891, with thirty-five members and these officers: Rozella Barlow, president; Clem Eldridge, S. V. P.; Kate Milliman, J. V. P.; Lucy Cooper, secretary; Lillian Tuttle, treasurer.

Peter Ackler, a native of Germany, came to Persia while young and died there at an advanced age. His children were Peter M., Willard, Henry, Roxana, Betsey, and Keziah. Peter M. Ackler, born in Persia, as were also his brothers and sisters, came to Leon in 1870. He married Mittie Randall; children: Albert, Prentice D., Alden, and Eldredge. Mr. Ackler married, second, Claircena Franklin; children: Earl and Lemuel J. Eldredge Ackler was born April 8, 1863, and June 25, 1890, married Lucy J. Hunt, of Leon.

Rev. Ezra Amadon was born in Berkshire county, Mass., about 1760 and removed to Bennington county, Vt., about 1800. There he was one of the moving spirits and original founders of the Reformed Methodist denomination in America, establishing a church of that faith at Readsboro in 1814. He came to Leon in February, 1822, and was the first to start the movement for the organization of a Reformed Methodist church in the town, forming a body of that belief in the spring of 1823. He moved to Waupun, Wis., in 1853, where he died about 1860; his family all removed to Wisconsin except Ezra, his son, who died here in 1884, leaving a son, George, now living in Leon.

David Barton, born in Massachusetts, March 2, 1768, came to Leon at an early day, cleared a farm, and died Feb. 16, 1850. His wife was Susanna Fairfield, a native of Massachusetts, and their children were David J., Grosvenor, Elizabeth B., Susan, Lucinda, Elliburgh, Zenas, Hiram, Thaddeus F., and Laura.

Fry Barton came to Leon in 1830. He was a son of Benjamin Barton, a soldier of the Revolution. Fry settled near Leon village, on a farm, and died in 1872. His son Ara was supervisor of the town in 1855 and 1856, and was otherwise prominent in local political and social affairs.

Stephen Caneen was born in the Isle of Man and came to Black Rock, N. Y., in 1824, where he died. His son Thomas was born in 1826 and came to Leon in 1832, where he married Dolly Cooper, daughter of Elisha Cooper; children: Dr. John E. (see page 141), Rose, and Frank D. Mr. Caneen has been a general merchant in Leon since 1869. He has held various town offices, being postmaster, assessor, town clerk, and collector several years each, and in 1871 and 1872 represented the town on the Board of Supervisors. His son Frank D. was also supervisor in 1887 and 1888.

James Casten was a son of John and Jerusha (Gates) Casten. John Casten served in the Revolutionary war and by trade was a tailor. He came to Collins, Erie county, where he died in 1843. James Casten, his son, was born Sept. 25, 1801. In 1851 he became a resident of Leon and represented the town on the Board of Supervisors in 1857 and 1858. He died on the Casten homestead March 3, 1888. Mr. Casten married Amanda Wheeler, who was born July 16, 1802, and died Jan. 13, 1887; children: Ann R. (Mrs. S. W. Beardsley), James W., John G., Ira L., Emily A. (Mrs. Butler R. Waite), Mary J. (Mrs. W. H. Watson), William H., Eunice, and Stephen W. William H. served in Co. B, 154th N. Y. Vols., and died July 4, 1865. Stephen W. died Oct. 4, 1887, and James W. on Nov. 20, 1889.

William Clark, a soldier in the war of the Revolution, came to Leon in 1831, but one year later removed to Cherry Creek, N. Y., where he died about 1840. His wife was Abigail Hudson, who died before the family's removal to western New York. His son Hudson, born Jan. 27, 1784, married, in May, 1810, Lucy Marsh, and died in Cherry Creek in 1847. His children were Leonard, Mary, Luther, Betsey, Adolphus, and Rebecca. Leonard Clark, on Jan. 10, 1832, married Hannah Shannon, who died March 30, 1862; children: Lucy R., Mariah L., Edward W., James W., and Alexina. Edward W. Clark married Martha R. Kellogg; children: Henry E. and Ray Belle. For his second wife he married Annie Hunt; children: Clyde C. and M. Leonard. He enlisted Oct. 1, 1861, in Co. K, 64th N. Y. Vols., as a musician. Leonard Clark served as justice of the peace twelve years.

Lemuel Cook, born in St. Lawrence county, N. Y., came to Perrysburg in 1832, where he died, as did also his wife, whose maiden name was Phebe Shaw. Their son Noah married Annie, daughter of Rufus Wares, who died in 1881; he is now living in Leon. Children: Phebe, Joel G., Elisha H., Eloda, Myron J., and Marvin W. Myron J. Cook, born in Perrysburg, Dec. 10, 1840, married, March 9, 1870, Melissa, daughter of E. Bierce; children: Noah C., Annie B., and Marmaduke. Mr. Cook is now a farmer in Leon.

Col. Sylvenus Cook was born in Tinnouth, Vt., and in 1813 came to Collins, Erie county, where he died in 1883. He was an active participant in the old State militia, whence he derived his title, being commissioned colonel of the 198th Regiment along in the thirties. His wife was Nancy Phillips. Their son Chauncey, born Aug. 5, 1840, married Melissa T. Potter, and died in Leon, Feb. 15, 1891; children: Elmer, Ward A., Eva L., and Elton A.

Ezra W. Cooper was at the time of his death, which occurred at Gowanda on March 5, 1893, one of the oldest pioneers of Leon, and was a man universally respected. He was supervisor of the town in 1850, 1851, and 1852; he was an upright man, and a Mason in all the name implies. His father, Nathaniel Cooper, came into Leon in 1821 and with Daniel Dye articleed the whole of lot 45. He died June 26, 1855. Elisha Cooper, a brother of Nathaniel, was also an early settler of this town, where he died. John Cooper was and for eight years—1834, 1836, 1840-44, and 1853—town supervisor.

Edmond Damon, son of Charles and Lucretia (Withington) Damon, was born in Vermont, May 22, 1816, and came to Ellicottville in 1839 and to Conewango in 1854, settling on the farm upon which he now resides. He married Achsah Aldrich, of Canton, N. Y.; children: Melzer, Arathusa L. (Mrs. William T. Fenton), and Hiram A. Mr. Damon has been a man of remarkable perseverance and energy. Several of his children are married and have families, and all are highly respected. Hiram A. resides in Leon.

Edmund Dudley came in the spring of 1819 to Leon, where he died at the age of ninety-two years. He was a wood mechanic and chair maker, and reared a family of seven children, of whom Edward was the first white child born in the town, his birth occurring July 26, 1820. Mr. Dudley was the first to article a piece of land in Leon, his selection falling on a part of lot 41, on which he built a shanty. He article'd the land of the Holland Land Company in the fall of 1819, at Ellicottville, exchanging for it half a barrel of whisky, which was half the quantity he had with him at the time. He sold his land in 1843 and finally died in Rutledge.

John Durfee was born near Providence, R. I., and for a time was a resident of Tolland, Conn., and of Schoharie county, N. Y. He subsequently removed to Chautauqua county, where he died in 1817. His children were Robert, Rhoda, Abner, John, David, Zephaniah, and Otis L. Robert Durfee came to Mayville, N. Y., in 1812, removing thence to Leon in 1819, where he cleared a farm and died in December, 1859. He was in the War of 1812. Otis L. Durfee came to this town in 1820, but subsequently removed to Pennsylvania and became a Baptist clergyman. Robert married Betsey Hollman, who bore him one daughter, Abigail; his second wife was Polly Cheney, who died in Leon in 1840, his children by her being Edwin C., Willard P., Cornelia M., and Elvira L. Edwin C. Durfee was born Dec. 20, 1819, and married Mary Ann Kountz, who was born Aug. 1, 1822; children: Robert E., Mary H., Helen, Charles E., and Bertha. Mr. Durfee is one of the oldest and most respected residents of the county. He was especially active in the cause of the soldiers and their widows of the Revolutionary and Mexican wars and the War of 1812, and prior to 1860 procured many bounties and pensions for those in the western part of the county. In politics he has been prominent, serving his town in several minor capacities and as supervisor in 1862, 1863, and 1864. He was influential in securing recruits for the town's quota in the Rebellion, and during most of the time since the war he has filled the office of justice of the peace. He is a land surveyor and farmer, and resides on the homestead.

Odell and their children were Eli, William A., and Merton J. The last named was born May 5, 1863, and is a farmer in Leon. Mrs. Sarah K. Rockwell is a daughter of Peter and Elizabeth (Killborn) Odell.

William Ross, a native of Oneida county, came to New Albion soon after his marriage and died there at the age of sixty years. His children were Welcome, Willard, Lovisa, Sarah, and Franklin. The latter was born June 12, 1809, and died May 28, 1890. He married Lydia Lewis, of Rutledge, who died in Conewango in March, 1892; children: Lovisa, William J., Welcome F., Lydia, Walter H., Martha, Marcia, and Frankie. Walter H. Ross, born in New Albion in 1848, married, in 1874, Elnora R. Saunders, who was born in Otto in 1855; they have one daughter, Mildred B. William J. and Welcome F. Ross served in the Rebellion in Co. F, 154th N. Y. Vols.

Samuel Shannon, a son of Samuel, who served in the Revolution, was born in Vermont, came to Leon among the early settlers, and died here at the age of seventy-five years. His children were Sally, George, Bishop, Lorenzo, Harlow, Sally, 2d, Hannah, Alvira, and Serena. Lorenzo Shannon was born in Vermont, and coming to Leon when an infant he made this town his lifelong home, dying here in 1880. He was thoroughly identified with the best interests of the community and was ever a welcome visitor to the homes of a large number of friends. Mr. Shannon married Martha A. Chapman, who survives him, and who bore him these children: William B., Cyrus E., Theodocia A., Emory L., George A., and Kittie B.

Hon. Edgar Shannon was one of the most prominent men the town of Leon ever claimed as a citizen. In politics he was a Republican, and his influence in councils and conventions was both sought and feared. He held many public offices and served his constituents with honor and fidelity. He was supervisor of Leon in 1859, 1870, 1873, 1881, and 1882, holding the position at the time of his death; he served two terms (1876 and 1877) in the State Legislature. He was virtually banker for the town and a man whose counsel was wise and discreet. He was a member of the Masons, of the United Workmen, and of Post No. 310, G. A. R. Mr. Shannon enlisted Aug. 1, 1862, in Co. B, 154th N. Y. Vols., rose to the rank of first lieutenant, and was discharged June 23, 1865. He died in Leon, Dec. 28, 1882.

He sleeps 'neath the clods of the valley at rest,
From war's mingled strife and commotion;
No sorrow can rend his sightless breast,
Nor wake his patriot devotion.

Alvah Smith was an early settler of New Albion, where he cleared a farm, and where he died in 1842. He married Clarissa Burchard, who died in 1858; children: Charles, Amos, Lois, Amy, Avis, and Nancy. Charles Smith came to Leon from New Albion, cleared a farm, and died in 1879. He married Sarah Town, who died in Machias in 1876; children: Lovisa, Caroline, Amos S., Henry W., Leroy, Monroe J., Matthew B., Royal R., Frank, Sarah, and Fred. Amos S. Rev. Jonathan J. Trumbull, son of Jonathan, who served in the Revolutionary war, came into Leon from Erie county and was one of the earliest pastors of the Baptist church in the town. He finally died in the barracks at Sacket's Harbor while in the U. S. service. Several of his descendants have been worthy residents of the county; his grandson, the son of Henry J.—Claude C.,—is the present keeper of the alms house at Machias, while Henry J. himself is serving his second term as county superintendent of the poor, having been supervisor of Leon in 1878, 1879, 1880, and 1886. Henry J. and several of his brothers were soldiers in the Rebellion.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF LITTLE VALLEY.

LITTLE VALLEY was formed from the town of Perry and is the fourth town organized in the county. It was set off by the legislative act passed April 10, 1818, and at its formation included all the territory now embraced in the towns of Leon, Conewango, Randolph, South Valley, Elko, Cold Spring, Napoli, New Albion, Mansfield, Salamanca, Red House, and Little Valley. This vast area has been sub-divided and reduced by the erection of other towns until it now contains only about three-fourths of township three in the seventh range of the Holland Land Company's survey, comprising 18,968 acres. Little Valley is bounded on the north by Mansfield, on the east by Great Valley, on the south by Salamanca, and on the west by Napoli, and lies a little southwest of the center of the county.

Like the surrounding towns the surface is hilly and elevated upland divided by Little Valley creek (from which the town takes its name) into two principal ridges. This creek, the principal stream of the town, flows through this valley in nearly a due south direction and through the central part of the town, and unites with the Allegheny at West Salamanca. The summits of the highest hills are 500 or 600 feet above the creek. This broad valley, extending entirely across the town, is beautiful and has a deep, fertile soil. It was originally timbered with towering pines while the hills were crowned with sturdy hemlocks and groves of hardwood.

One of the natural wonders of Cattaraugus county is situated in the forest on lot 57, and is appropriately named Rock City. It is a nearly level plateau on the top of a hill about 400 feet above the valley and 2,000 feet above tide-water. The place is accessible from Little Valley and from Salamanca. At the "city entrance" one descends for about ten feet an inclined plane four feet wide and about thirty-five feet long, at the foot of which is an open court or "public square." Here is a circular flat stone, raised about four feet above the ground, from which innumerable streets, lanes, and alleys wind in devious ways over an hundred acres. In a minute description of the place Professor Hall, in his "Geology of New York," says: "The blocks of sandstone and conglomerate are widely scattered along the margin of the hill, and as we approach the undisturbed parts of the rock they become more numerous, and assume a regularity in arrangement which shows them to remain nearly in their original relative position, except that the joints are widened by the undermining of the rocks below and partly, perhaps, by the destruction of the rock itself. The whole presents an appearance like a cliff of harder rock resting on a more destructible one below, which has been exposed to the waves of the sea or large lakes. In some places, where the blocks are otherwise closely arranged, there are large spaces where the masses have been removed or disintegrated, presenting a fancied resemblance to court-yards or squares in the midst of the numerous streets and alleys. The whole area occupied by the rock at this place is estimated at an hundred acres. Huge trees standing upon almost barren rock, on the top of these immense blocks, have sent their roots down the sides to the deep soil below, which thus supports the growth above. The masses offer fine exhibitions of the diagonal lamination and contorted seams of iron ore. The rectangular blocks (composed of pure white pebbles conglomerated) are from thirty to thirty-five feet in thickness, and standing regularly arranged along the line of outcrop "present an imposing appearance and justify the application of the name it has received."

As early as 1807 Judge Benjamin Chamberlain and John Green had taken a claim upon some land in Little Valley, situated upon the creek of the same name, but abandoned it without materially improving it. About that time David Powers, William Gillmore, Alpheus Bascom, and Luther Stewart came to the vicinity and continued to make improvements until the beginning of the War of 1812. David Powers, for his own convenience and for that of his neighbors, built a saw-mill. Fearing the continuation of the war would totally stop the increase of the settlement they all moved away.

Hon. Stephen Crosby came to Little Valley in 1815, and to him and his family belong the honor of being the first permanent settlers of the town. Mr. Crosby cut his road through the woods from Franklinville. He was joined by David Chase in 1817, who settled on lot 21. Benjamin Winship settled on the same lot about that time. Other prominent early settlers were Enoch Chase, cousin of David, and Henry Chase, cousin of both David and Enoch, who settled on lot 23 in 1819. Lyman Lee came in 1821. He was not a native of Massachusetts, as a former historian has asserted, but was born in Guilford, Conn. Neither did Mrs. Lee bring apple seeds from Connecticut. She did bring seeds from Bloomfield, Ontario county, whence she and Mr. Lee removed to Little Valley. Noah Culver was another early settler who came a year or two later. Simeon Smead and his brother Daniel were also early settlers. James Stratton, a native of Athol, Mass., came to Little Valley in 1819 from Erie county, where he had settled in 1812. Asa and Lewis Sweetland came from Genesee county and settled in town about 1828. Of all these early pioneers only Asa Sweetland survives.

Orril, daughter of Hon. Stephen Crosby, born March 16, 1817, was the first white child born in town. Mr. Crosby was the first or one of the first justices of the peace in Little Valley and officiated at the marriage of Gaius Wheaton and Lefa Chase, which was Little Valley's first wedding. Enoch Chase, who died in 1825, was the first adult's death in town. About 1820 Mr. Crosby erected the first frame barn and about the same time Daniel Smead built the first frame house. Alfred Ayres kept the first store a short distance below the village. Abner Chase, Luther Doolittle, and Benjamin Johnson were pioneer inn keepers. Abner Chase, oldest son of Henry Chase, came to Little Valley and settled with his father, who had preceded him six or eight years, and resided on lot 23. Soon after Abner Chase settled there he built a large frame house and larger barns and opened the place to the public as a tavern, which he conducted twenty-five years. This house soon became widely known for its loaded tables and good fires. Its old-fashioned fireplaces in winter imparted a decided cheerfulness to the place and that old tavern was always full. It was situated on the "main line from away down east to out west," and immense numbers of emigrants passed over the route in "white covered wagons." Mr. Chase was an earnest admirer of "Old Hickory" and an ardent Democrat. His sign-post was a huge hickory log with its rough, shaggy bark left intact, and bore aloft an immense sign on which was inscribed in large letters the single word, Temperance. Democrat and temperance were his watch-words, and the many wordy wrangles in the old reception room (not barroom) should have settled matters of State.

The early settlers with their romantic fields of stumps called cleared land could not have the common comforts of the life they had led in the homes they had left. There was no money, and the only means to meet taxes was to cut and pile the huge trees, burn them, save and leach the ashes, boil the lye into black-salts, put them into a bag, sling it upon their shoulders, and tramp on foot to market twenty or thirty miles away. Sweet herbs and garden sage were substituted for tea, peas and the coffee-bean for coffee, and the thorn-bush furnished the necessary pins and buttons. This condition soon changed. Stores were opened and a barter trade established. The old log houses disappeared and frame structures superseded them. The timid deer were frequent visitors, bears and wolves were often seen, and sometimes at night the pioneers were startled by the shrill scream of the panther.

William P. Ayres, son of the pioneer merchant, Alfred Ayres, says that in the winter of 1848-49, when he and his father were returning by moonlight from Salamanca, where they had marketed a load of hay, they were beset by a pack of nine wolves. He was then a strong and courageous man of twenty-one. His father, armed with a pitch-fork, occupied the front of the sled and drove the horses. William, armed in like manner, guarded the rear. The wolves attacked the team, but the snow was deep and they were trampled down by the horses. Then the wolves made a rear attack and the fiercest one leaped upon the sled. The young man gave the fork a vigorous thrust, which plunged the tines into his enemy, and it retreated.

It is a tradition and probably a fact that David Powers erected a small saw-mill (the first in Little Valley) on Little Valley creek in 1810. As the neighborhood was deserted about 1812 very little is known about it. Other mills some years later were built on the principal streams of the town. O. & A. Brown built a steam saw-mill in the village in 1868 which was destroyed by an explosion of steam in 1872. A mill of larger dimensions was soon built on the site and was destroyed in like manner June 5, 1875, causing the tragic death of David Brown, one of the proprietors, his four-year-old son, and the fireman, James H. Weist. Horace Howe, the business man of the town at that time, erected a grist-mill with five runs of stone and the best machinery. Mr. Howe became involved in some way and the mill was sold to Silas Vinton, of Gowanda, who removed it in 1873 to Hidi on Cattaraugus creek.

Provision was made for holding the first town meeting at the house of Jared Benedict on the first Tuesday of March, 1819, by the Legislature which passed the act of April 10, 1818. The town has no records prior to March 4, 1823. The supervisors' journal of 1886, which purports to contain a list of all the members of the Board for each year from the organization of the county down to and including the year 1865, gives Royal Tefft as the supervisor of Little Valley in 1819 and 1820 and Stephen Crosby in 1821 and 1822. The town meeting in Little Valley in 1823 was held at the house of Enoch Chase, and the following is a copy of its proceedings recorded in the clerk's office:

"The following are the proceedings of a meeting of the inhabitants of Little Valley on Tuesday, the fourth day of March, 1823, at the house of Enoch Chase, it being their annual town meeting.

"Balloted for and elected Simeon Smead, supervisor; ditto Gulsion Morgan, town clerk; ditto Jonathan Kinnicutt, Aaron Razy, Benjamin Winship, assessors; ditto Galus Wheaton, John A. Kinnicutt, Asa Morgan, commissioners of highways; ditto David Chase, Benjamin Chambers, overseers of the poor; ditto Nathaniel Fish, collector; ditto Simeon Smead, Aaron Razy, Gulsion Morgan, commissioners of common schools; ditto John A. Kinnicutt, William A. Hopkins, inspectors of schools; ditto Nathaniel Fish, Lyman Lee, Noel Hopkins, constables.

"Voted, to raise the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars for the improvement of highways.

"Voted, that we raise twenty-five dollars to purchase seals of weights and measures.

"Voted, that we raise eight dollars to purchase town books with for the town of Little Valley.

"Moved and seconded and carried by vote that Stephen Crosby, Noah Culver, and Benjamin Hull be a committee to lay out the burying ground, said Culver to fence s'd burying ground, and the s'd commissioners to audit the account of s'd Noah Culver. Said burying ground to be near Stephen Crosby's house on the ridge east of s'd Crosby's house.

"Little Valley, March 4, 1823.

[Attest] GULSLON MORGAN,

Town Clerk, as per

"JACOB GALLOWAY."

The records of the annual town meeting held March 1, 1825, contain the following business item: "Voted that Smith A. Waterman and property be sold at auction, to the lowest bidder; bid off by Robert Gay at twenty-four dollars." The following are the principal town officers as far as obtainable:

In 1890 Little Valley had a population of 1,274 and is divided into seven common school districts, schools being maintained in all of them. There were 346 children who attended school the past year and were taught by ten teachers. The school buildings and sites are valued at $15,575. The assessed valuation of the district is $518,219. The amount of public money received from the State was $1,327.15; the amount raised for school purposes by local taxation was $2,195.42.

The New York, Lake Erie & Western railroad runs through the town along Little Valley creek, and has a station at Little Valley village.

Situated at the village of Little Valley is a neat and pretty cemetery where are buried many of the town's pioneers, the first interment being that of Herman Fisher. It is under the supervision of the Little Valley Rural Cemetery Association, which was organized September 29, 1862.

The village of Little Valley is situated near the northwest corner of the town on the creek and in the valley of the same name. The site is a smooth, even plain sufficiently elevated to afford good drainage, and is hemmed in by high hills. This location has the appearance of having been the site of a village centuries before it was the home of the present white man, and so far back in the misty past that the Indian has no tradition of the beings who built and occupied it. On the fair grounds in the northern part of the village numerous arrowheads, finished and unfinished, have been found. The lowland beyond, known as "The Elms," the trees of which are of recent growth, may have been and was probably a beautiful lake before the barrier of earth opposite the fair grounds was washed away.

In 1851, at the completion of the Erie railroad, new life and enterprise seemed to inspire the people of Cattaraugus county and Little Valley caught the general heart-throb of business and at once began to grow. Until then the village was but a small hamlet. Horace Howe opened the first store in the place about that time. He also opened his lands for sale as village lots, on the small creek in the west part of the village, and the same year Cyrus S. Shepard offered lands for the same purpose down the valley on the east. The growth of the village has since been steady and constant. In 1867 John Manley donated the site of five acres to the county, and the new county buildings were completed thereon in the spring of 1868. Since then Little Valley has enjoyed the benefit and distinction of being the capital of Cattaraugus county. The village has now a population of nearly 1,000, about a dozen stores, three church edifices (Methodist, Congregational, and Roman Catholic), a graded school building, the large cutlery shops, several hotels, a fine opera house, a banking institution, the court house and jail, two mills, shops, etc. The village was incorporated in May, 1876, and contains an area of 640 acres. Since the incorporation its citizens have taken commendable pride in improving it. About two or three acres of Mr. Manley's gift to the county, in front of the court house, has been formed into a park and adorned with trees. The town has also a small but pretty park in front of the opera house. The village is abundantly supplied with pure spring water for the use of families and for extinguishing fires.

Rock City Hotel is pleasantly and centrally located at the head of Railroad avenue in the village of Little Valley and has a frontage of ninety-eight feet on Rock City street and seventy feet on Fair Oaks street. Its forty lodging rooms and the dining room are well lighted and airy. The property is owned by J. C. Merow. Other hotels are the New Palace and the Burrell House on Railroad avenue, the former a fine new brick structure handsomely appointed and carefully kept. Another good one still is Drew's Hotel.

Little Valley Union Free School was organized in December, 1877, under an act of the Legislature passed in 1864. Willard Gould, Cyrus A. Fuller, Charles Z. Lincoln, William W. Henry, and Stephen C. Green were elected the first Board of Trustees. The board chose Willard Gould as their president and C. Z. Lincoln as clerk. The district has a commodious school house and employs five teachers: George Waller, principal, assisted in the advanced department by Miss Allie Park; in the intermediate department by Miss Grace Rich assisted by Mrs. George Waller; and in the primary department by Miss Emma Williams. The number of pupils is from 150 to 180.

Crissey & Crissey have lately opened a banking house in the Opera House block and are doing a general banking business.

Elkdale is the new name of the hamlet of Little Valley Center. It now contains Elkdale postoffice, a school house, cheese factory, and the homes of several enterprising farmers. It was early the "place of business" of the town and contained stores, a hotel kept by Dr. Stillman Chase, and a church. Early merchants were David Chase, Warren Weatherby, Edward S. Bryant.

William Adye, a native of Vermont, came to Napoli in his boyhood. In 1870 he built a cooper shop and feed-mill in the village of Little Valley, on the opposite bank of the site of the old Howe grist-mill, which is now occupied by the mills of his son Hiram. He conducted quite a business in coopering, grinding feed, and making cider. He died in 1874 and was succeeded by his brother Oscar. He in turn was succeeded in about a year by Hiram Adye, who added both a saw-mill and planing-mill in 1879. In 1885 Hiram bought the Howe site, erected a new set of buildings, put in a forty horse-power boiler and engine, and is now doing quite a flourishing business in sawing lumber, planing and matching, making shingles, turning, grinding feed, and making cider. In the spring of 1890 he sawed for Burton Brothers, of Connecticut, manufacturers of levels, 105,000 cherry levels. The capacity of his saw-mill is from 15,000 to 20,000 feet per day.

The Cattaraugus Cutlery Company was organized and incorporated under the laws of the State of New York with a capital of $25,000. The company has leased and controlled from three to five manufactories in the eastern States and has headquarters and a repository for their goods at Little Valley. They employ fourteen traveling salesmen and have in Little Valley a large manufactory with modern and improved machinery and necessary appliances, which gives employment to 125 skilled workmen. The capital was increased to $50,000 in 1888. The officers are elected annually by the Board of Directors. This industry has added at least 100 to the population.

John F. Mack's steam saw-mills have a capacity of cutting 8,000 feet of lumber per day. Connected is a planer and matcher, a moulding machine, and a feed-mill with two runs of stone. At this mill is located the Kellogg Washing Machine Company, which is manufacturing the duplex turbine washing machine and employs twenty workmen.

The Mangle Roller Company is located near the railroad depot. Rollers are turned from maple wood for the English market. This is a business carried on only in winter.

The Freewill Baptist church, the first religious society of Little Valley after the town's organization, was organized October 8, 1826, and was legally incorporated June 15, 1839. Its first Board of Trustees was composed of Lyman Lee, Abner Chase, Samuel Owen, Lyman Culver, Benjamin Winship, Cyrus W. Fuller, and Cyrus S. Shepard. The church edifice, a small wooden structure, was erected nearly a mile below the village, and in it services were regularly held for several years by Elder R. M. Cary and others. For the convenience of the greater number who then attended the little meeting house it was removed to Little Valley Center, and there it was regularly used for church service several years longer and until the church was unable on account of removals and deaths to continue an organization. This church has long since been an institution of the past and its historic edifice has been converted into some secular use.

The Methodist Episcopal church of Little Valley.*—Rev. Samuel Gregg, in his "History of Methodism Within the Bounds of the Erie Conference," 1873, says that "from 1796 up to 1812 western New York was nominally within the bounds of the Philadelphia Conference, though most of the time entirely unoccupied. In 1808 a circuit was formed by that conference, called the 'Holland Purchase,' which embraced all of the State of New York west of the Genesee river, to which the Rev. George Lane was appointed. He formed a class and preached in the west part of Sheridan, Chautauqua county, in 1808, which is said to have been the beginning of Methodism in western New York. The Genesee Conference was formed in 1810 and embraced western New York," but the Chautauqua circuit remained connected with the Ohio Conference until 1820, when it was assigned to the Genesee Conference. The Pittsburg Conference was organized in 1824 and included all of Chautauqua and that part of Cattaraugus county west of a straight line drawn from the mouth of Cattaraugus creek to "Olean Point." The remainder continued in the Genesee Conference. Little Valley was then in the Pittsburg Conference, which was divided in 1836, the northern part being called the Erie Conference; and the boundaries then given have remained substantially the same to this day. Little Valley is in the extreme northeastern part of the Erie Conference and on the boundary line. Mr. Gregg says that a small class of six or eight members was formed in the town of Napoli about 1820. It seems that there were classes in Little Valley and vicinity at an early day. March 5, 1824, a certificate was filed in the county clerk's office incorporating the "First Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Little Valley." The certificate recites that on the 5th of December, 1823, "a meeting of the male persons of full age, being members and friends of the Methodist Episcopal church, was held for the purpose of incorporating themselves as a religious society," at which Levi Done and William A. Hopkins were chosen to preside. Benjamin Chamberlain and A. Smith Waterman were chosen trustees of the first class, John A. Kinnicutt and William Kendall of the second class, and Jonathan Kinnicutt and Jeremiah Maybee of the third class. None of these persons except Mr. Maybee lived within the present limits Little Valley; but this town then embraced the present towns of New Albion, Mansfield, Little Valley, Salamanca, and Red House. Where this organization was actually located does not now appear; and it evidently was not the predecessor of the present church at Little Valley. In the spring and summer of 1824 Rev. Andrew Peck organized the "Conewango" circuit, which embraced "Conewango, Kennedy's Mills, Randolph, Ellery, Little Valley, Napoli, and Cold Spring, at all which places classes had been formed." In 1826 "Conewango" was merged in the Chautauqua and Lake circuits. The Jamestown circuit was formed in 1828. In 1830 a circuit was formed called "Napoli and Smethport." This was a large circuit, the extreme points being perhaps an hundred miles apart.

* Contributed by C. Z. Lincoln, Esq.

The next year Smethport was detached from Napoli and annexed to the Youngsville circuit, Napoli remaining alone, with Rev. John K. Hallock, preacher. Little Valley was within this circuit. In 1835 Randolph circuit was established, but it does not appear in the conference minutes for 1839, 1840, 1841, and 1842. In 1841 Rev. J. Demming reports that "three protracted meetings had been held on the Napoli circuit, which resulted in the conversion of 200 souls, one-half of whom had united with the Methodist Episcopal church." Randolph was an appointment again in 1843, with E. J. L. Baker, preacher, and this year Napoli had three preachers: D. Pritchard, Waldo W. Luke, and John H. Tagg. Napoli was dropped in 1847 and its territory annexed to Randolph circuit. About 1825 a class was formed at "Brainard's," in the eastern part of Napoli, not far from Little Valley village, and several members of this class afterward became members of the church at Little Valley. The class-book showing the names of members of this class in 1837, Simeon S. Brainard, leader, is still preserved among the records of the church at Little Valley. In 1852 James H. Whallon was appointed presiding elder of the Jamestown district and A. Burgess and Noble W. Jones were appointed preachers for the Randolph circuit. Little Valley was within the bounds of this circuit and in this year (1852) a class was formed at "Little Valley Depot," composed of Levi Godding, Bersheba Godding, Jonathan Thompson, Susan Thompson, Joseph Wing, Martha Francis, H. Applebee, Polly Foster, J. H. Shepson, E. M. Shepson, Lucinda Taggart, Urania M. Twomley, A. Sherwood, Polly Sherwood, Asa Sweetland, Jr., and Matilda Sweetland. Mr. Sweetland was appointed leader. This was the origin of the present Methodist Episcopal church of Little Valley. Mr. Sweetland, the veteran leader, is still living in Little Valley and is the only survivor of that early class. The Randolph preachers had charge of the work here for the first five years. Services were held in the second story of the building now occupied by Scott Barker as a hotel; also over George Hilsle's store and in the building now used by D. F. Rundell as a drug store. There was a great revival in the winter of 1852-53, beginning in a little prayer-meeting in the Barker building, and thirty-three persons joined the class that winter, several still being members of the church.

In 1857 Little Valley was made a separate circuit, composed of several classes, and Rev. John Akers was appointed preacher. The first quarterly conference was held October 17, 1857, at Napoli; Lester J. Worth, Jonathan Thompson, Dr. Samuel S. Wilcox, Henry Clark, and Lysander Whaley were the stewards. Dr. Wilcox was chosen recording steward. The committee appointed to estimate the allowances to the preacher for the ensuing year made a report fixing the amount at $400, as follows: traveling expenses $17.39, rent $26, discipline allowance $248; table, horse, and fuel $108.01. This estimate was divided among the different classes as follows: Burbank's $60, Napoli Center $60, Red House $40, Little Valley Depot $60, Bucktooth $80, Lebanon $100. The following resolution was adopted: "Resolved, That the steward or leader of each class, on the first Sabbath after each quarterly meeting, make a report to said class of the amount each person and class has paid for the support of the gospel the preceding quarter." In 1858 the circuit embraced Worth's, Little Valley Depot, Burbank's, Pigeon Valley, Napoli Center, Lebanon, Stryker's, Red House, Bay State, Hotchkiss Run, and Bone Run, and the salary was $692. The circuit was evidently considered too large, for at the quarterly conference held at Little Valley, January 28, 1859, S. C. Green, steward from the "Depot" class, offered the following resolution, which was adopted: "Resolved, That the interests of Methodism will best be subserved on this circuit by a judicious division of the same." The circuit was divided the next year.

July 27, 1858, the members of the society met at Odd Fellows hall to take the necessary steps to effect an incorporation of the church. Rev. F. W. Smith, the preacher in charge, and Luzon M. Botsford were chosen to preside. A resolution was adopted to incorporate by the name of the "First Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Little Valley," and Luzon M. Botsford, Lansing H. Wilcox, Asa Sweetland, Jr., Stephen C. Green, and Jonathan Thompson were elected trustees. The certificate of incorporation was recorded in the county clerk's office December 30, 1858. In 1859 a meeting house was erected by the society in the village of Little Valley and was dedicated November 19th by Bishops Matthew Simpson and Edward R. Ames. The society has worshiped in this house since that time. In the summer of 1878 a chapel was built connecting with the church and other extensive repairs were made at an expense of $1,650, and the church was re-dedicated August 1st by Bishop Randolph S. Foster, assisted by Prof. Borden P. Bowne, of Boston University. Further improvements were made in 1891 at an expense of $600, and the church is now a pleasant and commodious place of worship. The parsonage was built in 1866 by Hardy R. Finch, a wealthy member of the church. He intended to ultimately convey it to the society. May 16, 1867, he made a contract with the trustees by which they agreed to pay Mr. Finch $70 a year, for fifteen years, when he was to convey the property to the society. He died before the expiration of the time fixed, but by his will gave it to the church. In 1888 the house was enlarged and repaired at a cost of $1,100, and it is said to be one of the best in the Jamestown district.

The most important office held by a layman in local societies is that of recording steward; he has charge of the records of the quarterly conference and is ex-officio treasurer of the Board of Stewards. The following persons have held this office since the organization of the society in 1857: 1857-58, Samuel S. Wilcox; 1859-60, Stephen C. Green; 1861-63, Nathan C. Brown; 1864, Henry C. Gaylord; 1865-67, Nathan C. Brown; 1868-69, Emory A. Anderson; 1870, Augustine W. Ferrin; 1871, Archibald C. Merrick; 1872-75, Samuel Merrick; 1876-78, Charles Z. Lincoln; 1879, Samuel B. Densmore; 1880, Byron L. Sprague; 1881-89, Charles Z. Lincoln; and 1890-93, Emory

Sweetland. Since the organization of a separate class at "Little Valley Depot" in 1852 the following preachers of the gospel have served upon this charge: 1852-53, A. Burgess and Noble W. Jones; 1853-54, George W. Chesbrough and D. C. Osborn; 1854-55, Theodore D. Blinn and S. L. Mead; 1855-56, J. Robinson and T. P. Warren; 1857, John Akers; 1858, F. W. Smith and John Akers; 1859-60, Alexander Barris; 1861, E. A. Anderson and A. A. Kellogg; 1862-63, W. W. Case; 1864-65, E. B. Cummings; 1866, R. W. Scott; 1867, C. W. The First Congregational church of Little Valley, located in the eastern part of Little Valley village, was organized December 3, 1840, by Revs. Reuben Willoughby and William Hall, with twelve members. Rev. Reuben Willoughby was its first pastor. In 1854 the first and present house of worship was erected at a cost of $2,500. With the grounds it is valued at $3,000 and will seat 350 persons. The church has about 100 members, with Rev. Mrs. E. C. Woodruff as pastor. The Sunday school has 125 scholars. December 3, 1890, the church celebrated its semi-centennial anniversary.

St. Michael's Lutheran church (German), in the village of Little Valley, was organized by Rev. Max Heyer in 1874 with about twelve members. Rev.

A. O. Engel was the first pastor. In 1881 the congregation purchased the abandoned Masonic hall and fitted it up for a place of worship. The society is now in a prosperous condition and has 140 communicants with 44 voting members. Rev. E. J. Sander is pastor. The church edifice cost $1,000, its present value, and will seat 125 people.

St. Mary's church (Roman Catholic) edifice in Little Valley village was erected in 1874 by Rev. John Byron, priest of the parish of Salamanca, which then included Little Valley. The building is 24x40 feet and cost $1,600. This church is now a part of Randolph parish and service is held once each month, the priest from Randolph officiating. This mission when organized contained eight families; by removals and deaths there are now only three.

Cattaraugus Lodge, No. 239, F. & A. M., of Little Valley, was instituted in January, 1851. Meetings were first held in Howe's hall and later in Shepard's hall, which was known as Masonic hall, where it flourished until it was removed to Salamanca in 1875.

Little Valley Lodge, No. 377, I. O. O. F., was instituted August 15, 1848, on the petition of C. S. Shepard, Abner Chase, Horace Howe, D. H. Geron, and Luther Peabody. Abner Chase was the first N. G. In 1850 the number of the lodge was changed to 120. It existed until 1854, when it disbanded, and the village was without an Odd Fellows lodge until June 7, 1893, when it was re-organized by D. D. G. M. Millard N. Allen with nineteen members and these officers: Harlow J. Crissey, N. G.; Dr. F. G. Barnes, V. G.; George E. Drew, secretary; Henry Hart, treasurer; F. J. Strauss, financial secretary.

Little Valley Lodge, No. 47, A. O. U. W., was instituted December 29, 1876, with about twenty members. The first officers were Augustus Hoover, P. M. W.; Charles Z. Lincoln, M. W.; Samuel B. Densmore, foreman; Emory Sweetland, R.; D. F. Rundell, F. The lodge now has twenty-two members.

Little Valley E. A. U. was instituted September 26, 1879, with twenty-four members and these officers: Marion J. Rich, president; Mrs. M. L. Burrell, vice-president; William Burrell, treasurer; Edgar M. Yates, secretary. It now has thirty-eight members.

V. C.; Dr. S. Z. Fisher, surgeon; W. J. Markham, chaplain; L. A. Sprague, Q. M.; Samuel Dunham, adjutant; F. M. Bailey, O. D.; Bart Heath, G. The post now has about fifty members with the following officers: Col. E. A. Nash, commander; A. E. Darrow, S. V. C.; Bart Heath, J. V. C.; Martin Sigman, adjutant; Marcus Hall, surgeon.

Fair Oaks Council, No. 1266, Royal Arcanum, of Little Valley, was organized May 1, 1890, with fifteen members. The first officers were: Mortimer N. Pratt, regent; George W. Fuller, secretary. There are now 30 members.

The present officers of the Little Valley Political Equality Club are Mrs.

M. F. Lee, president; Emma Brown, vice-president; Ida Bedient, recording secretary; Almira Hall, corresponding secretary; A. W. Reed, treasurer.

Alfred Ayres, born in Johnstown, N. Y., March 25, 1794, married Betsey P. Parker, at Bloomfield, N. Y., who was born there March 1, 1805. Settling first in Bloomfield they moved in 1826 to Little Valley, where he bought of Noel Hopkins a small piece of land on which the latter had cut the first trees and built a log cabin. Ayres then gave Hopkins employment. Mr. Ayres was a peddler of tinware and yankee notions, which he followed till about 1837. He bought furs of the Indians and also dealt in groceries several years. Eventually he sold his grocery to C. S. Shepard, who conducted a larger mercantile business. About 1837 he built the first saw-mill in the town north of Little Valley Center and afterward gave his attention mainly to his farm of 250 acres. Mrs. Ayres died Jan. 25, 1851. In 1853 he married Elizabeth Nevins, of Litchfield, Ohio, and in 1858 or 1859 he sold his homestead and removed to South Amherst, Ohio, where he resided nearly four years, when he returned to Little Valley to live with his youngest daughter, Eliza Jane (Mrs. Leonard Gowing), where he died of paralysis in Nov., 1884. His son, William P. Ayres, was born on the homestead Aug. 14, 1827. In 1842 or 1843 he began to carry the mail on his father's contract from Little Valley to Lodi (now Gowanda), making the trip on horseback weekly for four years; the next two years his route was semi-weekly by way of Lodi to Ellicottville. On one occasion he was attacked by a huge panther, but his horse succeeded in escaping the beast. The next day he joined some hunters and shot him. Remaining with his father until they sold the homestead he soon afterward married Julia Porter, of Little Valley, and settled on the farm which he recently sold. Mrs. Ayres died Dec. 23, 1882. July 25, 1884, he married Elmina P. Lawrence. They have one son. He died Aug. 7, 1893.

Nathaniel Bryant was born in Norwich, Mass., Oct. 6, 1794, and had a good common school education. In 1817 he and his brother, Freeman Bryant, emigrated to the Holland purchase with one horse, and in Ellicottville they attempted to make a settlement about a mile south of the village, but were informed that the place was not in market. They then went to Toledo, Ohio, where fever and ague raged severely. Returning to Ellicottville Nathaniel was employed by the Holland Land Company in 1818 at $1 per day, and cut the timber from nearly the entire length of Washington street. The stumps were cut level with the ground and the street was four rods wide. In the spring of 1819 the brothers each located a farm on Bryant hill, which was named in their honor. Freeman married Fannie Staunton, and two or three years later settled in Great Valley, dying on a farm in Sugartown on June 1, 1826. Nathaniel married Sally, daughter of David Chase, Sr. He cut his hay and threshed his grain by hand, and aided in supporting the Baptist church, of which he and his wife were members. In 1841 he sold this farm and purchased the homestead of his wife's deceased father, where both died—Mrs. Bryant on April 10, 1875, and he on May 12, 1883. Children: Edward S., Alvin C. (one of the first conductors on the Lake Shore railroad, and who died Dec. 7, 1857), Lucy E. (Mrs. William Manley), Marium (who married C. Van Etting and died in 1880, leaving two sons), Stillman N. (married Wealthy Chase and died May 14, 1888), Harlow D., and Lovernia W. (Mrs. James Smith). Harlow D. Bryant has been commissioner of highways, and on June 18, 1884, married Emma, daughter of Lewis Coit; children: a daughter and a son. (See also Bryant sketch in Ellicottville.)

David Burrell, son of Adonijah, was born in Otsego county in 1822 and came to New Albion with his parents about 1828. Before he was twenty-one he commenced dealing in live stock, which he shipped to Philadelphia and New York. About 1854 or 1855 he conducted the Howe House in Little Valley (the site of Rock City Hotel). His wife's health failed and he returned to New Albion and resumed his live stock business, which he continued till his death in March, 1876. He served his town several years as assessor. He married Mary Ann, daughter of William M. Champlin, a pioneer of Napoli. She died soon after they left the hotel, leaving two sons: William M. and another who died at the age of twelve years. William M. was born on the homestead and alternately had a home with his grandparents Burrell and Champlin. He started in life a farmer. In the spring of 1885 he purchased his present property, fitted it for a hotel, and named it the Burrell House.

John B. F. Champlin was born at Napoli on July 17, 1841. His paternal ancestors were of Huguenot French origin, came to America in 1695, and settled in Lebanon, Conn. The original name was Champlain, and Joseph Champlain, who in 1808 discovered the lake that bears his name, was a remote kinsman. His father, John B. Champlin, married Hannah, daughter of Smith Cottrell, of South Kingston. John B. F. resided at the parental home until the death of his mother, which occurred when he was fifteen years old. At the age of thirteen he was a successful partner with his father and an older brother dealing in cattle and sheep. At the age of sixteen he was the half-owner of a fishing vessel and engaged in cod-fishing. At the end of the season he disposed of his interest in this enterprise, returned to his native town, and resumed the trade in live stock. He passed several winters in lumber camps driving oxen, and after sixteen and a half years selling goods for one company as its traveling salesman he embarked in the manufacture and sale of cutlery. He organized the Cattaraugus Cutlery Company, of which he is president. He is sagacious and enterprising in business, and has decided talents for mechanics and civil engineering. In 1882 his son Tint became his partner in business. In 1879 he began and in 1880 completed his elegant brick opera house. This he reserved for the free use of all religious societies.

James Chapman, born in Perth, Scotland, Nov. 16, 1829, was educated in the English schools and learned the trade of blacksmith. In July, 1853, he came to America in a sailing vessel and as a journeyman he spent a year at his trade in Peekskill, N. Y. Thence he went to Walton, Delaware county, where he was engaged until the ensuing spring, when he came to Little Valley, where he arrived March 16, 1855. June 5th he bought out his employer, John Blackman, and conducted a blacksmithing business until 1877. In 1870 he purchased thirty acres on Rock City street and in 1878 became a farmer. In 1887 he cut his farm into village lots, which sold rapidly. He has been a member of the Congregational church since the summer of 1856, and has been its deacon since 1869. April 2, 1856, he married Rachel Allison, who was born in Scotland, Nov. 12, 1819, which country they visited in 1867.

Joseph Charlesworth, son of Nathan, was born near Manchester, England, Feb. 17, 1840. His father was a cotton spinner by trade, and was foreman in one of the large cotton factories in that city. In 1841 he came to America with his oldest two sons and about a year afterward sent for his wife and four remaining children. He worked at his trade in Lodi (now Gowanda) and in Buffalo three or four years, and settled in Otto. He purchased a farm on which he died in 1854. Joseph in 1861 enlisted in Co. C, 64th N. Y. Vols., and participated in all the battles in which his regiment engaged. At the battle of Gettysburg he received a shell-wound on the right side of his head, which fractured his skull, and was confined in the hospital at Philadelphia nearly six months, where he was an officer of the guard. He was appointed sergeant and was discharged with the rank of orderly-sergeant. He was early entrusted with the carrying of dispatches and reconnoitering. He was discharged Jan. 9, 1864, from Convalescent Camp, Va., upon a surgeon's certificate of disability. Mr. Charlesworth has held several town offices. Jan. 20, 1864, he married Roxanna Higbee, of New Albion; children: Fred, Jennie B. (Mrs. Homer Beckwith), John, and Willie M.

David Chase was born in Petersham, Mass., Oct. 25, 1769. Lucy Gay, his wife, was born in Dedham, Mass., Sept. 14, 1771. They were married in Massachusetts, where all their children were born. In 1819 or 1820 they came to Little Valley Center with a heavy wagon covered with sole-leather and drawn by two yoke of oxen; they also had one horse. They settled on 125 acres of woodland—the farm on which his grandson, Harlow D. Bryant, now resides. He erected a log house and barn, cleared the farm, erected a second set of farm buildings, and died on the place July 20, 1841. Mrs. Chase died Oct. 24, 1850. Mr. Chase was highly esteemed and widely known. Children: Parney, who married, first, Jonathan Foster, the father of her son Chester and daughter Lucy (Mrs. Leander Stratton), and, second, Asa Furman, the father of six children, and died March 10, 1854; Alvin, who married Polly Phillips, settled on a farm adjoining his father's a year or two before his father came, raised nine children, and died July 27, 1873; Lefa, who married Gaius Wheaton and died Sept. 17, 1826; Sally, who married Nathaniel Bryant and died April 10, 1875; Dr. Stillman, a practicing physician, settled first in Little Valley Center, married Alzina Kelsey, owned a good farm, removed to Rochester, Minn., where he died Sept. 5, 1860, and has two sons living, Kelsey and Albert; David, Jr., who married Mary Ann Clark, settled in Rochester, Minn., had four children, was a dealer, built a large tenement block, and died Aug. 18, 1875; and Cyrena, who married, first, Eli Day, the father of her daughter Harriet (Mrs. John Markham), and, second, Hiram Davis, who has bought and sold several farms, and whose son is a physician.

Henry Chase, son of Henry, a native of Massachusetts, was born about 1767 and removed with his family to Townshend, Vt. Henry, Jr., married, in Townshend, Irena Wheelock in 1788; children: Abner, Luther, Hiram, Melinda, Wheelock, and Converse. Between 1815 and 1820 Henry Chase and his wife and their two sons, Wheelock and Converse, removed to Little Valley. Their daughter Melinda, who had married Simeon Smead in Vermont, settled in Little Valley at the same time. Mr. Smead became prominent in the new town, was elected supervisor of Little Valley in 1823, and was re-elected from time to time in all nine terms. Mr. Chase was a close observer of all the weather signs, and always planted his crops in what he thought the right phase of the moon. He was an original member of the Freewill Baptist church. Their son, Abner Chase, was born in Townshend, Vt., in 1789, married Mary Cox, of Pawlet, Vt., and settled in Saratoga county, where he manufactured woolen cloth. In 1825 he settled in Little Valley. Besides keeping his hotel he was a farmer, an extensive lumberman, held several town offices, and was appointed by the State to superintend the building of a highway through the Indian reservation along the Allegheny river. He had served as a soldier in the War of 1812 and was a major in the State militia. He was supervisor of Little Valley in 1837. In 1852 he sold the homestead and removed to Ohio. A few years later he returned to Little Valley and had a home with his daughter, Mrs. Daniel Bucklin, until his death in the fall of 1863. His wife died in 1863.

Wheelock Chase, fourth son of Henry, was born Aug. 2, 1800. He married Teresa Lyon in March, 1824, who was born in Wilbraham, Mass., June 10, 1800. In the spring of 1825 they settled in the woods on Bucktooth run, where alone he built the first house. Mrs. Chase sewed for lumbermen to buy the few pounds of nails and panes of glass used in its construction. They sold their improvements a year or two later and removed to their old neighborhood. In 1831 they made a permanent settlement half a mile south of the homestead, where he died in 1845. Prior to 1831 he cleared a field near the creek and his wife assisted in carrying 100 bushels of ashes from the burnt timber to the bank of the stream to be made into black-salts. A sudden heavy rain caused the creek to overflow during the night and in the morning they found their ashes swept away by the flood. Children: Malenda, Irene, Randilla, Harriet, Abner W., and Estelle. Malenda married J. L. Barton, of Mansfield, at the age of thirty-two and died childless four years later. She had taught thirty-two terms of school. Harriet married George W. Hotchkiss, of South Valley, in 1868, and died in 1875, leaving two sons. Abner W. enlisted in the Rebellion in 1861 and died in Alexandria, April 21, 1862. Estelle married N. L. Barr, of Brocton, in Nov., 1865, and died in Kansas, Oct. 10, 1879, leaving one child. Mrs. Chase (the mother) died May 26, 1880, in Little Valley village, where she had lived several years, and where her daughters Irene and Randilla, the only survivors of the family, reside.

Converse H. Chase, youngest child of the pioneer Henry, was born in Townshend, Vt., Feb. 17, 1811. He came to Little Valley Center with his parents and married Nancy Wheeler, Dec. 21, 1837, who was a native of Massachusetts and a daughter of John Wheeler, who settled on the farm now owned by Mrs. Sarah M. Hall. They sold their farm and lived with their daughter, Mrs. Converse H. Chase. Mr. Chase died on Nov. 9, 1851. He served as town clerk and assessor. Children: Byron D., born Nov. 5, 1838, who with his brother Albert B. owns the homestead of 120 acres and the Clement farm of sixty acres, and who married Mrs. Mary A. (Nash) Howlett, March 15, 1885; Wealthy A., born May 7, 1848, who married Stillman Bryant, Jan. 8, 1861, a farmer, and died June 15, 1879; Hiram H., born Nov. 27, 1841, enlisted in Co. B, 9th N. Y. Cav., in 1861, and died at Clupper Court House, Va., Aug. 8, 1862; Albert B., born Nov. 27, 1844, married Mary E. Willis; and Mortimer D., born May 30, 1846, married Mary E. Evans.

Enoch Chase came to Little Valley from Vermont about the time that his cousins David and Henry settled here. He died as early or before 1825. He married his cousin, Abigail (Chase) Wheelock, a sister of Henry Chase. In 1837, with four of her sons and their families, she removed to Burlington, Iowa. Simeon Smead, whose wife, Melinda Chase, had recently died, and his brother Daniel, all Vernonters, went with them. Johnson Chase, the son who remained, died a few years ago.

Stephen Crosby was born in 1788 in Dutchess county, N. Y. At Cazenovia, in 1810, he married Hannah Holmes, who was born in 1790 at Keene, N. H. Children: Columbus, born July 10, 1814, at Cazenovia, enlisted in the Union army at Petersburg, Ill., and died in the service at Mobile, Ala.; Orril, born at Little Valley in 1817, the first white child born in the town, married Michael Puddy, and died in Michigan; Zillah, born at Little Valley, 1819, and now resides at Garnaville, Iowa; and Ada, born at Little Valley in 1821, died in Michigan. Stephen Crosby moved to Little Valley in 1815 and cut his road through the woods from Franklinville. As justice of the peace he officiated at the marriage of Gaius Wheaton and Lefa Chase, which was Little Valley's first wedding. He was a devoted Christian pioneer, and for many years officiated as the only doctor, preacher, and lawyer in the settlement. When Cattaraugus county first became entitled to a representative in the Assembly in 1823 he was elected to that office and was re-elected in 1830.

Joseph Cullen, son of John, was born in Upton, Nottinghamshire, England, May 16, 1838. His father was a farmer and came to America in 1851, and first settled in Monroe county. In 1856 he removed to Little Valley and located on the farm where his son Joseph now resides, and where he died Jan. 17, 1876. He was a member of the Methodist Protestant church and was many years its class-leader. Joseph Cullen, his oldest son, remained at home until 1862, when, on Sept. 3d, he enlisted in Co. B, 154th N. Y. Vols., and was discharged June 24, 1865. He participated in the battle of Chancellorsville and in several skirmishes, marched with Sherman to the sea, and had a long illness in the hospital at Patterson Park, Baltimore. He was also a prisoner six weeks. He succeeded his father on the homestead.

Adelbert E. Darrow, born in Pembroke, Genesee county, Sept. 13, 1842, was educated in the common schools with a few terms in the academies, and in June, 1862, he enlisted in Co. G, 129th N. Y. Inf., was transferred to the 8th N. Y. H. A., and was discharged June 2, 1865, with the rank of orderly-sergeant. His regiment was in General Hancock's corps. After the war he traveled in several western States and in the spring of 1867 he located in Salamanca, where he engaged in manufacturing lumber. While there he held several town offices, and as highway commissioner he erected the iron bridge across the Allegheny river. Mr. Darrow is a Republican. In the winter of 1884 and again he was postmaster of the Senate of the State Legislature, and had previously held the office of deputy sheriff and under sheriff of Cattaraugus county each three years. In the fall of 1885 he received the nomination of his party for sheriff and was elected. At the close of this term he became a member of the Cattaraugus Cutlery Company and one of its directors; he has served as its secretary and is now its superintendent of construction. He also served as chairman of the Republican County Committee in 1889 and 1890. Nov. 25, 1869, he married Mary N. King, of Salamanca, who was born in Pembroke, N. Y. They have one daughter, Trudia B.

Elias Day, son of Erastus and Marian (Lee) Day, was born in Orleans county in July, 1827. When a child his parents settled in New Albion. Jan. 1, 1850, he married Harriet Wing who was born in New Lisbon, Otsego county, March 18, 1834. They settled in New Albion, where he died April 5, 1880. Mr. Day was never robust in health, but was an enterprising farmer. He was a member of the M. E. church thirty-two years and led the choir about as long. He was a Republican and was tax collector three terms. Children: Albert, who married Hannah Heath and has two children, and Emma (Mrs. Theodore Champlin), who has four children.

Capt. Samuel B. Densmore was born in Barre, N. Y., Dec. 29, 1833. At the age of fifteen he entered a general store as clerk, where he remained until he attained his majority. A year later he engaged in the business on his own account in Yates, Orleans county, where he was until 1862, when he enlisted on June 14th in Co. A, 129th N. Y. Inf. Aug. 25th he went to the front and participated in all the battles of General Grant's army until the close of the war. He was promoted from private to captain, and received a gun-shot wound in his left shoulder in front of Petersburg, June 22, 1864. He was captured at Reams's Station, Aug. 25, 1864, and confined in Libby, Dansville, and Salisbury prisons six months. In 1863 his regiment became the 8th N. Y. H. A., which was reduced by deaths, etc., from 900 to 120 men. He returned to mercantile pursuits in Little Valley in April, 1868, and is now engaged in the railway mail service. In 1868 he married Helen M. Van Housen, of Cortland county; they have two sons and a daughter.

John Drew, Sr., son of Elijah Drew, was born in Vermont and married Nancy Hough, of Geneseo, N. Y., about 1822. He then settled in New Albion on Drew hill, where he resided five or six years, when he sold out to his brother, Noah Drew, and commenced again on Drew flats, where he erected another log cabin. Here he raised his children and here Mrs. Drew died Jan. 1, 1871. He planted a good orchard, and built a good house in 1850. He was commissioner of highways a number of years, and died April 15, 1880. Children: John, born April 14, 1824, died Jan. 3, 1830; Isaac, born Dec. 13, 1825, died Feb. 13, 1837; Abram, born Aug. 17, 1827, died Dec. 3, 1830; John, Jr., born Nov. 23, 1830; Julia Ann, born Sept. 19, 1832, died July 19, 1852; Ira, born Feb. 23, 1835, residing with his only son, George E. Drew, proprietor of the Exchange Hotel in Little Valley; Henry, born July 17, 1837, died Jan. 15, 1883; Silas Wilber, born Aug. 10, 1840; Oscar F., born Nov. 13, 1843; Clark, born Jan. 27, 1846; Francis Marion, born Dec. 31, 1847, a farmer in Salamanca and a soldier in the war for the Union; Isaac Eugene, born Jan. 15, 1849, died Sept. 9, 1871; Angenette, born March 28, 1852.

Albert T. Fancher, son of Capt. William (see page 754) and Lydia (Mills) Fancher, was born in Leon, Jan. 18, 1859. He was educated in the common schools and in Chamberlain Institute, and at the age of eighteen formed a partnership with Edgar Shannon, of Leon, under the firm name of Edgar Shannon & Co., which continued in trade with two branch stores in the oil regions of Pennsylvania the ensuing seven years. A Republican in politics he represented his town on the Board of Supervisors three terms and in 1885 was the nominee of his party for and was elected clerk of Cattaraugus county. He resides in Little Valley, owns a farm in Leon, and deals in real estate.

Judson H. Fisher was born in Napoli, March 5, 1838, and descends from sturdy New England stock. His father, William Fisher, was born in Massachusetts and came with his parents to Genesee county in his boyhood. About 1830 he came with an ox-team to Napoli and settled on a tract of 100 acres. He died Oct. 10, 1889. In religion he was a Baptist and an ordained clergyman. He preached regularly at a school house in "Pigeon Valley"; he officiated at numerous weddings and funerals, and was beloved and respected. He was twice married and the father of six children, all of whom reside in the vicinity. Judson H. Fisher, his oldest son, received a common school education and remained on the homestead until August, 1862, when he enlisted in Co. H, 154th N. Y. Vols., and participated in the battle of Chancellorsville, where he fought hard and gallantly and fell pierced with a minie-ball, which broke his kneecap in three pieces. He lay in this condition fourteen days, suffering terribly from pain, hunger, thirst, heat, exposure, and the mingled insults and kindnesses of the enemy, when he was discovered by Union soldiers and sent to the hospital, where the surgeons deemed amputation of the shattered leg necessary. This he positively refused to allow, and alone, with his indomitable strength and perseverance, he set the mangled member, which ultimately healed, but never united. He is now a market gardener in Little Valley. Jan. 17, 1866, he married Sarah Penney, of Mt. Hope, N. Y.; children: Anna (Mrs. William F. Hall), Charles H., and Florence J.

Cyrus W. Fuller was born in Pawlet, Vt., in March, 1800. When he was twelve years old his parents removed to Elba, Genesee county, where he resided until Feb., 1831. His father, John Fuller, served seven years in the Revolution and was many years a pensioner. Cyrus W. came to Little Valley with his wife and two children—Tryphena and Cyrus A.—in Feb., 1831, and settled on 100 acres with but three and a half acres cleared, which he purchased of Noel H. Hopkins and the Holland Land Company. He soon afterward built a larger log house and a little later a framed addition in which he conducted the first grocery store in the village of Little Valley. Mr. Fuller often spoke in public meetings and as commissioner laid out most of the highways in town. He married Lucia Bristol, of Bethany, Genesee county, daughter of Elijah Bristol. Five of their seven children attained maturity: Tryphena (deceased), who married H. V. R. McKay; Carrie (deceased), who married H. S. Huntley; Anson L., of Humphrey; Lura (deceased); and Cyrus A., who was born Sept. 11, 1827. The latter succeeded his father on the homestead, to which he has added until he now has a farm of 450 acres. In the Rebellion he placed a substitute in the field who did service three years. Mr. Fuller married Lydia A., daughter of Levi Godding, an early pioneer who resided in Little Valley until his death, aged seventy-two years. Children: Laura A. (Mrs. B. L. Sprague), George W., and Nellie C. (Mrs. S. N. Wheaton).

Brevet-Col. Henry Van Aernam Fuller,* oldest son of Benjamin and Ann (Van Aernam) Fuller, was born in the village of Little Valley, Feb. 16, 1841. He had two brothers and a sister. Benjamin C. was a soldier in the 37th N. Y. Vols. and a clerk in the Interior Department; Nathan A. was paying teller in the United States House of Representatives during the Forty-second, Forty-third, Forty-fourth, and Forty-fifth Congresses. His grandfather, Edmund Fuller, was the first settler in Randolph; his father was among the earliest in Little Valley. His mother, a lady of great intellectual strength, is the sister of Hon. Henry Van Aernam, M. D. (see page 131). Henry V. Fuller obtained his education in the common schools and at Fredonia and Randolph Academies. Had he survived the war it was his intention to have devoted himself to the legal profession. At the age of seventeen he was employed by Messrs. Bradley, Fay & Co., lumber manufacturers, to run rafts down the Allegheny and Ohio rivers to Pittsburg, Cincinnati, and Louisville. He remained their confidential agent until the beginning of the war, when, on Aug. 7, 1861, in a letter to his friend, Hon. John Manley, he said:

"Deeming it to be the duty of every young man in these days of his country's peril to render her every help in his power, and that the most effectual service which can be given is to volunteer to fight her battles, I am resolved to join those already in the field and stand by them in this struggle for the constitution and laws."

Young Fuller entered the army a private in Co. F, 64th N. Y. Vols., on Sept. 10, 1861, and at Elmira he was promoted orderly-sergeant. At the election of line officers he was chosen second lieutenant and commissioned Dec. 10th. After the battle of Fair Oaks he was promoted first lieutenant July 23, 1862. He passed through the Seven Days of the Peninsula, the Pope campaign, Antietam, and Fredericksburg, and for meritorious service was promoted captain Dec. 30, 1862. Chancellorsville was fought May 1st, 2d, and 3d; this was followed, on the 1st, 2d, and 3d of July, 1863, by the bloody battle of Gettysburg, where, on the second day, Captain Fuller fell. His body was recovered on the morning of July 4th, was conveyed to his home, and was buried with military honors. Under the authority of the laws of New York, 1865, the first brevet honor was bestowed by Gov. Fenton, that of brevet-colonel, in memoriam, for Capt. Henry V. Fuller. Colonel Fuller was endowed with superior mental powers. He possessed a manly physique, stood six feet high, and had a handsome face, clear gray eyes, and brown hair.

"Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori."

Dec. 24, 1860, he married Adelaide C., daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Lyman Twomley, of Little Valley, a lady of culture and energy who has held the position of postmistress several years. Their son, Henry Twomley Fuller, of striking resemblance to his father, was born May 19, 1862. He is a druggist.

Hon. Stephen C. Green was born in Tompkins county Jan. 1, 1828. In 1833 his father removed his family to Jamestown, where, at the age of sixteen, Stephen was apprenticed to the printing business, which he pursued five years. In 1849 he began his mercantile career, the scene of his operations being mainly in Little Valley. Sept. 5, 1848, he married Laura Ann Thompson, who died June 8, 1867, and Dec. 15, 1868, he married, second, Minnie Courtney. Mr. Green has held most of the minor town offices and was supervisor of Little Valley in 1863 and 1865. In 1865 he was elected superintendent of the poor of Cattaraugus county and in 1868 was re-elected. In 1869 and again in 1870 he was elected to the State Legislature. He was the first president of the village of Little Valley. In Dec., 1887, with B. B. Weber and A. W. Ferrin, he bought the Olean Times and continued its publication under the name of S. C. Green & Co. until Feb., 1891, when he retired and the firm became Ferrin & Weber.

Marcus Hall, son of Horace, one of the four brothers who were among the first settlers in the corners of Napoli, Randolph, Conewango, and Cold Spring, now the village of East Randolph, was born in Napoli in 1831. He moved with his parents to the village of East Randolph when about twelve years of age, where he supplemented his common school education by several terms at East Randolph Seminary. Sept. 7, 1854, he married Almira M., daughter of Enos and Miranda Eddy, pioneers of Mansfield. Mr. Hall springs from a line of noted mechanics and has carried on farming, wagon making, and carpentering. Aug. 26, 1862, he enlisted in Co. E, 9th N. Y. Cav., and served nearly two years, participating in the battles of Gettysburg, Boonesborough, and others. His health failed in July, 1863, and he was sent to the hospital in September, came home on sick-leave for ninety days, and returned to his regiment at Christmas; he took a severe cold, was again confined in the hospital, and was discharged as permanently disabled June 11, 1864. He and Mrs. Hall have lived in the village of Little Valley the past eight years. They own a farm in Mansfield, which is the home of their daughter, Lydia M. (Mrs. John Sprague). Their daughter Ida May (Mrs. Serentus W. Bedient) resides in the village of Little Valley. Mr. Bedient is a farmer and of the firm of Fuller & Bedient, proprietors of a meat market.

Calvin Hall, born in Vermont in 1800, married Sarah Mosher, who was born in Hoosick, N. Y., in 1801. They settled in Middlebury, N. Y., where their oldest two children were born. In the spring of 1832 they settled in New Albion, where he served as justice of the peace twelve years, presiding during that period at numerous law suits. He was a farmer and a mason, and died at the age of forty-four years. His wife died in 1851. Children: Phebe (Mrs. Harrison Judd), of New Albion, who died Sept. 27, 1889; Calvin E., born Jan. 22, 1826; and Lydia, born in New Albion, married A. Briggs, and died in Dayton. Calvin E. Hall bought the homestead in New Albion and married, Aug. 14, 1849, Sarah M. Watkins. They removed to Dayton, and about three years later purchased another farm in New Albion and conducted both. In 1868 they removed to a farm of 250 acres near Little Valley Center. He sold his real estate to a son and daughter, and died Dec. 24, 1890. Six children, five of whom grew to maturity: Mary (Mrs. Henry Gallagher) died Sept. 10, 1889; Robert D., born in 1852, married Nettie Shafer, of Salamanca, and resides in Dayton; Adah E., born in 1856, married C. O. Boutell, of Salamanca; Edmund C., born in 1860, was a teacher, was principal of the Union Free School in Allegany, was a law student at the time he was taken ill, and died Sept. 10, 1867; and Drusa E., born in 1868, married Fred D. Smith.

Samuel C. Heath, born in Bowe, N. H., in Feb., 1803, married Lois Hyde, a native of Vermont, and settled in Mansfield about 1828 in a log cabin roofed with elm-bark, in which town they lived about thirty years. Mr. Heath died in Machias in 1881; Mrs. Heath died Jan. 17, 1885. He was a shoemaker, but later in life gave his attention to his farm. Children: Calista, born May 22, 1828, widow of William Chichester; John, born July 13, 1830, married Phebe Johnson, and is a farmer living in the village of Little Valley; and Bart, born May 31, 1832, married Lydia L. Antisdale. Bart Heath enlisted Sept. 24, 1861, in Co. F, 64th N. Y. Vols., and was discharged April 3, 1863, in consequence of a shell-wound received at the battle of Antietam on Sept. 17, 1862. His eldest daughter married Albert Day, of Little Valley. Mary married Lyman Wing, of Little Valley, and Lois married Robert Tomes, of Great Valley.

William W. Henry, son of Sylvester, was born in Collins, Erie county, April 18, 1837. At about the age of sixteen he began an apprenticeship at the printer's trade with his brother, James T. Henry, then the editor of the Ellicottville Union. Completing his trade he was a journeyman until 1858, when he established the Gowanda Reporter, a Democratic weekly on which he and his partner, F. G. Stebbins, did all the work. He continued this until the beginning of the Rebellion, when, in Oct., 1861, he enlisted in Co. A, 64th N. Y. Vols. He was promoted corporal and quartermaster-sergeant; in Oct., 1862, was commissioned lieutenant; and immediately after the battle of Fredricksburg was promoted to the rank of first lieutenant. He was finally compelled to resign on account of ill health and return to Gowanda, where he resided until 1871 and represented his town on the Board of Supervisors two years. He also served as town clerk, justice of the peace, and president of the village. In Jan., 1871, he became under sheriff of Cattaraugus county, sheriff, William M. Brown, and removed to Little Valley, where he has since resided. He was the nominee of the Democratic party for the office of sheriff in 1873 and was elected. In 1879, with C. F. Persons, he purchased the Olean Record, a Greenback paper, and converted it into a Democratic organ with the title of the Olean Democrat. In 1883 Mr. Henry was appointed inspector of canals. In July, 1893, he was appointed postmaster at Little Valley.

John Hickey was born in Canajoharie, N. Y., in 1794. He married Martha, daughter of Nathan Howe, a pioneer of Great Valley, and settled first in Phelps, N. Y., where all his children were born. In 1843 he came with his family to Little Valley, where he conducted a tavern on the site of the Rock City Hotel. He was a hotel keeper most of the time through his business life, and died at the home of his daughter in 1887. He was married three times. His first wife, the mother of all his children, died in March, 1852.

Marion F. Higbee was born in New Albion, Feb. 18, 1850. In 1867 he commenced to learn the tinner's trade of Sidney Marsh in Little Valley and in 1871 he opened a store in the village. In 1876 he sold his business and went to Wyoming county, where he was in trade nine years. Eventually returning to Little Valley in July, 1890, he bought the store and stock of hardware and groceries of S. A. Tuttle, and has since conducted the business.

George Hilsle, born in Alsace, France, in 1829, is descended from French ancestors, but was educated in the German schools and in German language, supplemented by two years in French. He learned the tailor's trade and, at the age of seventeen came to America. In Canada and in Buffalo and in other places he followed his trade as a journeyman, and in 1853 he located permanently in Little Valley. He opened a store as a merchant tailor and a few years later added ready-made clothing. During the last year or two of the war he suspended business and bought a farm. In 1866 he again fitted up his store. In 1868 he married Adelia Gibson, of Addison, N. Y.; they have two daughters and a son.

Oliver L. Holcomb was born in Oneida county April 1, 1829. His father settled in Madison county, where he received a common school education. In 1847 he commenced an apprenticeship in the jeweler's trade at Utica, and in 1861 he settled permanently in Little Valley, where he opened a jewelry store, which he has since continued. He cast his first vote for John C. Fremont in 1856 at the organization of the Republican party and has voted for each of the Republican presidential candidates since. He has been deputy sheriff nine years and is now serving his third term as justice of the peace. He has been crier of the courts several years and still holds that position.

Arthur H. Howe was born in Gowanda, Erie county, Oct. 7, 1843. His grandfather, Jaazaniah Howe, a native of Goshen, Mass., was a soldier in the Revolution. His father, Zimri, the son of Jaazaniah, came to Lodi (now Gowanda) in 1825; and removed in 1858 to Cattaraugus in New Albion. He died March 11, 1867, and his wife, Esther, March 13, 1878. In 1859 Arthur H. Howe began his career in the county clerk's office under E. H. Southwick, serving until 1864, when he enlisted in the 98th N. Y. S. N. G., which was stationed at Elmira guarding prisoners. He was made deputy county clerk in Jan., 1865, by S. C. Springer and Jan. 1, 1868, by Enos C. Brooks. At the expiration of this term he moved to Ellicottville and formed a mercantile partnership with A. J. Adams, and Jan. 1, 1874, returned to the county clerk's office, being again made deputy by Col. E. A. Nash in July, 1875. That same year he was nominated and elected clerk of the county on the Republican ticket. Dec. 31, 1879, he married Harriet, daughter of C. J. Fox.

Samuel Howe, a native of Massachusetts and a son of Parley and Deborah (Hulett) Howe, came with his father to Mansfield about 1830. Both were farmers. Parley Howe died at the home of his son Samuel in Mansfield aged seventy-six years. Children: Joseph, Samuel, Lemuel, Lura, Roby, and Sybil (the only one now living). Samuel married Jane Manley, of Otto; children: Sybil, Aurelius, Leonard, John, Nelson, Augustus, Martin, Franklin, Levi, Alice. Franklin married Bertha Foster, great-granddaughter of David Chase.

David Johnson, born in Madrid, St. Lawrence county, in 1839, received a common school education, learned the trade of harness making, and at the age of nineteen came to East Randolph, where he purchased a harness shop and prosecuted the business about ten years. In 1868 he sold out and established himself in Little Valley. He has also dealt extensively in hides, his purchases sometimes amounting to $1,000 a week. Latterly he has occasionally contributed to the press on political and other subjects. He has served two terms as trustee of the village. In Sept., 1858, a few months after he settled in East Randolph, he returned to his native county and married Sarah C. Wright, of Norfolk, N. Y.; they have one surviving son, Charles E.

Lyman Lee was born in Guilford, Conn., in 1799. When seventeen or eighteen years of age he came to Rochester, and Dec. 23, 1819, married Harriet Rathbun, who was born in Tioga county, Pa., in 1800. In March, 1821, he settled in Little Valley on a lot of 100 acres where the cheese factory now stands. He cleared a small plat, sowed and planted, and set out a nursery of apple and pear trees. In the fall of 1823 he exchanged farms with Stephen Crosby and became the owner of 100 acres of land and the first frame building in the town, where he died in 1851. Mrs. Lee survived until July 29, 1879. Like other early settlers they experienced the hardships incident to pioneer life. The nearest mill was at Cadizville, about twenty-five miles away. Soon after he settled in Little Valley Mr. Lee broke his last axe, and to get it repaired he went on foot sixteen miles through the woods, which abounded with wolves. Mr. Lee was overseer of the poor for thirty years and superintendent of the Free Baptist Sunday school about as long. Children: a daughter who died in infancy and another at the age of thirty-eight; Susan A. (Mrs. C. S. Trevitt), of Washington, D. C.; Emma, widow of O. E. Marsh; William H., a carpenter in Corry, Pa.; Erastus N.; and Maurice L., of Olean.

Erastus N. Lee, born on the homestead Dec. 2, 1834, succeeded his father on the farm, spent several seasons as a clerk in country stores, and has conducted the double occupation of farmer and merchant. He has been a staunch Republican since the organization of the party and was elected to the Board of Supervisors in 1866. He is a decided temperance man and quite an antiquarian, and his collection of Indian relics, procured in his own vicinity, number several hundred specimens.

Charles G. Locke was born in Little Valley in 1850. His parents were Edwin O. Locke and Mary M. Fish, daughter of the pioneer, Nathaniel Fish, and the first white child born in Mansfield. Edwin O. died when Charles was three years old and he was adopted by Augustus Galloway, who married his aunt, Nancy Fish. Young Locke attended the common schools, the Ellicottville Union Free School, and received valuable instruction in mathematics from Mr. Galloway. He mastered civil engineering and surveying, and has followed it as a profession. Mr. Locke is a vivid descriptionist and a writer of no mean ability. He also has a farm of 150 acres in Little Valley Center. He married Ella Foote. His only brother, Edwin A. Locke, is the author of several celebrated dramas and comedies.

John F. Mack was born of German parents in East Otto in 1854. He commenced his business life as a cooper, and in the fall of 1879 bought a farm of 133 acres in Little Valley. He is an excellent farmer and a careful manager, and a man highly respected in the community.

Hon. John Manley, son of Amasa, was born in Norridgewock, Me., May 26, 1824. Like other farmer boys he spent his youth at the common schools, where he obtained a good English education, and at labor on his father's farm. In 1847 he married Elizabeth Bittues at Augusta, Me., and in 1851 removed to Little Valley, where he engaged in farming, which avocation he continued for a number of years, and gradually became an extensive landowner. He was early and prominently identified in politics, and first cast his lot with the Whig party. At the organization of the Republican party he became one of its staunch supporters and took a leading part in its councils. He first entered public life in 1860 as the representative of Little Valley on the Board of Supervisors and was re-elected almost unanimously for six more terms. In 1861 he was appointed clerk in the Department of the Interior under Secretary Smith and served four years. In 1864 he was detailed as a special Indian agent within the State of New York. In March, 1865, he was appointed military secretary on the staff of Governor Fenton and held the position until May, 1866. In the fall of 1872 he was elected to the Assembly from the Second District of Cattaraugus county and was re-elected the ensuing fall. Mr. Manley gained considerable eminence as an agriculturist, and was the efficient president of the Cattaraugus County Agricultural Society seven years, being also a member of the Executive Committee of the Agricultural Society of the State of New York. He was a man of few professions. His religion as he expressed it consisted in faith in the Supreme Being and an endeavor to do right in all things. He was successful in winning the esteem of his fellowmen. During the war he was especially active in the amelioration of the condition of the soldiers in the field and in prison, visiting personally the camps and outposts; and at home he assisted materially in recruiting organizations for the front. He was pre-eminently the soldier's friend. As a speaker and writer he was fluent and comprehensive. His biographies of many of the local pioneers and eminent citizens are preserved as monuments in the history of western New York. For many years he was secretary of the County Agricultural Society and his records of the proceedings of that body are exquisite models of neatness and thoroughness. In the removal of the county seat to Little Valley he was especially active; according to the late Robert H. Shankland he "stole it and tugged it over Fish hill in his carpet-bag." He was not without his faults, but his name will live in history as representing one whose good deeds were many and whose acts were acts of kindness. His widow, two daughters, and a son survive him.

Lieut. William J. Markham was born in Great Valley, March 25, 1826. His father, William Markham, was born in Manlius, Onondaga county. He came to Cattaraugus county when twenty-two years old and married Rachel Phillips, of Lyndon, theirs being the first marriage solemnized in that town. He spent a year in Olean and then settled on a new farm in Great Valley. In 1841 he came to Little Valley, remained six or seven years on a farm, sold it, and returned to Great Valley, where he died in 1849. His son married Sophronia Field in Nov., 1847, and settled on the farm where he now resides. Sept. 23, 1861, he enlisted in Co. B, 9th N. Y. Cav., and Jan. 1, 1864, re-enlisted in Co. D of the same regiment, being commissioned second lieutenant and discharged July 17, 1865. He was shot through the thigh at Brandy Station, Va.; at Berryville, Va., the bones above his ankle were broken by a shell; at Port Republic he received a stunning blow from a pistol on his head which fractured his skull; and by the bursting of a shell he was made permanently deaf. He is a farmer and an ordained clergyman in the Church of the United Brethren. He is a Republican and has served as overseer of the poor eighteen years. Children: Ambrose W., of Franklinville; Charles E.; Fanny (Mrs. Frank Cross), of Allegany; Frank M.; Edgar C.; Clark F.; and Willard J.

John H. Merow, born in Germany in 1823, came to America in 1858, and settled on a farm in the west part of this town, which he owned at the time of his death, which occurred May 6, 1890, by being crushed by a heavy log that accidentally rolled over him while he was assisting in building a log fence. His wife survived him. They had four children.

Gilbert L. Mosher, son of Benjamin and Peace (Easton) Mosher was born in Leon, Nov. 9, 1844. He was educated in the common schools, supplemented with a short attendance at Chamberlain Institute. He was justice of the peace in Leon and Jan. 1, 1877, he accepted the position of deputy sheriff and jailor from George L. Winters, sheriff, and removed to Little Valley, holding the position three years. In Nov., 1879, he was the nominee of the Republican party for the office of sheriff and was elected. At the close of his term he was appointed under sheriff by John Little, Jr., and served another three years. Since then he has dealt in real estate, built several houses, and carried on his farm. He has also dealt extensively in horses and cattle. In 1890 he represented Little Valley as supervisor. He has always been a Republican and cast his first vote for Abraham Lincoln in 1864. In the fall of 1877 he married Adell L. Herrick, of Gowanda, who died in 1881; she was the mother of his only son. In the fall of 1884 he married Agnes L. Toles, of Dansville, who is the mother of his only daughter.

Nathan S. Niles, born in Connecticut in 1810, was a blacksmith, and about 1832 came to Franklinville, where he opened a shop. In 1834 he married Huldah J. Nobles, who was born in Whitehall, N. Y., in 1818. March 5, 1840, he settled in New Albion, erected a blacksmith shop, and carried on blacksmithing and farming. In 1861 he enlisted as the blacksmith for a company in the 9th N. Y. Cav. and died of pneumonia at Washington, D. C., Feb. 18, 1862. His widow resides on the homestead in New Albion. Children: Esther (Mrs. Hiram Salisbury), deceased; Chauncey T.; Charles P., a soldier in the late war who died in Virginia near Manassas Junction; Maryette (Mrs. Adolphus Gowing), deceased; Stephen M.; Mortimer A.; William F.; Gaylord, of Salamanca; and Clarissa E. (Mrs. Richard Johnson).

Ernest Olday, a native of Germany, was born in 1842 and came to America in 1867. He settled in Little Valley in 1870, where he commenced his trade of carriage making. He cast his lot with the Republican party when he first became a citizen and was commissioned postmaster in Sept., 1889. In Jan., 1893, this office was promoted to third class and Mr. Olday was commissioned postmaster for four years more, but in July was succeeded by W. W. Henry.

Will C. Parker, born in Machias, March 26, 1854, attended the common schools and the Fredonia Normal School, and at the age of about nineteen he commenced the tinner's trade, which he followed as clerk and journeyman about four years. In Jan., 1879, he formed a partnership in the hardware and grocery business with J. W. Sweetland, which continued about two years, when he bought of his partner the hardware business which he continues.

Samuel Pratt came to Little Valley from Tinmouth, Vt., in 1838, and spent nearly a year in clearing fifteen or twenty of the seventy acres his son Lyman S. had secured for him by contract from Nicholas Devereux. He erected a log house and frame barn and was joined by his family in Sept., 1839. He died May 15, 1856. Lyman S. Pratt was born in Hubbardton, Vt., Dec. 17, 1813. In 1841 he married Martha Smith, of Pittsford, came to Little Valley, built a house and opened a wagon shop in a part of it, and upon the death of his father he purchased the homestead, carrying on also his carriage making business. In 1864 he sold the homestead and removed to Randolph, where, in 1866, he purchased and opened a wagon shop and continued about five years. In the spring of 1877 he again settled in Little Valley, on Fair Oaks street. Children: Mortimer N., Jerome L., and Alice (Mrs. Stephen Markham). Mortimer N. Pratt, born Jan. 28, 1845, attended the common schools and graduated at Randolph Academy, and Nov. 14, 1866, married Hattie Huntley. At the age of seventeen he taught his first term of common school and continued to teach thirteen consecutive winters. In Feb., 1867, he was elected justice of the peace and held the office sixteen years. He served three years as assessor and one year as justice of sessions. Jan. 1, 1883, he was appointed by Sheriff John Little as his deputy. Jan. 1, 1866, he was re-appointed by Mr. Little's successor, A. E. Darrow. In Nov., 1888, he was the nominee of his party and elected to the office of sheriff. He is a staunch Republican, and has been continuously in office since he was twenty-two years of age. Children: Robert H., his father's deputy; Arthur J., a plumber and tinsmith in Little Valley; and Howard. Mr. Pratt owns a farm of 180 acres, which includes the original homestead of two acres where his father first settled in 1841.

Dwight F. Rundell, born in Harmony, Chautauqua county, Jan. 22, 1850, received a common school education, and at the age of eighteen entered his father's drug store, where he remained until he was twenty-five. In 1875 he bought the drug store of Dr. D. P. Baker in Little Valley. Mr. Rundell is one of the trustees of the village and an active citizen.

Marion J. Rich was born in New Albion, July 22, 1849. He taught a district school one winter, and Dec. 30, 1869, married Caroline B. Sykes. The next year he began mercantile business in the village of Cattaraugus and continued there until the autumn of 1876. He has been town clerk, was deputy county clerk to Jan. 1, 1877, until Jan. 1, 1880, and county clerk one term.

Roswell Roberts was born in Bristol, Conn., April 5, 1797. He married Mercy Clark, a school teacher, who was born in Northampton, Mass., June 9, 1797. About 1824 or 1825 he came to Napoli, where he cleared a small plat, erected a log cabin, and moved his family into it. He eventually gave the homestead to his son, Albert W. Roberts, and died Sept. 25, 1879. Mrs. Roberts died Aug. 23, 1869. Children: Adaline (Mrs. Artemas Wilson), born April 15, 1822, died in Napoli; Hannah (Mrs. Hobart), born April 20, 1826; Albert W.; and Abner L., of Derrick City, Pa., who was born Feb. 4, 1833. Albert W. Roberts was born on the homestead May 31, 1828. He married Melissa E. Smith, Oct. 14, 1850, who was born in Napoli, Aug. 20, 1830. He was a farmer till 1885, when he removed to Little Valley.

Martin P. Sigman, born in Germany in 1844, emigrated to America with his parents about 1847. His father, Martin Sigman, became a citizen soon after he settled in New Albion. He had served his native country seven years as a soldier. His oldest son enlisted at the age of seventeen, on Oct. 14, 1861, in Co. C, 64th N. Y. Vols., and was discharged in Oct., 1864. Mr. Sigman was never in the hospital and was appointed corporal in 1863 and promoted orderly-sergeant. Feb. 18, 1872, he married Armenia Russell and has resided in Little Valley since June, 1888.

Wilbur J. Smith, son of William D. Smith, was born in Leon, July 4, 1842. His father was a farmer and was born in Monroe county. He married Phebe L. Brice and as early as 1835 settled on a farm in Leon. He first moved with his wife into a log cabin and struggled to make a home of his 100 acres, which he had paid for before he saw it at $1 per acre. He died in 1858. His oldest son, Willard D. Smith, enlisted in the 37th N. Y. Vols. in April, 1861, and was discharged for disability in August following. He re-enlisted in October of the same year in the 100th N. Y. Vols., served as a non-commissioned officer until Feb., 1864, and re-enlisted as a veteran for three years. May 16, 1864, at the battle of Drury's Bluff, he was wounded in the ankle, was captured, was confined in Andersonville prison till Jan., 1865, and died at Florence, S. C., Jan. 30, 1865. Wilbur J. enlisted in Sept., 1861, in the 100th N. Y. Vols., being mustered into service with his regiment in Dec., 1861. Nearly all the time he was a non-commissioned officer and served as first sergeant about two years. In 1863 he was commissioned second lieutenant, but was not mustered. In Nov., 1863, he was granted a furlough of sixty days for good conduct on the battlefield and especially for bravery at the siege of Fort Wagner, July 18, 1863. Aug. 21, 1863, at a charge on rifle pits at Forts Wagner and Gregg, he received a wound in his right thigh and still carries the two small bullets he received at that time. In Sept., 1864, he was commissioned adjutant of his regiment, but was not mustered in on account of wounds which he received Oct. 27, 1864, while commanding his company on the old battlefield of Fair Oaks. He was carried from this field to the Fly Hospital, thence to Hampton Hospital, Va., and finally mustered out of service in Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 30, 1865. He returned home and was so disabled that he performed no business for three years. He then engaged in the insurance business in company with F. B. McAvoy, of Otto. In Feb., 1869, he married Lizzie Burger and lived in Otto until 1873, when he was appointed deputy sheriff and settled in Little Valley, where he still resides. He was deputy sheriff four years, when he again conducted an insurance business four or five years and engaged in farming and in breeding and dealing in blooded horses. Mr. Smith has been president of the village and has held nearly all the offices of the corporation. Children: Clayton B., born in 1871; Cora N., born in 1873; and Winnifred E., born in 1876.

James Stratton, born in Athol, Mass., in 1786, married Betsey, daughter of Joshua Wheeler, and settled in Erie county in 1812, making the journey with two yoke of oxen in thirty days. In 1819 they removed to Little Valley Center and settled on the farm now owned by Samuel Cook. Mr. Stratton died in Aug., 1874, and Mrs. Stratton on Jan. 5, 1879. Mr. Stratton was industrious and enterprising and held several of the town offices. Children: Leander, who settled first near his father and removed about 1874 to Tennessee; Lorenzo, who married Sophia J. Hill, was a merchant in Cincinnati, Ohio, a farmer on the homestead, domesticated a herd of elk, in 1868 bought an extensive plantation in Tennessee, removed thither, built a saw-mill and grist-mill and a fine residence, and died there in June, 1884; Luana, who married Nathan C. Brown, a farmer in Little Valley Center, and moved in 1868 to Tennessee; Achsah, a teacher who died at the age of twenty years; Louisa, who married Chester Foster, a farmer, and removed to Tennessee in 1875; and Zebulon L., who married Martha Foy, settled and lived on the homestead eleven years, and removed to Whig street in April, 1865, where Mr. Stratton died Aug. 16, 1889. He was a good scholar and a great reader. Children: Edward A., who has taught twenty terms of school and is now a teacher in Randolph, and Albert L., a teacher and farmer.

The Sweetland family in America trace their ancestry to the Pilgrim fathers who came from England and settled in Massachusetts two or three years after the landing of the Mayflower. Asa Sweetland, Sr., a native of Vermont, was born in 1784, married Tabitha Houghton, who was born Sept. 2, 1788, and came with four children to Elba, Genesee county, in 1816. In 1828 he removed to Little Valley and as early as 1831 all his children—three sons and a daughter—were residing near him. Mr. Sweetland was a prominent member of the M. E. church and served as class-leader until he resigned on account of old age. He died March 8, 1867. His son, Rev. Lewis Sweetland, was born in Vermont, Jan. 2, 1810. He settled in the west part of the town, his homestead being owned by his heirs. For several years he was a local preacher of the M. E. church. Later, and for many years, he was an itinerant preacher of the Methodist Protestant church and died on his charge Sept. 17, 1883. He married Lucilla Palmer; of his ten children only Emory, Sophia and Maria (twins), and Orlando are living.

Asa Sweetland, Jr., born in Vermont, June 6, 1812, married Matilda Fisher, March 8, 1832, whose father, William Fisher, was a pioneer of Little Valley. They at once settled on the farm where he now lives. At that time there was one habitation of the kind in sight and another on the site of the present Rock City Hotel. Besides these three log cabins the entire territory of the village was a forest. Both he and his wife were prominent members of the M. E. church. He officiated as class-leader about twenty-five years and has been a member over sixty-six years. Mrs. Sweetland died Dec. 18, 1887, leaving one surviving daughter, Altheda (Mrs. Horace Hart). Mrs. Hart was born, raised, married, and commenced housekeeping on the homestead, and there her only child, Henry M., was born.

John Wesley Sweetland, son of Rev. Lewis, was born April 9, 1831. He received a good English education and taught common schools in winter many years. Jan. 4, 1854, he married Malvina F. Short and about two years after he bought forty acres of the homestead. In Sept., 1862, he enlisted in Co. B, 154th N. Y. Vols., and at Arlington Heights was attacked with fever and sent to the hospital. On partial recovery he was retained as a helper in the hospital, and remained in this position until discharged at the close of the war. He then resumed farming. In 1876 he removed to the village and had a position in the county clerk's office. In the spring of 1879 he formed a partnership with W. C. Parker as Sweetland & Parker in the hardware trade. A year or two later Mr. Sweetland bought Mr. Parker out and continued the business alone until the spring of 1884, when his son, S. L. Sweetland, became his partner as J. W. Sweetland & Son. He died Sept. 7, 1884.

S. L. Sweetland was born in Batavia, Genesee county, Sept. 8, 1855. When two years old his parents removed to Little Valley, where he has since resided. His education was obtained in the common schools with two years in Chamberlain Institute. He learned the printer's trade in the office of the Cattaraugus Republican, where he was employed five years, and on the Bradford Era one year. His father's health failed in 1833 and Lewis went home and conducted his father's hardware and grocery store. Upon the death of his father in 1884 his mother became his partner under the firm name of S. L. Sweetland & Co. He was clerk of Little Valley from 1884 to 1889. Jan. 4, 1878, he married Ella R. Bailey; children: Lee Wesley and S. L., Jr.

Emory Sweetland, son of Rev. Lewis, was born Oct. 14, 1835, married Mary J., daughter of Zina Holdridge, and settled on a farm on the Bucktooth road. He enlisted in Co. B, 154th N. Y. Vols., and served the last three years or the war, being discharged at Washington in 1865. The last year of his service he was chief steward of Second Division, Twentieth Army Hospital.

Capt. William Travis, born in Saratoga county, Dec. 27, 1796, married Sophia Buffington, of Saratoga, who was born in Kennebec county, Maine, Oct. 15, 1803. They removed to Marcellus, N. Y., and in 1826 came to New Albion, where he was a farmer and carpenter. He died Oct. 19, 1851. He was justice of the peace several terms, and was noted as a successful pettifogger in justice's court. In early life he was identified with the militia and was promoted to captain. Of their four children the oldest, John Travis, was born June 10, 1825, was raised in New Albion, and Dec. 4, 1843, married Anna M., daughter of Barrant Ten Eyck, a blacksmith and an early settler. In 1856 he permanently settled in the village of Little Valley, where he has since resided except about four years spent in Crawford county, Pa. While in Little Valley he has been a farmer. They had twelve children, of whom seven are living. Their oldest child, Nancy J. (Mrs. William H. Wilson), died in Alabama, June 26, 1887. The other four died in infancy.

Edgar R. Vickery, son of Arvin R. Vickery, was born in Lysander, N. Y., Jan. 14, 1833. His father settled on a farm in New Albion in 1852, where he remained until April, 1883, when he removed to Little Valley, where his son and daughter Elizabeth and aged widow now reside. He died April 2, 1890. Edgar R. Vickery, on Sept. 3, 1861, enlisted in Co. I, 49th N. Y. Vols., and was mustered into service Sept. 6th. He participated in the battles of Lewinsville, Va., Oct. 13, 1861; Watt's Creek, April 1, 1862; Young's Mills, April 4, 1862; siege of Yorktown from April 5 to May 4, 1862; Lee's Mills, April 5 and 16; Williamsburg, May 5, 1862; Mechanicsville, May 26, 1862; Golding's Farm, June 5, 1862; New Bridge, June 18, 1862; Seven Days' Battle commencing June 25, 1862; Garnett's Farm, June 27, and Garnett's and Golding's Farm, June 28, 1862; Savage Station, June 29, 1862; White Oak Swamp Bridge, June 30, 1862; Malvern Hill, July 1, 1862; and Harrison's Landing, July 3, 1862, where a bullet passed through his canteen and where he received a bullet-wound in his right knee. He was sent to Judiciary Square Hospital in Washington, D. C., July 7, 1862, was transferred to Newton University Hospital, Baltimore, Aug. 28, and was discharged Feb. 19, 1863, upon a surgeon's certificate of disability. He returned to his home on Feb. 28th. He is now a farmer in the village of Little Valley.

James H. Watson, born in Butler county, Pa., June 8, 1841, was raised a farmer, was educated in the common schools, and April 24, 1861, enlisted in Co. K, 8th Pa. Vols., being discharged July 29, 1861. The next morning he enlisted in Co. E, 62d Pa. Vols., and was dated back on the muster roll July 4, 1861. He was discharged upon a surgeon's certificate of disability April 20, 1863. He again enlisted, but was rejected.

Gaius Wheaton was born in Worcester, Mass., in 1789 or 1790. About 1820 he came to Little Valley Center, locating on the farm owned by his son Norman, the oldest person living who was born in the limits of the present town. He married Lefa Chase, daughter of the pioneer, David Chase, and brought his bride to his little frame house, and both remained on the place to the close of their lives. She died in early life and was the mother of all his children. He was afterward twice married. Mr. Wheaton was the first blacksmith in town and followed his trade several years. He held town offices, was an active Free Mason, and a master of the lodge. He died in 1863. Children: Hiram, who married, first, Mary Gibson, and second, Olive Bryant (the mother of two daughters), was a farmer first in Allegany and last in Ellicottville, and was proprietor of a grist-mill in Allegany, where he died; Norman, born in 1823, resides on the homestead, has always been a farmer, was raised a Democrat, but has been a Republican since the organization of the party, has been supervisor, justice of the peace, and assessor, married Harriet Carver, and has children Viola (Mrs. Frank Bailey) and Stanley N.; and Gaius, Jr. Stanley N. Wheaton, born on the Wheaton homestead Dec. 1, 1857, received a good academic education, and at the age of sixteen commenced teaching district schools and taught eight terms. At the same time he read law and at the age of twenty-one was appointed deputy county clerk, serving in that capacity about seven years and being clerk of the courts the last four years. In 1881 he was admitted to the bar and in the fall of 1887 was elected school commissioner of the Second District of Cattaraugus county, and was re-elected to the office. In 1880 Mr. Wheaton married Nettie, daughter of Cyrus A. Fuller and granddaughter of Cyrus W. Fuller.

Gaius Wheaton, Jr., was born Aug. 17, 1826, and is a farmer in Allegany. He married Sarah Kelly, of Little Valley, July 9, 1848, who was born Nov. 10, 1829, and died in Allegany, March 4, 1878. Sept. 6, 1882, he married, second, Mrs. Malinda Green, who was born April 2, 1844. His children by his first wife were Miranda, born June 11, 1851, married Benjamin C. Fuller (deceased), Sept. 23, 1872; Florence, born May 15, 1856, married J. E. Barnes, Jan. 16, 1878; Jessie H., born March 1, 1863, married J. H. Haley, Oct. 6, 1882; and Allen G., born Dec. 8, 1865.

CHAPTER XXXV.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF MACHIAS.

MACHIAS is situated in the northern part of the county and embraces all of town five and the south tier of lots in town six in the fifth range and the southwest corner lot in town six of the fourth range of the Holland Land Company's survey, and contains an area of 25,890 acres. It is bounded on the north by Yorkshire, on the east by Freedom and Farmersville, on the south by Farmersville and Franklinville, and on the west by Ellicottville and Ashford. It embraces a portion of the highland known as the "dividing ridge," which forms a watershed of the Allegheny river and Cattaraugus creek. The outlet of Lime Lake is the largest stream of the town, and this affords valuable water-power. Ischua creek has its rise in Machias and flows in a southerly direction across the southwest part of Farmersville, through Franklinville and Ischua, into Hinsdale, where it unites with Oil creek. Lime Lake, in the northeast part of the town on the outskirts of the village of Machias, is a beautiful and transparent body of water one mile by three-fourths in dimensions. This silvery little lakelet is a charming summer resort. It derives its supply of pure water entirely from springs beneath its surface, or is itself an immense spring, as it has no visible inlet, and its outlet is a constant mill stream. The amount of ice harvested from its surface in winters is enormous. This industry frequently gives employment to 300 men. The soil of the town is a gravelly loam intermixed with clay in some parts, is strong, fertile, and when properly cultivated yields abundantly.

Maj. Timothy Butler, a native of Maine, who settled on lot 14 on Ischua creek as early as 1813, is conceded to have been the first settler in Machias. Others came soon after and were employed at first by the major. A young man named Julius Underwood, in his employ, came with him and his family. Major Butler, it is said, possessed considerable means, employed help, and made extensive improvements. He manufactured maple sugar from 1,400 trees. He conveyed the sap to his sugar camp by means of wooden conductors like the old-fashioned eaves-trough. He also constructed a distillery and made rum from maple sugar. He removed to Napoli in 1818 and was the first settler in that town. Others who came from Maine soon after Major Butler were Jeremiah Ballard and a Mr. Tiffany, who remained but a few years. Joseph Kinne and his three sons came in 1815. Joseph Kinne, Jr., was one of the early justices of the peace and a prominent man. Obadiah Vaughan, John Morean, and Charles H. Biggs settled on lot 24 in 1816. Charles Button, a native of Vermont, came in 1817, as did also Elijah T. Ashcraft, with their families, and were permanent and prominent in the new settlement. In 1818 John Farrar, a veteran of the Revolution, settled upon the land previously cultivated by Major Butler. He came from Massachusetts, but was a native of New Hampshire. It is said of him that he attended the famous Boston tea-party. His family consisted of himself, wife, and sons the late Wiggim M., George W., Royal C., John, Jr., and daughter Asenath. The late venerable Wiggim M. Farrar, twenty-one years of age in 1818, said that at that time the only families in Machias were the Kinnes, Vaughans, Ashcrafts, Buttons, Grovers, Biggses, Moreans, Bennetts, Philbricks, Maxsons, and Farrars. Allowing the usual estimate of five individuals in each of the eleven families the entire population of the town was only fifty-five. In 1830, by the census report, the population had increased to 735; in 1840, 1,085; in 1850, 1,342; in 1860, 1,275; in 1870, 1,170; in 1880, 1,545; in 1890, 1,536.

Like other early settlements in western New York most of the pioneer settlers in Machias came to the wilderness empty-handed; they had little to buy with and nothing to sell. But they had courage and industry, and were soon able to raise enough to supply all their necessities. In 1823 Daniel Potter erected a mill at the outlet of Lime Lake which served to reduce their wheat and corn to meal without bolting it. This was the first grist-mill in town. Andrew McBuzzell had preceded him and built the first saw-mill near the site of the grist-mill in 1820. The first store was opened in 1822, also at the foot of the lake, by Howard Peck and Alva Jefferson. Howard Peck at one time was a distiller. Joseph Kinne, Jr., was the first postmaster about 1827. Miss Amarilla Brown taught the first school in the summer of 1820 in the house of John Moréan. The first school house was built about a mile north of the village in 1827. Henry Davis, an insane man, was confined in it and burned with it in 1830. This house was built of logs and in the windows paper was substituted for glass. The first marriage was that contracted between Brigham Brown and Polly Mason in April, 1823. The first death was that of a child of Julius Underwood. Rev. John Spencer, the Congregational missionary from Connecticut, conducted the first religious service in town. The first church was organized by the M. E. denomination in 1822.

Wolves, an occasional panther, and bears in multitudes infested the heavy forests of Machias when the first settlers came in. Daniel Vaughan, a brother of Obediah, was a settler in 1818. He was a "mighty hunter" and a successful bear-killer. He went into the forest accompanied by his dog and armed with his rifle and a long, stout spear, and in one season dispatched fifteen of the shaggy brutes. He received a bounty for his bear scalps that paid him well for the time he spent in hunting.

Machias was formed from Yorkshire by an act of the Legislature passed April 16, 1827, and was enlarged in 1847 by annexing another tier of lots on its northern boundary. The new town held its first town meeting at the house of Jeremiah Bennett on Tuesday, May 8, 1827, and elected these officers: Supervisor, Howard Peck; town clerk, Nathan Follett; assessors, Willard Jefferson, Wiggin M. Farrar, Sylvester Carver; collector, Jeremiah Bennett; commissioners of highways, Sheldon Holbrook, Samuel Bush, Isaac Arnold; overseers of the poor, Richard Loomis, Robert Hollister; school commissioners, Wiggin M. Farrar, Willard Jefferson, Elijah Odell; inspectors of schools, Nathan Follett, Howard Peck, Wiggin M. Farrar; constables, William Loomis, Jeremiah Bennett; sealer of weights and measures and of leather, Howard Peck. Following is a list of the principal town officers:

Masters; 1836, Rensselaer Lamb, Newton Hawes; 1837, William Roscoe, Thomas Clark, Wiggin M. Farrar; 1838, Howard Peck; 1839, Rensselaer Lamb, Lyman Twomley; 1840, Wiggin M. Farrar; 1841, Albert B. Stevens; 1842, John Farrar, Jr., Sylvester Carver; 1843, Rensselaer Lamb; 1844, Lyman Twomley; 1845, Albert B. Stevens; 1846, Simeon H. Watson; 1847, Rensselaer Lamb; 1848, Lyman Twomley, Jasper Andrews; 1849, William Roscoe, Almerin Leek; 1850, Jerome B. Jewell, William Roscoe; 1851, Heman G. Button; 1852, John Farrar, Jr.; 1853, Jasper Andrews; 1854, Rufus L. Whitcher; 1855, Heman G. Button; 1856, Jasper Andrews; 1857, Andrew L. Allen; 1858, Edwin Baker; 1859, Heman G. Button; 1860, Quinton Rogers; 1861, John Farrar, Jr.; 1862, Edwin Baker; 1863, George W. Blackman; 1864, Quinton Rogers, Andrew L. Allen; 1865, Peter Van Dewater, A. M. Farrar; 1866, Horace Brockway; 1867, Heman G. Button, Edwin Baker, Stephen S. Randall; 1868, Peter Van Dewater; 1869, Daniel C. Vaughan; 1870, James M. Velzy, Calvin Smith; 1871, Heman G. Button, Rufus L. Whitecher; 1873, Rufus L. Whitecher; 1874, James M. Velzy; 1875, Heman G. Button, George A. Stoneman; 1876, Moses Jewell; 1877, Daniel S. Tilden; 1878, Omer Murphy; 1879, A. A. Smith; 1880, Edwin Baker; 1881, William Van Dewater; 1882, William A. Joslyn; 1883, Lyman Gould; 1884, Edwin Baker; 1885, M. B. Fields; 1886, J. E. Euchner; 1887, J. E. Euchner; 1888, Edwin Baker; 1889, M. B. Fields; 1890, William A. Joslyn; 1891, S. D. Brown; 1892, Edwin Baker; 1893, M. B. Fields.

Machias is an inland town and has no very large streams and but limited water-power. The inhabitants are mainly engaged in farming. The soil and climate are best adapted to growing grass, and the farmers achieve their best results by keeping as many cows as their farms will support. Considerable maple sugar is manufactured.

The highways of Machias are as well kept as those of other towns. The Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad enters the town from Yorkshire near the northeast corner and runs in nearly a south direction, crossing the east line into Farmersville about a mile and a half north of the southeast corner. The Rochester branch of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad enters Machias from the northeast corner and crosses the track of the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad at Machias Junction, where both have a union station. It continues in a southwest course and crosses the south line of the town about a mile east of its southwest corner. Machias paid toward the construction of these roads $15,000 and $8,000 respectively.

The town is divided into fourteen common school districts and maintains a school in each of them. Fifteen teachers were employed for the year 1891-92 and 446 children attended the schools, the aggregate attendance being 38,929 days. The school buildings and sites are valued at $8,010; the assessed valuation of the property of the districts is $821,014. These districts received from the State $1,715.22 and raised by local tax $2,311.09.

Machias village, situated on a plain in the northeast part of the township about a mile northwest of Machias Junction and near Lime Lake, contains three church edifices (Methodist Episcopal, Christian, and Wesleyan Methodist), a good school house with two departments, one hotel, four or five stores, several mechanics' shops, a postoffice (established about 1827), three physicians, one lawyer, and about 500 inhabitants. On the outskirts of the village on one of the best farms in Cattaraugus county is the county alms house.

There are two cemeteries near the village. "The old burying ground," the resting place of many of the old pioneers of Machias, was dedicated by the burial of Esther, daughter of Elijah T. Ashcraft, who died December 6, 1819. This cemetery became the property of the town for the purpose of a burial place in the summer of 1819. It is located on suitable ground about one mile east of the village. Maple Grove Cemetery is situated in a beautiful grove of thrifty young maple trees about a half-mile west of the village. An association was organized in accordance with statute law October 26, 1874, and a plat of five acres was purchased and regularly laid out.

Lime Lake is a little hamlet at the foot of the lake of the same name. It is the location of the first store, the first mills, and the first and only wool-carding and cloth-dressing establishment in Machias. It now contains a hotel, a grist-mill, a saw-mill, a school house, and six or eight dwelling houses. Early in the present year the new station of Odosagi was established on the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad. The name is of Indian origin and signifies "clear spring water."

Machias Junction derives its name from the circumstance of its location at the junction of the Western New York & Pennsylvania and the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroads. It contains the railroad station buildings, a postoffice, hotel, one or two stores, school house, and a dozen dwellings.

Summit Station is situated in the southwest part of Machias on the Rochester branch of the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad, and contains Bird postoffice (established in January, 1888) and several families in its vicinity.

Lime Lake mills, the property of John E. Euchner, are located at the hamlet of Lime Lake. They were erected by Foilett & Colgrove about 1835 on the site where the first grist-mill was built by Daniel Potter in 1823. When the building was erected it contained a custom grist-mill and a wool-carding and cloth-dressing-mill. James Cummings next became owner and changed the cloth-dressing-mill into a saw-mill about 1867. Later Gilbert Strong became a half-owner under the firm name of Cummings & Strong. In 1873 Mr. Cummings transferred his interest to Jacob Wurst and the firm of Strong & Wurst was formed. In 1874 John E. Euchner succeeded Mr. Strong and the firm was changed to Wurst & Euchner. In 1880 Paul Euchner succeeded Mr. Wurst and the firm name was again changed and became Euchner Brothers. In 1887 John E. Euchner became sole proprietor. The mills are supplied with two runs of stone. The motive power is water supplied by Lime Lake. The saw-mill is furnished with a circular saw and an edger, and has a capacity for sawing 10,000 feet of lumber per day.

The Jewell & Van Dewater steam saw-mill at Bird postoffice and Summit Station was built by them in 1881. The buildings were burned in 1884 and rebuilt the same season. The mill was conducted by this company until the death of Mr. Jewell in the fall of 1891. Since then Mr. Van Dewater has continued the business alone. The power is steam furnished by a thirty horse-power engine, and the mills have a capacity of 10,000 feet of lumber per day. Mr. Van Dewater manufactures principally hardwood lumber and employs eight men. He is also engaged with Henry Loener, of Rochester, in the manufacture of lasts in the rough. Their manufactory is near the saw-mill at Summit Station.

Rock Spring cheese factory, No. 2, was built by S. A. Farrington in 1872. It is now owned and operated by J. R. Holden. Its capacity is 450 cows. Rock Spring cheese factory, No. 3, at Machias village, was built by J. R. Holden, the present proprietor. Its capacity is 450 cows.

The Methodist Episcopal church in Machias was organized in 1822 with five members. The meetings were held in the school house until 1839, when the Methodists, Christians, and entire community unitedly built the edifice now the Christians' house of worship, and these denominations occupied the building in union until 1853, when the Methodists built their present church at an expense of $2,500. Recently this society has beautified and greatly improved the edifice by putting in stained glass windows, circular pews, and new carpets. The first pastor was Rev. Mr. Bronson. The church now has sixty members under the pastoral care of Rev. J. F. Brown. The society has sold the old parsonage and is building a new one at a cost of $1,500. The church property is valued at $4,500. Connected is a Sunday school of 125 scholars.

The First Christian church of Machias, located in the village, was organized July 21, 1827, by Joseph Bartlett with five members. In 1839 the society built its present house of worship, a wooden structure capable of seating 400 people. The original cost of the church edifice was $3,000; the present value of the church property is $4,000. This society has been very prosperous and now has ninety-seven members. The Sunday school has an enrollment of 167 members with ten teachers and five officers. The pastors of the church have been Revs. Joseph Bartlett, Joseph Locke, Peter Cook, N. Perry, Warren Skeels, Henry C. Davis, J. M. Field, Charles Clark, James Smith, Peter Cook, J. M. Field, E. J. Burlingame, J. M. Field, and Alden Allen.

The Wesleyan Methodist church of Machias, located in the village, was organized by Rev. B. F. Laughlin on September 26, 1888, with eleven members. Rev. G. W. Sibley was the first pastor. In 1890 the present house of worship, a wooden structure, was erected at a cost of $1,200. The church has twenty members with Rev. C. H. Dow as pastor. The edifice has a seating capacity of 275 people and connected is a Sunday school of twenty scholars.

Lodge No. 131, A. O. U. W., of Machias, was organized by D. D. G. M. W. James D. McVey, of Franklinville, February 18, 1878, with twenty-one members. Wesley Follett was the first master workman; Moses Jewell, recorder; and William H. Howden, financier. By withdrawals, transfers, deaths, etc., only six of its members can claim charter distinction. The lodge has lost six by death: R. B. Allen, J. L. Phillips, Rufus E. Cornwell, D. Augustus Wright, Moses Jewell, and John Blackman. The membership now numbers 27.

Machias Council, No. 182, Royal Templars of Temperance, was organized September 23, 1882, by Deputy P. L. McKillip, M. D., with twenty-four members, of which number sixteen were beneficiary and eight honorary. Hon. H. G. Button was elected the first select councilor; Austin M. Camp, vice-councilor; and Susan R. Delmarter, recording secretary. But two deaths in the beneficiary list have occurred, both of whom, Welcome Camp and Dr. Thomas J. King, were charter members. At present it has ten beneficiary and six honorary members.

Phillips Post, No. 329, G. A. R., was organized January 18, 1883, by Col. W. H. Hicks, of Arcade, with sixteen members. George A. Stoneman was the first commander; A. P. Adams, senior vice-commander; and R. H. Kerr, adjutant. Only one of the charter members, Edwin D. Curtis, is dead. This was the first post to be organized in northeastern Cattaugus county and had many members from adjoining towns, and its register has had as many as 155 names at one time. In 1887 several members formed a stock company, procured a charter, and erected a building which contains a hall large enough to accommodate the post, and of which it has the perpetual free use. The post has about forty-five members, many of the former members having withdrawn to organize or join posts nearer home. George A. Stoneman is the present commander; Elias Gould, senior vice-commander; and R. H. Kerr, adjutant. Phillips Post received its name in honor of Norris Phillips, a veteran of the late war from this town who was killed at Rocky Face Ridge, Va. The names of the commanders in their order are G. A. Stoneman, Elias Gould, R. H. Kerr, and G. A. Stoneman.

Machias Council, No. 52, Junior Order United American Mechanics, was instituted March 17, 1893, with sixteen members. William A. Joselyn was councilor; Prof. C. D. Day, vice-councilor; Dr. C. King, recording secretary.

Marvin Austin, son of Edwin A. and Polly (Smith) Austin, was born April 3, 1833. His father, a native of Massachusetts, was born Oct. 8, 1806; his mother was born Nov. 11, 1812. They were married Feb. 13, 1830, and settled in Farmersville near the Machias line in 1832. In 1870 they removed to Michigan. Both are deceased, and their remains repose side by side in the cemetery at Elton in Freedom. Marvin Austin has always been a farmer. He has dealt largely in cattle, sheep, and swine, and for six years from 1883 was a merchant in Machias. He served the town on the Board of Supervisors in 1875 and again in 1876 and has been postmaster. In Sept., 1854, he married Angeline Knight, who was the mother of his daughter Georgiann, and who died in Sept., 1865. He married A. Eliza Bailey on Nov. 5, 1868, and they have one daughter, Lizzie.

Marcus Baker, son of Jonathan and Betsey (Beach) Baker, was born in Litchfield, Conn., in 1802. In 1829 he married Permelia Sherwin in Madison county and in 1842 they made a permanent settlement in Machias on the farm where his son Edwin now resides. Mrs. Baker died in 1870 and Mr. Baker in 1871. Edwin Baker, born in Cortland county in 1831, succeeded his father on the homestead. He began teaching at the age of sixteen and continued to teach in winter until he was forty. He has served his town as supervisor seven consecutive years. He was town superintendent of schools and has served as justice of the peace, except one term, since 1859. He served as coroner one term and has been journal clerk of the Board of Supervisors eleven consecutive years and was chairman of the board in 1872.

Ira Bessey was born in Rutland, Vt., about 1786. His parents came to Pembroke, Genesee county, and a few years later Ira married Judith Jefferson, who was born in Vermont, Aug. 11, 1793. They settled there, where their four children were born. They removed to Machias in Nov., 1831, where Mr. Bessey died Oct. 15, 1833. Mrs. Bessey died Feb. 22, 1869. William Bessey, their oldest son, born Dec. 16, 1816, raised the younger children to mature years, bought the homestead, and has deeded one-half of it to his son-in-law, Lyman Gould. Mr. Bessey married Harriet Hawkins, March 19, 1843. She was born in Otsego county, N. Y., Dec. 20, 1820, and died April 29, 1892. Children: Philena M., born Oct. 23, 1845, died May 25, 1858; and Judith, born Dec. 1, 1847, married Lyman Gould, Jan. 19, 1870. Mr. Bessey has raised an adopted son, James Monroe Bessey, who married Eva Peet.

Jared Augustus Brewer, only son of Jacob T. and Esther (McIntyre) Brewer, was born in New Berlin, N. Y., March 5, 1811, and came with his father to Farmersville in May, 1833, where Jacob T. died Feb. 23, 1850. In 1848 he moved to Machias, settling on the first deeded land in the town. Mr. Brewer married, in 1830, Sybil E. Porter; children: Esther Eliza (Mrs. J. E. K. Button), who was born Aug. 4, 1831, and died Jan. 7, 1872; and Maria Jennett (Mrs. Luther A. Beckwith), who was born June 24, 1833, and died Oct. 23, 1861. Mr. Brewer filled nearly all of the town offices and represented Machias as supervisor in 1855 and 1856.

Samuel Bush, son of John and Jane (Stroud) Bush, was born in Tompkins county, Nov. 23, 1794. He spent a few years with his grandfather Stroud, a prominent citizen of Stroudsburg, Pa., and married, in Tompkins county, Sally Maria Marvin in Nov., 1817, where he settled as a farmer. In March, 1824, he came with his family to Yorkshire (now Machias). He cleared his farm of 160 acres, sold it, and removed to another, now in the village of Machias. In a few years he owned 360 acres on the Franklinville road, where he died April 18, 1865. Mr. Bush was a prominent citizen and his quaint expressions are still remembered. He was first a Whig and then a staunch Republican. He was buried on the same day Lincoln was laid to rest. Mrs. Bush died on the homestead in Sept., 1867. They had twelve children and raised nine to adult age; four are living: Elvire, widow of Hon. Andrew L. Allen; Rhoda, widow of Franklin B. Wright; N. Maria (Mrs. P. N. Orne); Jane (Mrs. T. N. Blighton); and Charles N., who died July 11, 1893.

Hon. Heman G. Button was born in Concord, N. Y., May 1, 1816. His father, Charles Button, a native of Vermont, came from Concord and settled in Machias (then a part of Ischua) in April, 1817. Since then Heman G. has resided within the town, living here longer than any other citizen. His opportunities for an education being limited to the primitive common schools his early acquirements in scholarship were quite meager, but he had ambition and energy and by hard study at home he was qualified to teach a common school. His father was an invalid and unable to labor from 1820 to 1832, when he died. Heman G., at the age of nineteen, commenced to teach school and continued fourteen winter terms, five of which he taught in his village. He began business a farmer, which has been the leading occupation of his life. He was first a Whig, but joined the Republican party at its organization, and was a steadfast supporter of the Union all through the Rebellion. He was active in enlisting soldiers. In 1841 he was elected inspector of common schools and served two years; he was town superintendent of schools four years, served as highway commissioner and assessor, was justice of the peace twenty-four years and justice of sessions one term; he represented Machias on the Board of Supervisors in 1854 and in 1866, and has served Cattaraugus county as superintendent of the poor fourteen years and as loan commissioner seven years, and has been notary public since 1878. He was elected a member of Assembly in 1866. The late Judge Ten Broeck, founder of Ten Broeck Free Academy in Franklinville, appointed Mr. Button one of its trustees, which position he still holds. He has also served his town as railroad commissioner, and has never been defeated at an election when a candidate for any office. Mr. Button is a man of more than ordinary ability. He is a close reasoner, a ready conversationalist, and a well-informed man. He is public spirited, and for years has exerted great influence in political affairs. March 4, 1838, he married Jerusha Joslyn, of Machias, who died in 1856. She was the mother of all his children: Daniel W. Kingsley, Millard Fillmore, Naomi, Alvira L., Adell, and Ida. Nov. 27, 1856, he married Mrs. Sarah M. (Prescott) Hall, widow of the late Flisha Hall, of Machias. She was born Dec. 11, 1832, in Sanbornton, N. H., where her parents were born.

Jesse E. K. Button, son of Charles Button, the pioneer of Machias, was born Feb. 13, 1824. His father died when Jesse was but eight years old. He began his life teaching in the common schools, which he continued several years, finally taking up farming as an avocation. He has served Machias as superintendent of schools and as assessor and the county as superintendent of the poor. His first wife, Eliza Brewer, was the mother of all his children—two sons, two daughters. His present wife is the widow of Adam Bessey.

Lyman Button, oldest son of Charles, was born July 28, 1808, and came to Machias with his parents in 1817. He succeeded his father on the homestead and June 29, 1836, married Polly, daughter of Reuben Brown, a pioneer of Freedom. He located about half a mile west of Elton, where he and his wife resided to the close of their lives. Mr. Button was always a farmer. He died on March 18, 1859, and Mrs. Button on Nov. 16, 1888. Children: Harvey, who succeeded his father and died Feb. 5, 1889; Reuben C. (see page 649); William H., born Nov. 14, 1841, died Nov. 24, 1845; Lyman, born Feb. 8, 1844, died Jan. 11, 1848; David M., born May 4, 1849, commenced business in Franklinsville as a dealer in furniture and an undertaker, was a liveryman in Allegany, and in 1890 purchased the homestead; Caroline A., born Nov. 3, 1850, died Sept. 18, 1888; and Jonas, born Feb. 12, 1853. Sept. 22, 1874, David M. married Emily Adams, of Franklinsville, who died Dec. 4, 1875, being the mother of Andrew Lyman Button. She was a lady of culture and had been a teacher in Ten Broeck Academy. March 20, 1878, he married Cora A. Thurber, of Allegany; children: Winnie E., Flora Blanche, David Glenn, Ernest Leone.

Sylvester Carver, son of Samuel and Bersheba (Griswold) Carver, was born in Sherburne, N. Y., April 17, 1796, married Lydia Locke, and settled in Machias, where he had made a small clearing and built a log house on a lot of 120 acres. He had a warrantee deed of his farm. He was a good financier and at one time he owned 390 acres of land. He was first a Whig and later a Republican. He served as highway commissioner, overseer of the poor, and assessor, and was prominent in the Christian church. Mrs. Carver died March 10, 1863, and Mr. Carver on Feb. 13, 1883. Six of their ten children attained maturity: Harriet, Sylvester J., Lydia, Chester, Roxana, and Carthalo. The latter died June 7, 1865; he was a soldier in the Union army.

Clark D. Day, son of Hartson and Laura (Rice) Day, was born in Ashford, May 7, 1852, was educated in the common schools and in Griffith Institute, Springville, N. Y., and became a teacher, which vocation he followed thirty-three terms. He has also been a farmer. A Democrat in politics he was elected school commissioner of the First District of Cattaraugus county in 1890. He also served the town of Ashford as justice of the peace eight years. Sept. 1, 1874, he married Eva P. Remington, of Ashford, daughter of Bela C. Remington. They have one daughter, Alice I., born March 16, 1882.

John E. Euchner was born in Holland, Erie county, and at the age of nineteen became a partner in a grocery store. In 1874 he exchanged this in part payment for a half-interest in Lime Lake mills, of which he is now sole owner. Mr. Euchner is a Republican and was elected supervisor, in 1892 and again in 1893. Jan. 1, 1880, he married Eva Wright, who was accidentally drowned in Lime Lake in May following. In March, 1883, he married Grace Little. Children: Eva M., Willie, and an infant.

David H. Evans, son of Thomas and Elizabeth (Edwards) Evans, was born in Cardiganshire, Wales, April 22, 1847, was educated in the English and in his native language, and beginning at the age of fourteen served three years at the trade of a merchant. He then received a letter of recommendation from his employer and went to Aberdan, Glamorganshire, where he was a clerk two years and a half, when he was obliged to leave on account of ill health. In the spring of 1869 he came to America and located in Centerville, N. Y., where he labored for the farmers. He married, in Freedom, Mary James, also a native of Wales, and rented a farm in that town. Six years later he formed a mercantile partnership with G. H. Beam at Hume under the firm name of Evans & Beam. In March, 1887, with C. C. Newman, of Sandusky, he opened a general store in Machias, and Jan. 1, 1892, purchased the interest of Mr. Newman. As soon as possible he became a citizen of the United States and joined the Republican party. Children: Willie L., John H., Anna E., Christmas H., Sadie J., and Mamie B.

Wiggin M. Farrar was born in New Hampshire, Feb. 14, 1797. His father, John Farrar, was a farmer, inn keeper, and merchant, and the son was a soldier in the War of 1812. The family came to New Berlin, N. Y., and thence in 1817 to Rochester, whence Wiggin, in 1819, came with the family to Machias. After living on various tracts he purchased the homestead in 1828, on which he spent his life. In 1826 he married Hannah Doolittle, who died shortly afterward. In 1828 he married Betsey Loomis. His father died in 1854. Wiggin Farrar was prominently identified with his town's affairs and represented it on the Board of Supervisors several terms. He was also county superintendent of the poor five years, and held nearly every town office. He was a man of decided traits of character, and during his latter years became totally deaf. His daughter married Dr. Thomas J. King (see page 146).

Rev. J. M. Field, born in Gainesville, N. Y., July 2, 1816, died in Machias, Jan. 31, 1892. His early education was limited to the common schools. He received his first license to preach Aug. 6, 1840, from Rev. O. F. Comfort, presiding elder of the M. E. church. He then began a systematic course of study and economized time by studying the English language while riding on horseback to his appointments. He was a close student and eventually an able scholar. After a ministry of three years in the M. E. church he preached on a Wesleyan Methodist circuit one year and then united with the Christian church, being ordained in that denomination at a special session of the New York Western Christian Conference on Sept. 13, 1845. He was fifty-two years in the ministry and over forty years pastor of the Christian church of Machias—a longer pastorate with one church, except that of Rev. Moses Kidder, of Woodstock, Vt., than any other minister in the Christian denomination in America. In 1856 he joined the Erie Christian Conference and for more than thirty years was the most popular preacher in that conference. He often presided at its annual meetings. He preached over 1,000 funeral sermons and married over 500 couples. He was loved by the ministry, by his church, and by the entire community. As a preacher he was scriptural, spiritual, earnest, clear, and positive. In stature he was tall, well proportioned, stood erect, and presented a noble appearance in the pulpit. As a pastor he was a shining example of all Christian virtues and continually labored to do good in the homes of his parishoners and the whole community. Mr. Field married, first, Adelia Carter, of Farmersville, Oct. 13, 1841. They had one child, a son, who died at the age of four months. She died July 30, 1844. He married, second, Celesta D. Clark, of Allen, N. Y., March 5, 1845, with whom he lived nearly forty-seven years. To them were born five children, three sons and a daughter of whom reached maturity. To Mrs. Celesta D. Field's ceaseless industry, excellent judgment, fervent piety, and loving devotion he owed much of his success as a preacher and pastor, and now, at the age of seventy years, the oldest member of the Machias church, she is passing the peaceful evening of her life loved and honored.

Nathan Follett, son of John, was born in Rensselaer county April 19, 1802. In 1822 he came to Cattaraugus county and was engaged as a salesman by Henry L. Baker and sold the first goods in Yorkshire at Yorkshire Corners, using a portion of the barroom of the Williams tavern for a salesroom. In 1823 he came to Machias, where he spent the remainder of his life. Here he entered the store of Peck & Jefferson, first merchants of Machias, located at the foot of Lime Lake. In April, 1829, he married Clarissa, daughter of Daniel Potter, who was born Dec. 8, 1805. They celebrated their golden wedding in April, 1879. They settled at the outlet of the lake, where Mr. Follett built the second grist-mill on the site of the first, with a wool-carding and cloth-dressing-mill under the same roof, and managed the business about thirty years. He died Aug. 17, 1880; Mrs. Follett died Dec. 28, 1882. Children: Mary, Rathbun, William, Wesley, Fletcher, Melville, and Albert.

William Follett, born July 6, 1832, attended the common schools, and July 5, 1855, married Margaret Cleary, of Machias, and settled on the Joslyn farm, where he remained until 1857, when he accepted the position of keeper of the County Alms House and Insane Asylum and farm attached, where he remained, except two years, until April, 1891, when he resigned. He now resides in the village in the house he erected in 1880. Mrs. Follett died April 25, 1864; children: Mary Grace (deceased); Dora (Mrs. Platt Vinton), of Gowanda; and Nathan. Oct. 2, 1865, he married Emily, daughter of John Velzy; children: Margaret (Mrs. O. W. Pierce), of Olean; Edith (Mrs. Dr. Cassar Smith), of Farmersville; and Dr. William.

Frank D. Folts, son of Timothy and Mary E. (Frank) Folts, was born in Ashford in 1839. Both his grandfathers were pioneers of that town. He received his education in the common schools and in Springville Academy, and began business as a farmer and dealer in cattle. During the war he was an extensive buyer of horses for the government, and the ensuing seventeen years he dealt in marble and granite. In 1879 he built his first hotel at Machias Junction, which was burned about as soon as finished in March, 1880. Ninety days later his present hotel was built on the site. Mr. Folts was a merchant six years, kept his hotel six years, was the postmaster of Leek postoffice seven years, and was a census enumerator in 1892, and was also a farmer and has nine tenement houses. Sept. 11, 1861, he married Naomi M. Hopkins, of Ashford, who at the age of twenty-one had taught common schools seventeen terms. Children: Burdette E., conducting the Folts House, and Ertion T., baggage-master at Machias Junction.

Willard Jefferson, a native of Vermont, came to Machias at a very early date and settled on the farm where the county alms house has since been built. He was an enterprising man and became prominent in the early history of the town. He was supervisor in 1832 and 1833. He sold his farm to the county in 1833 and removed to Ohio, where he was again prominent, and died.

William A. Joslyn, son of James and Levina (Andrews) Joslyn, was born in Darien, N. Y., April 14, 1847. His father was a native of Hanover, N. H., and came with his parents to Darien in 1816. His mother was born in Columbia county, N. Y., in 1815 and went to Alexander with her parents about 1818. In Oct., 1849, William A. came with his parents to Machias and settled on the farm on lots 20 and 21. James Joslyn was a justice of the peace in Darien and assessor in Machias. He died in 1877 and his wife in 1874. William A. Joslyn succeeded his father on the homestead. He is a Democrat, and in 1882 was elected justice of the peace, which position he has held continuously to the present time. March 8, 1871, he married Emma J. Parker, of Machias; children: Essie A., A. Jackson, Viola, James Ray, and Lilia M.

Almerin Leek, son of Abram, was born on Long Island, Dec. 5, 1805, and married Mary Edwards, also a native of Long Island, who was born Dec. 8, 1805. They came to Machias in 1834 and settled on a farm three miles south of the village, whence they subsequently removed to the village. Mrs. Leek died July 26, 1838, and Mr. Leek married Asenath Farrar, who is also deceased. Mr. Leek died in 1875. He was a member, class-leader, and steward of the M. E. church and for years superintendent of the Sunday school. In 1862, 1863, and 1864 he represented Machias on the Board of Supervisors. He was the father of five children; only two are living: Lewis, born July 8, 1832, a farmer in Iowa, and Stephen E., born in Machias, Jan. 13, 1835. In Jan., 1862, he enlisted in the 11th N. Y. Cav. and served to the close of the war. Returning from the war he resumed his trade of a harness maker. In 1864 he married Jane Gann, of Long Island.

Madam Lee-O-Netto, M. D., was born in Sherbrooke, Canada, while her parents, who were native Senecas, were there on a visit. She was raised near Salamanca and educated in Lenoxville and other schools, and took a medical course in Nelson Greene Medical College, where she was graduated about 1868. She practiced five years with Dr. Brown, a celebrated surgeon and physician of Sherbrooke, Canada. Her father, Kanistanoux, was also a physician. Her grandfather, Natalac, was a chief of the Banikeen tribe. About 1872 Madam Lee-O-Netto returned to western New York and has successfully practiced her profession. She has a home in Machias, but travels over several counties, and makes a specialty of chronic diseases of women.

Baltus A. Lingenfelter was born and raised in the Mohawk valley and married there Rachel Brewer. He was a soldier in the War of 1812 and a farmer. His seven sons and oldest daughter were born in his native valley, and about 1837 he settled on the farm where his son, James Lingenfelter, now lives. He was over medium height, straight, broad-shouldered and muscular, had blue eyes, a ruddy complexion, and was called a fine looking man. His wife was a member of the Methodist church from the age of fourteen and he was one of its regular supporters. He died in Dec., 1882; Mrs. Lingenfelter died April 11, 1879. They had thirteen children, of whom twelve attained maturity. Their youngest son, James, was born June 29, 1833, and March 29, 1861, married Cordelia Wright. He enlisted in Co. I, 154th N. Y. Vols., in 1862, and was discharged May 21, 1864, by reason of physical disability. Since then he has engaged in farming and now owns the homestead. Children: Ida M. (Mrs. G. B. Ruple), Ralph, Florence M., Mabel E., Isma I.

Chester Locke, born July 23, 1804, in Wendell, Mass., came to Machias with his father, Moses Locke, as early as 1824. His mother, Hannah Locke, had died in Massachusetts. Chester bought 200 acres of woodland where his daughter Elizabeth (Mrs. Dudley Phillips) now lives. His father was a Revolutionary soldier and died two or three years after their settlement here. Chester Locke married Amelia Hollister in 1825. They were members of the Christian church of Machias and Mrs. Locke was a member at its organization. He had seven children. He died Oct. 8, 1884, and she March 15, 1882.

John Napier was born at Halifax, Nova Scotia, Sept. 15, 1816. He descends from that noted Napier family which has figured conspicuously in Great Britain for several centuries. His father was James Napier, born in Huntly, Aberdeenshire, Scotland, and his mother, Rachel (Michael) Napier, was born in the adjoining parish, Gartly. They emigrated to Halifax, N. S., in 1816, and after twelve years returned with their family to Scotland. In 1834 John and an elder brother, William, landed in Halifax, removed to Windsor, and a year later went to New York and soon afterward to Quincy, Mass., where John worked three years at the stone-cutter's trade, becoming a first-class journeyman. He worked on the James River canal in Virginia and went to Scotland with his brother in the fall of 1838. The next spring they returned to America, bringing their parents, whom they subsequently cared for. They resumed work on the Erie canal, and in 1840 came to Hinsdale. While there John visited Machias and took the contract to erect the stone house for Samuel Butler, in which he now resides. In 1844 he went to Buffalo, but soon removed to New London, Conn., and worked at Mill-Stone Point, six miles from New London. After three months' service he was promoted foreman over the sixty journeyman stone-cutters and from that time during his business life was engaged as superintendent or contractor. In 1846 Mr. Napier went to Lawrence, Mass., and was employed as foreman over the stone-cutters in building the great dam across the Merrimac and the immense manufactories there. In 1848 he was employed on the aqueduct across the Genesee river at Portageville. From that time until 1857 he was a contractor of masonry on the Genesee Valley and Erie canals in connection with his brothers William, James, and George. In 1857 and 1858, with these brothers and their brother-in-law, Charles Brodie, Mr. Napier was engaged in building the stone work on the bridge spanning the Mississippi river at St. Paul. From 1860 until 1864 he was superintendent of construction on the immense locks on the Louisville & Portland canal at Louisville, Ky. The next two years he was superintendent of masonry on the Louisville & Nashville railroad. In 1866 he with his brother erected the Ten Broeck Free Academy at Franklinville. In 1867 he obtained the contract to get the stone from the celebrated quarries at Nauvoo, Ill., for the U. S. government building at Springfield, Ill. In 1868 the Napiers erected the county poor house in Machias. In July, 1868, Mr. Napier became superintendent of the stone work of the State capitol at Springfield, Ill., which position he held until Dec., 1876. In 1869 he was superintendent of the Grafton stone quarries on the Mississippi, forty miles above St. Louis, for the building of the St. Louis bridge and water works, and had from 250 to 300 men under his supervision. During this time also he and his brothers built the masonry, trestling, and piling for sixty miles on the Buffalo, New York & Philadelphia railroad from Machias to Emporium. In 1878 they built the Springville & Sardinia narrow gauge railroad. Mr. Napier, his brothers, and Charles and Robert Brodie were at the same time engaged in bridging the Wabash and other streams on the New Albany & Salem and Toledo, Wabash & Western railroads.

Mr. Napier possesses indomitable energy and untiring industry. For more than forty years he was actively engaged in superintending the construction of public works and other structures, many of which, among them the Harlem high bridge and the State capitol at Springfield, Ill., will remain as permanent monuments of his mechanical skill. A Republican in politics he has never had time to accept political preferment. His ambition has been in the line of stone work and the perfection of his knowledge of constructive art. April 13, 1845, he married Emeline T., daughter of Lyman Beebe; she was born at Waterford, Conn., Dec. 16, 1827. Mrs. Napier died March 28, 1885. Of their six children these survive: Margaret, born Feb. 1, 1846, married George L. Napier, April 13, 1875; Mary Isabella, born Sept. 19, 1848; and James Allen, born March 23, 1862.

Henry Newton, son of Ethan A. Newton, was born in Jefferson county, Dec. 26, 1819. He married, Aug. 14, 1842, Mary Hudson, who was born in Saratoga county, Sept. 14, 1822. They first settled in Fowler, St. Lawrence county, and came to Machias from Sardinia in 1851. Mr. Newton was a farmer until Nov., 1861, when they enlisted in Co. K, 105th N. Y. Vols. The father died of heart disease and the son of a gun-shot wound before he completed his eighteenth year. The mother with her own hands purchased and made a home for herself, four sons, and four daughters, all of whom are living.

Stephen Orne, a native of Kennebunk, Maine, was born April 27, 1787, married Mary Colby, Jan. 9, 1817, who was born in Boscowen, N. H., Oct. 31, 1791, and settled in a log cabin in Machias in 1821. He later removed to Homer and in 1838 they settled in Farmersville, where Mr. Orne died Jan. 3, 1840. He was a soldier in the War of 1812. Mrs. Orne died Oct. 6, 1860, at the home of their son, Philander M. Orne, the only survivor of their four sons. He has been engaged in cabinet work, farming, carpentering, and is now conducting a wagon shop. He was born June 18, 1828.

Asa B. Parker, son of Silas and Abigail (Foster) Parker, was born in Arcade, June 9, 1813, in the log house in which the family settled in 1810. His parents were natives of Cavendish, Vt., where they were married, and where their first two children were born. He was one of the most prominent men of his town: its first merchant, a justice of the peace about thirty years, supervisor, presided at numerous law suits, and officiated at many weddings. He also did quite a law business in justice's courts and in drawing legal papers. He reared ten sons and four daughters, all of whom survived him. Asa B. Parker, at the age of twenty, began business for himself. He purchased on credit seventy acres of heavy timbered land one mile east of Arcade. He built a log cabin and Oct. 6, 1833, married Caroline E. West, who was born in Groton, N. Y., May 22, 1815. In the spring of 1853, after clearing two farms in Arcade, he settled in the west part of Machias on lot 63, where he now owns a farm of 225 acres, of which he has cleared about 100. They have had seven daughters and three sons. Mr. Parker early became prominent in the militia and at the age of twenty was promoted from lieutenant to captain. He served as commissioner of highways and since he came to Machias he has been coroner nine years. Like his father he has practiced law in the lower courts and has been extensively employed in collecting debts. He has also dealt in horses, cattle, and wool.

Francis Smith, a native of Sligo, Ireland, was born in 1819. He read and wrote both the Irish and English languages, and learned both wagon making and dentistry. He came to America in 1847 or 1848, spent two or three years in Canada, and about 1850 settled in Machias, where he died May 4, 1882. Soon after he came to Machias he opened a shop in which he manufactured wagons, carriages, and sleighs, and for many years extracted teeth for the public. In 1858 he married Mary Killian, of Syracuse, who still resides on the homestead. Children: Mrs. Anna M. Geveney, a teacher who has already taught twenty-four terms; Dora S., widow of Francis Brissees and also a prominent teacher; and Matthew F.

George A. Stoneman, son of Archibald and Angeline (Knight) Stoneman, was born in Michigan City, Ind., April 13, 1844. His father died when George was two years old, and his mother then removed to the neighborhood of her relatives in Farmersville. About 1850 she settled with her son on the lot in Machias where they still reside. Mr. Stoneman in Dec., 1861, enlisted in Co. D, 105th N. Y. Vols., and went to the front in April, 1862. He participated in the battles of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, and Cold Harbor. He was a prisoner twenty-four hours, was then paroled, and several months later was exchanged. He was discharged as orderly-sergeant March 5, 1865. He was influential in organizing Phillips Post, No. 329, G. A. R., and has served as its commander five years. Since the war he has been a mail contractor and a produce dealer. He is a staunch Republican and has represented his town on the Board of Supervisors nine years.

Daniel S. Tilden, son of Samuel and Hannah (McKinstry) Tilden, was born in Junius, N. Y., Feb. 12, 1826, and is of New England origin. His paternal grandfather was Joseph Tilden and his maternal grandfather was Paul McKinstry. The latter served in the Revolutionary war and died in 1845, being buried in Yorkshire near McKinstry hollow, so named in his honor. At the age of eighteen Daniel S. Tilden began his mercantile life by traveling on foot from house to house and selling goods. A year later he obtained a horse and cart and established a route over which he traveled six years. In 1851 he settled in Machias as a merchant.

Daniel Vaughan came from Genesee county to Machias in 1821 or 1822 and settled in the north part of the town, where he took up a lot of wild land, built a log house, cleared a piece of land, and set out an orchard. He had eleven children, of whom two are living: William in Farmersville and Sarah A. (Mrs. Porter Stebbins) in Michigan.

Joseph B. Wright, son of Gad Wright, was born in Oneida county and raised in Gainesville, Wyoming county, where he married Nancy Lewis. In 1828 he settled on lot 53 in Machias, his abode being a shanty roofed with troughs. Mr. Wright remained on his farm to the close of his life. Children: Danford, Myron, Cleantha, Dennis, Mandana, Lafayette, and Pauline.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF MANSFIELD.

MANSFIELD was erected from the town of Little Valley on the 23d of February, 1830, and was originally named Cecilius. By an act of the Legislature passed April 21, 1831, the name was changed on June 1st of that year to Mansfield, which is derived from an English earl of the eighteenth century. The town is described in the Holland survey as township four, range seven, and contains an area of 24,821 acres. It is an interior town lying a little northwest of the center of the county; its surface is broken and irregular, its highest hills being in the southeast corner, where the altitude is over 2,000 feet above sea level. The valleys consist of a gravelly loam and are well adapted to farming and grazing. The soil on the uplands is a hard clayey loam and also produces good crops. The chief industry is agriculture with dairying as the principal branch. In this cheese making takes the lead. The town is drained by the south branch of Cattaraugus creek and its small tributaries. This stream flows northwesterly into Otto, where it unites with the north branch and empties into Cattaraugus creek east of Gowanda. In the south part of Mansfield are also the headwaters of Little Valley creek.

According to the observations and assertions of some of the earliest pioneers this locality was visited at a very early period by civilized people. Evidences were discovered of trees having been tapped or marked many decades before the first settlers came in. In one instance as many as 125 circles of wood covered the marks of some edged tool. The theory has obtained that at some remote date a party of Frenchmen penetrated the wilderness from Canada, halted here and journeyed westward to the Ohio river.

In 1818 Benjamin Chamberlain, Lothrop Vinton, Nathaniel Fish, Zira Fenton, Edmund Kemp, Timothy Morgan, and Amos Morgan took contracts for land on lots 10, 33, 40, and 57, but of this number only Amos and Timothy Morgan and Nathaniel Fish became actual settlers, and of these three the priority is accorded to Amos Morgan, who located on lot 33 in 1818 and lived there until 1825, when he removed to the north part of the town. He subsequently emigrated to Ohio. Zira Fenton and his brother located on lot 40 in 1819, but soon abandoned their small improvement. Nathaniel Fish, from Sandwich, Mass., settled on lot 10 on March 1, 1819, on the hill which has since borne his name, and here he opened the first tavern in Mansfield, which became a noted rendezvous, especially for members of the militia in the early days of general trainings, a few of which occurred in the locality. Mr. Fish was a prominent man in the settlement and was the first collector elected in the town, being chosen by the people of Cecilius. His son, Prince William Fish, was one of the first justices and the first man married in town.

Josiah R. Hollister and his sons Josiah R., Jr., and Samuel L. settled on lot 14 in 1821. Josiah R., Sr., was a veteran of the Revolution and a settler of Franklinville in 1811 and of Great Valley in 1816. He died soon after his settlement here. Josiah R., Jr., served in the War of 1812. Aaron Razy also settled in town in 1821. Jacob B. Van Aernam and his son Abram were the first settlers in the northwest part of Mansfield. They located there in 1822 and were followed in the fall by John Chapman and Samuel Harvey.

Among the settlers of 1823 were Sidney and Jarvis Walton, Abner and Silas Wood, Daniel Wallace, Sylvanus Stebbins, and Stephen Sprague and his son. In 1824 came Reuben Newton. From then until 1831 among the settlers were Silas McKay (a soldier of 1812) and his sons Liverius, Cyrus G., Sylvester, John G., George C., Hiram V. R., and Daniel B.; Darius Warner (supervisor in 1849); George Delap and his sons N. G. and Sidney (who brought in the first wagon and span of horses); Amasa Smith and his sons Stacy, David, and Daniel; and Sewell and Lucius Gunn, Erastus Brown, Asa R. Keene, Nathaniel Walker, Roswell Ball and his son William, William and Isaac Case, Gideon H. Willson (first supervisor), Oliver Tripp, Hosea Brown, Timothy Gowen, Nathaniel Manley, John F. and Nelson Manley, Joshua Parmelee and his son Erastus, James Huggins (who built the first grist-mill, and about the same time a fulling and cloth-dressing-mill), Joseph Griffin, Jacob and Cyrus Galloway, Ezra Canfield, Andrew Gray, Truman Hinman and son Peter C., Enos Eddy, David and Asher Skinner, Asel Satterlee, Linus Lattin, Alexander Stone, Nathaniel M. Healey, James Puddy, William Travis, Peter Brewer, Thomas G. Bailey, and Andrew Harmon.

After about 1823 the settlement increased quite rapidly. In 1830 the population was 378; in 1850, 1,057; in 1870, 1,135; in 1890, 1,022.

The first white child born in Mansfield was Mahala, daughter of Nathaniel and Nancy Fish, on December 9, 1820, the first male child being Edwin, son of Samuel L. Hollister, on February 5, 1822. Prince William Fish and Lois Grover, the latter of Conewango, were the principals to the first marriage, which occurred January 1, 1824, the ceremony being performed by Aaron Razy. The first log house and the first frame barn were built by Amos Morgan, and the first frame house was erected by James L. Smith about 1835. In 1868 Sidney N. Delap constructed the first brick house in town. The first ashery was placed in operation at Union Corners about 1850 by Truman Hollister and William H. Robinson, and the first postmaster was James Huggins who kept the office at his mill about 1834. The first school was taught by Lefa Chase in 1821 and the first school house was erected on the line between Mansfield and New Albion in 1825, the first teacher therein being Polly Parmelee. The first grist-mill was built in 1830 on lot 48 by James Huggins, and the first saw-mill in 1831 on lot 23, on the south branch of Cattaraugus creek, by Munson H. and George Clark. The first store was kept at Eddyville in 1848 by Thomas H. McKay. The first religious services were conducted by Stephen Sprague at his own house, and the first church was organized by the Baptists in 1828.

The first town meeting in Mansfield (then Cecilius) convened at the house of Reuben Newton on Tuesday, March 2, 1830, and the following officers were elected: Gideon H. Willson, supervisor; John F. Manley, town clerk; Nathaniel M. Healey and James Puddy, overseers of the poor; Nathaniel Fish, collector; Samuel Harvey, Sylvanus Stebbins, and Enos Eddy, assessors; William Case, Nathaniel Manley, and Amos Morgan, highway commissioners; Joshua Parmelee, John Chapman, and Truman Hinman, commissioners of common schools; Gideon H. Willson, James Huggins, and Sylvanus Stebbins, inspectors of common schools; Prince William Fish, Silas McKay, justices of the peace; Nathaniel Fish, William Travis, and Hiram Stannard, constables; Nathaniel Fish (No. 1), Peter Brewer (No. 2), James Puddy (No. 3), Asher Skinner (No. 4), Joseph Griffin (No. 5), Silas McKay (No. 6), Isaac Case (No. 7), George Delap (No. 8), Samuel Harvey (No. 9), Darius Warner (No. 10), and Peter C. Hinman (No. 11), overseers of highways. The next town meeting was held at the dwelling of John F. Manley on the first Tuesday of March, 1831, being the first one after the town was known as Mansfield. The principal town officers have been as follows:

Supervisors.—Gideon H. Willson, 1830-32; Ezra Canfield, 1833; Samuel Harvey, 1834-39, 1843-44; James M. Smith, 1840-42, 1857-59, 1864-65; Anson B. Head, 1845; Elisha C. Eddy, 1846-48, 1851-54; Darius Warner, 1849, 1856; Peter M. Stonebreaker, 1850, 1855; George Gray, 1860-61, 1867-73; Daniel I. Huntley, 1862-63; Horace S. Huntley, 1866; Alvin Lattin, 1874; Addison Sprague, 1875-77; Chauncey Smith, 1878; Francis Larabee, 1879-82; G. H. Bowen, 1883-84; Harlan W. Smith, 1885-88; William H. Courter, 1889-90; Charles H. Davis, 1891-92; Hiram A. Johnson, 1893.

Willson, 1847-48, 1857-59; Jedediah A. Windsor, 1849-50; Peter Smith, 1851; George C. McKay, 1852-53; Henry W. Eddy, 1854-55, 1860-61; James L. Smith, 1856; Myron L. Newton, 1862-63; Morris W. Butterfield, 1864; M. K. Butterfield, 1865; Edwin M. Bunn, 1866-69, 1883-84; William R. Burroughs, 1870; Alvin Lattin, 1871-72; G. W. G. Bowen, 1873; Harlan W. Smith, 1874-75; Charles G. Locke, 1876-77; G. H. Bowen, 1878-82; F. E. Woodruff, 1885; M. L. Eddy, 1886-87, 1889-90; George L. Tinkcom, 1888; F. L. Morton, 1891-93.

Justices of the Peace.—1830, Prince William Fish, Silas McKay; 1831, James Huggins; 1832, Oliver Tripp; 1833, Andrew Harmon, Thomas G. Bailey, Aaron W. Stebbins; 1834, Linus Lattin, William Travis, Amasa Smith; 1835, Lockwood D. Beardsley; 1836, Andrew Harmon; 1837, Linus Lattin, Silas McKay; 1838, B. B. Colton, Silas McKay; 1839, Luzon M. Botsford; 1840, L. D. Beardsley, Joshua Parmelee; 1841, S. S. Willson; 1842, Andrew Gray, Silas McKay; 1843, Cyrus G. McKay, Nathaniel Fish; 1844, James L. Smith, William H. Eddy, James Colwell; 1845, Cyrus G. McKay; 1846, L. M. Botsford; 1847, Charles H. Barber; 1848, Peter Bunn; 1849, Cyrus G. McKay; 1850, L. M. Botsford; 1851, Seneca R. Willson; 1852, J. A. Windsor, C. L. Butterfield, Stephen B. Stone; 1853, Cyrus G. McKay; 1854, James M. Willson; 1855, Chauncey L. Butterfield, George W. Brown; 1856, William H. Eddy; 1857, Stephen B. Stone, James L. Smith; 1858, George W. Brown; 1859, Chauncey L. Butterfield; 1860, William H. Robinson; 1861, Stephen B. Stone, William H. Eddy; 1862, George W. Brown; 1863, William H. Robinson; 1864, Horace S. Huntley; 1865, Stephen B. Stone, William H. Eddy; 1866, Linus Lattin; 1867, Enos Schofield, Addison M. Smith, James L. Smith; 1868, Francis Larabee; 1869, George C. McKay; 1870, James L. Smith, Zenas Butterfield; 1871, J. A. Windsor; 1872, Francis Larabee; 1873, Robert B. Kidney; 1874, James L. Smith; 1875, J. A. Windsor; 1876, Francis Larabee; 1877, R. B. Kidney; 1878, Edwin M. Bunn; 1879, J. A. Windsor; 1880, Francis Larabee; 1881, G. W. Bowen; 1882, G. W. G. Bowen; 1883, L. Rogers; 1884, D. D. King; 1885, J. A. Windsor; 1886, M. J. Conklin; 1887, G. W. G. Bowen; 1888, J. E. Langhans; 1889, D. D. King; 1890, R. Burroughs, J. P. Barso; 1891, M. J. Conklin; 1892, C. W. Clark; 1893, W. B. Smith.

Many of the town's dead have been interred at Little Valley, Ellicottville, Otto, or in New Albion, but many also have received burials nearer home. There is a cemetery at Union Corners, another on lot 71, and one on lot 33.

The first school teacher in Mansfield was Lefa Chase in 1821 and the first school house was erected of logs in 1825 on the line between this town and New Albion, the first teacher in it being Polly, daughter of Joshua Parmelee. In time the log structures were superseded by neat frame school buildings, and the school districts have been altered and increased in number as the settlement of the town demanded. In point of efficiency the present schools of Mansfield compare favorably with those of other towns in the county. In 1880 there were ten districts with a school house in each.

Rickertson Burlingame, of Ellicottville, surveyed and laid out the first highway in town December 3, 1823, and described it thus: "Beginning at the town line on the east bounds of lot 4, and extending in a generally northwesterly course six miles to the north bounds of the town two chains west of the northwest corner of lot 48." The New York, Lake Erie & Western railroad was completed through the extreme southwest corner of Mansfield in 1851, but has no station in this town.

Eddyville (postoffice) is located in the north part of the town, on lot 39, and contains two church edifices, a school house, a cheese factory, one store, and about twenty dwellings. The original owner of the site was Jacob Gallows, who erected the first log house; the first frame houses were built by William H. and Levi Eddy, from whom the village received its name. The first store, here, and the first in town, was opened in 1848 by Thos. H. McKay.

Maples (known also as Union Corners) is a hamlet situated in the northeast part of Mansfield, principally on lot 23, and contains a store and postoffice, two saw-mills, a school house, and about ten dwellings. Maples postoffice was established in 1892 with Richard P. Hinman as postmaster. The first settlers in this locality were Josiah R. and Samuel L. Hollister. In 1835 James L. Smith erected here the first frame building in Mansfield.

The cheese factory at "North Valley" was built in 1875 by Darius Bensley and is now run by William Eddy. It receives the milk from 300 cows. Frank Houghton erected a cheese factory at "Five Points" in 1888 which is now operated by Sackett & Coe. A. S. Bartlett has a full-cream cheese factory in the "Hencoop" neighborhood which was built by him in 1893.

The first religious services held in Mansfield were of the Baptist order and occurred at the house of Stephen Sprague, who conducted this and many of the subsequent meetings. Reuben Newton's was also a favorite place of meeting. In 1828 the Baptists organized a church that was finally disbanded.

The Methodist Episcopal church of Mansfield, at Maples, was organized with ten members in 1833 by Rev. Mr. Bronson, a circuit preacher, who became the first pastor. The first meeting convened at the dwelling of Daniel Smith. Their house of worship was built in 1852, cost $700, and will seat about 250 persons. At one time the society had about thirty-five members, but its present number is comparatively small. Services are held occasionally by Rev. Mr. White, of Ellicottville.

The Eddyville Universalist church was organized in 1850 by Rev. Gideon S. Gowdy as the Mansfield and Otto Universalist Society. It originally had forty-two members. Their house of worship was erected of wood in 1852, cost about $1,000, and will seat 400 people. In 1873 the society was re-organized by Rev. O. B. Clark. At present it is without a pastor.

Enos Barrett was born in England, came to America, and died in Paw Paw, Mich. Children: Granville, Charles, Angeline, Elmina, Sarah, and Abigail. Granville Barrett was born in Paw Paw, Mich., July 12, 1842, and came to East Otto in 1876, where he now resides. He married Salina Reed, of Aurora, Ill., daughter of Sumner Reed, and his children are Flora, born Nov. 27, 1867; Adelbert S., born May 15, 1868; and George, born March 4, 1870. Adelbert S. Barrett married, March 8, 1892, Minnie Davis, daughter of Charles H. and Eunice Davis, who was born Jan. 6, 1870. They have a daughter, Blanche Genevieve, born Jan. 1, 1893. He owns what is known as the Hencoop cheese factory in the east part of the town.

Dexter Bartlett, a native of Vermont, came to Otto among the early settlers and died there aged eighty years. His wife was Rachel Staples; children: Sylvenus B., Nelson, Chloe, Drusilla, Sylvia, and Sarah. Sylvenus B. Bartlett, born in Vermont, June 29, 1809, came to Otto with his parents and removed thence to Mansfield, where he lived thirty-five years. He died in Connecticut, March 13, 1888. He married Clarissa Benedict, who died in this town; children: Wilson, Nelson, Dexter, Sylvenus, Rachel Ann, Lucy J., Phebe, and Charles D. He married, second, Polly Hubbell; children: Georgia and Sarah. Charles D. Bartlett was born in Otto, June 26, 1844, and in April, 1865, married Minnie E. Woolf, who was born Dec. 13, 1847, a daughter of Henry and Dora Woolf. Children: George L., born Oct. 12, 1867; Lottie A., born Nov. 16, 1869; and Sylvenus H., born May 26, 1875. Lottie A. married Elbert D., son of Staley Hinman; children: Helma, born Aug. 1, 1888, and Lena L., born March 24, 1891. At a recent family reunion at Collins, Erie county, there were 500 Bartlett families present.

Moses Bowen, born in Massachusetts, March 12, 1752, served two years in the Revolutionary war, and removed to Otsego county, where he was a farmer and cooper, and where he died in June, 1830. His wife was Martha Bell, who died there in 1824. Their son, Moses Bowen, born in Massachusetts, Feb. 9, 1796, came to Mansfield in 1830 and died here in 1882. His wife was Betsey Hopkins, who was born May 21, 1797, died in 1862. Children: George W. G., born May 27, 1823; Emily M., born March 20, 1825; Sarah A., born May 20, 1827; Hopkins, born in Sept., 1829; Bird, born in 1832; Cyrus H., born in April, 1834; Frank M., born in 1842; and Moses, born in 1844. George W. G. married Lucinda Meacham, who died Dec. 8, 1863; children: George H., born Oct. 4, 1849; Sarah M., born Feb. 6, 1853; John M., born Oct. 25, 1858; and Betsey, born Oct. 3, 1862. He married, second, Mrs. Lydia L. Harvey, daughter of William H. and Sally Eddy; children: Fanny B., born Oct. 21, 1865; Emily A., born June 6, 1867; Hattie L., born July 2, 1869; Mabel G., born Aug. 10, 1871; William H., born Aug. 25, 1873; Ida V., born March 16, 1876; Eddy L., born June 29, 1879; and Bessie L., born July 1, 1883. Mr. Bowen is a farmer and carpenter in Eddyville and has been justice of the peace thirty years, postmaster ten years, and a resident here sixty years.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF NAPOLI.

NAPOLI originally bore the name of Cold Spring, and as such it was erected from Little Valley on the 23d of January, 1823. It then embraced towns one, two, and three of range eight. April 15, 1828, the name was changed to Napoli and on March 20, 1837, the town of Cold Spring, then embracing towns one and two, was set off, leaving Napoli with its present area of 23,063 acres, and being described in the Holland survey as township three, range eight. It is bounded on the north by New Albion, on the east by Little Valley and Salamanca, on the south by Cold Spring, and on the west by Conewango. An interior town lying west of the center of the county it has considerable fine farming land. The surface is elevated and broken into hills and valleys, many of the former being arable to their summits. The soil consists of clay and a fertile gravelly loam, and is well adapted to grazing. It was originally covered with heavy forests, principally of hardwood, but nearly all of these have been cleared away to give place to verdant pastures and cultivated fields.

The principal drainage is afforded by Cold Spring creek, which has its source in the northern part of Napoli and flows southerly through the town of Cold Spring into the Allegheny. This stream formerly afforded several mill sites, a number of which were utilized in early days for saw-mills. It has a few tributaries, consisting mainly of small brooks; there are also a number of brooks in the town which flow into Little Valley, Saw-Mill, and Elm creeks.

The first settler in Napoli was Maj. Timothy Butler, who was also the first settler in Machias. He was a native of Maine and for a time lived in Onondaga county, N. Y., whence he came to Machias as early as 1813, settling in the Ischua valley. He had considerable means and was a leading pioneer. He removed to Napoli in 1818 and settled on lot 27, a little east of Napoli village, a place which became a conspicuous pioneer landmark. He finally moved to Virginia and thence to Indiana, where he died. The second white settler was George Hill, who located on lot 29 in 1818. His was the first orchard in Napoli. In 1819 came Sargeant Morrill, a Vermonter, who died here in 1835; his wife died July 4, 1828. He settled on the Jamestown road, and was the first deacon of the Congregational church. His son John carried the first grist from this town to the Quaker mill at Cold Spring, cutting the road as he went. Other settlers of 1819 were Timothy Boardman on lot 43; William Foy, whose son John A. was the first white child born in town; Harvey Parmelee, on lot 51, for many years a class-leader in the M. E. church; Joshua Boardman on lot 42; Lyman Parmelee, brother of Harvey, on lot 52; John Warner on lot 19; Harlow Butler on lot 51; Peter Beardsley on lot 38.

Among the settlers of 1820 were Loren Noble, Artemus Houghton (one of the first deacons of the Congregational church), Dr. Phineas F. Noble (the first physician and the first militia officer), Levi Stevens, Horace and Erastus Hall, Walter Thorp (a good speaker and writer and many years justice and supervisor), and Daniel S. and Levi P. Thorp. In 1821 came, among others, Hubbard Latham, Leverett Richmond, Joseph Miller (who built the first frame building), and John Moran. From then until about 1830 the settlers were John L. Latham, Benjamin Hillman (who erected and opened the first temperance tavern in the vicinity), Nathaniel Burbanks, Henry Earle, Nathan Bennett, John and Ariel Wellman, Sands Bouton (subsequently county clerk), Andrew Green, Henry R. Finch, Stephen Curtis, Joseph Woodworth (a Revolutionary soldier), Elijah Boardman, Moses Cook (the first merchant and the first blacksmith), Ira Dunning (a Presbyterian minister), Oliver Paddock, Wheeler Beardsley, Marshall Whitcomb, Jeduthan Seely and five sons (all great hunters), Gordon Chesborough, Caleb Adye (a Revolutionary soldier), Albert Merchant, Amos Merchant, Eastman Prescott (the first tavern keeper and the first mail carrier from Randolph to Ellicottville), Ezekiel Fitch, Samuel Healy, Hiram Freeman, Timothy Everett, Tunis Van Tassal (an inn keeper), Jacob Lyon, William Palmer, Stephen and Reuben Wait, Asa Maynard, Seneca Morton, Amasa P. Darling (a mason), Ambrose Waterman, William J. Wilcox (a Congregational minister), William M. Champlin, Joseph Morton, Amasa Bushnell, Daniel Nicholas, Ezra Glover, Silas Miller, John Champlin, Stephen Gladden, Harvey Janes, Roswell Roberts, Jonas Glazier (a Calvinist Baptist minister), John and Robert Balston, Amasa Booth, Richard Boardman, Loren Burroughs, David Brown, Austin Davis, and Calvin Doolittle. The population in 1830 was 852; in 1850, 1,233; in 1890, 962.

The first birth in Napoli was that of John A., son of William Foy, in June, 1820, and the first death was that of a son of Maj. Timothy Butler the same year, the remains being the first interred in the cemetery at Napoli Corners. Joshua Boardman, the second person to die in town, died in 1821. Dr. Phineas F. Noble and Statira Canfield were the first persons married, but they repaired to Chautauqua county to have the ceremony performed. John Morrill and Sophronia Seward (a cousin of Hon. William H. Seward) were the principals in the town's first wedding, the ceremony being solemnized by Rev. Ira Dunning in 1824. The first school was taught by Miss Fannie Boardman in the summer of 1819 in the house of John Warner, and the first school house was erected a year or two later on lot 42, the first teacher in it being Phineas Noble. Joseph Miller erected on lot 22 in 1822 the first frame building (a barn) and Harvey Parmelee built on lot 51 in 1826 the first frame house in town. Eastman Prescott, in 1831, became the first tavern keeper; Prescott also carried the first mail between Randolph and Ellicottville. The first store was opened in 1826 by Moses Cook. The first apple orchard was set out in 1830 on lot 29 by George Hill, but the first apples are said to have been raised on the premises of Horace Hall on lot 59 in 1823, and from these he made a bottle of cider.

The first town meeting convened at the house of Henry Noble on the 11th of February, 1823, when these officers were chosen: Henry Noble, supervisor; Daniel S. Thorp, town clerk; Andrew D. Smith, Harvey Parmelee, and James Bushnell, assessors; Elijah Boardman and Artemus Houghton, overseers of the poor; Walter Thorp, William Foy, and Joseph Elkinton, highway commissioners; Andrew D. Smith, Harlow Butler, and Daniel S. Thorp, commissioners of common schools; Henry Noble, Harlow Butler, and Andrew D. Smith, school inspectors; Dr. Phineas F. Noble, constable and collector. At this meeting $10 was voted as a bounty for wolf scalps and "spirituous liquors are not to be sold on election days," and in 1826 every person was "subject to a fine of $50 who shall suffer Canada thistles, white or yellow daisies, or Tory weeds to grow on his lands or on the public highways adjoining the same, after three days' notice of their presence." In 1825 wolf bounties were reduced to $5. The supervisors of the town have been as follows:

Supervisors.—Henry Noble, 1823; Walter Thorp, 1824-26, 1828-32, 1834-35; Timothy Everett, 1827; Parley Marsh, 1833, 1836; Benjamin H. Hillman, 1837; Orris Marsh, 1838-39, 1843-44, 1846-49, 1851-54, 1856-63, 1865, 1871, 1878; John Milks, 1840; Ashbel Bushnell, 1841-42, 1864; Lewis P. Thorp, 1845; Amasa Bushnell, 1850; Joseph Peaslee, 1855, 1866, 1876-77; George A. Gladden, 1867, 1870, 1879; Samuel Allen, 1868-69; A. T. Palmer, 1872-73; Eben Sibley, 1874-75, 1880; M. S. Randall, 1881-84; Cyrus R. Rhoades, 1885-86; Spencer E. Hubbell, 1887-88; Lafayette Glover, 1889-90; O. S. Booth, 1891-93.

Unlike many neighboring towns Napoli had no extensive lumber interests to furnish lucrative employment to its sturdy pioneers. The forests consisted mainly of hardwoods, yet they furnished more than enough pine and hemlock to supply the local demand. As soon, therefore, as the valleys were cleared the attention of the inhabitants was principally engrossed in agriculture, and mills were established and operated largely to supply their necessities. The first saw-mill in town was erected by James Wait on Cold Spring creek about 1827. On this stream another was built by James Brown in 1830 and still another by Lyman Giles about 1840. Following this a number of other saw-mills have been started in convenient localities from time to time. Nathan Bennett erected a tannery on lot 59 in 1821 which he subsequently removed to Napoli Corners, where it was finally purchased by Thomas Carter and eventually discontinued.

Dairying is carried on extensively; it has become the chief source of revenue to the average farmer. Since about 1870 cheese manufacturing has been the most important branch of this industry and cheese factories of large capacity have been erected in convenient localities. Eben Sibley started one in 1870 and Anson Goodspeed another in 1875. Charles Darling erected the Spring Valley factory in 1878. It is now owned by William T. Peaslee & Son. Maple sugar is also manufactured in considerable quantities.

The first highway in Napoli was surveyed by James McGlashan, April 22, 1823, and began "at a stake on the line between lots 34 and 35, in township three, range eight, and in the center of the north and south road, near Timothy Butler's; thence ran east eighteen chains; thence north to the Jamestown road." Ten other roads were surveyed and laid out the same year. Along or near the banks of Cold Spring creek, beginning at the Allegheny river, ran an old Indian trail, which, before the settlers arrived, was merely a footpath. It passed into New Albion and thence to Niagara Falls and Canada, and over it Governor Blacksnake once made on foot a flying visit to Buffalo.

A school was taught in 1819 by Fannie Boardman and a year or two later a log school house was erected on lot 42, the first teacher in it being Phineas Noble. In 1823 school districts were formed and in 1824 these were subdivided. In 1838 there were six whole and four fractional districts and the number of scholars was 420, the amount paid towards the maintenance of these schools being $385.45. In 1892 the town had seven school districts, in which the same number of teachers were employed, the aggregate attendance being 199 scholars. The valuation of the school property amounted to $3,305 and the assessed valuation of the districts for school purposes $363,476. The amount of money received from the State was $863.38 and from local taxation $1,168.59.

The first cemetery in town is that located at Napoli Corners, the land for which was donated in 1820 by Maj. Timothy Butler, whose son was the first person buried therein. About 1859 an association was formed which has charge of the grounds. The Union Cemetery Association was organized July 15, 1844. Their burial plat is situated on lot 60 near Elm creek. A plat of ground on lot 38 was set apart for burial purposes and donated by William Champlin about 1845. The Maple Grove Cemetery was opened in 1836 with Silas Miller and Nathaniel Burbanks as trustees. It is situated on lot 13.

Napoli, locally known as Napoli Corners, is the only village in town. It is situated on lot 35, a little south of the center of the township, and contains a postoffice, three churches, a school house, hotel, public hall, the usual complement of stores, shops, etc., and about twenty dwellings. The postoffice was established in 1827 with Timothy Everett as postmaster. Among his successors have been Ashbel Bushnell, Orris Marsh, Silas Miller, George Shannon, Silas Earle, and A. T. Palmer. The first physician to locate in the town was Dr. Phineas F. Noble, who settled here in 1820. Two other prominent medical practitioners who lived at this place were Drs. Elijah Harmon and Samuel S. Wilcox.

Owensburg was a postoffice established in the north part of the town about 1825 with Abel B. Hobart as postmaster, and the mail was carried by John A. Kinnicutt. It was removed to the Seely neighborhood in 1827 and took the name of Seelysburg with John Latham as postmaster, whose successors were Amasa Bushnell, Cyrus Thatcher, Erastus L. Barrett, Lewis Thorp, and Samuel Fairlee. Mr. Fairlee took the office to Elm creek in Conewango and it was finally discontinued.

East Randolph, lying partly in the southwest corner of Napoli, will be noticed at length in the chapter devoted to Randolph.

Religious services were held in Napoli by Rev. John Spencer, the Congregational missionary from Connecticut, as early as 1821, in which year he organized here the First Congregational church of Cold Spring with these members: Maj. Timothy Butler and wife, Dr. Phineas F. Noble and wife, William Foy and wife, Nathan Bennett and wife, Harlow Butler, Peter Beardsley, and Betsey Moran. The meeting organizing this society convened at the dwelling of Timothy Boardman, and Artemus Houghton and Sargeant Morrill were chosen the first deacons. April 21, 1823, the "First Congregational Society in the town of Cold Spring" was organized for the purpose of building a house of worship and in 1824 a log structure was erected on lot 42. In 1825 the society was dissolved and November 9, 1826, it was re-organized. At this time it had twenty-one members; in 1834 they numbered 107. October 5, 1869, the name of the society was changed from Cold Spring to Napoli, and as such it was legally incorporated. Their present church was built in 1870, cost about $4,000, will seat 300 people, and with the grounds, etc., is valued at about $5,000. The present pastor is Rev. Mr. Humphrey.

The First Baptist church of Napoli was organized with thirteen members in 1826. It is of Calvinistic belief. The first deacon was George Wait and the first clerk was Philip Lyon. The first pastor was Rev. Jonathan Blake and the first accession was Mrs. Gordon Chesborough. Two other early pastors were Rev. W. Winsor and B. Brayman, and during the pastorate of the latter a house of worship was erected at a cost of about $2,000, which is the present value of the church property. It will seat 300 people. The Napoli Baptist Society was organized January 21, 1840, and re-organized March 18, 1870. It now has forty members, who are without a pastor.

A Freewill Baptist society was organized June 14, 1831, by Rev. Hiram Whitчер, which, on June 10, 1848, became the First Freewill Baptist church of East Randolph, in which village a house of worship was erected and opened in 1849. An extended sketch of this church appears in Randolph town history.

On page 765 of this volume Charles Z. Lincoln, Esq., contributes a concise sketch of early Methodism in southwestern Cattaraugus, which practically includes the history of the earliest classes in this town, then a part of Little Valley. Rev. Samuel Gregg is authority for the statement that a small class was formed in Napoli as early as 1820. This method of organization was continued until January 17, 1834, when the First Methodist Episcopal church of Napoli was formed. From the best information at command it is evident that this society was re-organized September 2, 1868, by Rev. J. S. Stocker with about forty members. A house of worship was erected the same year, at a cost of some $3,000, and dedicated by Rev. W. F. Day on January 14, 1869. It will seat 300 people and with other property is valued at about $2,000. The present pastor is Rev. J. Hamilton.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a regularly organized society, but at present are without a settled pastor. Their property is valued at about $500.

Henry Allen was born in Rhode Island and came to Napoli at the age of sixty years, remaining until his death aged ninety. Children: Henry, Whitman, Daniel, Amy, Louisa, and Samuel. Samuel Allen, born in Rhode Island in 1809, married Susan Cottrell, who died here aged eighty-six. They had one son, Samuel C. He married, second, Deborah Bryant, who died Feb. 4, 1880, leaving a son, Ora. His third wife was Ida Chapman, by whom he has children Norman M. and Henry. He resides on the homestead. Samuel Allen served as supervisor of Napoli in 1868 and 1869. In his early manhood he was a sea captain and after coming to Napoli he was a cattle drover and lumberman. He built the first foundry in East Randolph and ran it several years. He finally removed to Salamanca, where he built a fine residence and died.

Rev. Thomas Arnold, born Nov. 21, 1802, came to Napoli in 1832. He married, in 1821, Rebecca Ladow (born Nov. 28, 1803), and had born to him eleven children: Betsey, Polly Ann, Jerome, Fidelia, Andrew, Susan, Lapantha, Rachel (Mrs. Charles Morse), of Cold Spring, Mary, Lorinda, and Lizzie. Mr. Arnold was a carpenter, farmer, and preacher. For over fifty years he was a minister of the gospel. He died in Randolph, Aug. 2, 1883, and his wife July 10, 1882. They left over seventy grandchildren.

Elijah Boardman was among the first settlers in Napoli, coming thence from Otisco, N. Y., where he was born. He was a deacon of the Presbyterian church at Napoli Corners, which society he was largely instrumental in organizing. Children: Alanson, Mariah, Dolly, Timothy, and Nelson. Nelson Boardman, a native of Otisco, was born in 1810, came to this town with his parents, and died in Salamanca in 1884. His wife was Filena Janes, who survives him; children: Alonzo, Virena, Sophronia, Alphonzo J., and Eleanor. Alphonzo J. enlisted Aug. 17, 1861, in Co. B, 64th N. Y. Vols., and was discharged in Sept., 1862. His mother's father, Jotham Pratt, served in the Revolutionary war. Mr. Boardman was born in Napoli, Aug. 16, 1838, and Dec. 25, 1863, married Martha Boardman, who died Aug. 14, 1888, leaving one son, Frank. His second wife is Nellie Gray. He is a farmer.

Amasa Bushnell, son of Daniel Bushnell, who served on Washington's staff in the Revolutionary war, was born in Granby, Conn., in 1765. Coming to Napoli in 1826 he wielded a strong, healthy influence for good among the pioneer settlers, and was both a farmer and a carpenter. He died in Aug., 1841. His wife, Prudence Holcomb, died May 1, 1858; children: Betsey, Nancy, James, Josiah, Amasa, Prudence, Ashbel, Chauncey, Nancy, 2d, and Elias. The last named married Sarah Newell, who was born in 1812; children: Harriet and Ella C. She died Nov. 4, 1861, and he married, second, Cynthia Bennett; children: Hattie and Nellie. Mr. Bushnell's brother Amasa was supervisor of Napoli in 1850, and of this town Elias himself is one of its oldest living residents. Another brother, Ashbel, was a popular citizen and an active politician, and represented the town on the Board of Supervisors in 1841, 1842, and 1864. The two opened a store on Bushnell flats at an early day, and alone he started a hotel at the Corners in 1831.

Joseph Champlin, a soldier in the Revolution and in the War of 1812, was killed in a railroad accident near Utica, N. Y. He was an active man and a farmer, and reared seven children. Samuel Champlin, his son, a native of Rhode Island, also served in the War of 1812, was a farmer, and for over sixty years was a prominent member of the Baptist church. Both he and his wife (Betsey Babcock) died in Rhode Island. They had eight children, of whom Erastus G., born Nov. 24, 1826, came to Napoli in 1860. May 20, 1849, he married Amy A. Kenyon, who was born April 30, 1829; children: George and Frank. The latter married Mary Morrill, who died March 11, 1892; his second wife is Grace Folts. George married Emma Bushnell, and has been town clerk.

James Congdon, 3d, a farmer, a merchant, a Quaker, and a Revolutionary soldier, was born and died in Rhode Island. His son Benjamin had four children, of whom William H. K. Congdon came to Napoli in 1841. He was born Sept. 12, 1818, and April 6, 1843, married Elizabeth M. Miller, who was born Jan. 1, 1826, a daughter of Joseph H. and Mariah (Boardman) Miller; children: Benjamin F., Joseph M., William H., Florence M., Charles E., and Silas S. Joseph Miller came to this town in 1820. James G. Congdon, another son of Benjamin, married Lucy M., daughter of Harmon Beers, and for twenty-six years has been a farmer on the Hillman farm.

Rufus Davenport settled in Conewango in 1829, where he died Jan. 10, 1884. He was a farmer and a shoemaker, a soldier of the War of 1812, and a son of William Davenport, a Vermonter. From his marriage with a daughter of Simeon Hall these children were born: Ebenezer, Calvin, Betsey, William C., Sylvia, George, Sally, Rufus, Nabbie, and Marshall, of whom William C., born Nov. 30, 1814, came to Cattaraugus county with his father, and on November 1, 1840, married Elnora Harvey, who was born Jan. 28, 1823. Children: Ann, George, Perry, Rollin W., Frank P., and Bertie. Mr. Davenport is a shoemaker and carpenter.

Samuel Foy was born in Vermont on Aug. 7, 1804. At the age of fifteen he came with his mother to Napoli, where he cleared a farm near East Randolph village. There were at this time (in 1819) but three other families in Napoli. In 1827 Mr. Foy married Harriet Morton, who died June 17, 1835, leaving four children: Juliette, Martha, Ara, and Harriet. His second wife was Nancy Huntington, who died April 28, 1882; the children by her were Mary, Clarinda, Laura, Dorus, Emily, and Ella. He died Sept. 20, 1890. Ara Foy was born June 7, 1833, and Oct. 16, 1856, married Clara Hall, who was born in Randolph, Dec. 20, 1829; children: Louis, Mary, Joel H., and Edith. Mr. Foy served in Co. E, 9th N. Y. Cav., and was discharged June 26, 1865.

John Frary was a native of New England and a soldier in the War of 1812. He came to Napoli in 1820, where he partially cleared three farms, and died in 1857; his wife, Rachel Crooks, died here in 1865. Their son, John Frary, preceded them to this town by one year and died Aug. 10, 1889. Several descendants of the family still reside in the county.

Henry W. Glover, son of Ezra and Annie (Cook) Glover, died Aug. 14, 1873. His wife was Emily Lyon, whom he married Sept. 22, 1835. She was a daughter of Abel and Nancy (Finney) Lyon, and was born in Milford, N. Y., March 4, 1822. Abel Lyon was a native of Woodstock, Conn., and came to Napoli in 1840, dying finally at Salamanca at the age of eighty-nine years. Besides Emily his children were Angeline, Walter, Moses, Elihu, Clarissa, Giles, Ezra, Electa, Calista, Deloss, and Frederick. The children of Henry W. and Emily Glover were Josephine (deceased), George W. L., James G., Emily V., Henry W. (deceased), Cora A., and Willie. James G. Glover married Eva, daughter of Wilber Rose. Mrs. Emily Glover resides on the homestead. Lafayette Glover served as supervisor of Napoli in 1889 and 1890.

David Gray was born in the eastern part of the State on April 26, 1807, came to Napoli soon after his marriage with Lorina Warner, and died May 10, 1845. He was an energetic man, a farmer, and a miller. Children: Betsey C., Mary E., Nathan W., Samuel W., George R., David O., Harriet A., and Eliza. George R. Gray was born Aug. 19, 1839. As a private he served in Co. E, 154th N. Y. Vols., and was discharged in 1865. He married Sarah R. Miner, July 3, 1866, who was born in Napoli, May 26, 1846, a daughter of Eliel T. and Sarah E. Miner; children: Emily R., Nellie E., Bertha L., Lida M.

Esek Harris, son of Oliver, who died in Collins, N. Y., about 1835, was born in Rutland county, Vt., March 4, 1800, and died in Collins in July, 1855. His wife, Susan Pratt, died in 1856. Children: Edwin, Lurania, Erastus, Lucinda, Cordelia, Betsey, Alice, Albert, and Warren S. Warren S. Harris, born Aug. 5, 1824, married Jane M. Clark; children: Charles C., Ursula E., Ralph M., Luella C., Edwin L., Myra A., Carrie E., and George E. He has resided for seventeen years on the farm first settled by Peter Beardsley. Edwin L. Harris married Jennie, daughter of H. P. Herrick, and has a daughter, Eva.

Thomas Hoxie was the son of a Quaker minister, Samuel by name, and was born and died in Rhode Island. A son, Stephen, born March 16, 1814, came to Napoli in 1839 and died here Feb. 6, 1881. The year preceding his arrival he married Mary Stanton; children: Charles R., Sarah S., Mary E., John S., and Thomas S. The latter was born Jan. 4, 1851, and in 1869 married Lydia E. Clark; children: Mary E., William S., and Rosa M. (deceased).

Benjamin Jones, a native of Wales, came to Monroe county at an early day, and moved thence to Canada, where he died. Of his children Matthew was born in Monroe county and in 1816 married Lucy Baker, who died in Canada; children: Lucy, Mary, Henry, Lena, Magdalene, Phebe, Albert, Lyman, Harriet, Matthew, Anson, and Orren N. Orren N. Jones was born July 19, 1820. Oct. 18, 1842, he married Percy C. Frasier, of Ontario county, and has been a farmer in Napoli twenty-seven years. Children: William W., Lucy A., Harvey J., Clarissa F., Mary L., and William M.

Abram Lowe served in the War of 1812 and came to Leon at an early day, dying there in 1850. He married Catharine Bigler, who also died in Leon. Children: Abram, Jr., Richard, Nicholas, Peter, and Polly. Peter Lowe, born in Ovid, N. Y., in 1813, married Harriet Franklin; children: Edward, Abram, Manford, Polly, Betsey, Minerva, Della, Ida, and James. James Lowe was born Aug. 21, 1832, and March 13, 1858, married Almira Fuller, who died May 7, 1860, leaving a son, Emerson, born May 6, 1860. He married, second, Prutia Palmer, who died March 12, 1877; children: Melvin R., Martin J., and Minnie A. His third wife is Mrs. Annie M. Lowrey, daughter of Ira Sibley.

Thomas Marsh was born June 27, 1754, in Douglass, Mass., where he died. He had nine children, of whom Jesse was a Revolutionary soldier, enlisting at the age of sixteen. Of the latter's eleven children Orris was born July 29, 1806, in Dover, Vt., and came to Napoli in 1832. He married Betsey E. Eames, of Carroll, N. Y.; children: Emily E., Fayette D., and H. Louise. Emily E. married S. A. Newell and has three children. Mr. Marsh is the only survivor of the Marsh family in Napoli, once so prominent in the town's history. For nineteen years he was a merchant at the Corners and for three terms served as postmaster; for twenty-three years he was supervisor of Napoli, serving from 1856 to 1863 consecutively, his first term being the year 1838 and his last one 1878. His brother, Parley Marsh, held the office for this town in 1833 and 1836 and for Cold Spring in 1847. Orris Marsh, during his active life, was one of the town's most influential citizens. In old age and retired life he enjoys the confidence and esteem of a wide circle of friends, and has the distinction of being third in extent of service in the list of supervisors of the county.

Benjamin Milks was a son of John and Annie (Wait) Milks, early pioneers and prominent citizens of Napoli. John Milks was supervisor of the town in 1840. He came here from Cambridge, N. Y., when the county was a wilderness, and, like others, reclaimed a portion to cultivated fields. The widow of Benjamin Milks survives and makes her home on the original Milks farm. She has several children settled who bear the family name with honor.

Prince Milks, son of Jonathan and a native of Washington county, was an early settler in Napoli. He married Elizabeth Philbrick, of Cardiff, N. Y.; children: Luther P., Elizabeth, Frances, and Ruth. Mr. Milks died in Dayton in 1880. Luther P. was born in Cardiff and came to this town in 1850, where he died Feb. 26, 1893. Nov. 22, 1859, he married Mary A. Williams, who was born in León on July 23, 1839; children: Abbie, Archie B., William A., and Olin R. Mrs. Milks survives and resides on the homestead.

Daniel Nicholas, son of Josiah and Nancy A. (Wilkinson) Nicholas and grandson of Daniel, was born in Massachusetts, Nov. 24, 1800, came with his parents to Henrietta, N. Y., where his father died Aug. 27, 1821, and removed thence to Napoli in 1825. Here he died April 26, 1883. By his wife, Lydia Bishop, whose death occurred Sept. 2, 1859, he had these children: Daniel F., Josiah N., Jerry B., Mary A., Laura L., Sarah A., Lafayette W., Solomon F., Horace Y., Caroline S., Sarinda, and H. Estella. Daniel F. Nicholas, born Dec. 5, 1819, came to this town with his father, and April 25, 1859, married Fanny W. Hatch; children: Lydia M. and Emilie A. Solomon Nicholas, a brother of the Daniel first named, was a colonel in the old State militia and a prominent man in the early settlement of Randolph. The family is descended from Francis Nicholas, his being one of the seventeen families composing the original colony at Stratford, Conn., in 1639.

Asa Palmer, after living many years in Genesee county, came to Napoli, where he died about 1830, and where the death of his wife also occurred. Children: Russell, William, Jason, Sally, Laura, Sophia, and Alma. William Palmer came to this town in 1820 and died here in 1843. His wife was Eunice Gray, who died in 1839. They reared three children. A. T. Palmer was supervisor of Napoli in 1872 and 1873.

John Peaslee, a native of Dutchess county, N. Y., was one of the pioneer settlers of Napoli who imparted to the young community a strength of character and energy that is still potent in the present generation. He was born Oct. 7, 1779. He left many descendants who imbibed his sterling qualities of heart and mind, and transmitted them to their posterity. He died, on the 10th on which he settled, March 17, 1863. His wife died Dec. 20, 1857. A son, Joseph Peaslee, was supervisor of Napoli in 1855, 1866, 1876, and 1877.

John Ropps was born in Plymouth, Mass., in 1799, of Scotch ancestry, and when a mere lad served in the War of 1812-15. In 1855 he came to Conewango, where he died aged fifty-nine, running a grist-mill on Elm creek three years previously. He married Lucretia Hall, who died in Massachusetts; children: John D., William, Mary A., Phebe, Lewis H., Eleanor, and Mariah. Lewis H. Ropps was born in Easton, Mass., June 30, 1837. Coming to Conewango with his father in 1855 he married, June 15, 1859, Mary S. Gardner, who was born in this town July 25, 1840; children: Annie J. and George W. The latter was born Nov. 6, 1863, and in 1885 married Luella J. Hitchcock, a native of Conewango. Their children are Ruth A., Lewis E., and Ellen B. Lewis H. Ropps is a farmer and a carpenter. He is a breeder of fine Holstein-Friesian cattle, having at the present time ten cows and one bull Macaulay, all registered. In this specialty Mr. Ropps takes much laudable pride.

Charles Sibley, son of John and Esther (Bellamy) Sibley, was born July 4, 1801, and married Sarah, daughter of Ebenezer Darling, who was born Feb. 15, 1798, and who died Feb. 21, 1885; children: Harriet, Sherman, Charlotte, Amanda, Horace C., Orrin, Eben, Amenzio, and Judson. Judson Sibley was born May 30, 1826, and Oct. 1, 1850, married Ann E. Miller, who died June 26, 1889; children: Ella A. and Herbert. He married, second, Helen Wilcox. Charles Sibley came to this town in 1842 from Otsego county and died Dec. 4, 1869. Eben Sibley, born July 20, 1831, served as supervisor of Napoli in 1874, 1875, and 1880. Judson Sibley has served one term as superintendent of common schools and has taught school twenty terms. Ira Sibley, a son of John, married Polly Hazen; children: Ira, Levi, Cyrus, Rhoda, and Edgar and Edmond (twins). He married, second, Mrs. Amanda Gowen, daughter of Stephen Sprague; children: Emily, Eliza J., Matilda, Annie M., and Susan. Annie M. married James Lowrey, who died in 1876.

Zalmon Smith, who was born in Connecticut, died in 1846 in Enterprise, Mo. His son Ira, born in Bridgeport, Conn., June 8, 1793, came to Randolph in 1828, and died there in 1879. He married Eliza Wilcox in 1819 and had born to him these children: Juliette, Janette, Myron, Ira, Elizabeth, Lucy, Henry, Oren, and Zalmon. Zalmon Smith was born in Rochester, Dec. 26, 1822, and came to Napoli in 1855. In Sept., 1841, he married Mary, daughter of Jotham Metcalf, of Conewango, and their children are David T., Ellen M., Emma A., Jotham M., Delia H., and Lillian E. Delia H. Smith married Orey Wells, who died Oct. 7, 1881, leaving one son, Leo J. (deceased). She married, second, Lewis Barber. Zalmon Smith enlisted Aug. 26, 1862, in Co. E, 9th N. Y. Cav., and served to the close of the war. Lewis Barber enlisted Dec. 24, 1863, in Co. K, 14th N. Y. H. A., was wounded at Weldon Railroad, lost his hearing at the mine explosion in front of Petersburg, and was discharged Aug. 26, 1865. David T. Smith enlisted in Aug., 1861, in Co. E, 9th N. Y. Cav., was wounded at Brandy Station, and was discharged in Aug., 1864. John Ash, father of Mrs. Jotham Metcalf, was a Revolutionary soldier and Jotham Metcalf served in the War of 1812.

Walter Thorp, son of David and Sarah (Morehouse) Thorp, was born Jan. 26, 1795, and died Nov. 1, 1872. He represented Cold Spring (then including Napoli) on the Board of Supervisors in 1824, 1825, and 1826, and Napoli from 1828 to 1832 inclusive and again in 1834. The family were prominent settlers.

Jonathan J. Whipple, son of Joseph and Betsey (Finch) Whipple, married, in 1841; Susan Tracy, of New Albion; children: Joseph, Porter, and George W. George W. Whipple, born at Little Valley, June 21, 1842, married, Sept. 20, 1866, Mary S., daughter of James Gage, and has had children Ida I., Annie M., Asher P., Charles J., Hattie, and Pattie M. Annie M. married F. Beardsley, of East Randolph. George W. Whipple enlisted Oct. 9, 1861, in Co. F, 64th N. Y. Vols., and was discharged Oct. 9, 1864. He was a prisoner in Belle Isle six months and is now a pensioner. Jonathan J. Whipple was an early settler in Little Valley, where he cleared a farm, and also another in Cold Spring, and was extensively engaged in driving cattle.

Ralph Williams, a descendant of Roger Williams and a native of Massachusetts, came to Conewango in 1825, cleared a farm, and died at the home of his son in Cold Spring in 1875. He married Sally Bishop, who died at Steam-burgh also in 1875. Children: Alzerah, Bishop, Loren, William W., Alvah, and Frederick R. The latter, born June 30, 1820, came to Napoli in 1857, and the same year married Roena Burbanks, who died aged forty-three. He married, second, Ophelia D. Sloan; children: Ralph L. and Edith M. He is a farmer on the place he has occupied thirty-two years, being the first settler on Amos hill.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF NEW ALBION.

NEW ALBION, the fourth township north from the south line of the State, in range eight, contains 22,988 acres as surveyed by the Holland Land Company. It was formed from Little Valley on February 23, 1830. A few years before this several prominent families from Orleans county had settled here and New Albion was named from Albion in the county they had left. The surface of the town is high and hilly and occupies a part of the "dividing ridge." From the summit of Tug hill a grand panorama of the surrounding country is displayed and a distinct view of Lake Erie can be had. The town is well watered by small brooks and by numerous springs. The streams in the northern part flow into the south branch of Cattaraugus creek, while those in the southwestern part find an outlet into the east branch of the Conewango. The soil is fertile and produces abundant crops of excellent hay and furnishes fine pasturage, which is mainly consumed by dairies. Remunerative crops of Indian corn and other grain are also raised. Flax is successfully cultivated and the manufacture of maple sugar receives considerable attention. The town is bounded on the north by Persia and Otto, on the east by Mansfield, on the south by Napoli, on the west by Leon.

A squatter named Matthew Dimmick, who settled in 1818 on lot 57, is credited with building the first shanty in New Albion for a white man's habitation, but he did not remain long nor did he make much improvement on the place. James Goddard the same year settled on lot 9 and was the first permanent settler in town. He opened his log house as a tavern and kept hotel until 1830. Robert Guy, from Otsego county in 1822, settled on the main road to the west. He purchased the interest of David Hammond and built a log house for a tavern. He was a prominent man. Judge Benjamin Chamberlain resided on lot 1 in 1818. In 1824 he sold his improvements to Leicester Tracy, the first supervisor of New Albion in 1830. Jonathan Kinnicutt settled on lot 18 the next year. He came from Montgomery county. The same year David Hill came from the same county and settled on lot 18. He later removed to Gowanda. Smith Waterman came about the same time, settled on lot 25, sold to Robert Champlin, and moved to Perry. John A. Kinnicutt came from Rensselaer county and settled on lot 18 on January 12, 1821. The town was then a part of Little Valley and Mr. Kinnicutt was a justice of the peace in that town; he was the first town clerk of New Albion. Other prominent settlers of the town from 1821 to 1830 were Jeremiah Maybee in 1822; Horace Snyder in 1825; William Buffington in 1826; William Travis, a son-in-law, who settled near Mr. Buffington; John S. Harvey, who had eighty acres of cleared land in 1838 and was then the largest farmer in town; Isaac Rice, who was one of the first justices, and who mysteriously disappeared while on a business trip down the Allegheny river; J. H. and S. B. Herrick, who settled on lot 4 about 1826; and Robert Champlin on lot 33 the same year. Abram Day made a home on lot 34 and was keeper of the light-house at Dunkirk in General Jackson's administration. Calvin Hartwell came from Orleans county in 1826 and Calvin Rich from the same county in 1828. Mr. Rich was one of the most prominent men of the town. His brother Arad settled near him. James and Warren Barnard came from the same place. Charles Sibley, who settled on lot 44, built the first grist-mill in town. The Ross and Payne families and Jacob Smith all came before 1830. Nicholas Everts, James and Jonathan B. Jewell, Daniel H. Powell, and Thomas J. Waters were all early pioneers of New Albion. Hon. Horace C. Young settled on lot 41 in May, 1832, where he spent the rest of his life.

Primitive saw-mills were constructed on the streams in different neighborhoods which had water enough to run them. Matthew Nealy erected a mill in 1834 on a branch of Cattaraugus creek on lot 29. John Jones was the next mill proprietor. William Kendall built a saw-mill on lot 35 quite early. This was operated by Solomon G. Wright, who built for himself, near the mill, a residence which was so unusual in shape and design that his neighbors called it "Solomon's Temple," a name it still bears. Charles Sibley built the first grist-mill in the town in 1836, on a branch of Conewango creek, which served the settlers about twenty years. James Goddard kept the first tavern on lot 1. He is supposed to have opened his house to travelers as early as 1820. The first white children born in town were Robia A. and Avis C., twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan Kinnicutt, in April, 1819. The first wedding was solemnized by a Methodist minister in 1824, the contracting parties being Noel Hopkins and Sally Simmons. The first death in town was that of a daughter of Noah Drew. James Goddard, who died in 1830, was the first adult who departed this life in New Albion.

The first town meeting was held at the house of John A. Kinnicutt, March 2 and 3, 1830, and made choice of a full set of town officers: Leicester Tracy, supervisor; John A. Kinnicutt, town clerk; John A. Kinnicutt, Isaac Rice, Calvin Rich, Abram Day, justices of the peace; Josiah Pierce, Isaac Rice, William Ross, assessors; James Maybee, collector; Timothy Guy, Noah Higbee, Isaac P. Wood, James Maybee, constables; James Buffington, James Williams, Arad Rich, commissioners of highways; William Buffington, William Higbee, Leicester Tracy, school commissioners; Comfort E. Sumner, Calvin Rich, John A. Kinnicutt, school inspectors; Robert Guy, Timothy Gowan, overseers of the poor. The supervisors, town clerks, and justices of the peace since 1830 are as follows:

Wright; 1842, John A. Kinnicutt; 1843, Seth Lane; 1844, Melzer Jones, Arad Rich; 1845, William D. Cornell, Harrison Judd; 1846, Levi W. Boardman; 1847, John A. Kinnicutt; 1848, Harrison Judd, Solomon G. Wright; 1849, William D. Cornell; 1850, Arad Rich; 1851, Orrin Tubbs, Levi W. Boardman; 1852, Pliny L. Fox, Asa Franklin; 1853, Warren Bernard; 1854, Beulah Tarbox; 1855, John A. Kinnicutt, Arad Rich, Jason Huntley; 1856, Alson Leavenworth; 1857, Asa Pritchard, Allen Campbell; 1858, William C. Mills, Melzer Jones; 1859, John A. Kinnicutt, Zimri Howe, Daniel Brown; 1860, Jared Puddy; 1861, Arad Rich; 1862, George Hunton; 1863, George A. Payne; 1864, George Straight; 1865, Arad Rich; 1866, Wilber F. Kinnicutt, George Hunton, Elias L. Matteson; 1867, John A. Kinnicutt, John Russell; 1868, Truman Mattock; 1869, James H. Rider; 1870, George Hunton; 1871, Edwin Davis; 1872, William P. Pfueger; 1873, Salmon L. Johnson; 1874, George Hunton; 1875, Edwin Davis; 1876, Salmon L. Johnson; 1877, George Straight; 1878, George Hunton; 1879, Edwin Davis; 1880, Salmon L. Johnson, Myron Cook; 1881, George Straight, Albert J. Eddy; 1882, George Hunton; 1883, J. L. Higbee; 1884, Seth Eddy; 1885, George Straight; 1886, Edgar E. Waite; 1887, George Hunton; 1888, Albert Eddy; 1889, Henry A. Locke; 1890, Edgar E. Waite; 1891, L. H. Northrup; 1892, Albert Eddy; 1893, Lewis W. Morgan.

The first settlers in this town largely preferred the hills to the valleys and the first highways were made on the highlands. The old Chautauqua road is an apt illustration. The early inhabitants on Snyder hill cut a road several miles through the woods to a saw-mill in Skinner hollow. As the settlements progressed roads have been opened in all parts of the town and are kept in good condition. The Erie railroad, completed in 1851, traverses the eastern part of New Albion and has a station at Cattaraugus.

Schools were taught in New Albion several years before it was set off from Little Valley. The first one was kept in the summer of 1823 by John Allen. Francis Winchester taught one in the Buffington neighborhood in 1826. In 1830 the town had a population of 380; in 1850, 1,633; in 1870, 1,487; in 1890, 1,858. In 1892 there were seven school districts and schools were maintained in each of them, and were taught by twelve teachers. The aggregate attendance was 509. The school buildings and sites were valued at $19,100; the assessed value of the districts was $637,835. The amount of public money received from the State was $1,679.56 and by local tax $5,012.46.

Cattaraugus, the principal village of New Albion, is situated in the northern part of the town about eight miles north of Little Valley. The business part of the village is located on the hillside facing the southeast. As late as 1830 the entire site was a dense forest. In May, 1851, the railroad was completed and a station erected. The farm of Joseph Plumb embraced the territory, which he forever dedicated to temperance by inserting in the conveyance of the lots which he had platted for the village a prohibitory clause, by the terms of which the title is forfeited if intoxicating liquors are sold as a beverage on the premises and the property reverts to Mr. Plumb or his heirs. After several years had elapsed a Mr. Tubbs began to openly sell liquors on his property. Mr. Plumb entreated him to desist, but in vain. Plumb commenced a suit to recover his lot, which was stubbornly contested by Tubbs and his abettors to the Court of Appeals, where the decisions of the lower courts in favor of Mr. Plumb were affirmed. Mr. Plumb magnanimously deeded the reverted property to the family of Mr. Tubbs, who had involved himself in debt in the struggle. Simultaneous with the building of the depot was opened the store of Mr. Elliott and the faithful coadjutor of Mr. Plumb, S. L. Johnson. A hotel was also opened to the public by William Buffington. In the same year M. F. Maltbie came and established business in the manufacture and sale of clothing. The firm of Darling & Wilson opened a general store in the fall of 1852. Other early merchants were Hiram Rumsey, A. E. Leavenworth, L. D. Botsford, James Ferris, and Nathaniel Christie. The village now contains three general stores, a hardware store, a jewelry store, a drug store, two groceries, two merchant tailoring establishments, a harness shop, two carriage shops, several dealers of various kinds, one weekly newspaper, a tannery, an edged-tool manufactory, a barrel and stave factory and flouring-mill, a tin and sheet-iron manufactory, three lawyers, two physicians, a Union Free School and Academy, five churches, a bank, telegraph, telephone, and express offices, two or three hotels, the usual complement of shops, artisans, etc., and a population in 1890 of 878. The village is incorporated and the present officers are William Easton, president; Fred Rich and John Osborn, trustees; Danford Rich, collector; F. E. Johnson, treasurer. The postoffice was established with S. L. Johnson as postmaster in 1851, and in October, 1877, became a money order office. Cattaraugus has had one sweeping cyclone and three fires. The severest fire occurred Sept. 5, 1889.

The Bank of Cattaraugus was organized as a private bank in 1882 and each co-partner is individually liable. At its organization the bank had a paid up capital of $11,000, which has been increased to $22,000. The first officers were O. F. Beach, president; C. Moench, vice-president; H. E. Greene, cashier. The present officers are S. S. Laing, president; C. Moench, vice-president; F. E. Johnson, cashier. The stockholders represent $400,000 capital. This institution was re-organized as a State bank March 30, 1892.

The Cattaraugus Union Free School and Academy was organized from school district No. 1 October 29, 1878. The first Board of Education—Rev. J. L. Higbee, Dr. T. L. De Nike, Frank S. Oakes, Christopher Moench, and John S. Gibbs—was awake to the advantages of education of the children of their village and at once adopted a policy to make the school it was founding an institution where the young might be thoroughly prepared to enter any college in the country. At the opening of the school there were only 175 children of school age residing in the district and but three teachers were employed. The number of children has increased to 325 and the number of teachers to seven. In 1888 the academic department was inaugurated and placed under the supervision of the Regents of the University of the State of New York. The first class graduated in 1891: Nellie Ethel Rich, Inez P. Rich, L. Lena Lattin, and Clarence B. Farrar. A much larger class graduated the year following. During the school year of 1892-93 there were 300 pupils enrolled. Two students of the year are entitled to Regents' classical diplomas and six to graduation. Thirty-nine non-resident pupils were in attendance. In 1887 an imposing, well built, and convenient brick school building was erected, which was burned February 20, 1893. The remainder of the term was taught in rooms temporarily fitted up and the school was closed but one day. The district soon unanimously voted the sum of $18,000 with which to rebuild and refurnish, with library and apparatus, a new brick structure, which will be completed in time for the fall term. The site is situated on high ground and surrounded by a beautiful maple grove.

Liberty Park Cemetery Association was incorporated February 1, 1892, with these officers: Albert Ten Eyck, president; William Pflueger, vice-president; D. W. Keeler, secretary; R. H. Maltbie, treasurer. The cemetery is situated within the limits of the village and embraces about five acres, which have been used as a burial place for some years. The present trustees are J. H. Jewell, D. W. Keeler, O. C. Rich, and A. F. Sigman.

The little post village of New Albion, formerly known as Horth's Corners, is situated near the geographical center of the township and was for many years the only business place in the town. It contains the hotel erected by Erastus Horth, who kept the house many years and was succeeded by Thad Cornell. Since then it has had numerous landlords. For many years the village has maintained two stores, a saw-mill, and a cheese factory. Besides these it now contains one church edifice and a population of about 100. Since the advent of the Erie railroad its business interests have materially decreased. The postoffice was established as early as 1833 and the mail is now received daily by carrier from Cattaraugus.

The Cattaraugus tannery in Cattaraugus village, the property of C. Moench, was originally built by Martin Hartenburg in 1851. It was then a small concern operated by two men. June 29, 1865, Mr. Moench purchased it, several times enlarged and improved it, and in June, 1888, the entire plant except the dry house was consumed by fire. Mr. Moench immediately rebuilt and had the present commodious building ready to resume business the ensuing October. The main building is 250x60 feet and the dry house is 110x40 feet and four stories high. A second dry house is used for finishing upper leather. The business has been conducted by the firm of C. Moench & Son since July 1, 1889. From 1865 to 1880 the firm name was C. Moench & Co., and consisted of C. Moench, of Cattaraugus, and Charles A. Gaensslen and Matthias Gaensslen, of Chicago. From then until 1889 C. Moench conducted the business alone. They now employ seventy-five men and are building an addition to the tannery which will double its present capacity.

Ten Eyck Edge Tool Company, in Cattaraugus, was incorporated under the laws of the State of New York on April 6, 1883, and had their shops erected and opened for business in July following. The officers at the organization were E. L. Johnson, president; L. H. Northrup, secretary; H. E. Greene, treasurer; Albert Ten Eyck, superintendent. The plant was consumed by fire January 24, 1890, and immediately rebuilt, enlarged, and ready to resume business in April. The company commenced with a capital of $20,000. Their plant covers an area of 200x40 feet, besides a convenient office and storage building. The motive power is generated by an eighty horse-power boiler. They manufacture axes, broadaxes, hatchets, and adzes, and employ fifty men. Their annual output averages $50,000. The present officers are H. W. Hinman, president; L. H. Northrup, secretary, treasurer, and manager; Albert Ten Eyck, superintendent.

The Cattaraugus mills are located on Mill street on the railroad. The motive power is furnished by an eighty horse-power engine. This plant combines a grist-mill with two runs of stone, a circular saw-mill, planers and matchers, machinery for the manufacture of barrels, and a shingle-mill, and employs to twenty-five men. The mills are owned by S. L. & E. L. Johnson.

George M. Davis's saw-mill at New Albion was erected by Waite & Davis in the fall of 1889 near the site of a mill built by Daniel Hawkins in 1873. The property passed to Mr. Davis in 1879. Two mills have been burned on the site, the last one being consumed in 1888. Mr. Davis is sole owner. The motive power is steam and the capacity is 12,000 feet of lumber per day.

The Methodist Episcopal denomination was the first religious society to hold regular meetings in town. As early as 1827 a Methodist class was formed on Snyder hill by Rev. Joseph S. Barria, a preacher on the Forestville circuit.

The meetings were held at Horace Snyder's house—he being one of the members of the class—until Calvin Rich settled there in 1828 and built a larger log house, when they convened at his dwelling the ensuing twenty years. The quarterly meetings were sometimes held in barns. In 1832 a Methodist class was formed at Horth's Corners, now New Albion. This class now contains twenty-five members and holds regular service in the Free Methodist church alternate Sundays. Rev. O. G. McEntire, of Cattaraugus, is pastor.

January 8, 1857, the Cattaraugus Methodist Episcopal Society was incorporated and Arad Rich, L. D. Botsford, Spencer Rich, Danford Rich, and Ephraim Ford were chosen trustees. Their present church edifice was erected in the village of Cattaraugus at a cost of $2,500. The Methodist class on Snyder hill formed the nucleus of this church. In 1877 the title of the society was changed to the "Methodist Episcopal Society of the village of Cattaraugus." The house of worship has been enlarged and much improved and now has a seating capacity for 500 persons. Anson Smith donated to the society a fine parsonage with ample grounds, valued at $2,000, and Mary Rich has also made it a valuable gift. The whole property is valued at $6,000. The church now has 150 members and over 40 probationers with Rev. O. G. McEntire as pastor. The large Sunday school is regularly attended.

A Freewill Baptist society was organized in the eastern part of the town about 1840, which held meetings in the school house of the neighborhood eight or ten years and disbanded.

The Christians organized a society simultaneously with the Freewill Baptists and held their meetings in a log school house northeast of the village of Cattaraugus, near the corner of the town. It existed only a few years.

The Wesleyan Methodist church of Cattaraugus was organized by Rev. F. M. Mosher on March 8, 1880, with nine members. Rev. Mr. Mosher became the first pastor. In 1880 the present house of worship was erected at a cost of $1,000. The church now has sixty-two members with Rev. S. Bedford as pastor. The present value of the church property is $2,500. The edifice will seat 200 people. The Sunday school has fifty-six scholars.

St. John's Lutheran church, located in the village of Cattaraugus, was organized January 1, 1886, by Rev. W. E. Rommell, who was the first pastor. It then consisted of twenty members and has increased to forty-two. In 1888 the first and present church edifice was erected of wood and has a seating capacity for 350 persons. The church property is valued at $3,000. Rev. Lew Ulmer is the present pastor. The Sunday school is attended by 15 or 20 scholars with William Pflueger as president and William Dietrich as secretary.

The Free Methodist church, located in the village of New Albion, was organized in 1884 by Rev. Thomas Slocum with eight or nine members. The church edifice was built of wood and dedicated July 4, 1885, and will seat 140 people. The membership in 1892 was only three with six probationers. The pastor was Rev. Joseph Thompson, of Cattaraugus. The Union Sunday school has forty-five scholars and seven teachers with Miss Ellen Bonard as superintendent.

The Free Methodist church of North America, located in Cattaraugus village, was organized in 1878 by Rev. Mr. Essex, who was its first pastor. It originally had nine members, the present number being thirty-six with nine probationers. The present pastor is Rev. G. M. Allen. In 1880 the society erected their first and present house of worship at a cost of $1,500; this with the grounds is valued at $1,200. This church maintains a Sunday school.

St. Mary's church (Roman Catholic), of Cattaraugus, was incorporated December 12, 1863, the trustees being Rt. Rev. John Timon, Bishop of Buffalo; Rev. F. N. Lester, vicar-general; Rev. John Baudenelli, pastor, residing at Dunkirk; and Stephen O'Donnell and John Gordon, lay members. A plain church edifice was erected. It is now a part of Dayton parish and Rev. Father Nash is the parish priest.

Cattaraugus Lodge, No. 56, A. O. U. W., was instituted January 10, 1877. The first officers were Thomas Babb, P. M. W.; George P. Walters, M. W.; William A. Cox, F.; M. F. Lenox, R. It now has thirty-five members.

Glen Lodge, No. 888, Knights of Honor, was instituted January 31, 1878, with about thirty members. Thomas Babb was elected dictator and W. W. Terry secretary. The present membership is thirty.

The Adams family in America are of English origin. Their ancestors settled in Quincy, Mass., in 1630. Henry Adams was the father of John Adams, the second president of the United States. John Adams was the father of John Quincy Adams, "the old man eloquent" and also president. His son, Charles Francis Adams, was the father of Charles Francis Adams, Jr. Henry Adams, son of David, was born in Johnstown, N. Y., July 18, 1804, and was a lineal descendant of Henry, of Quincy, Mass. Oct. 6, 1831, he married Belinda Cowen, in Hanover, N. Y. She was born in Martinsburgh, Lewis county, Nov. 17, 1806. Her father was a minuteman in the War of 1812. Mr. Adams was a farmer in Hanover until the spring of 1837, when he removed to Snyder hill in New Albion, where he died April 11, 1885. He was employed in digging the Erie canal, and he and his wife early united with the M. E. church. He was first an old line Whig and later a Republican. Mrs. Adams survives at the age of over eighty-five years. Children: Jane Ann, born June 28, 1832, died May 4, 1850; Marcellus, born Feb. 5, 1834, of Sturgis, Mich.; Martha M. (Mrs. Job Benson), of New Albion, died in 1876; Marcena, born Aug. 20, 1838, married Hiram H. Luce, Oct. 23, 1856, who died in April, 1862, at Fortress Monroe; Persis J., born Jan. 17, 1841, married George W. Webster, of Big Rapids, Mich.; Marquis Dela, born March 23, 1843, married Mrs. Alice (Crowell) Jaquay, and remains on the homestead; and John H., born Aug. 29, 1845, a farmer in Tyrone, Mich.

John G. Ackerman, son of John G. and Barbara (Benlare) Ackerman, was born in Concord, N. Y., May 2, 1856. His parents were born in Germany, where they were married. They came to America when Buffalo was a small city. The father died when John G. was seventeen and the latter removed from Hamburg to Otto very soon after. There he learned the tailor's trade. In the spring of 1886 he came to Cattaraugus and became a merchant tailor.

Horatio Babb, born in Barrington, N. H., May 19, 1812, married, Oct. 28, 1833, Mary A. DeMerritt, of Dover, N. H., and first settled with his parents where his oldest son, Leander E., was born March 20, 1835. He went to Boston in 1835 and in 1836 to Baltimore, and was later a merchant in New York. In 1844 he resided in Steuben county. He was actively engaged in the construction of the Erie railroad and removed to Alfred Center, Allegany county. In May, 1851, he came to Cattaraugus as station agent, which position he filled to the close of his life excepting the time he spent in the army. In 1861 he enlisted in the 64th N. Y. Vols. and served as regimental quartermaster until he resigned on account of ill health. He returned to his position and died Nov. 12, 1871. For many years he served as trustee of the village school and was supervisor of New Albion in 1868. Mrs. Babb died Dec. 8, 1886. Children: Leander E., of Chicago; Mertia D. (Mrs. J. H. Warren), died Aug. 5, 1871; M. Elizabeth and H. Sue, who reside on the homestead; Thomas and Albert H., of Chicago; Ben L., of Cleveland, Ohio; and Belle, widow of H. M. Herrick.

Garlock, whose mother died when he was ten years old, had a home with his grandmother, who had married her second husband, Rev. Clark Holmes, of Cattaraugus. In Feb., 1878, he opened a photographic studio in the village. He holds a certificate from the Photographers' Association of America conferring upon him the title of professional photographer. Aug. 12, 1879, he married Carrie A., daughter of F. J. Keeler. She died March 12, 1891, and left a daughter, M. Spray, born June 12, 1886.

Frank B. Gould was educated in the public schools of Dunkirk and in Waterford Academy in Pennsylvania. He learned the tinner's trade and in 1872 came to Cattaraugus, where the same year he married Sarah R., daughter of Danford Rich. He entered the employ of Oakes & Elliott, where he has since been engaged, having the business charge of the establishment.

Robert Guy was born of Irish parents in 1774. He married Laura Stickney in Otsego county. They resided near Ogdensburg, N. Y., at the time of the War of 1812. They were in Broome county as early as 1816 and removed thence to New Albion in 1821, where they spent the remainder of their lives. They settled in a log house on lot 33. Mr. Guy died June 10, 1851, and Mrs. Guy on March 19, 1856. He was a Jacksonian Democrat and liberal in his religious views. He was one of the first to open his house as a tavern. Children: Joanna (Mrs. Abraham Day); Timothy P., who was twice married, settled on the homestead, and left a son, Robert E.; Emily (Mrs. Ira Valiant); Laura; Emily (Mrs. Kimball Chase), deceased; Almira (Mrs. Hiram Barton), deceased; and Himan, who removed to Iowa and died.

Samuel B. Herrick, of English descent and of New England parentage, was born Dec. 8, 1781, married Mary Bosseller in Montgomery county, who was born there Nov. 29, 1782, and first settled in Sennett, N. Y. In the spring of 1830 Mrs. Herrick with her children came to New Albion and settled on thirty acres of lot 12. Mr. Herrick was a carpenter and builder and remained in Sennett to complete some work, and joined his family in December following. He added to the thirty acres 100 more and followed his trade. Mr. Herrick died at the age of eighty-two. Mrs. Herrick died later at the age of eighty. Children: Charlotte, Larry, Esther, Jeremiah H., John R., Fanny, Stephen M., George, and Elisha.

Jeremiah H. Herrick was born in Sennett, N. Y., March 8, 1820, and came to New Albion with the family in 1830. Dec. 24, 1845, he married Eunice B., daughter of Joshua Parmelee, a pioneer of Mansfield. She was born in Spafford, Onondaga county, July 26, 1822. They settled on seventy-five acres adjoining the homestead on lot 4, and finally, by additions, had a farm of 180 acres. In the fall of 1869 he presented his oldest son the home, on lot 4, and settled where he now resides. He has been assessor twelve years. Children: Judson; Theodocia, died March 5, 1866; Fred B., who married Eureka Horning.

William Higbee, a native of Connecticut, married Hannah Hopkins in Turin, N. Y., where several of his children were born. About 1827 he removed from Barre, Orleans county, to New Albion and settled on Snyder hill where W. V. Payne now lives. He had four sons and three daughters, all of whom, except his youngest son, settled in the neighborhood. In early life he was a sailor. He was passionately fond of hunting in his old age, and on one of his excursions he gathered a quantity of Lobelia seeds and tried their medicinal qualities on himself. After a hearty vomiting exercise he threw the remainder in the fire. He died aged eighty-five years. His son Sanford was a preacher and resided on the homestead. Noah Higbee also moved to New Albion about the same time his father came and was a farmer. He married Harriet Luce.

Jerome L. Higbee, son of Noah and Harriet (Luce) Higbee, was born in New Albion, Feb. 16, 1839, and was raised a farmer. At the age of seven-teen he became strongly impressed with a desire to obtain an education. He attended the schools of Cattaraugus and Gowanda and Fredonia Academy, and entered the preparatory department of Hillsdale College, in Michigan, in the spring of 1860, graduating therefrom as A.B. in 1866. Three years later he received the honorary degree of A.M. From the time he commenced his studies he sustained himself by teaching. After graduating he was two years engaged as a teacher. In the spring of 1869 he commenced the study of law in the office of Col. E. A. Nash at Cattaraugus. He married Martha, daughter of N. Christie, and at the solicitation of his wife and her father he became a merchant under the firm name of Christie & Higbee. He was elected school commissioner and served three years. About 1874 he entered the ministry of the Freewill Baptist church and was the pastor of the church at Cherry Creek one year. He spent the year 1875 in New York as business manager of the Baptist Union and preached there occasionally. In 1876-77 he was the pastor of the Freewill Baptist church at Hamlet, Chautauqua county. At the same time he taught a select school as he had at Cherry Creek. He also continued his mercantile business and for about three years he had an interest in an additional store in Randolph and lived there. From Hamlet he returned to Cattaraugus, where he attended to his mercantile business until 1884. Besides constructing his own house he has erected in his village twelve or fifteen other buildings. In politics he is a Prohibitionist and in 1891 was the nominee of his party in his district for State senator.

Levi Hill came to Napoli from Chenango county at a very early day. He cleared a farm and set out one of the first orchards in that town, and resided there as late as 1833, when he removed to New Albion, where he was a farmer, and where he died in 1864. He married Philena Morey; children: Gardner, Alexander, Clark, Eunice, Clarissa, Jerome, and Sarah. Late in his life his wife died and he married widow Ruth A. Drew. His son, Gardner Hill, was born in Chenango county, Dec. 12, 1821. Oct. 24, 1845, he married Matilda A., daughter of John A. Kinnicutt, and settled in New Albion as a farmer. He died March 1, 1854; children: Leroy N., born Dec. 11, 1846, married Martha J. Johnson, of Conewango, was a farmer until Nov., 1884, and since then has conducted a general store in the village of New Albion; Lucius D., born March 25, 1849, a merchant of Conewango; Ellen S., born May 2, 1852, married Thomas V. Boardman, deceased; and Charles G., born July 24, 1854.

Simeon B. Hinman, born in Rutland, Vt., Aug. 11, 1800, came to East Otto in 1824. Mr. Hinman married, in Aurora, N. Y., Dec. 6, 1826, Keziah Bullis, who was born in Bennington, Vt., June 24, 1806, a daughter of Benjamin and Rachel (Hoyt) Bullis. Mr. Bullis was a soldier in the War of 1812. Mr. Hinman, with the aid of his industrious sons, paid for his farm, built good buildings, and accumulated a competency. He was a prominent citizen, and both were members of the M. E. church. Mr. Hinman died March 28, 1890. His widow resides in Otto village. Her youngest daughter, Rachel J., widow of Hiram Dewey, resides with her. They had eight children: Adaline (Mrs. Oscar F. Beach), of East Otto; Lucy, who died aged twenty-four; Hoyt W.; Lyman H., resides in Marshalltown, Iowa; Millard F., of East Otto; Benjamin B., of Hinsdale; Rachel; and Marshall L., ex-mayor of Dunkirk, and secretary and treasurer of the Brooks Locomotive Works. Hoyt W. Hinman, born in East Otto, Feb. 5, 1831, began life laboring by the month for his neighbor, E. A. Rice. Three years later he located on a farm of 200 acres in Iowa, which he owned five years, when he exchanged it for a farm of 150 acres in Otto, which he still owns. In the fall of 1869 he removed to Cattaraugus village, and the past eighteen years has been an extensive buyer of butter and cheese. He purchased the Dr. Leavenworth estate of five acres and has given the house and one acre to his only child, Hattie (Mrs. C. R. Rich). He is a large stockholder and a director of the Bank of Cattaraugus, the largest stockholder and president of the Ten Eyck Edge Tool Company, and owns several village lots. Mr. Hinman is an attendant of the Methodist Episcopal church and a singer in the choir. Oct. 23, 1856, he married Sylvia F., daughter of Salem Edmunds, of East Otto, a native of Massachusetts.

Hadley S. Horth, son of Benjamin, a pioneer of New Albion, was born, on the farm where his father settled, Oct. 11, 1845. He enlisted in the 72d N. Y. Vols., Oct. 18, 1861, and re-enlisted as a veteran in Dec., 1863, serving nearly four years. The first two years he was always on duty. Afterward his health became much impaired and for total disability he was sent to the general hospital and thence to his home. Returning to his regiment he was made a prisoner in 1865 and paroled three days later. Nov. 1, 1868, he married Maggie, daughter of James Kilby, Sr. Children: Ernest, Louis, and Hattie.

Dorus Ingersoll, a native of Washington county, was born in 1801. In 1825 he removed from Middlebury, N. Y., and subsequently to Leon. He was a prominent pioneer and held several town offices, being justice of the peace many years. He married Sarah Easton, of Middlebury, and had five sons and five daughters. Mr. Ingersoll died in 1881 and Mrs. Ingersoll in 1866. Their son, Denzil Ingersoll, born in 1843, married Jennette Brown, of Boston, Erie county, in 1866, who was born there in 1847, and settled on the homestead in Leon. In the fall of 1875 they removed to their present home in New Albion.

Thomas Jewell, the progenitor of a numerous race in America, was probably born in England about 1600. The name was written Jule, Joyell, Jewel, and then Jewell. The first authentic account of him is in the early part of 1639, and shows that he then had a wife and one child. He received a grant of land the 24th day of the 2d month, 1639, of four acres for three heads—12 acres—upon the covenant of three shillings per acre, located on the "Mount" near Boston, Mass. The "Mount" was Mt. Woolaston, first settled in 1625 and incorporated as Braintree in 1640. He was a miller. His sons were Thomas, Joseph, and Nathaniel. Joseph, born April 24, 1642, first lived in Charlestown and conducted the ferry between that place and Boston, and his son Joseph assisted him; when about fifty years old he removed to Stow and there owned a grist-mill, which for years (as late as 1815 at least) went by the name of "Jewell's mill." This old mill-site was as late as 1860 occupied by a carpet factory and the stream is the dividing line between Sudbury and Stow. He died at about the age of ninety-four. His second wife, Isabel, lived to be over 103. His son Joseph, born in June, 1673, was married, in Boston, to Mary Morris by Rev. Cotton Mather, Sept. 14, 1704, and died in Dudley, Mass., in 1766. Nathaniel, his son, married Elizabeth Webster, March 20, 1739, and died in Dudley, Mass., in 1782. John Morris Jewell, his son, born Sept. 4, 1739, married Sarah Pratt, and died in Cherry Valley, N. Y., March 20, 1828. He raised quite a large family. His son Jared, born March 8, 1780, married Esther Burrell, and died Dec. 26, 1820. His sons were James, Jonathan, Osborn, and Jared (who died in infancy). James Jewell came to New Albion from Westford, N. Y., about 1831. Jan. 20, 1836, he married Hannah Guy.

Jonathan Jewell married Amanda Denton in Otsego county Oct. 27, 1825. In 1832 he came to New Albion and located a farm on lot 53. He died April 13, 1887; Mrs. Jewell died Feb. 18, 1886. Children: John D., born Dec. 7, 1829, died Dec. 15, 1854, in Auburn, N. Y., where he was keeper in the State's prison; Hannah, born in 1832, died in 1834; and James H., born Sept. 23, 1836, received an education in the common schools and Randolph Academy, and in June, 1854, married Jane Henderson, of Otisco, N. Y. James H. Jewell began life as a live stock buyer and farmer, which business he continued several years. Since 1873 he has been an extensive dealer in cheese and is also the senior member of the firm of J. H. Jewell & Sons, of Cattaraugus, dealers in hardware and crockery. Mr. Jewell is a Democrat, and has been assessor nine years and was postmaster of Cattaraugus through Cleveland's first administration. His sons are Frank D. and William N.

Osborn Jewell, born Feb. 25, 1810, married Electa Russell, Sept. 24, 1849, and was a merchant in Buffalo. His son John R., born in Buffalo, married, in New Albion, Harriet E., daughter of George Benson, and has spent his life as a seaman. He has passed through all the grades from the cook's helper to master, and still holds an American and British shipmaster's certificate.

Salmon L. Johnson was born in Cortland (then Homer), N. Y., April 6, 1818. In 1824 his parents removed to Fredonia, in 1825 to Ellicottville, and in 1826 to Ashford, where his father practiced his profession as a physician until 1846, when he removed to Otto and died there in 1870. S. L. became a clerk at the age of eighteen. He received an academic education and taught a district school one winter (1840-41). In 1841 he became a partner of his uncle, David B. Jewell, as a general merchant in Ashford. In 1844 this partnership dissolved and in 1845 he became a partner in a like business in Otto with the late William F. Elliott. In 1851 this firm established an additional store in Cattaraugus, and shipped their first goods from Dunkirk on a construction train before the railroad was formally opened. There were then only four small framed houses within the present incorporation of Cattaraugus village. In religion he is a Presbyterian, but is a regular attendant of the M. E. church. In politics he is a staunch Republican. He was influential in establishing the postoffice at Cattaraugus in 1851 and was its first postmaster, serving as such about fifteen years. He was three terms justice of the peace, and it was at his suggestion that Mr. Plumb decided to insert in all his deeds conveying his lands in Cattaraugus village the clause forever prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on the premises conveyed. Several years afterward a petition was circulated praying Mr. Plumb to rescind this prohibitory article and Mr. Johnson was the only one who refused to sign it. May 12, 1861, he married Lucy E., daughter of Zane A. Hamilton, who was born Aug. 5, 1828.

Elisha L. Johnson was born in Ellicottville, May 10, 1828. His father, Elisha Johnson, was a physician of the old school and a graduate of Geneva Medical College. The son received his education in common schools and in Fredonia Academy. In 1845 he began to learn the moulder's trade at Fredonia and alternately pursued his studies in the academy. In 1850 he was a journeyman moulder in Gowanda and in 1851 in Buffalo. In the spring of 1852 he entered the store of his brother in Cattaraugus as a clerk. In 1856 or 1857 the partnership of S. L. & E. L. Johnson was formed for the sale of general merchandise, which continued until the great fire. In 1866 the firm became the joint owners with O. W. Howe of the Cattaraugus mills, of which, in 1868, the Johnsons became sole owners, and which E. L. has since conducted. Mr. Johnson has served as town clerk several years. He married, first, Malvina Bugbee, of Gowanda, who was the mother of both his children: Mary (Mrs. S. J. Benedict) and Grace B. (Mrs. Charles J. Rich, Jr.). Mrs. Johnson died in Oct., 1886, and in June, 1889, he married Mrs. Emily, widow of Rev. L. H. Bugbee, D. D.

Melzar Jones, born in Washington, Vt., Jan. 18, 1807, came to Candor, N. Y., in 1813, where his father, John Jones, was a pioneer. He was a manufacturer of pine lumber at the age of twenty-one, and in 1838 he settled on a farm of 53 acres on lot 5 in New Albion. About 1864, on account of failing health, he removed to Cattaraugus village. He assisted in building the school building and the M. E. church, and was present and helped raise the first frame building and sat on the first jury at a justice court. He was elected a justice of the peace, but refused to accept the office; he has served as assessor seven years. In Sept., 1826, he married Tabitha Jones, who was born March 29, 1807, and died March 23, 1875; children: Hiram A., Chauncey M., Colby, Ansel M., and Melzar B. The latter was born on the homestead Oct. 1, 1841. He finished his education at Hillsdale College in Michigan and in 1863 took a commercial course in the office of the president of Bryant &

Stratton's Commercial College in Buffalo. He then took charge of the theoretical department of the institution and was next a merchant in Ellicottville with W. A. Bosworth. In Aug., 1864, he enlisted in the army and served five months. He then resumed teaching. Feb. 22, 1865, he married Jennie A. Frasier, of Ellicottville, and settled on the homestead. Ten years later he came to the village of Cattaraugus and is now the proprietor of the Cattaraugus Marble Works. He has two sons and two daughters. The daughters are Emma M. (Mrs. Charles Smith) and Jessie.

The Kinnicutt family in America is of Scotch origin and is descended from Roger Kinnicutt, who early emigrated to Rhode Island. John Anson Kinnicutt, born in Pittstown, R. I., in 1800, came from Livingston county, N. Y., to New Albion on Jan. 12, 1821, and brought his wife, Sophronia Chapel, and their child to his shanty on lot 18. He was prominent in the early settlement of Little Valley and in the town of New Albion. At the organization of this town he was elected its clerk and held the office seventeen years. He was also justice of the peace in Little Valley and in New Albion forty years. He had five sons and five daughters. Their son, John Albertus Kinnicutt, was born in Jan., 1828, and was elected supervisor in 1864, the last year of the civil war, when the amounts levied in the county reached hundreds of thousands. The board held six sessions during that year. He married, in 1851, Helen, daughter of Benjamin Horth, who was the mother of his sons Anson C., Bion P. (died aged thirty-three), and Robert A. In 1874 Mr. Kinnicutt married Nellie Ropps, of East Randolph; children: Norman N. and Nora A. (twins).

Jehiel Lamb, son of David, was born in Vermont, March 3, 1787, married Lois Varnum, Jan. 1, 1810, who was born Jan. 2, 1789, and settled in Warrensburg, N. Y. In 1829 they came to Otto with two yoke of oxen and a heavy wagon followed by their single cow, making the journey in twenty-one days. They settled in "North Otto." He was a member of the M. E. church and was class-leader and superintendent of the Sunday school. About 1836 he sold his improvements and removed to Mansfield, where he died Jan. 30, 1870. Mrs. Lamb died Jan. 12, 1856. They had nine children. Their youngest son, Bolivar R. Lamb, was born July 6, 1830, and has always been a farmer. Oct. 17, 1853, he married Mary E. Barnard, of New Albion, and purchased the homestead of Warren Barnard, his wife's father, where she was born Feb. 20, 1834, and where they still reside. He is in sympathy with the Methodists and a worker in the Sunday school. He served as supervisor in 1866 and 1871. He has one daughter, Effie M., born June 6, 1865, the wife of Rev. W. W. Manning.

Earl M. Lewis, son of George and Mary J. (Flynn) Lewis, was born in Freedom (q. v.). He was a clerk in the store of E. W. Weed & Co., of Yorkshire Center, and is now engaged with H. F. Blood in Cattaraugus. He is a member of the M. E. church and a teacher in the Sabbath school. His maternal grandfather, Rev. William H. Flynn, was a clergyman of the Freewill Baptist church about thirty years. When he retired from active work as a preacher he settled in Cattaraugus, where he spent about twenty years. He now resides at Yorkshire Center with his daughter, Mrs. Lewis, widow of George Lewis. He and his wife celebrated their golden wedding in Feb., 1890.

Lucius H. Maltbie, born in Weedsport, N. Y., in Jan., 1828, lost his father at the age of five years, and his mother and stepfather, Mr. Rose, settled in Otto about 1837, where Lucius H. learned the trade of tailor of his older brother. In 1851 he came to Cattaraugus, built a shop of boards, and began business as a merchant tailor. About 1878 he changed to groceries. In 1881 he added a line of drugs and medicines. He was appointed postmaster under General Grant and held the position seven years. He has served as town clerk. In Oct., 1856, he married Kerrella, daughter of Charles Brown, of Forestville. She died March 29, 1888. Children: Ralph H., Burt L., Bertha A.

Nathaniel Manley, son of Jesse and Betsey (French) Manley, was born in Dummerston, Vt., June 29, 1817. June 22, 1832, his father and family arrived Mansfield and were fourteen days making the journey. Mr. Manley was a man of good education, had taught school, and had served as selectman in Vermont. He died in 1862 and Mrs. Manley in 1849. Nathaniel Manley, on Dec. 4, 1842, married Mary Vosburgh, of Schuylcr, N. Y., and succeeded his father on the homestead. He has been for many years an extensive buyer of butter and cheese. He was first a Whig and afterward a Republican. Mrs. Manley died April 26, 1887. Children: Martin H., Wilber J., Emmett F., and Jennie (Mrs. Frank Woodward).

Wilber J. Manley, born March 9, 1847, was educated in the common schools, in Jamestown Union School, Randolph Academy, and Bryant & Stratton's Commercial College in Buffalo, and April 27, 1871, married Henrietta, daughter of Angus McDuffie, of Otto. In 1870 he began buying butter and cheese, which business he has since followed, except the years 1882, 1883, and 1884, when he pursued farming. In politics he is a Republican, and he held the office of supervisor of New Albion in 1878 and 1879, has served three terms as a member of the school board, and has been president of the village. Children: Robert E. and Roscoe.

Christopher Moench, son of Christian, was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, June 22, 1835, and was apprenticed to the trade of tanning from 1849 until 1853. He then came to America and found employment at his trade in Versailles with Mr. Green. He was next a journeyman in the employ of Walter Webster, of Gowanda, until Sept., 1861, when he bought out his employer and formed a co-partnership with F. Agle, which continued under the firm name of C. Moench & Agle till May, 1865, when Mr. Moench sold his interest to his partner and purchased the Cattaraugus tannery. In October following he organized the company of C. Moench & Co., which continued until 1880. He conducted the business alone until July 1, 1889, when the present firm of C. Moench & Son was formed. At the organization of the Bank of Cattaraugus he was elected vice-president, which position he has since held. He has served several years as a member of the school board. June 29, 1865, he married Caroline Dietrich, of Hamburg, Erie county; children: Henry L., Amelia L., Carrie A., Hattie F., George E., Dora C., Alice M., and Harmon F.

John Mosher, son of John, was born in Hoosick, N. Y., married Eliza Potter, and settled in Middlebury, N. Y. "Thomas Pepperdine, of the Parish of Scopwick, bachelor, and Mary Butler, of this parish, spinster, were married in this church, by Banns, with the consent of parents, this sixteenth day of March in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, by me, Samuel Winship, curate of Buckingham. This marriage was solemnized between us. [Signed] Thomas Pepperdine, Mary Butler. In the presence of William Butler, Joseph Thorpe."—From Parish Register, Buckingham, County and Diocese of Lincoln, England. In 1827 Mr. and Mrs. Pepperdine, with their first born son, William, emigrated to America in a sailing vessel and landed in New York after a voyage of thirteen weeks. They came to Rochester, where Mrs. Pepperdine died six weeks later. Whilst he and his wife were very ill in Rochester he was robbed of quite a quantity of valuable merchandise, consisting of silks and linen. On his recovery he spent a year in Syracuse, where he married Mary Rich, and in Nov., 1828, they came to New Albion and located on Snyder hill. He moved twice after he first settled, and died in the south part of the town. He was a local preacher of the Methodist church. William Pepperdine, born in Lincolnshire, England, April 13, 1825, came to America with his parents, and Dec. 29, 1844, married Harriet, daughter of Calvin Rich. About 1864 he began dealing in live stock, which he followed nearly fifteen years.

Melvin N. Pepperdine, son of William, was born in Cattaraugus village, Aug. 26, 1852, received a good English education, and Jan. 6, 1876, married Chloe R., daughter of Joseph Bates, and settled where he now resides. He is also dealing in cattle, sheep, and hogs. He is a staunch Republican and has been assessor. Children: Emma M. and Merle E.

William Pflueger, born in Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1838, came at the age of fourteen to America in a sailing vessel. He came to Dunkirk, where one of his uncles resided, and became a farm laborer. In 1856 he removed to New Albion and in 1858 he married Catherine, daughter of Martin Sigman. He became a citizen of the United States at the age of twenty-one and in Aug., 1862, enlisted in Co. B, 154th N. Y. Vols. He never missed a roll-call until May 2, 1863, when at the battle of Chancellorsville he received a severe wound in the left leg, which caused a compound fracture of the bone. He was taken off the field a prisoner and paroled May 16th, when he was transferred to the Union hospital and his wounds dressed for the first time. He was discharged in Dec. following. For twenty-five years he then had charge of the saw-mill of S. L. & E. L. Johnson.

Henry Phillips, born in Otsego county, Feb. 29, 1788, married Susannah Smith, in Lenox, N. Y., in Dec., 1820, who was born there May 20, 1806. As early as 1832 he settled in New Albion on Snyder hill, where Frank Luce now lives. He died in New Albion in the spring of 1860. Mrs. Phillips died October 18, 1875. Of their seven sons and three daughters only three sons are now living: George, the oldest, born May 18, 1821; William M., born Aug. 15, 1830; and Andrew J.

Jacob Phillips, son of Henry, was born in Niagara, N. Y., Nov. 4, 1828. April 1, 1852, he married Harriet, daughter of Rev. Alanson Kingsley. They first located on Snyder hill. In 1873 they settled in Cattaraugus, where Mr. Phillips died June 8, 1883. He was a skillful carpenter and builder.

John S. Phillips, son of Henry, was born in Barre, N. Y., March 5, 1825. He labored by the month for a time and Dec. 31, 1855, he married Betsey M., daughter of Harrison Payne, and became a farmer on Snyder hill. He died at East Randolph in June, 1890, leaving to each of his three sons a good farm. Children: Elmer, Frank E., and Fred M.

Andrew J. Phillips, born in New Albion, April 20, 1836, married, Aug. 8, 1857, Sarah C. Frederick, of Johnstown, N. Y., where they first settled. He enlisted from Johnstown in the fall of 1861 in Co. E, 44th N. Y. Vols., and served until he was discharged on account of illness in 1863. Since regaining his health he has been a carpenter and painter in Cattaraugus.

Asa Pritchard, son of Nathan and Olive (Sloan) Pritchard, was born in Lenox, N. Y., Aug. 30, 1815. His grandfather, a native of England, settled first in Connecticut, where his son Nathan and most of his family were born. He removed to Georgetown about 1795, where he was one of the earliest pioneers. He was a farmer and frequently a town officer. He resided in Georgetown to the close of his long life, aged nearly ninety. His son Nathan was born Dec. 16, 1785, and with his wife was a pioneer of Lenox, N. Y. In 1832 he removed to Evans (now Brant), Erie county, where he died in Aug., 1871. His wife survived until May, 1877. Their son, Asa Pritchard, in 1856 removed to the farm on Snyder hill on which he now resides. He added to his farm until it contained 342 acres, which he finally sold to his youngest son. He is a Republican and has served as justice of the peace four years and assessor three years. June 4, 1840, he married Hannah Wood, who was born in Eden, Erie county, Feb. 22, 1821. Zina Waite, son of Peleg and Jane (Buchanan) Waite, was born in Napoli, March 28, 1831, married Lucinda A., daughter of Jesse and Susan (Wright) Wilber, Aug. 1, 1852, who was born Dec. 4, 1831, and settled in Napoli, where he was a farmer until March 1, 1869, when he moved onto a farm of 200 acres purchased of John A. Kinnicutt two miles west of New Albion. In Nov., 1874, he sold this and removed to a smaller farm near the village of New Albion, where he died July 9, 1884. Mr. Waite enlisted twice in the service of his country, but was rejected on account of disability after being three months in the service and on drill at Black Rock. Mrs. Waite died March 20, 1885. Children: Darwin D., born June 18, 1856, a cheese maker; and Edgar E., born Aug. 19, 1859. The latter was educated at Chamberlain Institute and at the age of nineteen he taught his first term of district school, teaching in all nine terms. At the age of twenty-two he was elected inspector of election and in 1886 was chosen justice of the peace, being the trial justice of his village. March 11, 1883, he married Adda M., daughter of George Horth; they have one son, Harold, born Dec. 7, 1885.

Orlando White, son of George W., was born in Irving, Chautauqua county, July 29, 1845, was graduated from the Gowanda Academy in June, 1861, and in Sept., 1861, went with Dr. George W. Barr, surgeon of the 64th N. Y. Regt., as his helper. About seven months later he returned to Gowanda and engaged in the printing office of the Gowanda Reporter, where he remained until Aug. 11, 1862. He enlisted in Co. K, 154th N. Y. Vols., and served until July 1, 1865. He participated in nine battles and several skirmishes, and escaped with a single wound which he received May 30, 1864, after which he was assigned to the quartermaster's office in Louisville, Ky. Completing his trade as a printer he has since followed that avocation, being now engaged on the Cattaraugus Times. He was editor and publisher of the Lyndon Record in Michigan from Feb., 1878, to May, 1880, and was town clerk of New Albion in 1889. Oct. 23, 1873, he married Della Lowe, of Leon; they have three sons and two daughters.

Frank Woodward, born in Gowanda, Erie county, Jan. 20, 1855, came when about ten years old with his parents to Dunkirk, where he remained until July, 1876. He attended the High School and learned the trade of jeweler, and in 1875 spent about nine months in Coudersport, Pa. Prior to this he was a traveling salesman three years. In July, 1876, he came to Cattaraugus and opened a jewelry store. After the fire of Oct. 22, 1881, he bought his present lot, on which he erected a frame store which was burned Sept. 5, 1888. He immediately rebuilt and resumed business Dec. 15th. Feb. 25, 1880, he married Jennie M., daughter of N. Manley, of Cattaraugus, a pioneer of Mansfield. They have one son.

Hon. Horace C. Young, son of Henry Young, Jr., was born in Fenner, N. Y., Aug. 28, 1806. His father was born in Martha's Vineyard in 1775. His grandfather, Henry Young, Sr., was a native of Scotland, emigrated to Martha's Vineyard, and married there Lydia Ross. He was a graduate of Edinburgh University and a teacher most of his life. His mother, Philena Kellogg, was a native of Williamstown, Mass. The family emigrated from Williamstown to Fenner, where Henry Young died in March, 1852, and his wife in 1865. Horace C. Young assisted his father as an architect and builder, and Jan. 19, 1831, he married Laura P., daughter of Gideon and Barbara Walker, a native of Whiting, Vt. Her father lost his life at Fort Niagara in the War of 1812. In the spring of 1832 Mr. Young removed to New Albion, where he purchased the "improvements" on 58½ acres of land. The only building was a log shanty, roofed with bark and without a door or window. During the remainder of his life he carried on both his farm and the business of architect and builder. He was elected a justice of the peace in 1833 and supervisor in 1843, 1845, 1846, and 1847. In the fall of 1848 he was elected to the Assembly and re-elected in the fall of 1849. He was State senator in 1862 and 1863, was school commissioner ten years, and was assessor and commissioner of deeds about four years. Mr. Young was a man of more than ordinary ability. He began his political life a Whig and joined the Republican party at its organization. He was liberal in his religious opinions and was well known as honorable and in no sense aristocratic. He was a thorough temperance man and a friend of the young. He was often an administrator in settling estates. Every good enterprise met his hearty support. He died May 19, 1879. Mrs. Young survived until May 18, 1890, aged nearly eighty-three. Children: Helen P. (Mrs. George H. Bailey), of Chicago, deceased; Laura P. (Mrs. E. Y. Arnold), of Ellicottville; Caroline E., a teacher; Louise E. (Mrs. David Stevens), of Conewango; Mary Z. (Mrs. F. C. Techentien), of New Albion; and H. Olin, who married Mary J. Marsh and is a lawyer in Ishpeming, Mich.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN AND CITY OF OLEAN.

OLEAN, the mother of all the towns in Cattaraugus county, is co-equal with the county in age and extent, as both were formed by the legislative act of March 11, 1808, which created the county of Cattaraugus from the territory of Genesee county and also the town of Olean, which embraced the whole of this county. The old town of Ischua was formed from the northern half of Olean in 1812. In 1814 the town of Perry was formed from the western parts of Olean and Ischua, reducing Olean to the territory now embraced in the towns of Portville, Olean, Allegany, Carrolton, Great Valley, Humphrey, Hinsdale, and Ischua. In 1818 Olean lost half its remaining territory by the erection of Great Valley, which then included what are now the towns of Great Valley, Carrolton, Allegany, and Humphrey. Hinsdale, including the present town of Ischua, was taken off in 1820 and Portville was formed in 1837, which reduced Olean to its present size and form, and which embraces all of town one and the south half of town two, range four, of the Holland Company's survey, covering an area of 21,846 acres.

The purchase by Maj. Adam Hoops of 20,000 acres from the Holland Land Company, embracing the territory of the village and lands adjoining, has been described in Chapter IX. In 1804 Robert Hoops, a brother of Adam, came to Olean in the interest of the latter and erected a log house in what is now East Olean. It stood near the bank of the river and the location was long known as Olean Point. Nearly ninety years ago this little habitation was in a trackless forest, and it was then the center of the high hopes of its proprietor. In his imagination he saw a city rise on the plain in the midst of a populous and well-cultivated country; he saw the waters in the river's full banks plowed by busy steamers and other craft; he saw the forests melt away and manufactories and mercantile industries spring up as if by magic; in fact he saw a populous and prosperous city. All this has happened, except that the "iron horse" is a substitute for the navigation of the too small but beautiful Allegheny. The city has appeared; its merchandise, its manufactures, its fine educational buildings and public library, its costly churches, its palatial residences—all are here. The result is but the expansion of the enterprise and energy of the pioneer who built the log cabin in the unbroken forest on the banks of the Allegheny.

Olean, situated at the head of navigation of the Allegheny river and on the line of emigrant travel to the west, grew rapidly at first. Emigrants from the eastern part of this State, and from New England, en route to the far west, came to this place to avail themselves of the cheap and easy transportation offered on board the numerous flat-boats and rafts of lumber which annually descended the river until the completion of the Erie canal. There was a time after the river was cleared of ice, and before its ebb, when it transported men, families, rafts, etc., successfully to their destination. Emigrants arriving in Olean before this were obliged to wait for the tide. The venerable O. P. Boardman, the last surviving witness of those stirring times, states that people to the number of 2,000 at one time congregated here waiting the "moving of the waters." Then the inns and "old boat-house" overflowed; every nook and corner was filled; even shanties of boards were made to shelter the great crowd. This was a harvest for the taverns and such as had space in their houses to rent and provisions to sell. Flour brought $25 per barrel and pork $50. The expectations of the villagers rose higher than their flooded river, and all were sanguine that the little village would outgrow or rival Buffalo. But alas! the shining ignis fatuus disappeared about the time of the completion of the Erie canal, and only shone again for a short time upon the completion of the Genesee canal, when the people again thought they saw a prospect of making the Allegheny in connection with their canal (now abandoned) a mighty thoroughfare or outlet to the Gulf of Mexico. The people's last hope in this chimerical scheme died of inanition and the town relapsed into a somnolent condition; with all its "natural advantages" it was outstripped in population by several of its sister towns in the county.

In 1825 the entire town, including Hinsdale and Ischua, had a population of only 404; in 1830, 561; in 1840, without Hinsdale and Ischua, 638; in 1850, 899; in 1870, 2,668; in 1880, 6,575; in 1890, 11,507. Olean is now a city with excellent banks, the best of school buildings, several fine churches, a good city hall, an unfailing supply of pure water, electric lights and street cars, and a well-organized fire department.

The following interesting reminiscences are from the fluent and graphic pen of the late Hon. James G. Johnson, one of Olean's pioneers and most respected citizens. No historical data of the town and vicinity can excel it for accuracy and intrinsic value:

The allusion to, and extracts from, an old estray copy of the Hamilton Recorder, which appeared in the Times a few weeks since, afforded me great pleasure in re-perusal. Old times, scenes, friends, and acquaintances came vividly back to mind with all the spirit and surroundings of early days. In fancy I again saw "the old boys" who first settled and afterward made Olean Point famous as a "tough little town." I again saw, as it were, Coudery the sedate, steady-going man of thirty years or upwards, and Smead, the rollicking, devil-may-care young fellow of perhaps twenty-two, full of sport and wit. And there were Sylvanus Russell, Willis Thrall, Jehiel Boardman, Walter Wood, Hoyt Webb, Luman Rice, Israel Curtis, the sheriff Deforest, and a score of others, brave, sturdy pioneers, ready for hard work, adventure, or anything which might occur. They are all gone now, and the boy who used to look up to them with awe and listened with admiration to their "yarns" and exploits has grown to be himself an older man than they, well along to the close of the pilgrimage which has ended with them. In thinking of those early days and settlers, and of the many interesting and often ludicrous scenes which were enacted on the very ground over which we daily tread, and of which so many of the present residents of Olean are blissfully ignorant, it seems to have become a duty for me to snatch some of the principal scenes and actors from the oblivion into which they are rapidly drifting.

The first permanent settlement anywhere within 100 miles of Olean was at Almond in 1796. It was made by a half-dozen emigrants from Luzerne county, Pa., two of whom were Moses and Benjamin Van Campen, uncle and father of George Van Campen, well known as an active citizen and present proprietor of the Olean House who comes naturally to this business, his father having started the first hotel in the country at Almond in 1805. The next nearest settlement was that of John King, a Philadelphia Quaker, who with his family and, for those days, quite a retinue of servants, in 1798, settled on the Oswayo creek and on the present site of Ceres, Pa. At the same time another Quaker settlement was established on Tunesassa creek (Quaker run) in Elko. Both these settlements were made under the auspices of the "Society of Friends, of Philadelphia," and were devoted to the aid and benefit of the Indians.

In Nov., 1802, Benjamin Van Campen, then twenty-four years old, was sent by Adam Hoops and David Heuston to make an examination of the lands in this vicinity. He made his headquarters at King's, on Oswayo creek, and spent two months in making his examination, encountering many hardships from the severity of the weather. His son, George Van Campen, Sr., has now in his possession the compass used by his father to shape his course through the then almost impassible forests. It is a simple brass box, two and one-half inches in diameter, and its needle is as sensitive and true to the pole as it undoubtedly was then. On the favorable report of young Van Campen Hoops and Heuston purchased of the Holland Land Company a tract of 20,000 acres and in the spring of 1803 Enos Kellogg was sent here to locate and survey the tract. In the summer of 1804 Robert Hoops, a brother of Adam, came here as agent of the lands, and built him a double log house on a small bench of ground on the river bank, almost exactly in the rear of the present Martin farm buildings. I can remember it as a little old, tumble-down log house surrounded by a small, young orchard, some of whose trees are still standing. Early in 1806 Hoops was joined by John and Cornelius Brooks, Willis Thrall, William Shepard, and James Green, who located near him. The next winter Thrall and Shepard erected a saw-mill on Olean creek, three miles above its mouth, on what is now known as the Van Dusen farm. The first lumber cut in the county was at this mill, and the first raft was made up in the spring of 1807 and run down the creek and river by Bibbins Follett, Jedediah Strong, and Dr. Bradley. This mill was of primitive construction, having a single upright saw, yet for many years it was actively engaged and did good duty as late as 1830 and perhaps a few years later. Cornelius Brooks purchased a farm two miles north of this village, the same which is now owned and occupied by his heirs. John Brooks remained here but a short time and removed to Cincinnati. William Shepard purchased the farm now occupied by William B. Shepard, and died and was buried thereon Sept. 21, 1809. His was the first death in the county. Olean Shepard, his daughter, was the first white female child born in the county, the date of her birth being May 22, 1807. She is living in Buffalo, the widow of a Mr. Butts. James Green moved to and built a saw-mill on Haskel creek about 1809, but sold out and moved to Great Valley, where he died. His son "Wats John" was a somewhat famous character.

In the spring of 1808 James G. Johnson (my father), Sylvanus Russell, and another man named Follett, I think, came to Olean; my father was from Canandaigua and Russell from Angelica. Sylvanus Russell was the first man married in Angelica, his wife's maiden name being Esther Van Wickle and the event occurring in 1805. He afterward kept a tavern on the site of the present residence of George Chamberlain and was father of the venerable Mrs. Seymour Bouton, now residing at Allegany. My brother, Marcus Hamilton Johnson, was born Oct. 4, 1809, and was the first white male child born in Olean. My father died early in 1811, a few weeks before my birth, and was the first person buried in our present beautiful cemetery. Jedediah Strong married William Shepard's widow and died while on a trip down the river about 1823. Bibbins Follett died in Hinsdale in 1809. Willis Thrall lived here till 1823-24, when he started for Rochester to sell a splendid span of black horses he had raised here, and was taken sick at Mendon, Monroe county, and died suddenly.

When the village was first laid out it was called "Hamilton" in honor of the then great and popular statesman, Alexander Hamilton, but the local designation of "Olean Point" was generally used, and in course of time supplanted the name of Hamilton. There never was any formal change of names, the substitution of one for the other being made by common custom and consent. I think the first semi-official abandonment of Hamilton and adoption of Olean was in the authorized village map published in 1836.

The first court held in the county was here in Olean, the first sitting being July 3, 1817. Timothy H. Porter was the first judge and James Brooks, Ashbel Freeman, and Francis Green were associate or county judges, as they were then called. The same year the county was organized Sylvanus Russell opened the first inn on the site of the present residence of Judge Bolles, from whence, about 1819, he removed to the site of George Chamberlain's residence. The house grew to be very popular with the better class of travelers and in later years was a favorite resort. In 1809 Robert Hoops built a grist-mill at the mouth of Olean creek. It was a frame building about 24x32 feet and two stories high. It had but a single run of stone, yet for about twenty years it did all the grinding of grain for the entire population. It ceased operations about 1828, when another mill was built on the site of the present Martin's mills. This mill eventually burned down and was rebuilt in its present form in 1857.

Robert Hoops died in 1816 in reduced circumstances. His brother being unable to make payments on the lands purchased here they reverted finally to the Holland Land Company, and by virtue of a mortgage thereon were resold to Beardsley and Ebenezer Norton, who sent an agent here to take charge. Many of the purchasers of original town lots had to pay over again at least a part of the stipulated purchase money. On the whole, however, the owners were quite lenient and the matter was adjusted amicably. After the death of Hoops his housekeeper, an old maid named Nancy Furbelow, lived in an old log house nearly upon the site of the present school house adjoining the public square. Being old, and left totally unprovided for, after the death of Hoops she for several years became a charge upon the town—the first pauper of the county. She was removed about 1819 and for nearly twenty years lived with a family near the State line, the cost of her living being annually paid by the town. The log house she occupied here was afterward used as a school house.

Levi Gregory opened the first store in Olean in 1811. His store was situated on what is now the Baptist church lot. For some years Gregory prospered and did well. He built and lived in the house now owned and occupied by C. V. B. Barse. His store now forms the rear part of the residence of Seth Warren. Some time during the latter part of 1818 Gregory's finances became disturbed, and after much unavailing effort the sheriff sought him on a civil process, but Gregory successfully barricaded himself in his house and the officer could not get at him. On Sunday morning, however, he came boldly out, took a boat, and hired several men to row him beyond the State line before the day expired. In those days this was the favorite route for all who desired to escape from the hands of justice and too pressing creditors in the eastern States, and it was a very common event for pursued and pursuers to go hunting through the town, and taking a boat hasten down the river. When the chase was close and hot the pursuing parties frequently engaged the reservation Indians to overtake the fleeing culprits with their light, swift canoes, and it was woe to the luckless wight who fell into their clutches. Imprisonment for debt was then in vogue, and it was to escape this that so many fled the country for their own if not their country's good.

Between the years 1811 and 1819 the town or village of Hamilton became pretty well filled with settlers, as they were then called, and a considerable village had grown up in the forest, which still surrounded it on every side. The Allegheny river was then the great thoroughfare between the east and Ohio, which was then the Great West. It is impossible for me to fix the date of each arrival, but on my return with my mother in the fall of 1819 we found here Ebenezer Reed, who was one of the first settlers of what is now the town of Franklinville, and who with his numerous family was keeping the "Old Boat-House." Andrew Northrup, Ebenezer Lockwood, Odel Lockwood, Hoyt Webb, Josiah Tracy, G. W. Warner, F. S. Martin, Timothy H. Porter, John A. Bryan, Henry Bryan, Levi Gregory, Jacob Downing, David Bockes, Dr. Norman Smith, Dr. Bennett, Luman Rice, Samuel and James Brunson, James Atkins, Walter Wood, Martin Morrell, Horatio and Amos Orton, William Stilwell, D. D. Aiken, H. L. Osborn, Parson Thrall, Henry Miller, David Jones, M. B. Canfield, Robert Hinds, Zachariah Oosterhoudt, John Boardman, James Lockwood, Baxter Wilmarth, Henry L. Kingsbury, and many others were residents of the village and engaged in business.

I am still writing of the scenes and actors of 1819-20, when what is now the town of Allegany was called "Five Mile Run" and for all practical purposes was a part of Olean. Ebenezer Reed had built and was occupying a house on one of the four corners embraced in the lower part of the present village. Amos R. Orton lived a mile up the creek, where the Henry Chamberlain place now is. Isaac Eggleston, who died a few years since in Allegany, then lived on the farm now owned by Sylvester J. Horton; Andrew L. Allen lived on the Sweeter farm and David Orton on the farm now owned by H. W. McClure. Hiram Wood and, soon after him, James Knapp lived near where the Wilsey farm now is. Amos and David Orton and Andrew Allen were finally proselyted by the Mormons and left the country, going to Kirtland, Ohio, the rendezvous and first settlement of Joseph Smith and his followers. Some years later the people of Olean became well acquainted with Mormonism and the Mormons, as it was by "the river route" all eastern proselytes shipped to the camps of the faithful. With the exception of small clearings made by the above named settlers, between Olean and Chapell hill was a dense forest. In 1822 James Strong removed with his family to the farm now owned by his son James. In a few years that valley contained the best farming lands in the country. Sally Strong was the first woman married in Allegany, that event occurring in 1825.

Walter Wood, who advertised the young negroes for sale in a copy of the Recorder in 1819, lived where Richard King now resides and had an old-fashioned tannery, not quite so large as Jewett & Keating's, on the edge of the swamp, but what is now considered low ground. The building was about 30x40 feet. Wood left one night by the water route just ahead of his creditors, who seemed exceedingly anxious to bid him good-bye. There was a thick alder swamp, perhaps fifteen to twenty rods wide, running parallel with the river and westerly from the canal bridge, down below Fifth street, and strange as it may now seem there was once a good corduroy road across it at the lower end of our present Union street. I remember that one day an old she-bear and two cubs were discovered playing near the edge of this swamp, and the discovery produced considerable excitement in that vicinity. Men assembled, guns loaded, dogs called out, and a formidable hunting party speedily organized for an attack. They were pursued into the swamp and the old bear and one of the cubs were finally killed near where the pottery now stands. I tasted some of the steak that night and must confess that I have never since "hankered" very much for bear meat.

"Uncle Billy Nelson" was a peculiar character, being a bachelor and a Scotch-Irishman, the only native of the green isle in the place. He was a very intelligent man, well known, and respected by everybody. He boarded with Sylvanus Russell, and on one St. Patrick's day, having no compatriots or sympathizers with his national holiday, he celebrated it alone in grand style, marching down the center of the street, bearing an improvised green flag, and winding up the day with the usual ceremonies and observances. He died, and was buried, I think, with Masonic rites. At that early day there was a flourishing lodge here, and I can distinctly remember an imposing celebration of St. John's day when Luman Rice kept the hotel which now forms a part of the Olean House.

Sylvanus Russell, who kept a tavern where George Chamberlain resides, was a man of very marked characteristics, prominent among the best men of the day, prompt, active, decided, and exceedingly resolute, especially in his adherence to his opinions. An anecdote, formerly related with much gusto, fully illustrates the man. Benjamin Seeley, a large, strong, bony, active, laboring young man, had just come to Olean, and among other things in which he excelled was the then not uncommon art of chopping cord-wood. He boarded with Russell and soon engaged with him to chop some wood at a given price per cord, board included. After breakfast each morning Seeley would take his axe and go to the woods, now a part of the public square and to and beyond the Episcopal church. Returning for dinner he would always spend the afternoon playing checkers in the barroom, then a favorite and common practice. After a week or ten days of this kind of work Russell became uneasy and surly. He was sure Seeley was not fairly earning his board.

Accordingly, one afternoon when Seeley was seating himself to his regular pastime Russell approached him and roughly said: "Young man, I think it about time we measured up what little wood you have cut and have a settlement." "All right," answered Seeley, quietly, and out to the woods they went. After they had taken dimensions of the various piles they returned to the tavern and figured up the total. To Russell's surprise he found that Seeley had cut an average of three cords per day! Without hesitation he handed him the balance due and then said: "Young man, you can leave now; I'll be d—d if I'll have a man around me that will put up three cords of wood a day and spend half of the time playing checkers in the house!" Seeley had to leave. Russell died, I believe, somewhere about 1840. Four of his daughters and two sons are living. Three daughters live in this county—two near Ellicottville and Mrs. Bouton at Allegany; the oldest daughter is living in Michigan; one of the sons lives at Farmersville and the other has some time been a resident of Cincinnati.

In the spring of 1820 a serious accident occurred that sent a shock through the little community, from which it did not recover in a long time. Four men started down the river in a small boat, intending to go to Ellicottville to attend a sitting of the County Court. The usual route was down the river to Great Valley, and thence up the creek to the then county capital. One of the party was Dr. Bennett; another was, I think, Jeremiah Osborne; another was Joseph Lockwood; and the fourth was a young emigrant named Kibbey, whose family preceded him in a flat-boat down the river on their way to Ohio. How the accident occurred was never positively known, but it was generally supposed that in going down the river—it occurred near Plum Orchard bend—their boat became entangled in an old tree-top, was upset, and the whole party drowned. The bodies of Dr. Bennett, Osborne, and Kibbey were recovered after long search, but that of Lockwood was never found. The three were buried and their remains still lie in our village cemetery. Originally a wooden slab or board was set up at the head of each grave, and the name, age, and circumstances of death was painted thereon. In time these planks rotted away, were buried in the earth, and for a long time lay flat on the grave of the man whose name it commemorated. Two of them finally disappeared, but the third was reset; of this nothing is left but a weather-beaten plank, rounded at the top, having on one side some ridges and elevations slightly suggestive of lines and letters.

There were also living within the limits of the village Jehiel Boardman (on the farm now occupied by his son, O. P. Boardman), James and Cornelius Brooks, Col. Luke Goodspeed, Erastus Thrall, Samuel Barrows, Nathaniel Seeley, David N. Huntley, Martin Freeman, James Strong, and others, all scattered along the banks of Olean creek for about three miles up, or to Thrall & Shepard's mill. Ebenezer Reed kept a tavern at what was then known as the "Boat-House Landing," where Fourth street now intersects the river directly below the residence of H. B. Davis. Reed had also a long, low wooden building containing fourteen or sixteen rooms, all on the ground floor, which he rented to emigrant families. The boat house, from which the landing-place took its name, was a large building set directly on the bank of the river and between it and the tavern. In this boat house Reed made and from it launched into the river boats sold to emigrants. These boats were of the cheap, flat-bottom order, usually twelve and sixteen feet wide and from twenty-five to fifty feet in length. Reed was at that time considered one of the richest men, if not the richest man, in the town. He lived to be very old and became greatly reduced in property. I have often heard him wish he could die, and, in fact, he always seemed angry because he could not. Having lost everything—property, family, friends, and even his taste of food—he could see no further use in living.

Zachariah Oosterhoudt, father of Samuel Oosterhoudt, lived just west of Reed's tavern and collection of buildings. John Boardman, who lately died at Randolph, lived just below Oosterhoudt and there kept a small store. A decided frontier character was David Jones, a bachelor who lived and kept a grocery just above Reed's corner. Jones was a mighty hunter—in some respects; he always was well provided with hounds for running deer, which he both used and lent for the chase of that plentiful game. He was always accompanied, wherever he went, by the old mother and seven or eight young whelps, all frisking, and yelping, and playing around him. People were always informed of Jones's intended visit by the noise of this band. Jones had a curious taste—for it could not be called spite, friend and foe being treated alike—of giving his dogs the "front names" of prominent citizens in the village and adjoining country. Thus I remember one was called "Tim" after Hon. Timothy H. Porter; another "Henry" after Henry Bryan; another after Lawyer Canfield; and so on till dogs or men gave out. Each dog was trained to respond promptly when his name was called, and the performance often created much amusement. Davy and his pack of hounds disappeared in time, but where they went I have no idea, except, perhaps, it was to "Davy Jones's Locker."

Henry Miller, who afterward removed to Angelica and was a justice of the peace at that place many years, lived in a frame building on the bank of the river about thirty rods below where the bridge now stands. Chester Vibbard also kept a grocery on the river bank almost exactly where the bridge now stands. My impressions are that it was a hard place, but I may be somewhat prejudiced, as it was there, and at the hands of Vibbard and the crowd which frequented his grocery, that I suffered my first great personal affront. I was then a boy about nine years of age and the fortunate possessor of a black wool hat, which in those days was looked upon and regarded by the boys as a badge of almost aristocratic distinction. Consequently I was very choice and proud of it. I was cruising along the river bank in front of Vibbard's one day, when the crowd swooped suddenly down upon me and took forcible possession of my cherished hat. For three hours they used it for the detestable purpose of "shaking coppers for drinks" and when I regained it somehow it seemed to be contaminated.

The road from Olean via Chapell hill and Ellicottville to Buffalo was opened about the year 1828, and a good portion of the expense was borne by the Holland Land Company. Dr. Andrew Mead acted as agent for the company in the location and construction of the road. The present route over Chapell hill was first looked out and marked through the woods by him. The State road was first opened, barely wide enough for the clear passage of a wagon, through to the State line below Cold Spring as early as 1813 or '14. It was laid out by three commissioners appointed by the State, viz.: Jedediah Strong, of Olean, Moses Van Campen, of Angelica, and a Mr. Hulburt. The road ran nearly the entire length of the reservation and then branched off toward and terminated at Lake Erie. Most of it soon became impassable, mainly from trees falling across the track, and as it was used mostly by Indians these were never removed. An Indian, I believe, was never known to cut a fallen tree out of his road, but if it happened to be a larger one than he could drive over he would spend much time in cutting smaller trees and saplings and piling them up on either side of the larger obstacle until he had made a sort of bridge over it. About 1840 a tax was levied on the Indian lands by the Board of Supervisors, commissioners were appointed, and a very good road was laid out the entire length of the reservation in this county. The expense of the road was about $40,000. The well known "Wats John" Green was one of the commissioners engaged in the laying out and construction of this road. The tax became a bone of contention between the State and county authorities, and it has only been within the past few years that the State finally relieved the county from further trouble and responsibility. This was accomplished, I believe, mainly through the efforts of Hon. N. M. Allen, of Dayton.

In the decade between 1820 and 1830 a weekly mail was carried between Olean and Buffalo by Peter Sampson, who regularly made his appearance here Saturday nights. This service was afterward increased to three times per week and so continued until 1851, when the mail was carried to Great Valley and then transferred to the Erie railway. Calvin Abbott also carried a weekly mail from Olean to Moscow for a number of years prior to and in the early part of that decade. From about 1828 to 1832 Stephen Olney carried a mail once a week between this place and Warren, Pa. Saturday night, also, was sure to find him here, though he made the trip through the woods on foot, carrying his slightly filled sack thrown across his shoulders. Moses Harvey, who now lives at Hinsdale, was another mail carrier in those days. He was then a sturdy young Pennsylvania German whose route terminated at Jersey Shore, Pa. For a long term of years he carried his mail sixty miles through a wilderness, devoid of a single inhabitant. Midway on his route he had a station house and stable in one, where himself and horse remained over night on each trip. The late John Magee, of Steuben County Bank memory, together with his brothers, T. J. and Hugh Magee, were the first contractors for carrying the eastern mail between Olean and Bath in stages. I can well remember, in the twenties, of seeing Hugh Magee, then a young man, acting as driver of one of these stages. He afterward married the widow of the drowned Joseph Lockwood. There was still another weekly mail route between here and Bellefonte, Pa. This went by way of Smethport and for a long time supplied that place. The principal routes of travel from the east to the west led to Olean and thence by the river. One of these routes was from Canandaigua through Geneseo, Moscow, Perry, Pike, Rushford, Cuba, and Hinsdale; another was through Dansville, Almond, Angelica, Friendship, Cuba, and Hinsdale. There was also a turnpike road beginning at Bath and terminating at Hinsdale, which was a toll road, and within my recollection there was a toll gate on it at what was then known as the Howe farm, two and a half miles above Hinsdale. As early as 1825-26 there was an underground route between the eastern slave States and Canada, which was traveled principally by colored persons of both sexes, and one of the branches of this mysterious route passed through Olean and was well patronized for many years.

Some passengers by this route in 1828 were the cause of the first tarring and feathering operation which occurred in this vicinity: One day four stalwart young colored men came to Martin's hotel asking for something to eat and information concerning the route to Canada. Some dinner was prepared for them and while they were in the kitchen eating two white F. F. V.'s rode up on horseback, accompanied by a great strapping fellow, mounted on a mule, whom they hired for a guide. He was well known here as the teamster of James L. Gillis,* a merchant at Ridgway, who at that time drew all his supplies through Olean on wagons. To the F. F. V.'s inquiries concerning the colored men Martin replied that he had seen them but a short time before, and advised them to hurry on toward Buffalo by the road leading through Allegany. Thinking they were close upon their prey they started off at full speed, and were gone about two hours, during which the colored gentlemen were safely provided for on the premises of the late Judge James Brooks, whose house, during his lifetime, was known as the "Methodist Tavern" and "House of Refuge" for all unfortunates. After going some four miles the pursuing party learned from some men who were at work on the road that they were on the wrong track, and retraced their steps. They wanted to stop overnight with Martin, but in consequence of some remarks used by them, or for some other reason, he refused to keep them and they went down to Russell's. After getting a little steamed up their teamster guide came up town and began blowing and telling what the F. F. V.'s were going to do. Unfortunately for himself he kept this up till after dark, when Henry Garner, a Kentucky fugitive, with two or three others of the same stamp, were provided with a bucket of tar and a feather pillow, which were speedily added to the cuticular adornment of Gillis's teamster. He made his way back to Russell's, where his employers spent most of the night in cleaning him off so he could get home. The next Sunday morning, as I was returning from a solitary bath in the Olean creek, I met him on his mule going at full run with an open dirk-knife in his hand. As he passed I noticed that one side of his head was still covered with tar and feathers. He never drove Mr. Gillis's team through here again.

Anna Carpenter, then a young unmarried woman, afterward the mother of the late Mrs. McIntosh, began a school in Oct., 1819, in an old log house near where now is the well just above George Chamberlain's furnace. The next year Lewis Seymour taught school in a building belonging to Sylvanus Russell, which had been before used as a bakery. This school of Seymour's, I think, was a private enterprise of Sylvanus Russell's. Seymour afterward taught in a building near and in the rear of where James Kelsey's house now stands. James Adkins, always called "Judge" Adkins, then lived on the old Hoops place. Near the house was a circular mound, probably twenty-five feet across and some three or four feet in height. Here the school-boys used to dig out stone arrowheads, glass beads, and other Indian relics. I do not remember that any bones were found in these juvenile explorations, yet the general supposition was that at some time there had been a battle fought near by, and according to Indian custom the dead had been gathered up and friend and foe consigned to the common heap, which, being deeply covered with earth, formed the mound. Robert Hinds then lived in a log house where Stanley Martin's house now stands. He kept a grocery store where B. P. Crosby now resides. Hinds had previously kept a tavern on what is now the Bela Norton farm. Adkins and Hinds both "took the chute" down the river with their families. Adkins went to Cincinnati and Hinds, somewhere to the great northwest. Among the names I have not previously mentioned is that of Paul Black, who lived in a log house situated on the spot where Dr. Whitney now lives. Without Paul the town could scarcely have flourished and made growth, as he was a brick mason. His masterpieces were those immense fireplaces and chimneys which were so famous in those days alike for their size and generous warmth and hospitality. Two of these monuments of the olden time and Paul's handiwork and skill are still in existence: one in the old rear part of the Penfield house, facing the southwest corner of the public square; the other chimney is in the old Northrup house, now occupied by colored Sarah Johnson. These "grand" chimneys—and they were grand, too, in many ways—were built up from a carefully prepared, solid ground foundation, usually in the exact geographical center of the house; they were always constructed on the Masonic principle of an oblong square, being about 5x10 feet at the base and for about half their height, when they were "drawn in" or contracted so that the portion which projected through the ridge of the roof was 3x3½ feet square. On the ground floor, on both of the long sides of the square, were huge fireplaces, generally four feet long, four feet high, and one and one-half feet deep. These were not placed in the middle of the architectural pile, but rather at one side, the remaining portion being occupied by a "bake-oven," which was heated by filling it with wood, the embers being removed before the articles to be baked were placed therein.

Through the medium of one of these chimneys was once played a practical joke on Henry Bryan, the lawyer, who was one of the half-dozen jokers who were ever on the alert to amuse themselves and the town. Two worthy confrères of Bryan were Judge Timothy Porter and H. L. Osborne, a "merchant tailor." Bryan was a bachelor and roomed in his office, which stood on the present site of A. Adams's store and boasted one of Paul Black's famous chimneys with two deep fireplaces. In 1822 a man came along putting in what he called "patent fireplaces," which, when fitted into one of Paul's large fireplaces, made a tremendous draft and almost drew the wood from the andirons. Bryan saw one operate and was determined to have it. He put one in his front office, finished it, and started a fire just at night, and piled up the wood on the hearth, where it burned without a particle of smoke escaping into the room. After enjoying the improvement for some time he closed his office and went for his supper to the hotel then kept by F. S. Martin. At the supper table his exultations were so great that he could not keep from boasting of his new fireplace and insisted that all who were there should go across the street and look at his magnificent fire. A baker's dozen accompanied him, and with the pride of an emperor Bryan applied the key and flung the door wide open. Judge of the astonishment of himself and party when an immense volume of blinding smoke burst forth! Bryan rushed in to put out the fire, but quickly came out nearly suffocated, much to the amusement of the crowd, who laughed and shouted long and loud, while Bryan danced around like a madman and filled the air with curses and malediction on chimneys, builders, and patent fireplaces in particular. Finding that none of the smoke went into the chimney Bryan became frantic; seizing a pair of tongs he threw the fire all out of the door, strangling, weeping, and cursing at every breath, whilst his unsympathizing friends laughed and jeered at his rage and discomfiture. He then procured a crowbar and never stopped till the patent fireplace was entirely torn out and every brick hurled into the street. Tired, sore, and mad beyond conception he crept into his cold bed and shivered till morning. He arose early, and after viewing and cursing the débris he took a look up the dark throat of the huge chimney. The darkness was such as to send him tearing out of the office, and getting a ladder he was soon on the roof. There he found a wide board cut to the size of, and laid across, the top of the chimney! It soon became known that while Bryan was at supper Judge Timothy Porter and the tailor Osborne had secretly caused the fearful turmoil and trouble. Bryan was too mad to say anything for days. He cleared the rubbish out of his office and thereafter read Blackstone and cracked jokes upon the old Paul Black fireplace. It was never meddled with again till it was torn down many years afterward.

Aunt Sarah Johnson was originally the "property" of a wealthy family living in Baltimore. At one time, and I think not long after her arrival here, she was housekeeper for and had charge of the bachelor hall of Dr. Andrew Mead. He was well qualified to meet the cares and responsibilities devolved upon him in the treatment of a terrible epidemic, typhus fever, which prevailed to an alarming extent throughout this entire region during the whole of one year and a portion of the next. In fact, almost the entire population were prostrated with the disease at one time, and the good doctor's daily ride embraced a circuit of fifteen to twenty miles around. Scarcely a house but had one case, and in many there were two and three and in some even four cases of the disease at one time. Of course there were many deaths, but I now only remember those of Col. Luke Goodspeed, Seymour Bouton, father of Seymour Bouton, of Allegany, and the first wife of Ebenezer Reed.

Ebenezer Lockwood was sheriff in 1822 and at one time owned the mills and lands now known as the Homer property. Afterward and about 1832-33 he became the landlord of the hotel now the Olean House. For many years he was partially blind, owing to severe inflammation of the eyes. He finally removed to Iowa. Odel Lockwood, who was in the business with his brother Joseph until the latter's death, returned to New York and for many years thereafter was a member of the firm of White, Lockwood & Co. Josiah Tracy, a clerk with De Forest & Co., was, I think, one of the best looking young men I ever saw. He went to Painesville, Ohio, where he engaged in business for himself, and finally became a prominent merchant. D. D. Aiken was another attaché of De Forest's store. I think he returned to New Berlin, Chenango county, when De Forest retired from business here and returned thither and eventually became a merchant there. De Forest's son, William, was then a boy of about my own age, who became an efficient officer in the regular army.

Hoty Webb, another merchant who advertised liberally in the Hamilton Recorder, had his store where Barse & Co.'s hardware store now stands. Him I remember as a man of middle age, a sedate, steady man, and one of the few who at that time gave religious matters any attention and was prominent in maintaining public worship. For a time services were held in his store chamber. There was also a Sunday school held there, and I have a vivid recollection of being one of the many boys who unwillingly attended.

The first and for many years the only religious services held in this place were conducted by itinerant Methodist preachers, whose home was mainly on horseback, and whose entire wardrobe and religious outfit was contained in a pair of weather-stained saddlebags. The first church society in Olean was organized by Rev. Mr. Stone, a Congregational minister, who previously lived at or near Livonia. He came to this place and began his labors in 1822-23. The Rev. Mr. Stone was a second cousin of my mother, and my stepfather, Anson

King, and Ahijah C. Warren, father of Seth W. Warren, were deacons of the church and presided at the services for many years. Minister Stone used to go to Millgrove and other points up the river and hold meetings, and some such men as the Hewitts, of Millgrove, sustained him. He only remained here a couple of years, and I presume all the records of the church were lost when Deacon King left here in 1828.

Masten Morrill, a very candid, honest man, lived in a large frame house standing where Schenkel's marble works now are. The house was a great barn-like structure, which was blown down by the great hurricane of 1834. Morrill was a justice of the peace and administered justice after the good old primitive style. A very good story used to be told of him which fairly illustrates the absence of red tape and formality which largely prevailed among our old-time Solons. Some creditor of Morrill's, who lived out of town, called one day to urge the payment of a certain promissory note held by him, and which was overdue. Morrill could not pay. The creditor was urgent and pressing, and finally threatened to sue. To save payment of costs, etc., Morrill proposed to his creditor that he should enter judgment against himself upon his own docket and proceed to collect the amount of himself by regular and due course of law. After a full discussion of the merits and advantages of the plan the proposition was accepted and Morrill actually issued a summons against himself, had it properly served by an officer, judgment was entered, an execution issued, and his property was sold by James Bronson, then a constable, who turned the proceeds over to the hands of Justice Morrill for the benefit of the creditor. Morrill afterward removed to Napoli, where he died. He left a large family.

My own impressions, coupled with the most reliable information I can obtain, lead me to conclude that the first brick made in Olean for the purpose of sale were manufactured by a man named Nichols, and that his yard was located very nearly where now is the canal basin. Jehiel Boardman also made a lot of brick for his own use on his farm somewhere about 1816-17. There was then a long bridge extending across the low ground lying between the south end of Merritt's warehouse and the north end of the canal basin. This bridge was constructed in the ordinary manner, of heavy timbers and plank, and was elevated some eight or ten feet above the ground. It was for many years the favorite promenade and lounging-place for the town on warm moonlight nights, and many tender episodes, ludicrous incidents, and sharp trades, besides other things, had their origin or culmination there. In after years, in 1823-24, the bridge was torn down and the timber and plank laid snug and straight on the ground and covered with at least two feet of earth, making a high turnpike. Its remains were incorporated in the west bank of the canal.

William Stilwell, house carpenter and joiner and father of Mrs. J. F. Gleason, of this place, then owned and lived in a house situated on the site lately occupied by what was known as the Petroleum House, burned down in 1867. I can remember him well as a tall, straight, athletic man, a rapid talker, always full of energy and activity, and a thorough master of his business. He came here from Westchester county and after remaining a few years removed to Franklinville, where he died. There were here in 1820 three brothers, Penuel, Samuel, and Kibbee McCluer. Penuel was married and had a family. He was either an agent or in some way interested in one of those general Yankee peddling organizations which then sprang into existence and in an exceedingly short time overran the entire country. Samuel McCluer was a bachelor merchant who kept a store on the site of John Steyner's store. The venerable H. W. McClure, now living near Allegany, was then a youth of promise and clerked for him a year or two. Kibbee McCluer remained and afterward married Emily, a sister of O. P. Boardman, and died a few years later, leaving two young daughters, of whom Mrs. W. B. Pierce was one. David Bockes came here from Albany with Jacob Downing and a few years later engaged in business with H. L. Osborne, "the perpetual joker," under the firm name of Osborne & Bockes. In addition to their mercantile business they also purchased and ran lumber down the river. They continued in partnership some six or seven years, when Bockes married and soon after began hotel keeping in a frame building situated where the Moore House is now kept, and remained there until he became the owner of a mill and lands on Haskel creek, when he removed thither and lived there until his death. He had a remarkable memory, especially for national political events. He had great aptitude for the management and transaction of general business. His family consisted of his wife, two sons, and two daughters.

Seymour Bouton, who died at this place in 1821, came, I think, from Westchester county and first settled at Ischua Center in an early day, he being the first or one of the first settlers in that town, Amos Pitcher locating there soon after his arrival. As I remember him Bouton was a very active, energetic, resolute, unconquerable man; enterprising and untiring in every labor he undertook he soon cleared up the flat at Ischua and kept a tavern there several years. He also cleared up another farm just over the hill toward Franklinville. The two large barns, which were the only buildings on it for many years, will be remembered by every old settler, as they stood there alone and were notable landmarks. His descendants were five sons and two daughters, of whom three sons and one daughter are still living. John B. Taylor, father of Lemuel and Tracy Taylor (both of whom died a few years since), came here from Rhode Island in 1817 and remained until his death. His eldest son, Cyrus, went west, and Ruth, his eldest daughter, was the first wife of Deacon Aaron J. Allen. The youngest daughter, widow Sarah Ann Wright, is the only living member of the family and resides in this place. There were also living here three brothers Clark, respectively named Barak E., Sanford, and James R. They were more or less engaged in lumbering, as was everybody else in those days. Barak E. was the father of Mrs. John L. Smith, of Portville, and died in Burton (now Allegany). James R. settled upon and cleared up the farm now owned by Charles Learn, just below Allegany village, where he died. Sanford never married and recently was living near Clarion river in Pennsylvania. Benjamin Seeley married in Allegany county, lived here a few years, and then suddenly took the chute down the river, never returning or being heard of afterward. He left a wife and two daughters here who subsequently returned to their relatives in Allegany county.

There was also a lady here who I think is entitled to notice. Her name was Mary A. Brising, an adopted daughter of one of the F. F.'s of Geneva, from which place she came to Olean. She taught a private school for several years, was well educated, and was highly respected for her talent, virtues, and variable disposition. That she was not speedily transformed into a housekeeper by some one of the wife-needy pioneers was probably attributable to the fact that she was of an uncertain age, very deaf, and fully six feet in height. Horatio Orton, for some time postmaster here, finally became a widower, and in his loneliness discovered her many good qualities, and after some practice he found sufficient strength of voice to express his desire to make her Mrs. O. No. 2. Some of the wags of the day asserted that he used a ladder and a speaking trumpet on that important occasion. She lived here until Orton's death, after which she moved to Chautauqua county, where she died.

James Bronson, who married a daughter of Pardon Thrall and sister of Willis and Erastus Thrall, went west as early as 1823-24, as did also Erastus Thrall some twenty-five years later, when he removed to Michigan. Samuel Bronson, father of Mrs. Samuel Oosterhoudt, owned and lived on the lot on State street now occupied by Milton Fobes. He resided there until some thirty years since, when he removed to Ohio, where he died. For many years he was one of the principal pilots employed in running rafts down the river. In those days this was considered a position of much dignity, and to be a pilot of a raft was the very summit of many young men's ambition. George La Rue, a son-in-law of Ebenezer Reed, I think succeeded him in keeping the old Boat-House Tavern. He kept it for several years.

At the time of which I am writing all that portion of the town lying between State and Barry streets on one side and the creek and river on the other had never been cleared of timber except the pine, consequently the ground was covered with logs, tops, and fallen timber, grown up with underbrush. The body of land was then owned by F. A. Norton, who leased it for four years to F. S. Martin, the consideration being that the latter should clear and cultivate it within that time. Martin cleared a tract as far south as Henley street, the balance remaining untouched for many years afterward. I do not remember that he did this work himself, but think he contracted it to Tunis and Buch, and William Bennett, who now lives near Cuba village. At the same time, and on the same terms, G. E. Warner cleared some ten or twelve acres in the northwest portion of the present town. He began at the Presbyterian church corner, going west as far as Fourth street and north to what is now Wayne street. These jobs were taken and done more for the sake of clearing up around the town than for any expected profit. While Martin's job of clearing was in progress there occurred the first case of small-pox in Olean of which I have any recollection. A man named George Sylvester, who had come up the river from Pittsburg but a short time before, was the victim. I well remember the terrible fright which the intelligence of his sickness with the horrible disease occasioned in the community. Many people left the place, and stood not on the method of their going, but left at once. Sylvester recovered, however, and no one else was afflicted with the disease. Where is now the public square was then a "chopping" covered with the usual débris of brush, tops, logs, chips, stumps, etc. These were cleared off in 1823 by Samuel Barrows and Erastus Thrall; William B. Shepard was engaged with them.

A somewhat noted character in those days was "Old Malinda," as she was called by everybody—a very large, fat woman of the colored persuasion. I think she came here from Albany with Jacob Downing and for a time officiated as his cook. She was here a number of years after he left, living in a cheap sort of shanty near the old Boat House, sometimes keeping a few boarders and at other times taking in work. In a wordy dispute, or badinage, I think it was generally conceded she was more than equal to the occasion or the individual, and I distinctly remember that very few cared for or sought a second encounter with her.

Andrew A. Norton, who is now living with his son-in-law in the city of Elmira, was, during the times of which I have been writing (1820-25), a prosperous and very popular merchant in Angelica, Allegany county. He was then a young man in the very prime of his manhood, full of humor and mirth, and an inveterate talker, notwithstanding his impediment of speech, which caused him to stutter fearfully, especially when temporarily excited. Benjamin Jones, father of Homer Jones, now living in Allegany, then lived on the farm now owned by Andrew Archibald. He died early, leaving two sons. His brother, Ebenezer Jones, is well remembered by every old settler for his peculiarities. He was a bachelor, and like most every one else dealt in and shipped lumber down the river. He eventually married, retired from lumbering, and settled in Allegany, where he died.

Dennis Warner, father of Colonel Warner, settled on and for some years owned the farm now occupied by the operations of Gordon's mills. He also died early, leaving two sons and one daughter. In reviving my recollections of this property the name of Truman Parker has occurred for the first time in a number of years. My impression is that he also lived on the Warner place for a number of years. He was a man of sterling worth, honest, reliable, and industrious, yet possessed of constitutional peculiarities which gave many of his proceedings an extremely eccentric character. His feelings were very susceptible of surrounding influences, while his emotion betrayed a keen sensibility of everything that was fine, delicate, and beautiful. Yet there was nothing in his general appearance which would indicate such a peculiar mental organization. In his younger days he had been an ardent teacher of sacred music, for which he had a great liking. When he came to town he would sometimes drink just enough to moderately excite his feelings and awaken a flood of old memories and predilections. At such times he would invariably ask for a singing book and a bass viol, which would always be furnished him. For two or three hours he would play and sing all the good old sacred tunes he ever knew. His music was harmonious, pleasing, and affecting. He seemed oblivious to all around, and borne away on the wings of his wild imagination he rehearsed and re-enacted the scenes of which he sung. When singing pathetic passages his voice would be full of pathos and tender feeling, while unrestricted tears of fullest sympathy would freely course down his weather-stained cheeks. While listening to his touching renditions more hand-backs and handkerchiefs than my own were constantly in requisition, for it would have been a most obdurate heart indeed which could remain unmoved during his soulful performances. He was a carpenter by trade, and once told me he drew his chest of tools on a hand-sled of his own manufacture from Washington county to Olean. He lived to an advanced age. Reuben Lamberton came here from Canandaigua as early as 1816-17. Previously he had kept a hotel or "tavern" on the ground lately occupied by the celebrated Blossom House in that village. After his arrival here he entered into partnership with Allen Rice in operating a saw-mill on the Weston mill property. Lamberton was very upright, conscientious, an active worker, and full of enterprise, but not remarkably successful in business. Neither was his comprehension of intention and meanings of an unusual order. He could talk the longest with the least reason or meaning of any man I ever knew.

There were four of the Rice brothers—George, Justus, Allen, and Luman, all large, powerful men, full of enterprise and energy. George settled seven or eight miles this side of Smethport, where he built the usual saw-mill and cleared a fine farm on the flats surrounding the junction of a smaller stream with Potato creek. He lived thereon until his death, leaving a large family to succeed him. Justus came here from Whitehall on Lake Champlain, and settled upon and cleared a large farm in Eldred near where Benton's saw-mill is now located. In after years there came a radical change in his manners and mode of life. He became a convert of the Methodists and in a few years a preacher, and was widely known as "Father Rice," a devoted disciple and prominent leader of that denomination. He lived to an unusually good old age. Luman Rice was probably more generally known, and to a later period, than any of his brothers, from the fact that he was a prominent public citizen during his entire life in this town. My first knowledge of him was as the second landlord of the old Hamilton Hotel, now incorporated in the Olean House. He bought out Horatio Orton early in 1819, kept hotel here about three years, when he went to Portville, and built a tavern there in 1823. This house was burned down two or three years later, the fire destroying nearly everything Rice owned in the shape of personal property. As an instance of the deep, practical sympathy and open-handed liberality of the early settlers in cases of suffering and necessity I am proud to state that the people turned out, and by joint labor and contributions soon rebuilt Rice's house, never ceasing until it was entirely enclosed. I well remember seeing F. S. Martin driving his team up there day after day loaded with carpenters and other voluntary workmen on Rice's new building. With the exception of a few years spent in Cincinnati as an incipient lumber merchant Rice lived and kept tavern, sold merchandise, and dabbled in lumber until his age and infirmities compelled him to relinquish all business. He was the father of Mrs. O. P. Boardman, of this town, of Mrs. Alfred Wright, and of Andrew D. Rice, the postmaster at Portville. The next I remember of Allen Rice after the failure of his and Lamberton's lumbering enterprise was of his boring for salt in Potter county, where he succeeded in manufacturing a considerable quantity of very fair quality. Lack of proper facilities for conducting his business, and the location of his wells and works in a dense and almost impenetrable forest, operated strongly against the profitability of his venture, and he finally abandoned it and went to Ohio and on the river opposite Wheeling, W. Va., where he re-engaged in salt making, at which, I believe, he continued until his death. George Rice, another brother, came here several years later than the others and died after living here but a few years. He was the father of Mrs. William B. Shepard and Mrs. F. V. Oviatt.

William Bagley and Ransom Bartlett were two large, strong, athletic young men who worked about the Rice and Lamberton mill. I have heard Bagley tell as a fact that they went into the woods one winter morning, cut down their trees, and sawed, by count, 100 pine logs, making nearly 40,000 feet of boards. This was acknowledged to be a great feat, even in those days when he was the best man who could do the most work. Bagley for a few years was a merchant, but not succeeding very well he became a farmer, owning the Samuel Oosterhoudt place. He went to Ohio, where he died. Bartlett married a daughter of John Conrad, then at Hinsdale, and settled on Haskel creek, building the first saw-mill on the present road to Portville. I think he died at Pittsburg of cholera in 1832. Daniel Weymouth succeeded Philip Culp in the ownership of the mill on the river opposite Weston's, and retained possession of it until a high flood lifted it from its foundations and carried it bodily down the river. It lodged it the mill-race nine miles below here, where Weymouth despoiled it of all its iron work and left it to its fate. It is my impression that this occurred in the fall of 1835; I distinctly recollect seeing the building float past here, right side up and in good condition. Weymouth was a man thoroughly respected for his simple honesty and perfect confidence in all his friends. His first wife left him during the Mormon excitement, taking with her their only child. She went to Cincinnati on a visit to some friends, who were not only tainted with, but converted to, the new ism, and went with them to Nauvoo and joined the band without giving him any intimation of her intentions. After years of sincere regret for her conduct, and innumerable and unavailing attempts to obtain possession of his child, he married a Miss Quick, of Portville, and died in that place.

The late John Fobes, father of Milton B. and George Fobes, I think came here from Buffalo as early as 1820. He at that time regarded Olean and its vicinity as a more promising location for a young man than Buffalo. And he was not alone in this opinion, either, for I remember to have heard the late F. S. Martin state that previous to his coming here in 1819 he was for a long time undecided in his mind whether to come here or locate in Buffalo. He visited both places, carefully studied the natural advantages of each, and finally decided in favor of "Olean Point." Mr. Fobes first settled and had a trading establishment on the Mersereau place, but a year or two afterward he purchased some land just over the Pennsylvania line and removed to it. He there built and operated a steam saw-mill and also conducted a general store, which occupied the site of the mill now owned by his sons. He lived and operated there for many years, and was one of the most prominent men in McKean county, being county commissioner for a long time. In 1832 he became a partner with Henry Bryan, who had been for some time engaged in mercantile business there. Still later he formed a partnership with Nicholas Van Wickle and continued in that business until about 1848, when he removed here and continued merchandising until his death, which occurred in 1860. He built the Fobes House (now called Moore House) about 1850. I also remember that while acting as a merchant in later years his favorite pastime was the making of ox-bows and axe-handles, at which he was very expert, and his manufactures of these articles were eagerly sought and considered superior to any others made or sold here. Mr. Fobes was a man of sterling integrity.

I do not remember with certainty what became of Judge A. V. P. Mills and family, who lived on Oswayo creek near the present Smith's mills. His son and partner, Samuel Mills, who married Anna Carpenter, I think died in Natchez on the Mississippi river, whither he had gone with a raft of lumber. He left a son and two daughters. Israel Curtis, the first sheriff of this county, first settled and lived upon the farm now known as the Scott farm, two miles this side of the village of Hinsdale. He left here as early as 1825, and I think before, but where he went or what became of him afterward I cannot say. Edward Riggs, with his mother, kept tavern on the present Bela Norton homestead. He afterward went to Kentucky and his mother removed into the village. In 1820-21 Joshua Weeks lived on what is now known as the Horace Smith farm. He left here soon after, and was succeeded by Hiram Thrall, son of Willis Thrall, who died there young, leaving one son. Jedediah Strong, who married the widow of Shepard, mother of William B. Shepard, then owned and lived on the Webster farm. She survived several years after his death and died at that place about 1833. Joshua Van Dusen, James Hepburn, Ahijah C. Warren, Ephraim Simmons, and Seth Simmons, his father, all came here I think in 1821-22 and first settled in this village. Van Dusen started a chair shop, which, for those days, was quite a large establishment and a great stroke of enterprise. It was located where S. R. Homer now lives, nearly in the rear of the Union street depot. My recollection is that he manufactured exclusively one kind of chair, which used to be called the Windsor chair. It was made with a solid wood bottom and was very popular. He remained here a few years and removed to Chautauqua county, where he figured quite prominently for several years. James Hepburn succeeded Van Dusen in the chair business. He was then quite a young man, and soon after establishing himself he married a daughter of Seth Simmons and sister of "Eph." He remained here until somewhere about 1840, when he moved to Ohio and subsequently removed still farther west. Deacon Ahijah C. Warren, who was also a son-in-law of Seth Simmons and the father of Seth Warren, was a man possessed of greater mental equilibrium and physical activity and endurance, both combined in the happiest degree, than any man I remember to have known. He could adapt himself to any place, assemblage, or circumstance without any apparent effort or being in the least disconcerted. He made himself conspicuously useful anywhere, and was equally at ease whether in conference, prayer meeting, as counsel in a justice's court, at a barn-frame raising, or running a steam engine. He was master of all he undertook, and was a kind-hearted, useful, impulsive, go-ahead member of the community. He also removed to Ohio somewhere between 1845 and 1848 and lived there until his death a few years later. Seth Simmons was a carpenter by trade and in 1822-23, with his son Ephraim, built a frame school house on the site of the present State street school building. This building was afterward removed and is now a dwelling house located on the east side of Barry street and owned by Levi Carter. Simmons lived, I remember, in 1834, in a house standing on the site now occupied by the dwelling of Mrs. R. White. It was blown down by the great tornado of that year. Simmons was lying sick in bed at the time, but was scarcely injured. He died a little more than a year afterward.

With the diminishment of through or down the river emigration business began to grow dull here, and many who had lived here long, and had never previously thought of such a thing, began to be filled with a desire to emigrate, and in turn passed down the river, as had thousands before them, to return no more. Affairs then began to assume a new shape. When it was no longer profitable to shelter or sustain emigrants new industries were sought out, and the civilization and settlement which had been almost exclusively concentrated at this point became quite rapidly diffused. Settlements and improvements which had been confined to the vicinity of the river and large inflowing streams began to extend back into the valleys and spread out on the hillsides, and on the final triumphant completion of the Erie canal in 1825 a new channel for the still increasing stream of emigration was opened and this region of country was left to its own resources for development. Notwithstanding this serious diversion of travel, and the more serious withdrawal of the ready money which emigrants scattered freely for traveling expenses and outfits, the same strong spirit of enterprise and self-reliance which first brought and sustained our early settlers here rendered them equal to the emergency and carried them over the many difficulties which ever beset a change of occupation and resources. There was very little repining over the unlooked for and irretrievable loss of business and custom. None thought of giving up, but resolutely set to work to create new sources of employment and revenue.

In the Hamilton Recorder, the first paper published in Olean, dated October 2, 1819, are the following advertisements:

"HAMILTON HOTEL REMOVAL.

"The subscriber having purchased the tavern stand lately owned by H.orton, on the northwest corner of the public square, would respectfully inform the public that he has removed to said stand and is fitting up the new house for the entertainment of travelers; where he expects in a few days to afford good accommodations on the most reasonable terms; and assures all who may please to favor him with their custom, that no pains shall be spared on his part to render their stay at his house as comfortable as his situation in so new a country will admit.

LUMAN RICE.

"ENTERTAINMENT.

"The subscriber, innkeeper at the bridge which crosses Olean creek, half a mile north of the village of Hamilton (Olean Point), has for the accommodation of families, teamsters, and the public generally, good fall feed, hay, and oats and other conveniences on terms as follows: A horse kept at grass one night, 12½ cents. A horse kept at hay one night, 25 cents. Oats fed at night in stable, 50 cents.

"For the accommodation of emigrants he has for sale potatoes at 50 cents a bushel, bread or flour at five cents a pound, and common soap at six cents a quart. Also on hand and will be furnished at short notice, boats of any length under 30 feet and 8 feet wide, with oars ready for immediate use, at 50c. per foot. Sixteen-foot skiffs sold at from three to five dollars each; and for the convenience of those who may wish to build rather than buy ready-made boats, he has timber and plank for sale. He will repair wagons and sleighs when requested; and intends to deal honestly with all who may please him with their custom.

JEHIEL BOARDMAN.

"Olean, September 10, 1819."

The first of these advertisements was inserted by the father of Mrs. O. P. Boardman and the other by the father of Mr. O. P. Boardman. The Hamilton House of 1819 is a portion of the present Olean House, and Jehiel Boardman's tavern then stood on or very near the site of O. P. Boardman's brick edifice in Boardmanville.

About thirty minutes past three o'clock in the afternoon of March 20, 1834, the inhabitants of Olean observed an unusual appearance in a cloud hanging over the hills two and a half miles southwest of their village. It was approaching toward them in a straight line with a rapid swirling motion and an ominous sound. It had the form of an immense inverted cone, with its apex resting on the earth. Approaching with terrific rapidity it whirled into ruin everything in its path—eighty rods wide. Forests were prostrated, buildings totally demolished, and strong fences swept away. So complete was the devastation that scarcely a vestige of habitation or vegetation remained. The cyclone kept its course to the northeast, struck the outer edge of Friendship village in Allegany county, where it killed one man and destroyed several buildings, and finally ended its swath of destruction, forty miles long, in Steuben county. Its line is known as "Windfall."

No town in the county has been favored with more and better facilities for transportation than has Olean. To the pioneers the Allegheny river was an important route to market and the west. In 1851 the New York & Erie railroad was completed and opened. If this had followed the original survey the depot would have been located about where the Root & Keating tannery now stands. On July 3, 1872, what is now the Buffalo division of the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad was opened to Olean and subsequently through to Oil City, Pa. The main line of this road runs along the south side of the Allegheny, passes through Olean, and proceeds along the bed or banks of the abandoned Genesee canal to Rochester. Besides these the Olean, Bradford & Warren narrow gauge railroad, owned by the Western New York & Pennsylvania, runs southwest into Pennsylvania, and the Lackawanna & Pittsburg narrow gauge railroad, which runs to Bolivar, Allegany county.

In the act of the Legislature passed March 11, 1808, erecting the county of Cattaraugus and the town of Olean, it was specified that the first town meeting should be held at the house of Joseph McCluer, who was then located at "McCluer Settlement," now in the town of Franklinville. Probably no records of this meeting are in existence, as none can be found. The subjoined contains the names of all the supervisors and town clerks in Olean since 1809 and all the justices of the peace since 1830, when the office became elective:

Supervisors.—James Green, 1809-10; Cornelius Brooks, 1811-12, 1814-15; Nathan Horton, 1813; Israel Curtis, 1816-17, 1820; Seymour Bouton, 1818; Ebenezer Lockwood, 1819, 1821-22; David Bookes, 1823-24, 1829; Allen Rice, 1825, 1827; Samuel Barrows, 1826, 1828; Frederick S. Parker, 1890; Henry McKinley, 1891; Albertus Norton, 1892; W. J. Derrig, J. W. Sloane, G. P. Card, C. M. Malby, 1893.

In 1880 the town had eighteen road districts. In 1882 the number was nineteen, which has since remained the same. The iron bridge across the Allegheny river at Olean was built in 1889 at a total cost to the town of $15,728.61, which included the expense of constructing a temporary structure to take the place of the wooden bridge which was badly damaged and partially destroyed by high water in the early summer of 1889.

Olean village was incorporated in 1854 under the general act passed by the Legislature in 1847, and the territory embraced was as follows: Beginning at the north bank of the Allegheny river at the south end of Fifteenth street, as described on a map of the village of Olean made by T. J. Gorsline, running thence north on the east line of said street seventy-five chains and eleven links to the north line of township number one in the fourth range of the Holland Land Company's purchase, thence east on the said north line ninety-two chains and one hundred and twenty-eight links to the west bank of the Olean creek, thence southerly following the west bank of said creek to the north bank of the Allegheny river, thence westerly along said river to the place of beginning. The trustees elected at the first meeting of the village were Lambert Whitney, C. V. B. Barse, Charles H. Thyng, and John K. Comstock; Enos C. Brooks was appointed clerk. The village continued to exist under this charter until April 1, 1858, when the original charter was superseded by an amended or new one granted by a special act of the Legislature. The charter was amended, consolidated, and revised from time to time until it received its last revision April 28, 1882. The presidents and clerks since 1872 have been as follows:

Presidents.—F. H. Myrick, 1872; C. V. B. Barse, 1873-74; Charles W. Phillips, 1875; Dr. John L. Eddy, 1876-78; Fred R. Eaton, 1879-80; H. W. Chamberlin, 1881; Dr. J. V. D. Coon, 1882; H. M. Ernst, 1883; A. T. Eaton, 1884; James K. Van Campen, 1885; T. C. Lewis, 1886-87; Charles E. Turner, 1888-89; Calvin S. Stowell, 1890; J. H. Luther, 1891; Charles H. Rockwood, 1892; Charles E. Turner, 1893.

Clerks and Attorneys.—A. F. Carter, 1872; J. C. Townsend, 1873, resigned and J. R. Townsend appointed, who also resigned and C. Z. Lincoln appointed; J. R. Jewell, 1874; Myron A. Dodge, 1875; Frederick W. Kruse, 1876; F. A. Scott, 1877, resigned and George H. Phelps appointed; George A. Scott, 1878, resigned and Enos C. Brooks appointed; Enos C. Brooks, 1879-80; F. W. Kruse, 1881-83, resigned and M. B. Jewell appointed; M. B. Jewell, 1884, resigned and Fred L. Eaton appointed; Fred L. Eaton, 1885-92; M. B. Jewell, 1893.

February 23, 1885, a resolution was adopted by the village Board of Trustees authorizing the petitioning of the State Legislature to grant the privilege of constituting a commission of public buildings, said petition to be an amendment to the village charter. This commission was to have charge of the building. The petition was granted and the first members were James F. Johnson, Dr. Melville C. Follett, and E. M. Johnson. Up to this date there had been issued \$20,000 in bonds, bearing  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. interest, for the construction of the city building. August 27, 1892, \$65,000 in bonds were sold to aid in providing funds for laying the brick pavement on Union street.

The village continued with its last amended charter until the session of the State Legislature in the winter of 1892-93, when a charter, which had been carefully prepared by a committee of ten citizens appointed for that purpose, of which Hon. F. W. Kruse was chairman, was granted, which incorporated the village of Olean into the city of Olean, April 25, 1893, with the boundaries unchanged. The city contains six wards, and in 1890 the United States census reported the population of Olean village to be 7,358. By an enumeration made in May and June, 1893, it was found that the city had 8,131 inhabitants and with the suburbs 12,461. At the meeting in May of the voters for their final vote either to reject or adopt the city charter it was accepted by an overwhelming majority. The municipal government was put into active operation by the election of the following executive officers: Mayor, Charles E. Turner; supervisors, M. B. Jewell (first and fifth wards), J. V. D. Coon, M. D. (second and third wards), and William M. Irish (fourth and sixth wards); Board of Aldermen consists of George Ball, Albert A. Swartz, William Quigley, Hon. F. W. Kruse, Fred Tarbell, C. P. Luther, Hiram Dean, A. J. Williams, Thomas Dolan, Charles Scheiterle, W. A. Ward, and Thomas Jordan; clerk, W. V. Smith; A. T. Eaton, treasurer; M. B. Jewell, attorney.

According to the records at Washington the Olean postoffice was established May 23, 1816, with Philo Cleveland as postmaster. Horatio Orton was appointed November 10, 1817, and among his successors were Sylvanus Russell, D. Swain, Henry Bryan, F. S. Martin, David Day, O. P. Boardman, Henry W. Fish, Rufus L. Page, James G. Johnson and George N. and Milton B. Fobes. The present incumbent is W. R. Page. The free delivery system was inaugurated October 1, 1888.

The first fire organization in the village of Olean occurred September 17, 1856, when the Pioneer Hook and Ladder Company was formed with J. A. Petrie, foreman; William B. Barse, first assistant; J. F. Johnson, second assistant; H. Harper Phelps, secretary; W. P. Wilcox, treasurer. Mr. Phelps finally met his death in a fire while trying to save his library. In 1865 this company disbanded. The Fountain Hose Company was organized August 2, 1860, and has since continued an active existence, the present foreman being J. H. Sigel. The Eagle Engine Company, No. 1, was organized in 1857 with forty members. Upon the completion of the present system of water works this company disbanded. The Acme Hose Company, No. 3, had a brief existence, being disorganized a few years since. The Citizen Hose Company, No. 2, was organized June 24, 1879; the present foreman is C. H. Martin. The Chamberlin Hook and Ladder Company, No. 1, is mainly a re-organization of the Pioneer Hook and Ladder Company, No. 1, in February, 1883; the foreman for 1893 is F. L. Vanderhoof. The Luther Hose Company, No. 4, was formed December 9, 1881, and its present foreman is Dascom Allen. This and the Chamberlin Company have developed excellent running teams. The Barse Hose Company, No. 5, was organized September 28, 1883. The foreman is D. McMillen. The Turner Hose Company, No. 6, was formed January 14, 1889. Patrick Brown is foreman. The Olean Fire Police was organized and incorporated April 14, 1887, with about thirty-five citizen members. The present captain is John A. Brendall. The fire department has a total of 225 volunteer members, and each company is well equipped. In January, 1881, a Silsby steam engine was purchased, but since the inception of the present water system the hose alone has been sufficient. The chiefs since the organization of the present fire department, December 27, 1877, have been as follows: W. H. Mandeville, 1878-80; S. H. Bradley, 1881; W. D. Hatch, 1882-83; W. H. Simpson, 1884-85, 1889; W. D. Moore, 1886; F. C. Mayer, 1887; C. P. Luther, 1888, 1890-91; J. H. Powers, 1892; W. C. Albrecht, 1893.

Olean has been visited by a few disastrous conflagrations, the most serious ones occurring January 15, 1866, when the loss aggregated about $250,000, and March 10, 1868, when $60,000 worth of property was burned.

Some years prior to 1882 Whitney Brothers (R. M. and James O.) put in a small system of water works, pumping the water from Olean creek directly into the mains, which were small and short. A few hydrants were placed in position, but so limited was the supply of water these proved almost useless in case of fire. In 1882 the citizens decided upon municipal ownership of the proposed system, which was organized and placed in operation that year and the next. In 1882 the village was bonded for $75,000 for this purpose. A Board of Water Commissioners was created, the first members being William M. Irish, A. H. Abbey, and H. W. Moore. The water is pumped from a series of eight wells into a reservoir 252 feet above and on the south side of the river, and thence distributed throughout the nearly thirteen miles of mains. Connected with these are ninety-eight hydrants. The reservoir has a storage capacity of 2,500,000 gallons. The present Water Board consists of F. L. Stedman, H. D. Bennie, and J. B. Smith. The first superintendent and general manager appointed was L. E. Chapin, who was succeeded in 1885 by the present incumbent, John Z. Le Fevre.

The first local fiduciary institution was the "Bank of Olean," which was in existence in 1841 with S. J. Powers as president and D. S. Moore as assistant cashier. It was a State bank, but when it was organized and discontinued can not be ascertained. Probably the only piece of currency of this concern now in existence is a well preserved one-dollar bill, bearing the above title and official names, countersigned by State Comptroller W. Leonard, in the possession of A. T. Eaton, cashier of the First National Bank of Olean, who also possesses some script, unsigned, of Stowell, Chamberlain & Company's bank. Rufus Hatch, in 1848, established the "Butchers' and Drovers' Bank," of which George W. Smith was the local representative, the headquarters of the concern being in Buffalo. This was not a very efficient fiduciary institution and it soon abandoned its operations.

In 1869 the citizens of Olean and vicinity were greatly in need of a good banking concern and much influence was exerted to induce neighboring capitalists to locate here and start a good bank. Accordingly, in October, 1870, the Bank of Olean was established in quarters over what is now Dr. J. V. D. Coon's drug store by parties connected with the Cuba Banking Company. This was in reality a branch of that institution. It was a co-partnership organization with William F. Wheeler, president; Nelson S. Butler, vice-president; and L. F. Lawton, cashier. The organizers were desirous of establishing a National bank, but at that time the State had its legal quota of National bank circulation. To accomplish their design they conceived the plan of buying up, through metropolitan banks, the circulation of National banks of the State which had gone into liquidation and out of business, frequently paying liberal premiums for it. The script thus purchased was forwarded to Washington and exchanged for new circulation. From this shrewd transaction a charter was obtained for the First National Bank of Olean, which was the first National bank organized in Cattaraugus county. This bank was organized in September, 1871, with these stockholders: William F. Wheeler, J. E. Dusenbury, Samuel Oosterhoudt, James G. Johnson, Nelson S. Butler, David H. Bolles, L. F. Lawton, Asher W. Miner, A. J. Wellman, John B. Cole, S. W. Cole, J. O. Jordan, H. A. Mead, Thomas Case, W. P. Stevens, V. Perry Carter, and G. S. McIntosh. The first officers were William F. Wheeler, president; Nelson S. Butler, vice-president; L. F. Lawton, cashier. The bank is known on the "Official Roster" at Washington as No. 1887. It has maintained an unbroken record of progress. The capital stock was $100,000, which has been unaltered. It now has a surplus fund and undivided profits aggregating $135,000. The total resources of the bank amount to $750,000. Since its organization it has paid semi-annual dividends with but four exceptions. William F. Wheeler remained president until his death June 6, 1892. In July following J. E. Dusenbury was elected to the vacancy and W. E. Wheeler was elected vice-president. N. S. Butler served as vice-president until 1885, when he was succeeded by J. E. Dusenbury, who held the position until 1892. A. T. Eaton, the present cashier, entered the bank at its organization as book-keeper and was promoted teller November 2, 1871, assistant cashier July 18, 1883, and succeeded Mr. Lawton as cashier July 14, 1885. C. D. Judd is assistant cashier. The present Board of Directors is composed of J. E. Dusenbury, W. E. Wheeler, A. T. Eaton, C. D. Judd, J. F. Johnson, E. M. Johnson, and E. G. Dusenbury. For a number of years the bank was a government repository. September 12, 1891, the institution renewed its charter for twenty years longer as a National bank under the provisions of the act of July 12, 1882. Its present two-story brick building was erected in 1874, when it was removed thither from the home of its immediate predecessor, the Bank of Olean.

About 1869 C. V. B. Barse, with his son and partner, took nine-tenths of the stock of the State Bank of Olean, which was regularly organized and began business in the summer of 1870 with a paid up capital of $100,000. The first and only officers of this bank were C. V. B. Barse, president; Henry S. Morris, vice-president; Mills W. Barse, cashier; and R. O. Smith and Hon. Charles S. Cary, with the officers of the bank, directors. The bank was successfully managed by its president and gained a high standing. Its affairs were closed up December 31, 1877, and from it was organized the Exchange National Bank of Olean on January 1, 1878, with the original capital of $100,000 and the same officers and Board of Directors. The capital has since been increased to $125,000. C. V. B. Barse continued as president until his death in November, 1885, when, on the 21st, his son, Mills W. Barse, was elected to the position and Frank L. Bartlett became and still is cashier. Mr. Morris moved to California for his health and on January 12, 1886, George V. Forman was elected vice-president. Charles D. Clarke is assistant cashier. The directors are Mills W. Barse, George V. Forman, F. L. Bartlett, N. V. V. Franchot, G. Howard Strong, D. C. Le Fevre, and Hon. C. S. Cary. The surplus in March, 1893, was $250,000 and undivided profits $65,000. No dividends were declared until the surplus had aggregated twice the amount of the capital; since then dividends have been declared regularly. According to reliable authority this institution stands nineteenth in the list of National banks in the State. At its organization the bank occupied quarters across the street from where it is now located. In 1880 its present elegant and imposing brick block was erected at a cost of $35,000.

The Olean Safe Deposit Company was organized under State laws in 1890 by the stockholders of the Exchange National Bank of Olean as trustees. Its capital was $10,000. A handsome steel and iron vault was erected in the rear of the Exchange National Bank building.

The present prosperity of the town and city of Olean practically dates from the beginning of the development of the oil interests in southwestern New York and northern Pennsylvania. The Pennsylvania fields, of whose product a greater quantity is stored at Olean than at any other place, are the largest and most important in the world. The discovery of oil may be said to properly date back only thirty-five years, although prior to the advent of the whites in this section the Seneca Indians gathered it by means of hemlock boughs from springs, upon the surface of which it appeared. This was called Seneca oil and was used by the Indians, and later by the white settlers, for medicinal purposes. These springs resulted from the oil rock appearing or coming so near the surface as to allow its product to escape through water channels. They were first found along the present Oil creek in Pennsylvania, and one now exists near the village of Cuba, N. Y. In 1859 Col. E. L. Drake drilled the pioneer well near Titusville, Pa. Oil was found at a depth of seventy feet and a hitherto unknown source of wealth discovered to the world. In 1860, with 2,000 oil wells begun, the oil fever became universal. Towns and cities sprang up as by magic, full fledged, and with all the ways of a metropolis. Fortunes were made quickly and fortunes as quickly lost. With petroleum at $10 per barrel in 1864 the wild-cat drill was swiftly plied, opening up and defining new territories. The excitement continued for some time, but gradually the production of petroleum settled into legitimate business channels, as the fast increasing production rendered the product less valuable. Most oil lands are leased from their owners, at so much cash bonus per acre and a one-eighth or one-fourth royalty of all the oil produced.

About 1873 J. H. Dilks organized the Olean Petroleum Company (Limited), a concern composed of eastern capitalists. The construction of a pipe line was commenced and stations erected at convenient intervals to New York city, the western terminal being Olean village, and on Thanksgiving day, 1874, the first oil was pumped through the pipes fourteen and one-fourth miles. This was a two-inch pipe, and was subsequently superseded by one three-inch and one four-inch pipe. This was the inception of one of the leading industries in southwestern Cattaraugus and practically the nucleus of the present extensive establishments centering in Olean. In 1876 the Olean Petroleum Company was succeeded by the Empire Transportation Company, which also controlled the Empire Pipe Line, and this in 1877 passed into the hands of the Standard Oil Company.

The oil developments in the immediate vicinity of the city of Olean commenced about 1876, when the Allegany Oil Company put down an oil well on the premises of J. G. and E. M. Johnson in Allegany. They obtained a paying well, and immediately afterward the local boom commenced.

Standard Oil Company of New York; Acme Works, Olean.—In 1877 a small refinery was erected at Olean by Wing, Wilbur & Co. There was but one still, the entire capacity of the works being a little less than 200 barrels of crude oil daily. In 1878 the property was purchased by the Acme Oil Company of Pennsylvania. They at once added two more stills, with apparatus in connection, increasing the capacity to upwards of 500 barrels daily. In 1879 twelve more stills were added, increasing the capacity to about 2,300 barrels. Some three years after five more stills were added, and then again in 1885 another block of five stills was erected, until now the daily consumption of crude oil is 4,600 barrels. With the increased number of stills there has been an increase of apparatus corresponding—tanks, agitators, pumps, condensers, loading racks, lines, etc. So extensive is this plant that for its successful operation mechanics of various trades are required—boiler makers, brick-layers, carpenters, pipe-fitters, etc.; these, with the labor necessary in refining, aggregate employees to the number of about 175. In 1880 an extensive barrel factory was erected. When working in full force 3,500 barrels are made daily. Some 300 men are then employed in this department, and there is a daily consumption of 63,000 oak staves and 30,000 pounds of hoop iron. The barrels are used exclusively for refined petroleum, the larger part of them being required for the business of the refinery. The refineries at Buffalo and Rochester are in part supplied with barrels from this factory. H. L. Gerstenberger is superintendent. In 1880 there was also erected a filling or shipping station. Here the barrels are prepared to receive the oil, the preparation consisting of a coat of glue on the inside and the painting of the outside. The color uniformly held to is a blue body and a white head. This style of painting has made the American oil barrel conspicuous the world over. This department, when working in full force, gives employment to about 125 hands.

In addition to the stills, and also necessary to the work, are immense condensing tanks, constructed of iron and filled with iron pipes, through which the vapors of the oil are passed in the course of refining. The principal and most important process of refining is distillation. In order to secure the desired results perfect condensation is necessary. These condensing tanks surrounding the pipes referred to are filled with cold water. When stills are run a constant supply is necessary, and at these works in the twenty-four hours, for condensing, for boilers, and for other purposes, about 30,000 barrels of cold water are necessary. The plant is favorably situated in this particular, as from the ground an abundant supply of cold water can be secured, the temperature of which when pumped is about 48°.

It has been noticed that the principal process in the refining of petroleum is distillation, but beyond this is required manipulation in connection with sulphuric acid and caustic lyes; this is for the purpose of bleaching and purifying beyond what can be secured by distilling. At the still the separation of the different products is secured, such as gasoline, naphtha, water white oil, standard white oil, paraffine oils, etc. One of the products of petroleum is coke, almost a pure carbon and used extensively, almost exclusively, in the manufacturing of carbon points for electric lights.

The products of petroleum are now so numerous that it is almost impossible to give a statement of them in detail. For the arts, for manufacturing and domestic purposes, it has become invaluable. To many readers the minutiae of manufacturing would be interesting, but the space allotted here will not permit of such description. In connection with the stills, besides the condensing tanks, and necessary for the extensive work at this refinery, there are eighty-four other iron tanks used for the storage of the different products, and of necessity in caring for the various products in the process of refining; these vary in capacity from 500 barrels to 35,000 and from 25 to 90 feet in diameter. There are about thirty steam pumps in use for the pumping of water and for conveying the different products from point to point.

This extensive plant occupies fifty-three acres of land, situated at the junction of the Western New York & Pennsylvania and the New York, Lake Erie & Western railroads, and extending across the Erie road to the north. The works have been in almost constant operation from 1879 to the present date and have added largely to the prosperity attending the city during that time. Since 1879 William M. Irish has been the general manager. He has for his assistant J. E. Eggleston; D. R. Laughlin is superintendent. This establishment is now a part of the great Standard Oil Company.

The Olean Chemical Company was organized about 1881. It is a branch of the Graselli Chemical Company with headquarters in Cleveland, Ohio. In Olean the company manufactures sulphuric, nitric, and muriatic acids, aqua ammonia, etc. This industry employs twenty-five men.

The Eclipse Lubricating Oil Company (Limited) manufactures lubricating oils, 300° fire test, refined, and various distillates from petroleum, of which they consume about 250,000 barrels per year. The company owning the plant are Pennsylvania capitalists.

The Vegetable Oil Company is represented here by E. R. and F. R. Ackerman and William White. The oil manufactured is intended as a substitute for linseed oil.

The education of the youth of the pioneers at Olean Point was the first public interest that engaged the attention of its inhabitants. A log school house was erected and a teacher employed. In a little time the common schools became an institution of the State, received her fostering care, and grew in favor and importance with the people until they were equal to the requirements of the town. About 1851 the "Olean Academy Association" was organized and was incorporated by the Regents on April 11, 1853. The first Board of Trustees was composed of Judge James H. Brooks, Olcott P. Boardman, Judge Frederick S. Martin, Dr. Lambert Whitney, Henry Dusenbury, Abraham Merritt, John Fobes, and Rev. Sylvester Cowles. Of this noble band only the venerable O. P. Boardman and Dr. Whitney survive. This Board of Trustees erected a suitable building and opened it for the admission of students with Prof. J. A. Woodruff as principal. The school edifice burned in 1857 and was at once rebuilt, and "Olean Academy" flourished until it was sold to Union School District No. 1 in 1868, when it was discontinued.

Its immediate successor was the academic department of the Olean Union Free School and Academy. Pursuant to a call of twenty-four inhabitants of School District No. 1, of Olean, and in accordance with the provisions of chapter 555 of the laws of 1864, a meeting was held in the town hall October 3, 1868, at which, by a vote of 97 to 3, Olean Union Free School District No. 1 was organized. The sum of $2,000 was ordered to be raised by tax for the purchase of "Olean Academy" property. Such was the beginning of Olean's present school system. The territory of the school district is divided into six sub-districts with a school building in each. These buildings comprise three brick and three wooden structures. Their sites cover nearly seven and one-half acres. The estimated valuation of these buildings and sites aggregates $144,500. The school board has done away with the antiquated furniture and all the buildings are now furnished with single desks. The Union School Library contains 3,016 volumes, valued, with its fixtures, at $3,000, and includes several standard encyclopedias. The school population of the district as enumerated in June, 1892, was 3,005. Of this number 1,639 were enrolled in the public schools and 579 in the parochial and private schools, making a total of 2,218 scholars who were attending some school. Thirty-seven teachers are employed with Fox Holden, A.M. and LL.B., as superintendent. On the recommendation of the late superintendent, Prof. A. B. Davis, of more room to accommodate the students of the High School, building No. 1, the location of the old academy, has been enlarged at an expense of $25,600 and the High School removed to it from building No. 3.

St. Mary's Parochial School (Roman Catholic) was established in 1889 by Rev. J. J. Hamel. The present three-story frame school building was erected at a cost of $10,000, and school was opened in the fall of 1890. On the same lot, which is now valued at $5,000, was erected also in 1889 a two-story frame convent building to accommodate the Sisters of Mercy, who have charge of the school, supplying it with eight teachers. The total value of these two buildings, including the lot, is about $20,000. The school has an average attendance of about 450 pupils.

Westbrook Commercial College was founded in 1882 at Mansfield, Pa., by Prof. E. D. Westbrook, its present principal and proprietor, who removed the institution to Olean in 1886. In founding the school it was the aim and ambition of the proprietor to establish a commercial college of the highest grade. The standard for graduates is high, and includes an extended and very thorough course, including commercial forms and book-keeping, stenography, telegraphy, etc. There are no class recitations. The college rooms are models of convenience and adaptability.

About 1870 General Haupt, of Philadelphia, placed an old bill against a Cattaraugus county resident in the hands of F. H. Myrick, of Olean, for collection, which proved so unexpectedly profitable that the general offered $50 as a nucleus of a library fund to the first local library which could show a permanent organization. Accordingly, in May, 1871, the Olean Library Association was formed by about twenty members, who contributed $10 each. Messrs. Jewett and Root contributed $50 each and shortly afterward Mr. Myrick turned over the $50 for General Haupt. Other minor sums were subscribed, and altogether a fund of about $500 was realized, which was expended in the necessary furniture and some 200 volumes. From its organization until 1888 the association received twelve life members. The library was moved about from time to time, occupying the stores of J. G. Pelton and J. P. Hastings, a room over Smith's drug store, the Exchange Bank, and the Oosterhoudt building. January 12, 1888, the following letter was received from George V. Forman:

"To F. W. Higgins, Esq., president, Mrs. A. J. Thompson, Mrs. J. R. Jewell, Mrs. George T. Keith, George S. Ramsey, N. V. V. Franchot, Esq., and Charles Gillingham, Esq., managers of the Olean Library Association:

"Appreciating the good work you have been doing and your earnest efforts on behalf of your Library Association, I am disposed to try to assist you by a conveyance for a library building of the property formerly used by me for an office in this place on the following conditions:

"1st. That you have your association duly and properly incorporated so that it can hold real estate.

"2d. That it shall be held exclusively for the purpose of a library and reading room, and none other.

"3d. That no right or power shall accompany it for you or your successors to mortgage or encumber the property.

"4th. That I can be assured of your further and future interest in this matter, and that you will make all reasonable and proper efforts to endow the same by such donations as those friendly are disposed to give you.

"On these conditions being complied with I am gladly willing to deed you the property at any time designated by you. Yours sincerely, GEORGE V. FORMAN."

Besides this property, located at 85 Union street, Mr. Forman also contributed $1,000 in cash to the endowment fund, which finally reached the sum of nearly $7,000, and with the subsequent contribution from the Ladies' Library Endowment Society the necessary $8,000 was raised, which still remains as a perpetual endowment fund. The library was chartered January 21, 1888, and on April 2, 1889, it was moved to its present quarters. The present officers are Charles Gillingham, president; N. V. V. Franchot, vice-president; Miss Emma Homer, secretary; W. H. Mandeville, treasurer; Miss Ella P. Hazlett, librarian.

Robert Hoops, about 1807, gave to the town a plat of three acres for the interment of the dead, and the first person buried in these grounds was James G. Johnson in 1811. This spot contains the remains of many of Olean's most prominent pioneers.

The Mount View Cemetery Association was organized by George V. Forman, Mills W. Barse, Charles S. Cary, Frank L. Bartlett, Charles D. Clarke, James L. Connelly, and Frank Rumsey, who met at the Exchange National Bank building in Olean on the 10th of June, 1889, for the purpose. The number of trustees was fixed at six and the first board consisted of George V. Forman and Frank L. Bartlett, three years; Charles S. Cary and Charles D. Clarke, two years; and Mills W. Barse and Frank Rumsey, one year. The name "Mount View Cemetery" was unanimously chosen for the burial grounds, which are situated near the south bank of the Allegheny river on a sufficient elevation to insure good drainage. The cemetery contains forty-five acres and is well adapted by nature for the purpose to which it is dedicated.

The Olean Board of Trade was organized October 6, 1887, and at one time was very active in fostering and promoting the village's interests, but latterly has evinced only a moderate carefulness in sustaining present industries. The present officers are Dr. J. V. D. Coon, president; S. S. Bullis, William M. Irish, and C. S. Cary, vice-presidents; E. E. Alderman, acting secretary.

The Olean Building, Loan, and Savings Association was organized in 1892 and began business on February 1st of that year. It is the only local institution of its kind and has acquired a substantial standing in the community. Its first and present officers are James F. Johnson, president; Dr. J. V. D. Coon, vice-president; E. E. Alderman, secretary; F. W. Higgins, treasurer; F. W. Kruse, attorney; directors, James F. Johnson, J. V. D. Coon, E. E. Alderman, F. W. Higgins, F. W. Kruse, N. V. V. Franchot, W. O. Curtiss, G. H. Strong, and J. B. Frawley.

The Olean Street Railway Company was organized as a stock concern April 5, 1880, with the following Board of Directors: M. B. Fobes, president and superintendent; E. M. Johnson, secretary; and P. O. Smith, D. C. Conklin, C. S. Cary, William M. Irish, and James K. Van Campen. The Union street line, covering a distance of 7,750 feet of track, was laid and opened for travel in the fall of 1880. In the fall of 1891 the State street road was constructed. The two lines have been equipped with horse cars until this present summer, when the electric system and new electric cars were placed in operation over both routes. The present Board of Directors consists of John Fobes, G. H. Strong, Thomas Gilligan, Dr. J. V. D. Coon, M. W. Barse, H. C. Morris, and

C. S. Cary, of whom John Fobes is president and superintendent and G. H. Strong is secretary. The completed new line extends from the Erie depot through Union street and State street to the village of Allegany.

The Keystone Gas Company was organized in 1880 by J. N. Pew, J. B. Bradley, and E. O. Emerson, and was granted a franchise on December 23d of that year to lay gas mains in the streets. It was afterward made a stock concern and is officered now by E. O. Emerson, president; J. N. Pew, secretary and treasurer; and J. A. Johnson, local manager. The supply is natural gas derived from McKean county, Pa., forty miles distant, and is consumed both here and in Allegany. This company received its first contract from the village October 29, 1883, to supply it with gas lamps and lights.

The Olean Electric Light and Power Company was organized in February, 1888, with Dr. J. V. D. Coon, president; William M. Irish, vice-president; A. I. Williams, secretary; Frank L. Bartlett, treasurer; and Dr. J. V. D. Coon, William M. Irish, N. V. V. Franchot, James Kelsey, Dr. M. C. Follett, C. S. Stowell, and F. W. Higgins, directors. The present officers are N. V. V. Franchot, president; Dr. J. V. D. Coon, vice-president; George Fobes, secretary and general manager; Frank L. Bartlett, treasurer; and N. V. V. Franchot, Dr. J. V. D. Coon, William M. Irish, Dr. M. C. Follett, F. W. Kruse, Howard H. G. Strong, and George Fobes, directors. The company was originally capitalized at $25,000, which has since been increased to $35,000. It started with three dynamos, two of which were of 30 arc and one of 650 incandescent lamp power. The present equipment consists of two dynamos of 60 arc and two of 750 incandescent lamp power, run by two 225 horse-power engines and two boilers of 100 horse-power each. They also have a general station equipment, and all is enclosed by a two-story brick building on Union street. Electricity is furnished for forty-three arc lights for the village and sixty-five for commercial establishments and about 1,500 incandescent lamps are wired. The company employs six men and uses natural gas for fuel.

The Western Insurance Company was organized January 22, 1853, and continued until December, 1855, when its business was discontinued.

The Empire State Mutual Live Stock Insurance Company was incorporated with headquarters at Olean on June 1, 1890, by J. M. Homer, president; W. S. Turner, vice-president; John Sloane, secretary; and M. T. Page, treasurer. The first policy was issued June 2d. The same officers have since been annually re-elected.

One of the leading manufacturing industries in Olean is tanning leather. The first establishment started for this purpose was the primitive tannery of Walter Wood's, mentioned in Mr. Johnson's reminiscences. The one now owned by Levi Barrett was built by Kelly & Lenham, of Boston, in 1859. In 1866 it passed into the hands of Mr. Barrett, who was burned out in 1871, but at once rebuilt. The plant was also destroyed by fire in 1883. The capacity is 18,000 or 20,000 sides of dry leather per year.

Root & Keating's hemlock sole leather tannery was started by Jewett & Root in 1864 with its present capacity—90,000 sides of sole leather annually. The works cover about 100 acres and some fifty men are employed. About 1874 Mr. Jewett withdrew and Mr. Keating, son-in-law of Mr. Root, was admitted to partnership under the firm name of Root & Keating. Mr. Root died in September, 1892, and in January, 1893, Mr. Keating retired, but the firm name remains the same, the business being carried on in the interest of the Root heirs. The works are operated by steam-power.

Wright, Clark & Company's sole leather tannery is situated on the Portville road, on the east side of Olean creek, and on the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad. The company was organized in 1886 and built their plant and began business in 1887. Their output is 200 sides of finished sole leather per day, which requires 3,000 or 4,000 cords of bark annually. The bark is mainly obtained in McKean county, Pa. They employ forty men.

James & William P. Pierce erected in 1887 one of the largest buff-leather tanneries in the State. Their daily capacity is 500 sides and the firm is capitalized at $250,000. They employ 150 hands. Lewis Perry is superintendent.

William C. A. Quirin's tannery was constructed by Mr. Quirin, the proprietor, in the summer of 1888 and opened for the manufacture of calf skins in October following. A year and a half later he changed to heavy skins and sold his leather in the rough. In 1891 he began finishing his leather on the premises, and now turns out grain leather of fine quality. His tannery consumes 3,000 cords of bark annually and gives employment to sixty men. Mr. Quirin is a native of Tioga county, N. Y., and early learned the trade of tanning from his father, J. G. Quirin.

Lee, Claflin & Co.'s tannery was started in 1888. About 140 workmen are employed.

Hubbard and Blake established their upper leather tannery in Olean in 1889. It has a large capacity and employs about 150 hands.

In 1856 Charles Dotterweich erected a small brewery on the corner of Henley and Second streets with an annual output of about 1,000 barrels of beer. It gave employment to three or four men. His plant was several times destroyed by fire and as often rebuilt, and was finally enlarged to 4,000 barrels. He died in 1885 and his widow and sons conducted it until her death in 1888, when their son John became the manager of the business and enlarged it to about 8,000 barrels annually. It is now the property of the Dotterweich Brewing Company, who are constructing a nearly all new brick plant with facilities for producing from 15,000 to 20,000 barrels of beer annually. John Dotterweich is the president and all his brothers have an interest in the business. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Dotterweich now living are George, a prominent groceryman in Olean; John, the president of the Dotterweich Brewing Company; Rudolph, manager of the bottling department; Herman, a book-keeper; Adolph, a member; and Mary (Mrs. Langford Rogers).

The Olean Cart Company (Limited) established business in the fall of 1888 and about two years later removed to Kentucky. Another similar and important industry was conducted several years by W. H. & D. C. Conklin. The Olean pottery was started about 1852 by Isaac H. Wands and conducted by him till 1872, after which it had several proprietors. In October, 1877, James H. Brooks became owner, he succeeding Johnson & Knapp. The works were burned and never rebuilt. The Olean Toothpick Company was organized by E. C. Hart and F. L. Gleason in 1887.

The Olean Glass Company was established in 1887. S. W. Pancoast is president, T. H. Pancoast is secretary, and V. W. Pancoast is treasurer. The principal article manufactured is bottles of various kinds.

The Olean Heading Company at East Olean is owned by the Richard Grant Company, of New York city, and managed by F. E. Vosburg. From fifteen to twenty men are employed and flat barrel-heads, etc., are manufactured.

The Pennsylvania Lumber Storage Company was organized in April, 1889, by S. S. Bullis, who was its first president. The capital stock aggregated $52,000, which remains unchanged. The first secretary was M. P. Dunbar and the treasurer was J. J. Newman. The company has large storage yards at Olean and Bradford, and handles from 40,000,000 to 50,000,000 feet of lumber annually. The present officers are F. W. Kruse, president; S. S. Bullis, vice-president; F. L. Bartlett, treasurer; and F. L. Stowell, secretary and auditor.

The Olean Hardwood Company was organized in February, 1893, with this Board of Directors: J. R. Droney, president; J. C. French, vice-president; F. N. Hoffman, secretary and treasurer; B. H. Parkhurst, and J. H. Tate. The company has a yard in Olean and mills in Pennsylvania. The Olean Lumber Company was organized in 1889 and discontinued business in 1892.

The Sole Leather Pad Company has been in operation since 1875, when the concern began the manufacture of their famous sole leather pad. In 1881 they began to make gig, track, and coupé saddles. The manager is G. E. Ramsey.

D. S. Abbott established his present foundry and machine shop in 1879. He was previously in the saw-mill business. He manufactures saw-mill machinery, lath-mills, etc., and does general machine work.

The Myrick Foundry and Machine Company was formed in 1888 by C. W. Green and Alfred Tothill, of Scranton, Pa. This establishment was previously known as the Olean Machine Shop and Foundry and was started in 1854 by Smith & McClure, who failed in 1857, and the property passed to C. V. B. Barse, who sold it to Eastman & Myrick. This firm dissolved in 1864 and another organized as Myrick Brothers & Co.

The Carley Heating Company was organized in the spring of 1889 by O. F. Carley, F. L. Gleason, F. W. Abrams, and W. M. Abrams, Jr. They employ six men and manufacture tan liquor heaters and coolers, rotary and leach pumps, brass castings, and a general line of tannery supplies.

The International Steam Power Company was incorporated in 1891 and began business in 1892, and is managed by H. W. Moore. The goods, manufactured under patent of October 16, 1888, consist of steam and hot-water heaters.

W. D. Moore's planing-mill and lumber yard was established by him in 1883. From 1885 to 1889 he had as a partner W. H. Beers under the firm name of Moore & Beers, but aside from this he has conducted the business alone. He employs some thirty men. In connection with this Mr. Moore carries on an extensive building and contracting business, and has erected many of the finer structures in Olean.

Charles Gillingham started the Olean Sash Factory in 1865 and for many years did an extensive business under the firm name of Gillingham & Co., which in 1891 was succeeded by Gillingham & Son. The business was discontinued in the spring of 1893. In August, 1867, Mr. Bagnall was accidentally killed in this factory while working at a circular saw.

The Luther Manufacturing Company, successor to J. H. Luther & Sons, is owned and conducted by G. H. and C. P. Luther, sons of J. H. Luther, by whom the establishment was founded. They manufacture gas and water regulators, agitators, engines, and boilers.

F. J. Arey & Co. established the business of manufacturing prepared shoe stock in April, 1892, and now employ about fifty hands.

The Hollis Spring Company, of which H. W. Moore is manager, was organized in 1886 with a capital of $10,000. The company manufactures mainly the "Ram's-Horn" spring for carriages, etc.

The Wilson roller blind works at North Olean are owned by J. G. Wilson and managed by Percy H. Wilson.

Olean has two brick yards, both located in East Olean. Terra cotta and pressed brick are also manufactured.

The Olean Hub factory was started by L. S. Whitney in 1874. In 1875 R. M. Whitney, a brother, became a partner and in July, 1878, the proprietor.

The Chamberlin Manufacturing Company had its inception in 1848, when George Chamberlin established a small concern for the manufacture of stump-pullers. Both these and ditching plows are now made.

Reed, Martin & Co.'s carriage and sleigh manufactory was established about 1847 by H. W. Moore. In 1881 it was entirely destroyed by fire and at once rebuilt, the firm then being H. W. Moore & Co., which continued until 1888. The business is now conducted by W. B. Reed, G. S. Martin, O. D. Underwood, and M. Sexton, Jr., under the name of Reed, Martin & Co.

The Acme Milling Company was organized in 1882 by Frank Chesbro and Frank S. Oosterhoudt and succeeded the firm of Frank Chesbro & Co. The present concern is the largest of its kind in the county. They manufacture several brands of flour and grind large quantities of feed and meal.

David P. Godfrey & Sons (O. W. and F. N.) are proprietors of the Pleasant Valley Holstein Stock and Dairy Farm. They are breeders of full-blood Holstein cattle.

Religious services were held in Olean several years prior to 1820 by itinerant Methodist preachers, as described in Mr. Johnson's reminiscences. The Olean circuit was formed in July, 1819, and Reuben A. Aylesworth was appointed minister in charge. This remained a separate circuit until the summer of 1823, when it was merged with Friendship and the two called Friendship circuit. In 1824 this became a part of the Rushford circuit and in 1829 it was again annexed to Friendship, where the first quarterly meeting was held July 18th of that year. In October, 1834, this circuit was divided and on the 26th the first quarterly meeting of the Olean circuit convened at Bolivar. In 1835 it was again annexed to Friendship, but in 1836 it once more became a separate circuit and since remained so. Portville was set off from the Olean charge in September, 1852. The first sermon said to have been preached in Olean by a Methodist minister was on September 23, 1809, the occasion being the funeral of William Shepard. The preacher was Josiah Bullard.

September 25, 1836, a class was organized in Olean by Rev. Abram C. Du Bois with twenty-two members. Indeed this was the date of organization of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Olean, whose first church edifice was a frame structure, erected in 1852 on the site of the present handsome Gothic edifice on Union street, which was built in 1881 and cost $26,000, the present value of the church property, including a frame store, being $38,000. - The edifice will seat about 800 people and the society now has 450 members with Rev. C. V. Wilson as pastor. The Sunday school has 500 scholars. The present parsonage was exchanged for another in 1881 and is valued at $4,500.

The Second Methodist Episcopal church of Olean, originally a mission of the First M. E. church, was organized in 1889 by Rev. R. C. Grames with ninety members, the present number being about 200. Rev. D. C. Huntington was the first pastor. The society has two frame church edifices, one on Ninth street and the other in East Olean. The former was erected in 1880, will seat 400 people, and cost $3,500. The East Olean edifice was built in 1886 at a cost of $2,000 and will seat 200 persons. The entire church property is valued at about $6,500. Two Sunday schools are maintained.

The presiding elder's residence is owned by the Olean district of the Genesee Conference and is valued at $4,500.

The following is condensed from an historical sermon preached December 22, 1879, at the dedication of the present edifice of the First Presbyterian church, by the pastor, Rev. Henry M. Curtis: "In 1809 the Rev. John Spencer, traveling as a missionary, conducted some of the earliest religious services in Olean. He preached here from time to time and laid the foundation of this church, the organization of which was effected under the Rev. William Stone on August 22, 1822, in the chamber of Hoyt Webb's store, located on the present site of the hardware store of C. V. B. Barse & Co. It was one of the churches which constituted the Presbytery of Angelica on November 28, 1828. Anson King, Ahijah C. Warren, and Dr. Norman Smith were the first ruling elders. A Sunday school under the care of Josiah Tracy had been in existence for a considerable time before this. After a time, owing to the removal from town of several of the leading members, the actual existence of the church was in abeyance till 1838, when a Presbyterian organization was again formed with Rev. Reuben Willoughby as pastor and Henry Dusenbury and Erastus E. Platt as elders. For about a year the services were held in the house of Judge Adkins, who with about ten others constituted the membership. In 1839 a part of the present lot was acquired. On it was a wagon shop, which, on being repaired and fitted up, was used as a church for many years. In 1840 a bell was hung in its steeple and is supposed to be the first in this section. In 1841 a legal organization under the revised statutes of the State of New York was effected under the title of the "Society of the First Presbyterian Church of Olean." This is its legal designation today. In 1856 the main part of the present church was built at a cost of $6,000, and in 1878, the church being too small for the congregation, it was enlarged and beautified. The Sunday school room and parlors were added at this time. The church's property has been acquired at various times till now it owns, with the parsonage, a lot on Laurens street and another on Second street. The membership is about 265. The Sunday school has 260 scholars. The value of the property is $35,000.

Among the beautiful church edifices in Olean is that of St. Stephen's Episcopal,* which, in an established work on church architecture, is classed as one of the hundred most beautiful church edifices in America. Episcopal church services were first held in Olean (then called Hamilton) in 1829 in a building where religious bodies often assembled. But these few worshipers did not incorporate themselves as a church corporation until February 22, 1830, when, pursuant to a notice given at the public worship on the Sunday previous by the officiating clergyman, Rev. William W. Bostwick, a missionary who held occasional services here, a meeting was held by the members of this denomination for the purpose of incorporation under an act entitled "An Act to provide for the Incorporation of Religious Societies," at which meeting the Rev. Mr. Bostwick, William W. Penfield, and David Day were elected to certify the proceedings of the meeting in conjunction with the minutes; Horatio Orton and Ebenezer Lockwood at the same time were elected wardens; Sylvanus Russell, William W. Penfield, David Day, David Bockes, William Lowe, Nathaniel Goodspeed, Henry Stephens, and Horatio Osborne were elected vestrymen. Easter Monday was fixed upon for the annual election of wardens and vestrymen. In 1832 Seymour Bouton was elected warden to fill vacancy occasioned by the death of Horatio Orton. This was the first death which occurred among the officers of the parish. During the same year a class of ten persons was presented to the Rt. Rev. Bishop Onderdonk for confirmation, this being the first confirmation ever held in this parish. The persons who received the Holy Rite were Evert Russell, Nicholas Van Wickle, Ebenezer Lockwood, Esther Russell, Sarah Lockwood, Sarah Day, Jane Russell, Elizabeth Goodspeed, Harriet Goodspeed, and Susan Nelson. The first person baptized was Harriet Goodspeed, February 17, 1829. The first marriage in the parish was on October 26, 1831, David Day and Sarah Goodspeed being the contracting parties. July 28, 1836, the land upon which the church stands was donated by Frederick S. Norton, a large land-owner in Olean, who also subscribed $100 toward the erection of a church thereon. During February, 1836, a meeting of the parishioners was held in order to devise means to erect a suitable house of worship. The congregation was small, means were limited, and the undertaking seemed desperate, but nevertheless it was voted that a suitable house of worship be erected. A building committee consisting of David Day, Henry Bryan, Nicholas Van Wickle, and Frederick S. Martin was appointed, a subscription paper circulated, and after tireless efforts the requisite amount was raised, and on the 5th of August, 1836, they entered into a contract with Samuel Budd, of Angelica, N. Y., to erect the building, the same being completed in January, 1839. During the same year the officers of the parish adopted as their corporate seal the eagle side of a twenty-five-cent piece. The church being entirely free from debt it was consecrated by the Rt. Rev. William H. De Lancy, D.D. In 1840 delegates were elected to attend the convention of the Diocese of Western New York held in Buffalo, this being the first representation of this parish in the church council. In 1842 a committee was appointed to purchase the church bell. In 1865 the parish met with a great loss in the death of Hon. Frederick S. Martin, in whom the clergy found a firm friend, and whose sound advice was of inestimable value. In 1834 the Rev. Thomas Morris became the first clergyman. He was followed by Revs. Humphrey Hollis in 1842, N. F. Bruce, Moses E. Wilson, Charles E. Beardsley, William A. Lord, George W. Dunbar, McDonald, H. H. Loring, Henry Strong, Charles T. Seibt, Charles J. Machin, S. D. Boorum, M. B. Benton, J. J. Andrew, and James W. Ashton, D.D., the present incumbent. As the congregation increased the necessity of a more commodious house of worship presented itself. A subscription paper was circulated and the necessary amount to erect the beautiful stone edifice was raised, the corner-stone of which was laid August 6, 1888. This occupies the site of the old frame church building. The new structure was consecrated June 17, 1890, by the Rt. Rev. A. C. Coxe, D.D., and cost about $29,000. It will seat 500 people, and with all other church property is valued at about $45,500. The society has 250 members and a Sunday school of 200 scholars.

The nucleus of the Baptist denomination in Olean is found in a conference class organized as early as 1830 by Rev. Eliab Going, the first Baptist preacher in this locality. Rev. Mr. Tillinghast was the first resident pastor, being appointed in 1839, and he was succeeded two years later by Rev. Benjamin Thomas, who remained until the society was disbanded in 1843. The church was re-organized with about twenty members in 1846 by Rev. Samuel W. Titus, who was installed the first pastor, the corporate name of the society being the First Baptist church of Olean. One of the oldest, if not the oldest, surviving members of this church is Dr. Lambert Whitney, who for nearly fifty years has been an active worker in its councils. After a pastorate of five years Rev. Mr. Titus was succeeded by Rev. Robert Fisher, among whose successors were Revs. Tilly, Stowell, Farr, Tower, Mudge, Olney, Brown, Dox, McClyment, and Smith, the present pastor being Rev. F. R. Fowler. The first house of worship was an old wooden store building donated to the society in 1848 by Dr. Andrew Mead. In 1860 this building was destroyed by fire and the present stone and brick edifice erected on South street. This, with subsequent additions and repairs, has cost the society about $30,000 and with other property is now valued at $45,000. It will seat 500 persons. The society has about 300 members and a large Sunday school.

The German Evangelical Immanuel Lutheran church, on the corner of Laurens and Fourth streets, was organized January 2, 1855, by Rev. Adam Ernst, with thirty members. The first pastor was Rev. I. H. Doerman and the first house of worship, a frame structure, was erected in 1859 at a cost of $2,100. The present church edifice was built of wood in 1887, cost $6,000, will seat 300 persons, and with other property is now valued at about $10,000. The society has over 200 members and a Sunday school of ninety scholars, to whom instruction is given in both German and English.

Zion's Evangelical church, on the corner of Thirteenth and Washington streets, was organized in 1874 by Rev. L. Witt, the first pastor. Their house of worship, a frame edifice, was erected in 1879 and cost about $1,400; the church property, including grounds and parsonage, is valued at $4,100. The building will seat 150 people, and the society has about fifty members and a Sunday school of fifty scholars.

St. Mary of the Angels Roman Catholic church was organized in 1850 with forty members by Father Doran, the first pastor. Until 1876 services were held weekly by Franciscan Fathers from Allegany, but in that year Rev. J. J. Hamel was appointed resident priest by Bishop S. V. Ryan, and he has since officiated in that capacity. Their church edifice was erected of wood in 1860 and enlarged in 1877 and 1879, its present seating capacity being 900 persons. It originally cost $3,000 and is now valued, including grounds, rectory, etc., at $20,000. The parish has 2,500 members and a Sunday school of 500 scholars.

The A. M. E. church was organized in the spring of 1879 by Rev. Mr. Collins, the first pastor, the first resident pastor, however, being Rev. Mr. Thompson. Their first church edifice was erected of wood in 1880 and in 1890 moved back and intended for a parsonage, but has never been used for that purpose. In the winter of 1890-91 the present frame building was erected and the two structures and lot are valued at about $2,500. The Sunday school has an average attendance of fifty scholars. The present pastor is Rev. Woodruff Post.

The First Congregational church of Olean was organized by its first and present pastor, Rev. James H. McKee, on February 9, 1889, with twenty-nine members, which number has since been increased to about ninety. The first services were held in a hall and afterward in the Y. M. C. A. rooms. Their present frame edifice was erected in 1891 and dedicated on May 6th of that year. The frame work of this structure was formerly the first Episcopal church building in Olean. It cost the Congregationalists about $4,000; the lot cost $4,500. With a frame parsonage adjoining the present value of the church property is about $12,000. The Sunday school has an average attendance of fifty scholars under the pastor as superintendent, who is also president of the Cattaraugus County Sunday School Association.

A Swedish church society was legally organized in 1892 with about thirty members, who are supplied by pastors from neighboring towns. They hold occasional services in the basement of the Lutheran church.

A Union church edifice was erected of wood in East Olean in 1892, and is valued, including lot, at about $1,200. The Sunday school held here has about 100 scholars with Miss M. V. Morse as superintendent.

The Y. M. C. A. chapel at the corner of Elm and Walnut streets in north Olean was built for a Sunday school building to accommodate residents of that part of the village, but is not connected with the Young Men's Christian Association. The average attendance of the Sunday school is fifty-six; the superintendent is Milton G. Butler.

October 12, 1885, a preliminary meeting was held at the residence of Dr. C. H. Bartlett for the purpose of organizing a Young Men's Christian Association. The prominent citizens quickly and substantially responded and on November 25th the present Young Men's Christian Association of Olean was regularly organized with six directors and these managers: P. B. Griffin, president; L. F. Lawton, first vice-president; Charles P. Moulton, second vice-president; W. B. Reed, recording secretary; M. W. Barse, treasurer. Rooms were leased and furnished in the Duke block, which has since been the association's home. E. R. Sidell was employed as general secretary. The presidents to 1891 were Dr. J. E. K. Morris, 1887; Lewis Perry, 1890; S. W. Pancoast, 1891. The general secretaries for the same period were Irving B. Bristol, August, 1886; Charles H. Dodd, April, 1887; William H. Manning, January, 1888; Charles G. Cady, October, 1888; William Riach (acting), July, 1890; J. W. Keller, November, 1890. In 1891 the Board of Managers consisted of S. W. Pancoast, president; H. L. Gerstenberger, first vice-president; B. U. Taylor, second vice-president; Fred Revels, recording secretary; W. L. Pelton, treasurer. In July, 1891, these and the Board of Directors resigned to six individuals composing a new Board of Directors and the following managers to fill their unexpired terms: Henry Gillett, president; J. E. Eggleston, first vice-president; E. E. Taggart, second vice-president; A. P. Arnold, secretary; F. L. Taylor, treasurer. At the annual meeting in January, 1892, all were re-elected. J. W. Plant became general secretary in November, 1891, and in April, 1893, resigned. J. W. Keller is temporarily acting in that capacity. The officers are A. D. Peck, president; C. W. Evans, first vice-president; H. F. Davis, second vice-president; A. P. Arnold, recording secretary; E. G. Weinbauer, treasurer; and E. S. Jackson, J. E. Eggleston, Henry Gillett, J. W. Kelley, A. D. Cobb, and C. W. Evans, directors. The present membership is 170. The association has a well-equipped gymnasium and excellent bath rooms. It receives from various sources about $2,000 annually. Mrs. Helen M. Lawton has lately given $1,000 as a nucleus for a building fund.

The first Masonic organization in Cattaraugus county was Hamilton Lodge, No. 274, of Free and Accepted Masons, which was chartered January 22, 1817, and ceased to exist during the anti-Masonic excitement or Morgan episode; its lights were extinguished and the sacred volume upon its altar was forever closed. The records, furniture, and jewels became the property of Olean Lodge, but were destroyed by fire some thirty years ago. It is said that the lodge had a large amount of money, which was given to the town. In 1822 the officers were: Walter Wood, worshipful master; James Adkins, senior warden; Amos R. Orton, junior warden; Andrew B. Horton, treasurer; John A. Bryan, secretary.

March 20, 1852, a dispensation was issued for the erection of Olean Lodge, No. 252, F. & A. M., Most Worshipful Oscar Coles being grand master and James W. Powell the grand secretary. The brethren petitioning for the dispensation were Frederick S. Martin, David Bockes, Thomas Lockwood, David Bennie, Waldo A. Blossom, H. F. Lighton, David McCormick, Willis M. Howe, Emory Wood, David Day, R. L. Page, E. B. Andrews, John Barse, John Conrad, James Brooks, James L. Savage, and W. Wood. Andrew Mead was named as master, David Bockes as senior warden, and James Brooks as junior warden. A warrant containing the names of these officers was granted to the lodge June 5, 1852. The first meeting under the dispensation was held April 1st and the records show that the by-laws of Hamilton Lodge were adopted. Six petitions for membership were received at that meeting. The name of Russell Martin headed the list. The first to sign the by-laws was H. D. Bennie. The first communication was held August 12, 1852, and the first officers were Andrew Mead, W. M.; David Bockes, S. W.; Edwin B. Andrews, J. W.; David Day, secretary; Aaron I. Allen, treasurer; James L. Savage, S. D.; L. C. Hathaway, J. D.; John Barse and D. Hamilton Bennie, stewards; Julius R. Smith, tiler. In 1863 the lodge room was destroyed by fire and for a time the lodge met in Mr. Bennie's bedroom, which was then in the old Merritt warehouse. The new charter is dated June 6, 1863. The lodge now has 270 members. The masters have been as follows:

Masters.—Andrew Mead, 1852; Russell Martin, 1853; David Day, 1854; Richard King, 1855; H. D. Bennie, 1856, 1858-1859; C. H. Titus, 1857; N. P. Wilcox, 1860, 1862; G. W. Norton, 1861, 1863-65; J. T. Henry, 1866-67; F. L. Stowell, 1868; John S. Shaw, 1869; M. B. Fobes, 1870; Hugh Morton, 1871-72; E. A. Homer, 1873-74; C. H.

Emerson, 1875-76; L. F. Moore, 1877-78; M. Southeron, 1879-80; Dr. John L. Eddy, 1881-82, 1886; Caleb S. Hanks, 1883; John A. Taylor, 1884; C. S. Stowell, 1885; W. V. Smith, 1887; John Sloane, 1888-89; J. A. Barbydt, 1890; J. Arthur Corbin, 1891; Eugene A. Russell, 1893.

Olean Chapter, No. 150, R. A. M., was organized March 26, 1855; it was burned out and February 3, 1859, a new charter was issued. The first officers were John A. Aiken, H. P.; Russell Martin, king; David Day, scribe. The present membership is 170. The high priests have been as follows:

High Priests.—John A. Aiken, 1855; David Day, 1856; Richard King, 1857; no record, 1858; N. P. Wilecox, 1859; H. D. Bennie, 1860-61; no record, 1862-63; J. S. Shaw, 1864-67, 1874; John B. Shaw, 1868; F. L. Stowell, 1869-70; M. B. Fobes, 1871-72, 1878-79; C. S. Stowell, 1873; E. M. Johnson, 1875-76; E. A. Homer, 1877; L. Durkee, 1880-81; L. M. Crake, 1882; L. F. Moore, 1883-85; C. S. Hanks, 1886; Martin Southeron, 1887-88; William V. Smith, 1889-90; William L. Myrick, 1891; John Sloane, 1892; Albert A. Swartz, 1893.

St. John's Commandery, No. 24, K. T., was organized February 8, 1856, at Wellsville, and was moved to Olean about 1863. Its present membership is about 370. Following are the eminent commanders since 1856:

Eminent Commanders.—Hiram York, 1856; no record, 1857-58; James M. Mott, 1859; no record, 1860-63; F. L. Stowell, 1864-67; John B. Shaw, 1868-70; C. T. Chamberlain, 1871; W. A. Baldwin, 1872-73; E. D. Lovelridge, 1874-76; M. B. Fobes, 1877-78; M. W. Barse, 1879-80; E. M. Johnson, 1881-82; C. S. Stowell, 1883-84; H. M. Erust, 1885; L. F. Moore, 1886; C. S. Hanks, 1887; Frank W. Higgins, 1888-89; Martin Southeron, 1890; Dr. John L. Eddy, 1891-92.

Grand Council, No. 33, Royal and Select Masters, was organized February 2, 1869, and now has about seventy members. The first thrice illustrious master was John S. Shaw. This lodge for a number of years was inactive; in 1881 it was re-organized and its thrice illustrious masters since then have been as follows: C. S. Stowell, August 17, 1881; George W. Norton, 1882; John A. Taylor, 1883-84; C. S. Hanks, 1885-87; Martin Southeron, 1888; W. L. Myrick, 1889-90; J. A. Corbin, 1891; A. A. Swartz, 1892; J. K. Palmer, 1893.

Olean Lodge of Perfection, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, was organized September 17, 1891, with nineteen charter members, by C. S. Hanks, with Caleb S. Hanks as thrice potent grand master; W. L. McGowan, Hiram of Tyre deputy grand master; Enos B. Sage, venerable senior grand warden; Andrew J. Emerson, venerable junior grand warden. It now has about fifty-five members with these officers: J. A. Corbin, T. P. G. M.; M. Southeron, D. G. M.; G. H. Burdick, V. S. G. W.; E. F. Halliday, V. J. G. W.

Olean Council of Princes of Jerusalem, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, was organized by C. S. Hanks on September 17, 1891, with nineteen members and these officers: Calvin S. Stowell, most equitable sovereign prince grand master; Frank W. Higgins, grand high priest deputy grand master; W. L. McGowan, senior grand warden; A. W. Georgia, junior grand warden. It now has about fifty-five members. The officers are D. E. Barrows, M. E. S. P. G. M.; A. A. Swartz, G. H. P. D. G. M.; A. W. Georgia, M. E. S. G. W.; E. F. Halliday, M. E. J. G. W.

Electa Chapter, No. 84, Order of the Eastern Star, was organized by Martin Southeron, June 3, 1891, with forty-six members and with Martin Southeron as W. P.; Mrs. Kate Williams, W. M.; Mrs. Sarah A. Turner, A. M. It now has about 170 members.

Light of the West Lodge, No. 42, F. & A. M., (colored,) was organized April 17, 1888, with seven members, and worked under a dispensation until May 4, 1889, when a charter was received. The first officers were T. J. Sanders, W. M.; T. H. Barnes, S. W.; Wallace Virginia, J. W. The present membership is twelve.

In 1892 the erection of the present handsome brick Masonic temple was commenced, the corner-stone being laid on Tuesday, September 27, Anno Domini 1892, Anno Lucis (the year of light) 5892. The dimensions are 70 feet on Union street, 108 feet deep, and five stories high in front and four back. It contains one of the largest and finest halls in the State. The total cost was about $50,000. The building committee consisted of E. M. Johnson, F. W. Higgins, J. Arthur Corbin, A. T. Eaton, G. H. Strong, and F. E. Tyler. The superintendent was Martin Southeron.

A lodge of the I. O. O. F. was organized and chartered in Olean about 1851 with some forty members, but its records were burned with those of the Masons in 1863, which caused its dissolution. Olean Lodge, No. 471, was chartered August 22, 1878. The present membership is about 220. Allegheny Encampment, No. 102, I. O. O. F., was organized at Salamanca and chartered there February 27, 1884. Enthusiasm lagged to such an extent that their charter was recalled and transferred to a similar organization in Olean, which now has about eighty-five members. Banner Lodge, No. 112, Daughters of Rebekah, auxiliary to the I. O. O. F., was chartered November 2, 1888, with thirty-two members, the present number being sixty-three. The I. O. O. F. own the building they occupy, having bought it since its erection.

Olean City Club was organized December 22, 1883, with thirty-five members and N. V. V. Franchot, president; S. H. Bradley, vice-president; J. A. Taylor, secretary; and H. M. Ernst, treasurer. The club has always had rooms in the Exchange Bank building and is the only purely social club organization in the city. The present membership numbers about sixty.

The Olean Athletic Association was organized May 12, 1887, with about seventy-five members, which now number 125. The present officers are Thomas Troy, president; A. T. Eaton, vice-president; George A. Borden, secretary; F. L. Blakeslee, treasurer. The association leased five acres of land inside the corporation and fitted it up for athletic purposes.

The Young Men's Hebrew Association was organized December 21, 1883, with sixteen members, to meet the needs, both religiously and socially, of the Jewish residents of Olean. The first officers were H. W. Marcus, president; Max I. Fischer, vice-president; Simon Reich, secretary; David Harris, treasurer. A Sunday school was organized and religious services are held during the Hebrew holidays. There are now twenty-seven members with these officers: M. Ruslander, president; C. Cohn, vice-president; H. W. Marcus, secretary; H. J. Harris, treasurer.

The Olean W. C. T. U. was organized in 1882 and chartered in July, 1892, the original membership being about sixty, which now numbers eighty-five. The officers are Miss Dora Coss, president; Mrs. L. J. Whitcomb, recording sec'y; Mrs. D. S. Abbott, corresponding sec'y; Mrs. J. Douglass, treasurer.

The G. D. Bayard Post, No. 222, G. A. R., was organized with twenty-nine charter members. The J. L. Eddy Encampment, Sons of Veterans, had an existence of about two years. The L. Y. Miller Camp, No. 186, Sons of Veterans, was organized in March, 1891, with about thirty members, its present number, and these officers: W. D. Parker, captain; Charles Barber, lieutenant; J. G. Neill, quartermaster; C. H. Rafferty, first sergeant. The officers for 1893 are the same except lieutenant, who is F. Z. Oakley.

St. Mary's Branch, No. 53, C. M. B. A., was chartered March 9, 1881, with about fifteen members, which now number 150. St. Mary's Branch, No. 12, L. C. B. A., was organized and chartered April 9, 1890.

D. S. Abbott, inventor and manufacturer of saw-mill machinery, was born in Ischua, July 1, 1838. He removed to Olean when sixteen, perfected himself in mechanics, and has long been doing a profitable business in the manufacture of his inventions. He makes lath-mills, lath-packers and trimmers, slab-slashers, shingle-machines, shingle-jointers, drag-saw machines, shingle-bolters, etc. Mr. Abbott is a Prohibitionist and was the candidate of that party for sheriff in the election of 1888.

I. E. Ackerly, a native of Kennedy, Chautauqua county, was reared on the farm and in early life clerked in stores, and at the age of eighteen began telegraphing, which he followed until 1870, being a year or two train dispatcher. Becoming acquainted with the oil country and the oil business he was finally appointed agent for the Pennsylvania Transit, a pipe-line concern, and shortly afterward was promoted superintendent of all the company's lines, which position he resigned in 1877. Since 1872 Mr. Ackerly has been engaged largely in the oil business alone. He is a prominent Mason.

Ansel Adams, son of Thomas and Anna (Thorpe) Adams, was born in Oak Hill, Greene county, July 16, 1804, and married, March 4, 1835, Ruth A., daughter of Benjamin Nichols, of Windsor, N. Y. In 1838 they came to Olean, where he died in 1886. In 1839 he was chosen deacon of St. Stephen's Episcopal church and for some time was its senior warden. For a number of years he was prominently engaged in dealing in real estate and merchandise, and left at his death a widow and three children, the latter being Edgar A., Norman E., and George A., all born in Olean.

E. E. Alderman is a native of Portville, where his early life was passed as a student and clerk. He was born May 4, 1858, and in November, 1887, came to Olean, where he associated himself with L. F. Lawton and has since been engaged in the real estate business under the firm name of E. E. Alderman & Co. Mr. Alderman has been secretary and treasurer of the Buffalo Street Land Company, secretary of the Olean Building, Loan, and Savings Association, and a member of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trade. He has always taken a leading part in the political affairs of the county, and has been treasurer of the Cattaraugus County Republican Committee.

Henry G. Allen, son of Stephen and Mary A. (Sheldon) Allen, was born in Allegany, May 2, 1838. He began business as a lumberman. He volunteered in Co. A, 85th N. Y. Vols., July 16, 1861, and served until Nov. 24, 1862, when he re-enlisted in Co. L, 4th U. S. Artillery, for three years, and was discharged at the close of his term of service. March 21, 1866, he married Mary A., daughter of Samuel Oosterhoudt. He has since been a farmer in Olean, a lumber merchant in Portsmouth, Ohio, a lumberman and coal dealer in Rexford, Pa., from 1878 to 1881, and postmaster there from 1881 until he resigned in 1885. Since then he has resided in Olean, with a winter residence in Florida.

Clarence E. Andrews, son of George and Charlotte (Stoddard) Andrews, was born in Busti, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1849. His paternal grandfather, a native of Vermont, was one of the first settlers of Busti, and held a captain's commission and led his company against the Indians, who afterward recognized him as their special friend. His maternal grandfather, Rev. A. A. Stoddard, also a native of Vermont, was a prominent pioneer Baptist minister, whose son, Rev. I. J. Stoddard, now of Iowa, was one of the first Baptist missionaries to India, where he labored about twenty years. George Andrews is a farmer and still resides in Busti. C. E. Andrews finished an academic education at Jamestown Academy. At the age of eighteen he became a book-keeper in Minnesota, where he spent two years. He next spent twelve or thirteen years as a traveling salesman. In July, 1882, he purchased the furniture store of A. Blake and has since been one of Olean's energetic business men. Mr. Andrews is a member of the Board of Trade and of the Baptist church, and a Republican. In Jan., 1874, he married Augusta F. Campbell, of Busti.

Rev. James William Ashton, D.D., rector of St. Stephen's Episcopal church, was born in Philadelphia, Jan. 18, 1843. His father was Daniel R. Ashton, who for many years was a well-known teacher, and his mother was Elizabeth Josiah Marsh, a woman of aristocratic type descended from one of the old Revolutionary families. His grandfather, Colonel Marsh was commander of a regiment of the Pennsylvania line and an aide-de-camp of General Washington during the battle of Princeton. The early years of his life were spent under the parental roof, and at the age of sixteen he entered the University of Pennsylvania. While there the Civil war broke out and the military spirit which he inherited from his forefathers was quickened by the patriotic and spartan-like disposition of his mother, who inspired him with high and noble aims of life. When the first gun of the Rebellion was fired all the patriotic impulses of his nature were stirred and he desired to offer his services as a volunteer soldier, but in consideration of his studies and his immature age it was deemed best to wait. In the meantime his soldierly spirit was not at rest, for he was a member of the University Light Infantry Company. In 1862 he laid aside his academic gown and nobly took his place with the brave men who were fighting for the preservation of the Union. By appointment of Governor Curtin he received a commission as first lieutenant of Co. C, 157th Pa. Vols. His first military duty was discharged in the neighborhood of the city, where he recruited a number of men, and at Fort Delaware Bay, where for a time he acted as post adjutant and learned the science of war, the drill, discipline, and tactics. For some time he was drill-master of a large part of the garrison of the fort, when there were thousands of Confederate prisoners there. Active service, however, was what he sought and he was soon engaged in the neighborhood of Washington and on the line of the Orange & Alexandria railroad in Fairfax county, Va., where he built a block-house to protect the road against the raids of rebel cavalry under Rosser and Mosby. He was with General Grant at the front in the spring of 1864 and fought in several engagements, and on the 28th of July he received a severe wound in the right scapula, which, along with other and almost fatal disabilities incurred in the line of duty, obtained for him an honorable discharge. He experienced keen regret at being compelled to leave the army, but when health and strength permitted he proceeded to carry out his long-cherished ambition of being a Christian minister. His forefathers on both sides had been members of the Church of England and of the Protestant Episcopal church in this country, but from circumstances which occurred before his birth some members of his family had drifted into the Baptist church, and in its principles he was reared and at the age of fourteen was received into fellowship. He studied for the ministry first in the Episcopal Divinity School in Philadelphia and then in the Baptist Theological Seminary in Newton, Mass. He prepared some young men for college, among the number two who have distinguished themselves as clergymen, and for months he lectured to a large class of wounded and disabled soldiers at the Government hospital, for which service he was liberally compensated by Miss Elizabeth Biddle, of Philadelphia. After graduating at Newton his first charge in the Baptist church was at Waterford, N. Y., and his second the Central Baptist church of Norwich, Conn. In 1871 he resigned from the ministry and membership of the Baptist denomination and was admitted to Holy Orders in the Episcopal church, being confirmed and ordained deacon and priest by the Rt. Rev. William Bacon Stevens, D.D., Bishop of the Diocese of Pennsylvania, in old Christ church, Philadelphia, a singular coincidence being that, when he stood in front of the chancel, he was immediately above the grave of some of his ancestors, who had once been prominently identified with that church. In this change of religious opinions and ecclesiastical connections Dr. Ashton was governed entirely by the highest principles of conscientiousness, and from a profound belief that in the Episcopal church he could best serve his Lord and Master. In the Episcopal ministry Dr. Ashton has been rector of the Church of Our Merciful Saviour (now the Annunciation), Philadelphia, where he labored for six years, after which he was rector of Grace church in the same city. In April, 1883, he became rector of St. Stephen's church in Olean, which position he still holds, it being the longest rectorship in the history of the parish. He took charge of the church at a time when its condition was one of feebleness, and by the strength of his high personal character, coupled with the faculty of organization which he possesses, its condition is now one of strength and influence, not only in the community, but also in the Diocese of Western New York. The elegant and costly new stone edifice which occupies a commanding position overlooking the park has been built and paid for during his rectorship. As a pulpit orator Dr. Ashton has rare gifts. Not only in the church, but also in the community, is his influence and strong personality felt. He received the degree of Master of Arts from his alma mater and the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Hobart College. He is also a member of the Pennsylvania Historical Society.

G. W. Delmar Baird was born in Ripley, N. Y., Sept. 16, 1847. Receiving his education at the Quincy High School and serving an apprenticeship as a painter, he came to Olean in October, 1877, and entered the employ of the Empire Freight Line, of which he has been for some time its chief clerk, having also served as clerk of the Board of Education and treasurer of the First M. E. church. Mr. Baird married, Nov. 11, 1868, H. Amelia, daughter of Kester Tracy, of Ripley.

Erasmus Barrows, who was born in Freedom on February 11, 1834, was a resident of Olean about twenty-five years, a portion of which time he practiced dentistry. He married, Aug. 30, 1859, Ellen T., daughter of William B. Shepard. Mr. Shepard's father was an early settler of the county and William B. died aged seventy-three on the farm where he was born. Dr. Barrows died in Olean, April 27, 1882.

David E. Barrows, D.D.S., nephew of Dr. Erasmus Barrows, was born in Arcade, N. Y., in 1855. Commencing the study of dentistry with his father when eighteen he practiced with him until 1883, when he came to Olean, where he has since followed his profession. He is a thorough student and is regarded as an expert, having successfully treated many difficult cases in dental surgery. Dr. Barrows married, in 1880, Nettie, daughter of Francis K. Davis, of Yorkshire.

Hon. C. V. B. Barse, born in Manchester, Ontario county, Dec. 11, 1817, received his education in the common schools and in Penn Yan Academy, and began business as a clerk in a hardware store. On attaining his majority he embarked in general merchandise business in Franklinville, where he remained until 1851, when he removed to Olean, where he had established a branch store in 1848. In 1864, with H. S. Morris, he established a hardware store at Bay City, which was continued five years. His son, Mills W. Barse, was for four years his representative there. In 1868 he was nominated and elected to the State Legislature. He was the founder of the State Bank of Olean in 1870, which was changed in 1878 to the Exchange National Bank. Mr. Barse was the only president of these banks until his death in 1885. He was also the first canal inspector at Olean in 1857. Sept. 7, 1841, he married Mary H., daughter of Aaron Wade, a farmer of Franklinville; children: Francis L., born June 20, 1844, married D. C. Lefevre, of Albany; Mills W., born Dec. 6, 1846; and William C., deceased.

Frank L. Bartlett was born in Belfast, Allegany county, September 25, 1859, was educated in the common schools and at Friendship Academy, and began his business career in the First National Bank of Cuba. In 1880 he entered the Exchange National Bank of Olean, when the late Hon. C. V. B. Barse was its active head, and later became assistant cashier. Upon Mr. Barse's death in 1885 Mills W. Barse was made president and Mr. Bartlett was promoted cashier, a position he has since ably filled. He has been chairman of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trade, treasurer of the Electric Light and Power Company, treasurer of the village, and director, secretary, and treasurer of the Pennsylvania Lumber Storage Company. In all of these positions Mr. Bartlett has exhibited a wonderful executive ability. His decisions are quick, but are wrought with sound judgment, and in all transactions he evinces a keen, shrewd penetration.

John L. Baxter, son of John W., was born in Olean, June 21, 1832, and two years later removed with his parents to Friendship, N. Y., where the father died in 1863. The son married Ellen Phalen, of St. John's, Ireland, in 1863, and in 1881 located permanently in Olean, where he engaged in the milling business. Mr. Baxter is a Democrat in politics.

C. E. and G. F. Bell (twins), sons of Nathaniel D. and Rebecca (Davidson) Bell, were born in New Hudson, N. Y., in 1854. They received an academic education in Friendship and were farmers until they attained their majority. They began a commercial business at Kane, Pa., in the fall of 1876. In 1880 they removed to the oil country near Bradford and there engaged in producing oil and selling goods until the fall of 1888, when they settled as dry goods merchants in Olean. The firm of Bell Brothers has recently purchased the store property formerly known as the Butler store and re-constructed it into one of the finest equipped dry goods stores in southwestern New York. They employ twenty-five clerks. C. E. Bell married a daughter of John Sell, of Warren, Pa., in 1886, and had one son, born April 6, 1889. Mrs. Bell died March 3, 1892, in the thirtieth year of her age.

Norman Birge, son of John, was born in Coventry, N. Y., July 7, 1816. His father was a carpenter and a soldier in the War of 1812. Norman Birge received a common school education and was a clerk and an apprentice to the trade of harness making. In March, 1839, he settled permanently in Olean and opened a shop for the manufacture of harnesses, in which he was actively engaged until his death in 1892. Dr. Whitney says: "Mr. Birge is distinguished as being the owner of the first buggy in Olean." In 1853 Mr. Birge married Sarah Barney, a native of Vermont, and their only daughter, Jennette, is the wife of Fred B. Humphrey, whose children are Grace and James.

Jason S. Bishop, son of Levi and Sarah (Higgins) Bishop, was born in Hume, N. Y., Sept. 27, 1835. His father was a blacksmith and died in 1847, when the family removed to a farm. In 1857 Jason S. went to Kansas, but a year later returned and engaged in the sale of groceries from the spring of 1859 to 1861. He was next a farmer in Granger and Hume until 1874 and then a merchant in Fillmore until 1879, when he settled in Olean, where he has since resided. He purchased twenty-seven acres of the Martin farm and platted it into village lots, which he has been engaged in selling. He is senior member of the firm of J. S. Bishop & Son, general merchants, and has also been engaged in the oil business. He has served three years on the Board of Education and was a prominent member of the building committee in constructing the State Street Academy. He was one of the largest contributors to secure the location of the Quirin tannery in Olean. July 30, 1861, he married Mary S. Minard. Children living: George L., born Dec. 20, 1863, junior member of the firm of J. S. Bishop & Son; and Sarah, born May 15, 1865, wife of S. I. Haas, an architect in Los Angeles, Cal.

Adoniram Blake was born in Milton, Vt., July 1, 1824, and when fifteen years of age moved with his parents to St. Lawrence county, N. Y., where he attended the St. Lawrence Academy at Potsdam. His father, John B., a native of New Hampshire, died in 1840. After completing his education young Blake began the study of dentistry in Albion, Orleans county, which profession he subsequently practiced fifteen years, traveling on a circuit with headquarters at Buffalo, and in 1860 located permanently in Olean, where he formed a partnership with N. S. Butler in the dry goods business. Three years later he bought the stock of F. R. Eaton, taking as a partner in this enterprise L. W. Gifford. He sold his interest in this store three years afterward to Bradley Faunce and devoted his attention to his hardware trade, which he had previously established as the second establishment of the kind in Olean, and which he sold in 1880, repurchasing it, however, in 1885 and forming a partnership with W. S. Wilkinson under the firm name of Blake & Wilkinson. In 1874 he built Blake's Opera House at a cost of over $20,000, at that time the finest block in the county. In 1858 Dr. Blake married Anna M. Bigelow, of Sardinia, N. Y. Dr. Blake served many years on the Board of Education and the Board of Village Trustees.

Manley A. Blakeslee, born in Perryville, N. Y., April 4, 1824, came to Olean in 1847, and for three years taught school and clerked. In 1851 he opened the first drug and book store in Olean, which he continued until 1886, except the years 1863 and 1864. Mr. Blakeslee is now a surveyor. While in trade as a merchant he was three times burned out.

Conrad J. Blessing, son of John and Apoleno (Shelling) Blessing, was born in Allegany, May 2, 1861. He lost his father while yet a lad and was early apprenticed at the blacksmith trade. He began business for himself in his native town about 1880. In 1882 or 1883 he came to Olean and purchased a shop, which was burned, and erected another on the site. He gives his entire attention to horseshoeing. In 1882 he married Huldah Bacon, of Allegany.

Elijah C. Blighton was born in Machias, Feb. 24, 1849. His father was Thomas N. Blighton, a carpenter and joiner by trade, who died there June 9, 1861, after residing in the town some fifteen years. Receiving a commercial education at Arcade, N. Y., Elijah C. married, in 1873, Ida C. Bargay, of Concord, Erie county, who died Nov. 14, 1884; he married, second, Minnie A. Bargay, in 1886. Locating in Olean in 1875, in the furniture establishment of Hoyt & Oosterhoudt, he began business for himself in 1880 as undertaker.

The Boardman family of America largely descends from Samuel Boreman, an Englishman of prominence, who came to Ipswich, Mass., in 1637, and in 1640 permanently settled in Wethersfield, Conn. He was a man of education and property, and his descendants in every generation have held high positions in both church and State.* A log-book of Timothy Boardman, kept on the Colonial privateer Oliver Cromwell in 1778, giving much of value of early times and also a biography of the author, Rev. Samuel W. Boardman, D.D., was published by the Rutland County Historical Society in 1885. The introduction by the secretary of that society says: "The Boardmans are all known as a strictly industrious, upright, religious, scholarly race."

Jehiel Boardman (5) was born at Bolton, Conn., Sept. 30, 1761. Emigrating to Norwich, Vt., with his parents in childhood he, while yet in early youth, commenced active life as a soldier in the Revolutionary army. After the war he became a merchant and lumberman at Norwich, where, in 1789, he married Sally Hatch. In 1794 the glittering reports that came to him concerning the "Western Reserve" (which was just offering itself to civilized occupancy) caused him to take a journey thither. His route was on foot from Norwich to Philadelphia and Pittsburg, finishing his journey to Cincinnati on a government boat loaded with corn. Here General Wayne was drilling his men preparatory to the famous battle with the Indians at Miami.† Mr. Boardman returned to Norwich with the intention of emigrating to the Western Reserve, but was prevented by the opposition of friends and the dangers and hardships of the journey. In 1799 he removed to Derby, Vt., a few miles from the Canada line. Here he cleared up a farm, commenced lumbering, and subsequently engaged in merchandising. In 1813 he decided to move to the Ohio country. His family then consisted of seven children. The long and tedious journey was made with his own teams, taking with him his household goods. They reached Olean early in 1814, then the head of navigation on the Allegheny, and where boats were fitted out for going down the river. Pleased with the advantages Olean offered Mr. Boardman decided to settle here, purchased land on the north side of Olean creek (the present site of Boardmanville), and began to clear and make a home in the dense pine forest, building a log house, in which he lived while clearing and improving his land. In 1817 he built a large frame barn 34x54 feet and in 1818 erected a commodious frame dwelling 32x44 feet. These buildings were built by hand, as there was no machine work in those days, and they are yet in use, the house now standing on First avenue in Boardmanville. Jehiel Boardman was a man well calculated by disposition and inclination for a pioneer. He was energetic, industrious, and scrupulously honest, and for the score of years he lived in the newly-settled town of Olean his influence was greatly felt and duly appreciated by his fellow citizens. He resided in the home he had built until his death, July 27, 1834. His wife survived him seven years.

* The name was spelled Borman and Boreman until 1712, when it became Bordman and later Boardman. The line from Samuel to Jehiel is Samuel (1), Nathaniel (2), Nathaniel (3), Nathaniel (4), Jehiel (5).

† The land where Cincinnati now stands was then selling for $1 an acre, and one mile back from the river it brought but twenty-five cents an acre.

Olcott P. Boardman (6), youngest son of Jehiel and Sally (Hatch) Boardman, was born at Derby, Vt., March 28, 1810, and came with his parents to Olean. His childhood days were passed in the pioneer's home, and amid the labors and privations incident to that life he attained a manhood vigorous in the sturdy characteristics which make the worthy man. His school education was necessarily limited, but he made good use of the opportunities afforded, and when nineteen years of age became clerk for Hon. F. S. Martin; his next employer was G. E. Warren, a lumber dealer of Pittsburg. He passed the spring and summer seasons in that city and the winters in the Upper Allegheny, where he bought lumber. When twenty-two years old he re-purchased the old homestead (his father having lost his title by the bankruptcy of Hoops) from F. A. Norton, who had become land proprietor of this portion of "Hoops's purchase." In 1833 Mr. Boardman made very many improvements on the homestead, but during the great tornado of March 20, 1834, his unfinished barn was devastated, his house greatly injured, and of his 200 acres of timber hardly a tree was left standing. This disaster, although destroying most of his property, did not discourage him, and he rebuilt and repaired the buildings which were occupied by his parents. From this time until 1849 he was successfully engaged in lumbering, supplying the markets of the cities on the Ohio river from the pineries of the Allegheny and its tributaries. In 1849 Mr. Boardman remodeled the homestead and made it his home. In 1867 he selected and made extensive purchases of land (covered with valuable timber) in the fertile Red River valley of Minnesota. In 1871 the first iron bridge in town was built over Olean creek at Boardmanville by Mr. Boardman, then highway commissioner, despite great opposition. Boardmanville, comprising about thirty acres of the Boardman farm, was platted in 1878. Over five acres was given to streets fifty feet wide and avenues forty feet wide. The lots were 50x120 feet in size. The first sale of lots was made and buildings erected in the fall of 1879. The deeds have a clause prohibiting forever the sale of intoxicating liquors. There are now more than 100 good homes with a population of over 500 people in Boardmanville, showing the results of a wise and liberal policy of dealing and the benefit of the prohibition of the liquor traffic. In Nov., 1883, he moved into his fine brick residence, which he commenced to build in Sept., 1882, on the old homestead site, personally superintending its construction, and here he now resides with his wife and granddaughter amid its lovely surroundings awaiting the Master's call.

Mr. Boardman married, October 3, 1833, Marcia P., daughter of Luman Rice, a prominent pioneer and business man of Olean. Their son, Luman Olcott Boardman, born at Olean, Dec. 16, 1835, married Emeline C., daughter of Joshua N. Bartlett, of Olean. He died Sept. 11, 1881. Mrs. Emeline C. Boardman died June 1, 1889. Their children were Marcia Rice, born at Olean, and Olcott P., who died Aug. 1, 1871. Mr. Boardman has ever been an important factor in the civil business of the town. In 1838 he was elected justice of the peace at Portville, where he was then a resident. In 1851 he was elected justice of the peace at Olean; he was postmaster from 1849 to 1853, toll collector on the Genesee Valley canal at Olean from 1860 to 1862, assistant assessor of United States internal revenue from 1862 to 1866, has also served as town assessor, for years has been a prominent and useful member of the Board of Education, and in many positions of trust has done admirable service. Mr. Boardman is a strong temperance worker and has been a conscientious member of the Presbyterian church for more than half a century. He is a careful and methodical man of business, who has done much service to the community in responsible positions. He stands in the front rank of progress, and the active influence of both himself and estimable wife has been freely given to causes working for the betterment of humanity.

John H. Bradner, the general manager of the large dry goods establishment of George B. Adams & Co., is a native of Orange county, and during his residence in Olean has acquired an enviable reputation for honest dealing, strict integrity, and uprightness.

William H. Conklin moved from his native town (Greenfield, Saratoga county) to Wyoming county in the fall of 1824. In 1843 he removed to the village of Castile, where he established business as a blacksmith and wagon maker, which he moved to Olean in 1860. Here he has carried on business under the firm name of W. H. & D. C. Conklin, manufacturing wagons which have acquired a wide reputation. Mr. Conklin is one of the leading citizens of Olean. He is esteemed as a man of substantial worth.

James V. D. Coon, M. D. (see also page 157), has doubtless the longest presidential record of any man in Cattaraugus county. Prominent among the Olean organizations of which he has held the position of presiding officer, or of which he is president at the present time, are the Board of Trade since its formation in 1888, the Board of Education, the village, the Electric Light and Power Company, and the Building, Loan, and Savings Association. He has also held other important public positions, being coroner three years, and in all these various capacities Dr. Coon has evinced a broad and liberal mind, absolute integrity, and an intimate knowledge of parliamentary practices. He is an energetic Republican and a worthy Mason.

Spencer S. Bullis was born in Aurora, N. Y., in 1846, and when twenty years old was engaged in the lumber business in that town, going from there to Port Allegany, Pa., with his brother, and as Bullis Brothers operated there for five years, when they bought the Fobes mills near State Line, establishing there the town known as Bullis Mills, and also about the same time building the large mills at Carrolton, both of which are still producing large amounts of lumber. His personal lumber interests are conducted under the head of the Allegany Lumber Company (Limited). It was in 1884 that the various lumbermen of Olean and vicinity formed what is called the United Lumber Company (Limited), which was finally succeeded by the Pennsylvania Lumber Storage Company, of which Mr. Bullis was made general manager, and which does business from the Atlantic to the Mississippi. Mr. Bullis purchased large tracts along the Red House, Quaker Run, Sugar Creek, and Willow Creek valleys, containing some 40,000 acres and tributary to the Allegany & Kinzua railroad. Mr. Bullis is a central figure in the lumber transactions of northern Pennsylvania. He is the executive officer of all his business enterprises.

George Chamberlin, son of Moses and Anna (Platt) Chamberlin, was born in Franklinville, Aug. 11, 1821, and was one of a family of fourteen children, eleven of whom grew to maturity. George at the age of twenty-one went on foot to Massachusetts with his cousin, Arad Woodruff, for the purpose of perfecting a brick-making machine. He remained there about a year without successfully completing the invention, when he left it to his cousin and returned the same way to Cattaraugus county. He next became a millwright, and invented, patented, and perfected a rope-making machine and sold the right for $5,000. About 1848 he came to Olean, where he spent the remainder of his life. Here he established a foundry and machine shop which he continued as a custom and job establishment until he completed and patented his stump-pulling machine, the manufacture and sale of which gave employment to ten men. This business he conducted till his death Oct. 17, 1884. He was a pillar of the Methodist church and its steward and trustee. Feb. 4, 1846, he married Clarissa Clark, who was born June 6, 1825, and who died Nov. 6, 1866; children: Henry W., Lewis G., and Ella V.

Henry W. Chamberlin, born March 2, 1847, received a business education in Buffalo, engaged with his father in manufacturing his stump-pulling machines, and was a member of the Chamberlin Manufacturing Company until Feb. 24, 1888, when he became the sole owner of the business and conducted it alone until his death Nov. 9, 1889. The business is continued by Mr. Chamberlin's widow and by Edward Troy, who had long served as book-keeper. Mr. Chamberlin was president of Olean village and a member of the Board of Education. June 9, 1870, he married Emma O. Northrup, of Onondaga county, and they had one daughter, Clara N. Lewis G. Chamberlin was born April 20, 1851, and became a partner in the Chamberlin Manufacturing Company in 1875, where he was engaged until Feb., 1888, when he sold his interest to his brother and engaged in the real estate business and in manufacturing dynamite in Chattanooga, Tenn. He died in Olean, Nov. 16, 1891. May 22, 1877, he married Patience S. Pierce, of Ischua; children: George L., born Feb. 26, 1878, and C. Husted, born Feb. 9, 1885.

Andrew B. Clark, a native of Rushford, N. Y., was born in 1847 and came to Olean with his parents when he was seven years old. Receiving a good business education he first learned the carpenter's trade and after building the shops, etc., for James H. Luther he began with the latter the trade of pattern making, which he still follows. Aug. 8, 1868, Mr. Clark married Carrie S. Hardy, of Rushford, Allegany county.

John Coast was born in Venango county, Pa., in 1825. His early business operations consisted of manufacturing iron and fire-brick; he was a pioneer in the oil development, being one of the first to engage in the business, and having since successfully followed it, operating in all the fields. Before pipe lines were established Mr. Coast shipped the oil down the river in barges. With his sons F. T. and J. W. he has conducted an extensive oil business and pushed to a successful issue many other enterprises of note.

Sam H. Coon, the city and associate editor of the Olean Daily and Weekly Times, has been a resident of Olean about seven years, during which time he has thoroughly identified himself with the material interests of the city. Mr. Coon was born at Ashaway, R. I., and at an early age went to Wisconsin, where his youth was spent. He learned the printer's trade in a country newspaper office in Wisconsin, and attended school at Albion (Wis.) Academy and Alfred (N. Y.) University. He began his newspaper experience with Ferrin & Weber on the Cattaraugus Republican. Mr. Coon has a wide acquaintance in journalism and is regarded as a versatile writer.

John W. Downs was born in Wellsville, Allegany county, July 4, 1862, and came to Olean in 1877 in the interests of Bullis Brothers, which firm was soon afterward merged into the Allegany Lumber Company, with whom Mr. Downs continues as superintendent of the lumber department.

Patrick J. Duffy, born in Ireland, July 9, 1850, became a merchant tailor in Olean in 1880. In May, 1879, he married Mary E. Le Strange, of Pennsylvania. He is a highly respected citizen and a careful business man.

Joseph Duke, son of William and Elizabeth (Cokayne) Duke, natives of England who emigrated to America about 1829, was born in Conklin, N. Y., April 23, 1836. In 1841 the family removed to Scio, N. Y., and July 3, 1866, he married Emily Reaser at Hammondsport, N. Y. He settled in McKean county, Pa., with his brothers, and built up the village of Duke's Center, named in their honor. They bought quite extensively of cheap lands and when it was discovered that they were situated in the Bradford oil belt large parcels were sold. They were also extensive lumber dealers and manufacturers. In the spring of 1875 William and Joseph Duke went to Bradford and opened there the first lumber yard. Later they bought extensively lands which proved to be good oil territory. Joseph Duke was a director in the Bradford National Bank and when Bradford became a city he was nominated by the Republicans for mayor, but declined the honor. He was for years intimately connected with Olean and decided to make it his home. He removed hither and purchased one of the most eligible sites in town, upon which he commenced the erection of a fine residence, but died Dec. 25, 1884. The Bradford Oil Exchange, of which he was a member, convened at once, appointed a committee of five members who attended his funeral, and adopted resolutions, in which were these words: "In his death this Exchange loses a member whose quiet, unobtrusive life was a synonym of all the attributes which adorn life and make man respected." Mrs. Duke resides in Olean. Children: Joseph Hanford, born Dec. 25, 1868, of Corry, Pa., and Myron J., born Dec. 3, 1875.

John Duke, son of William and a native of Corbettsville, N. Y., was born April 14, 1832. After his father's death in 1848 he remained with his mother until he attained his majority, when he became a millwright, which, with farming and lumbering, he followed the ensuing twenty years. About 1868, with his brothers Thomas, Joseph, and Charles, he removed from Scio to McKean county, Pa., and settled in the hamlet now known as Duke's Center, where he continued his old occupation until 1878, when he commenced oil operations by sinking two wells on his own lands, which have since constantly produced oil. In 1881 he came to Olean and built a beautiful residence and a brick block on Union street which bears his name. He is also interested in real estate, and is identified with the denomination of Disciples of Christ at Duke's Center, to which he gave the grounds and most of the funds for the erection of the church edifice of the First Church of Christ, and also planned and laid out the Duke's Center Cemetery. Mr. Duke married Nancy J., daughter of Joseph Morgan, of Scio. They have an adopted son, William C. Duke, a farmer at Duke's Center, who married Ella Pierce and has sons John G., G. Wellington, and Daniel.

Fred R. Eaton, born in Springville, N. Y., July 24, 1833, was educated in Springville Academy, and in 1856 became interested in mercantile business in Olean, but for two years thereafter remained personally in Buffalo, acting as under-sheriff under his father-in-law, Orrin T. Lockwood. In 1858 he removes with his family to Olean and was an active merchant here thirty years. During that time his stores were burned four different times and upon two occasions the loss was total. During his business career he built fourteen stores on Union street between State and Laurens, two of which are now standing, all the others having been burned. There are now standing in the city eleven dwelling houses which were also built by him. In politics Mr. Eaton has always been a Republican, and as such was elected supervisor of Olean in 1863 and 1864. As a member of the town board during the war he successfully resisted an attempt to repudiate town bonds issued to resident volunteers for the purpose of keeping the quota full. In 1879 Mr. Eaton was elected president of the village and re-elected in 1880. In 1886 business called him to Duluth, Minn., where he has since spent most of his time.

A. T. Eaton was born in Cuba, N. Y. and has spent most of his life in banking institutions. After residing a number of years in the west he returned to Cuba, where he entered a bank as collection clerk. When a branch of that bank was established in Olean Mr. Eaton removed to this city, where he has since July, 1885, been cashier of the First National Bank. Mr. Eaton is an active member of the fire department, has been a member of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trade, and has served as a member of the common council, being president of that body in 1884. In public life and in private, in business and in social capacities, he is a thorough gentleman and possesses a wide degree of confidence and esteem.

Andrew J. Emerson was born in Allen, N. Y., Feb. 28, 1856, and married Lula Allen, of the same place, who was born Dec. 3, 1855; children: Susie and Grace. Mr. Emerson came to Olean in 1886 and shortly afterward established his present business of manufacturing marble and granite monuments.

James Farley was born in Havana, Schuyler county, Aug. 6, 1856, and at the age of seventeen located in Olean, where he has since resided. Feb. 8, 1882, he opened the Buffalo House, which he still conducts as a hotel. July 2, 1878, Mr. Farley married Anna M. Lambeck, of Olean. A Democrat in politics he was elected alderman from his (the 3d) ward in 1887.

Jacob Fix, born in Batavia, N. Y., Aug. 19, 1868, located in Olean as a baker and confectioner in 1886. He has built up a profitable business and a good reputation, and enjoys the respect of a large circle of friends.

N. V. V. Franchot was born in Morris, Otsego county, Aug. 21, 1855, and attended and was graduated from the Union School at Schenectady and from Union College in 1875. He began business in Millerstown, Pa., but removed to Olean, Sept. 1, 1878, where he has since resided. His operations have been principally in producing petroleum in connection with the firm of Franchot Brothers, of which he was the senior and active member. He is interested in the Tidewater Pipe-Line Company, in some valuable mines in Canada, and in real estate in Washington and Olean. Mr. Franchot was chairman of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trade its first year. He stands high in the councils of the Republican party, and as a business man and citizen is energetic, progressive, and competent.

John B. Frawley, born in Owego, N. Y., Feb. 20, 1845, began learning his trade of tinsmith in Syracuse in 1863 and located in Olean in 1879, establishing himself in the hardware business, which he still follows. May 29, 1872, he married Margaret E. Roach, of Owego. Mr. Frawley was for some time a member of the Board of Education.

Gallagher Brothers, sons of James Gallagher, came to Olean in 1878 and engaged in the manufacture and sale of nitro-glycerine and dynamite, and did a large business in the Bradford, West Virginia, and Ohio oil fields, where they torpedoed successfully hundreds of wells. James E. Gallagher, the senior brother, is the patentee of the valuable "Explosive Weight," which will explode a torpedo or other explosive at any depth and 2,000 feet under water.

Charles Gillingham, a native of England, came to this country in 1852, when twenty-six years of age, locating at once in Olean. Being a carpenter by trade he soon began contracting and has since successfully followed that line of business. In 1865, after the great fire, he started the Olean Sash Factory. Mr. Gillingham has built many public buildings, among them the Chamberlain Institute and Dow's Bank at Randolph, St. Bonaventure's College at Allegany, First M. E. church and Alumni hall of Ingham University at Le Roy, and the Exchange National Bank and the Methodist, Baptist, and Episcopal churches in Olean. Although naturally of a quiet temperament he is relied upon for active work in all philanthropic measures. He is a staunch Republican and a fearless temperance advocate, is a director of the Forman Library Association, and the oldest member in point of service of the Board of Education. Perhaps his greatest efforts outside of business have been in the line of church work. He has long been a member and supporter of the Methodist church of Olean, being for many years superintendent of the Sunday school, and occupying various other official positions.

David P. Godfrey, son of Joel and Permelia (Peck) Godfrey, was born in West Bloomfield, N. Y., Sept. 1, 1813, and in the spring of 1827 came with his father to Yankee hill in Ischua. In Dec., 1829, they removed to Pleasant valley in Olean, about two miles north of the village. In 1834 he purchased his first 100 acres of wild land of Frederick A. Norton, paid for it, and added to it from time to time until he had nearly 300 acres. He has aided in building the local school house and two church edifices for the Methodists, of which church he is a member and trustee. In 1841 he married Abigail Bouton, by whom he had one son, Elisaph D., born in Jan., 1842. He enlisted in the 154th N. Y. Vols. and received a gun-shot wound at the battle of Chancellorsville. Upon recovery he was transferred to the War Department, where he remained until 1868. Four years later he was again employed by the government, which he has continuously served to the present time, being now in the Pension Department as traveling agent. He married Amanda Hicks; children living: Carrie (Mrs. Charles Oosterhoudt); Orrin W. and Frank N., of the firm of D. P. Godfrey & Sons, farmers, breeders of full blood Holstein cattle, and milk dealers, who reside on the homestead; I. Mulvin, a farmer in Portville; Elmer M., express messenger; and Fred W., a photographer in Olean. Mrs. Godfrey died April 9, 1891. Orrin W. Godfrey, born on the farm where he now resides, Jan. 30, 1849, was educated in the common school of his district and in Olean Academy, and has always been a farmer. May 24, 1871, he married Frances H., daughter of John A. and Elizabeth C. (Tubbs) Olds, of Smethport, Pa., who were pioneers of McKean county. Children: Mina A. and Myra E. (twins), born Aug. 15, 1873, and Elizabeth A., born Sept. 13, 1888. Frank N. Godfrey, also born on the homestead, June 29, 1852, married, Sept. 22, 1886, Helen A. Van Dusen, of Olean, and has one daughter, Ruth A., born April 1, 1889.

Henry Hastings, son of Barnabas and Permelia (Fox) Hastings, was born in Cortland county Dec. 5, 1828. In 1836 his parents removed to Sardinia, N. Y., and his mother died in September following. At the age of fifteen he began working in summer and attending school in winter, and learned the carpenter's trade in Ontario county, where he resided about five years. In the fall of 1851 he came to Olean, where he has since resided. He has been a carpenter and builder nearly forty years, and is also a farmer on lot 3. Mr. Hastings has been highway commissioner four years and with his colleagues in office built the first iron bridge in Olean. He also served as assessor one term. Sept. 20, 1855, he married Sarah, daughter of the pioneer, William B. Shepard; children: Fred B., born Sept. 28, 1856; Ellen S., born Sept. 14, 1858; Wm. H., born Jan. 1, 1874; Frank E., born Jan. 1, 1866, died Nov. 2, 1876.

Michael J. Haugh was born in Ireland, Aug. 15, 1853, came with his parents to America when seven years of age, and finally learned the trade of stone cutter, which he followed several years. Locating in Olean in 1879 he established his present bottling works, being also a dealer in ice, and meeting in all his business enterprises with excellent success. June 12, 1881, he married Margaret McGuinn, of Weston's Mills.

Joseph Heilbrunn, a native of Germany, was born May 17, 1848, immigrated to America in 1866, and located in Olean in 1880, where he started a small business in peddlers' supplies, which he has constantly increased in volume to the present proportions. His wife is Rosa Rosenbaum, whom he married in October, 1880.

Orin T. Higgins was born in Centerville, Allegany county, Aug. 14, 1826. He successfully followed the mercantile business for many years in Allegany county and was engaged in banking and other commercial enterprises, through which he amassed an ample fortune. Mr. Higgins latterly gave his entire attention to his extensive timber and real estate interests, principally in Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. He was president of the Higgins Land Company and treasurer of the Olean Land Company, and was one of the largest individual owners of white pine timbered lands in the United States. He had also extensive real estate interests in this city. He died March 3, 1890.

Frank W. Higgins was born at Rushford in 1856. His schooling was finished at the Riverview Military Academy on the Hudson, after which, at the age of twenty, he went into trade in Michigan. In 1879 he came to Olean and took the active management of the business of Higgins, Blodgett & Co., who at that time were running a number of stores in the oil country and in Allegany and Wyoming counties. He now devotes most of his time to western land interests. An active Republican, he has been chairman of the County Committee, and was a member from the 34th Congressional District to the Chicago convention of 1888. He did effective work upon the stump during the campaign of that year and is among the recognized leaders of his party in this part of the State. His name is spoken of as a candidate of his party for a State senator. He is president of the Forman Library Association, has been eminent commander of St. John's Commandery, K. T., was a member of the St. Stephen's church building committee, and a member of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trade.

George J. Holly, born in Ceres, Allegany county, in 1860, married, in 1881, Emily R., daughter of Dewitt C. Allen, of Allentown, Allegany county. He is a member of the 43d Separate Company and his wife is a dealer in hair goods, etc., in Olean. Her father, who died in 1864, was a prominent resident of Allegany county, holding several important offices and being extensively engaged in business enterprises.

Samuel R. Homer was born in Lowell, Mass., Feb. 1, 1817, and died in Olean, March 20, 1889. Mr. Homer came to Olean about the time of the construction of the New York, Lake Erie & Western railroad in 1851, with which he was prominently connected, being the superintendent of construction of the telegraph lines from Jersey City westward to Little Valley. Upon the completion of the road he took charge of the dining-room at the Olean station, which he conducted many years. With the exception of about two years Mr. Homer has been continuously a resident of Olean since 1851. In 1859 he became associated with ex-Governor Horatio Seymour in the lumber business in this town, and the two were jointly the owners for many years of a large tract of real estate north of the city. Their partnership relations were dissolved about 1880, but their personal relations remained of the most close and intimate character until the death of the ex-governor. Until the advancing years brought feeble health Mr. Homer was actively engaged in business enterprises, in which he was successful in a marked degree. He had led an upright, honorable, and useful life. He generously placed at the disposal of the Board of Trade valuable and desirable tracts of land, was prominently connected with the Masonic bodies of the city, and was one of the early members of St. John's Commandery, K. T. He married, Nov. 13, 1845, Sarah A. Clark; children residing in Olean: Eugene A., George D., and James M. George D. Homer was born in Piermont, N. H., July 27, 1849, and with his brothers is a farmer and stock breeder. James M. Homer, born in Olean, April 3, 1852, married, September 20, 1883, Hattie D. Root, of Bolivar, N. Y. Eugene A. Homer is the Olean agent for the American Express Company.

William Hutchings, an Englishman by birth and parentage, was born in 1851, came to America, locating in Armstrong county, Pa., in 1869, where he was engaged in the oil business, and in 1883 settled in Olean, where he opened the Genesee House. In 1881 he married Eva Sutton, of Greece City, Pa.

William M. Irish, general local manager of the Standard Oil Company, was born at Fair Haven, Mass., July 3, 1829, served as clerk in the customs office at New Bedford during the administration of Pierce and Buchanan, and in 1861 engaged in the petroleum oil refining business at that place, being made superintendent of the New Bedford Oil Company, which was one of the first to engage in refining petroleum. In 1865 Mr. Irish came to the oil country and became the superintendent and treasurer of the Wamsutta Oil Company, which was located on Oil creek. In 1872 he became the superintendent of the Octave Refining Company at Titusville, remaining with it at company until it was sold to the Acme Refining Company in 1876. Mr. Irish came to this city in May, 1876, taking the position of general manager of the Acme Works, which position he has since held. In point of years of experience he is one of the oldest oil refiners in the country, and has acquired a thorough and intimate practical and scientific knowledge of the business. His opinions on the various branches of oil refining are recognized as high authority, and he is frequently called upon as an expert. He was a member of the school board and city council of Titusville for several years, a member of the Board of Education of this city nearly eight years, being president of the board a considerable part of the time, and was president of the first Board of Water Commissioners in Olean, during which administration the works were constructed. He was appointed by Governor Cleveland a member of the Board of Directors of the State Insane Asylum at Buffalo and was re-appointed by Governor Hill. Mr. Irish is one of the directors of the Olean Electric Light and Power Company, vice-president of the Board of Trade, and actively interested in the growth and advancement of the town. He is now president of the Board of Health and one of the supervisors of the city.

Edward S. Jackson, son of Dr. Thomas S. and Sarah A. (Percival) Jackson, was born in Portville, Oct. 13, 1859, was educated in the public schools, commenced the study of dentistry in 1878, and was graduated from the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery in Philadelphia in the spring of 1887. He at once settled in Olean for the practice of his profession, where he is still engaged. He is a member of the Eighth District Dental Society of the State of New York and a member and a steward of the First M. E. church of Olean. June 5, 1881, he married Carrie M., daughter of Dr. L. M. Raub, of Bolivar; children: Albert H. and Lewis E.

James G. Johnson, of English descent, came from Canandaigua to Olean (then known as Hamilton) in 1808 and commenced the first settlement within the corporate limits of the present city. He was immediately joined by Sylvanus Russell and Bibbins Follett. Mr. Johnson died early in 1811. At his death his widow, whose maiden name was Sophia Stone, of Scotch parentage and on her mother's side a descendant of the Dudley family, returned to her father's house in Bloomfield, Ontario county, where her son, James G. Johnson, who was given his father's name, was born Sept. 13, 1811. Mrs. Johnson remained with her father until 1819, when she returned to Olean. About this time James G., Jr., commenced attending school, which he continued two years, after which his school days were limited to the winter season, and were discontinued when he reached the age of thirteen. At the age of fourteen he left home and for eight months was clerk in a store at Centerville. He then entered the store of Ebenezer Lockwood in Olean, where he remained two years, when Mr. Lockwood discontinued business. He was next a clerk with William Bagley. In 1831 he entered the store of the late Judge Martin at a salary of $10 per month and board and washing. Prior to this he had a stated salary with Osborne & Bockes a few months. Young Johnson continued in the employ of Judge Martin five years, when he became a partner under the firm name of Martin & Johnson, which partnership was continued nine years. In 1846 he removed to Allegany, where he had previously bought a tract of timber land and a saw-mill, and engaged in the manufacture and sale of lumber and also carried on a mercantile business. In company with Eleazar Harmon, of Ellicottville, he platted into lots and sold the grounds where the village of Allegany has since been built. In 1854, with Gilbert Palen, he built and operated the sole-leather tannery afterward owned by the late J. B. Strong. In 1862, at the suggestion of the late Hon. R. E. Fenton, then member of Congress, he was commissioned by President Lincoln captain and assistant quartermaster, and assigned to duty in the Army of the Potomac. He saw the battle of South Mountain and Antietam and was with the army under General McClellan and General Burnside in its march to Fredericksburg. He was stationed at Aquia creek in the winter of 1863-64 and subsequently at Harrisburg, where he remained on duty until the close of the war. For meritorious service he was promoted to the rank of colonel of volunteers. He returned to Olean with his health impaired, but again established an extensive mercantile business, which he continued some years and resigned it to his sons. He was active in the formation of the First National Bank of Olean, of which he was one of its directors. He was convinced that Olean and Allegany were within the Bradford oil belt, and he so impressed others with his convictions that they, with him, formed a company and sunk the first oil wells in both these towns, on land leased by him to the company. Colonel Johnson was first a Whig and an active worker in that party's ranks. He was nominated by his party in 1848 for the State Legislature and was elected. His brother, Marcus H. Johnson, who was residing in the Second District of this county, was nominated the same year by the Democrats and elected over the Whig nominee. In the fall of 1849 his party nominated and elected him county clerk. In 1871 he was appointed post-master of Olean and filled the position until 1877. He was also supervisor of Olean in 1840, 1843, 1844, and 1845 and of Allegany in 1855.

Elisha M. Johnson, son of James G., was born June 13, 1844. With his brother Marcus H., under the firm name of Johnson Brothers, he carried on for many years an extensive grocery and produce trade. Marcus H. died in 1876 and Elisha M. became an oil producer. He was elected to the Legislature in 1880 and in 1883-84 was a member of the Republican State Committee. Sept. 2, 1874, he married Cornelia Harriet Jackson, of Avon, N. Y.

James F. Johnson, a native of Lisle, N. Y., was born Nov. 3, 1831, was for three years succeeding 1851 a miner in California, and in 1855 located in Olean, where he has been a justice of the peace about twenty years, conducting also an extensive real estate business. He was deputy sheriff six years. In 1856 he married Mary E., daughter of Dr. John Mason, of Mercer, Pa.

Julius P. Johnson was born March 18, 1847, in Darien, Genesee county, spent two years at and was graduated in 1863 from the Poughkeepsie Business College, and in 1868 located in Olean, where he has since followed the avocation of book-keeper, being also an expert accountant. Aug. 18, 1868, he married Lodema E. Carr, of Byron, Genesee county. Their daughter Nellie S. is a graduate of the Olean High School and a book-keeper by profession. Mr. Johnson is a staunch Democrat.

James M. Johnson, son of James S. and Sarah (Root) Johnson, was born in Ellicottville, April 29, 1856, was educated in the Ellicottville Union Free School and by ex-District Attorney G. M. Rider and District Attorney J. H. Waring, and was a clerk in the postoffice of his native town two years, after which he became assistant at Hinsdale. Two years later he was employed in a general store in Franklinville. In 1881 he formed a partnership with the late Samuel Oosterhoudt in the shoe business. Mr. Oosterhoudt died in the fall of 1884, when Mr. Johnson sold to the estate of his partner. He soon after purchased the store of L. Latimer & Co. and has since continued the shoe business alone. He is also interested with a partner in a similar store in Jamestown. He is a member of the Board of Trade, and as a Republican has represented Olean in the county conventions and on the Republican County Committee. In Jan., 1884, he married Anna S., only child of N. S. Goodwin, of Olean. They have two daughters.

Will J. Kerr, a native of Liverpool, England, came to America in 1868 and to Olean in 1886, where, about 1888, he commenced the jewelry business, in which he has been eminently successful and maintains an excellent reputation.

M. L. Lee, youngest son of Lyman (see page 780), was born in Little Valley, Feb. 15, 1839, and has been in the employ of the Erie railroad over thirty years. In the fall of 1860 he married Jane E., daughter of Stephen Aldrich, of Little Valley, and Oct. 23, 1875, became station agent for the Erie at Olean.

Stillman E. Lewis, son of Caleb and Joanna (Wade) Lewis, was born in Farmersville, Feb. 25, 1845. His father became a settler there in 1832 and cleared a farm where he died in 1856. Mrs. Lewis died in 1861. Stillman

Lewis received his education in the common schools and in the academy at Arcade. In August, 1863, he enlisted under Capt. G. Fred Potter in Co. C, 13th N. Y. H. M. A., and was promoted orderly to the regimental surgeon and later was hospital steward with headquarters at Portsmouth, Va. He was discharged in July, 1865. In 1869 he began the profession of dentistry in Cuba, N. Y., where he was in practice until 1876, when he went to Elmira and remained until 1877. He came to Olean in 1878, where he has since practiced. In 1871 he married Julia A. Huntley, of Angelica, who died in 1873, being the mother of their son Stanley H. In 1877 he married Jennie M. Hastings, of Cuba; children: Maud H. and Lina W.

John Little was born in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1818, and coming to America settled in Franklinville in 1843, where he held the office of postmaster from June, 1861, until his death Jan. 27, 1886. His son John was born there Jan. 1, 1847, and in the fall of 1882 was elected sheriff of the county, which caused his removal to Little Valley, and at the expiration of his term of office removed to Olean, where he was subsequently appointed under sheriff. In 1870 he married a daughter of Hon. William McVey.

Thomas Lockwood came to Olean with his brother, Hon. Ebenezer Lockwood, about 1806. He was a lumberman and raftsman, and one of the prominent pioneers of the county. He resided in Olean some thirty or forty years, and about 1850 removed to Hinsdale and settled on a farm on Olean creek, where he spent the remainder of his life. He was supervisor of Olean from 1819 to 1822 inclusive. His son, James M. Lockwood, married Cora E. Hall. He enlisted in the U. S. navy in 1864 and was discharged a year later.

James H. Luther, born in North Scituate, R. I., June 27, 1826, came with his father Peleg to New Hartford, Oneida county, in 1828, but in 1847 returned to Providence, R. I., to complete his trade of machinist. In 1865 he began the manufacture of oil tools in Petroleum Center, Pa., moved thence in 1872 to Karns City, Pa., and in 1880 came to Olean, where he established a foundry and machine shop under the firm name of J. H. Luther & Sons, the sons being George H. and Charles P. Upon the death of the father the firm became J. H. Luther's Sons and is now the Luther Manufacturing Company. Mr. Luther married, in 1853, Mary A. Stephenson, of Ansonia, Conn. The Luthers—father and sons—have been prominent in the material growth of Olean, particularly in the development of the fire department.

William H. Mandeville, son of John D. and Susan (Pomeroy) Mandeville, was born in Millport, N. Y., in 1841. He spent his early boyhood in New York city and his youth in Belmont, N. Y., where he was educated. After a clerkship in a general store of five years he began, in 1863, the business of fire insurance, which he has since continued. In 1865, in company with his father, the senior member of the firm of J. D. Mandeville & Son, he came to Olean and established the first agency of the kind in Cattaraugus county. He has been a commissioned insurance agent a longer period than any other man in western New York. He is now the senior member of the firm of W. H. Mandeville & Co. Since he came to Olean he has paid in losses to the insured more than $1,000,000. Aug. 22, 1872, he married Helen L. Eastman and has one son, born in Oct., 1875.

Rudolph Mayer was born in 1827 in Baden Baden, Germany, where he early engaged in business as a butcher and dealer in meats. He married A. Goodsell, and in 1855 they came to America and joined his brother, Max Mayer, in Olean, who had preceded him four or five years. He formed a partnership with his brother in a meat market, and about 1860 established a market of his own on Union street, where he was in business until the fire of Jan., 1865, when his market was destroyed. He removed to State street in 1871 and continued in business until his death April 21, 1876. Mr. Mayer was a pillar of the Catholic church and one of the foremost in aiding to build their church edifice. Frederick C. Mayer, his son, succeeded his father in the meat market. April 28, 1881, he married Anna Gear, of Olean, and has three sons and a daughter.

John H. McCormick is a son of Peter McCormick, who came to Olean in 1850, followed farming, was well known throughout the county, and died here Aug. 13, 1888. John H. was born in Olean, Sept. 11, 1856, received a thorough business education, and May 28, 1884, married Maggie McClorey, of Franklinville. He has been engaged in the wholesale wine and liquor business.

John W. Meloy, born in Greene, N. Y., Sept. 8, 1834, was educated at the Franklin and Binghamton Acadmies and entered the law office of Morris & Tompkins, where he remained until 1854, when his father removed to Ellicottville and engaged in mercantile business, where young Meloy assisted him until 1859, when he was employed in the banking office of Stanley Martin in Olean. In June, 1860, he married Frances J., daughter of Dr. Thomas J. Williams, of Ellicottville. In 1863 he was appointed assistant superintendent of the Nashville, Decatur, and Stevenson lines of U. S. military railroads with headquarters at Nashville, Tenn. Subsequently the Chattanooga, Knoxville, and Atlanta lines were added to his charge, and these were almost exclusively used in transporting troops and army supplies to General Sherman. When the march from Atlanta to the sea was begun Mr. Meloy was called to assist in opening the railroads through North Carolina. As soon as the war closed he returned home and was a short time in mercantile business in Jamestown. Returning to Portville in 1865 he engaged in the grocery and provision trade and in buying and shipping lumber. For a number of years he was also in the banking and exchange business. Since 1883 he has had a grocery in Olean.

George N. Moore, son of Isaac and Mercy (Jones) Moore, was born in Bucks county, Pa., Jan. 10, 1827. At the age of sixteen he left home and began to learn the trade of carpenter and joiner. At the age of twenty-five he became a contractor and builder. In 1854 he went to Minneapolis and prosecuted his business through the disadvantages of the year 1857. In 1860 he returned to Bucks county, where he remained until 1865, when he settled in Oil City, where he was a contractor and builder and a dealer in lumber until 1879. He was then an oil producer in the Bradford fields and removed to Olean, where he has since resided. Jan. 10, 1876, he married Kate C. Stanton, who was born in Mt. Pleasant, Iowa. Her paternal grandfather was Judge Samuel Stanton, of Wayne county, Pa.; her maternal grandfather was Elihu Chadwick, of New Jersey, a colonel in the Revolution. Children: Clarence Stanton, born March 19, 1877, and Eva May, born March 19, 1879.

W. D. Moore, a Canadian by birth, born May 1, 1847, in 1864 removed to St. Lawrence county and six years later to Weston's Mills; in 1875 he came to Olean and engaged in building and contracting. In 1881 he entered into partnership with Charles Gillingham and established the Olean Sash and Blind Factory, which was continued until the buildings were destroyed by fire. Mr. Moore built the Moore block in Union street and his factory in Wayne street in 1883. In 1884, by the failure of other parties, he had a stock of furniture precipitated upon his hands, and since then has also conducted a large furniture trade. He has been active in many suburban real estate transactions. Mr. Moore is a member of the Masonic bodies and has occupied every office in the fire department from pipeman to chief. He is also a member of the Executive Committee of the Board of Trade.

Alexander W. Nelson was born in Dunbar, Scotland, Feb. 14, 1852. His parents, Walter and Elizabeth (Watt) Nelson, emigrated to America in 1857 and settled in Lockport, N. Y. He was a farmer until he was eighteen, when he became a railroad employee and a conductor at the age of twenty, which he continued until 1889, when he settled in Olean, where he has since been proprietor of and conducted a steam laundry. In 1880 he married Clara Stevens, of Lockport, who died in 1886, being the mother of two children, of whom Clara W. is living. In 1888 he married Jennie M. Williams, of Jackson, Mich.

Frank H. Oakleaf was born in 1852 in Brooklyn, where his early life was spent, removing finally to Titusville, Pa., where he learned the jeweler's trade. Coming to Olean in 1874 he was for a number of years engaged in the jewelry business with Fred R. Eaton, and subsequently became connected with the book and stationery trade, which he still follows, having added to it a line of wall papers and house decorating goods. Mr. Oakleaf is a member of the Board of Trade. In 1882 he married Jennie Y. Bickford, of Nashua, N. H.

Samuel Oosterhoudt, son of Zachariah and Polly (Reed) Oosterhoudt, was born in Franklinville, March 28, 1813, and received his literary education in the common schools. The family removed to Olean in 1817, where Mr. Oosterhoudt learned the blacksmith's trade. When about twenty-three he opened a shop in Olean and used the first money he earned to obtain a deed for his father and mother of the homestead farm. Dec. 20, 1838, he married Mary, daughter of Samuel Bronson and granddaughter of Cornelius Brooks. Mr. Oosterhoudt died Nov. 12, 1884; Mrs. Oosterhoudt died June 16, 1890. He followed his trade four years, when he changed to manufacturing and dealing in lumber, which grew to an immense business and required a small army of men. He began a systematic course of building, erecting business blocks and residences, being the pioneer in that direction and probably doing more than any other in building up Olean. He was a financier of more than ordinary ability and was a successful business man. He was a Republican and served as sheriff, supervisor, town auditor, and assessor. He possessed a harmonious character and was distinguished for his sterling integrity, his honorable dealing, and the modesty with which he bestowed a bountiful charity. He was especially the advisor and friend of young men and set many on the road to prosperity. Children: two who died in infancy; Mary Alice (Mrs. H. G. Allen), born May 23, 1845; Samuel Francis, born Dec. 12, 1847; and Eva Elizabeth, born Nov. 15, 1852, married J. B. Smith, a druggist, and has one son, Samuel E., born Sept. 24, 1879. All reside in Olean.

Major G. B. Overton, born in Athens, Pa., Jan. 9, 1825, was educated at Lafayette College and afterward studied law in his father's office at Towanda, Pa. He was a lineal descendant of George Clymer, one of the framers of the constitution of the United States and a signer of the Declaration of Independence. Major Overton was for sixteen years in the service of the Bingham estate (of which he was an heir) and for eight years was sub-agent for the counties of Elk, Potter, and McKean, Pa. While holding this office he married Maria Wilmot, a sister of the Hon. David Wilmot, of Pennsylvania. In 1860 he was a delegate to the National Convention at Chicago and voted for the nomination of Abraham Lincoln. At the beginning of the Rebellion he was chosen captain of a company of the 1st Pa. Rifles (Bucktails). Later he was appointed captain of the 14th U. S. Inf., and served in the various battles of the Army of the Potomac. While on the staff of Gen. George E. Sykes at Chancellorsville Major Overton was wounded just above the knee by a canister ball. After carrying the ball for twenty-five years it was extracted by Dr. Mudge, of Olean, and was found to weigh over three ounces. Major Overton held three commissions—captain, brevet major, and lieutenant-colonel. Soon after the war he resigned his commission in the army, and in 1869 was appointed receiver of the Utah Land District. After holding this office eight years he was tendered the position of register in the land office at Fair Play, Col., which he declined, and returned east. In 1880 he came to Olean, where he has since resided.

Wilson R. Page is a son of Rufus L. Page (deceased), for thirty-five years a respected resident of Olean, and was born here Dec. 29, 1854. Obtaining his education at Andover and Yale he married, Feb. 21, 1881, Nellie F. Brett, of Olean, and was appointed postmaster by President Arthur and re-appointed by President Harrison. Mr. Page is an energetic, public spirited citizen, a thorough business man, and a prominent factor in local politics.

Erastus Parker, son of Robert and Betsey (Brooks) Parker, was born in Orleans county, Vt., Aug. 16, 1807. His father was a Revolutionary soldier. His mother died in Essex, Vt., and in 1813 the family settled in Clinton county, N. Y. At the age of seventeen he went to Ohio and subsequently to Michigan, Indiana, and Chautauqua county, N. Y. In 1848 he removed with his family to Olean and settled on the south bank of the Allegheny, where he still resides. Aided by his sons John B. and Allen he also bought with his son-in-law, Asa F. Burlingame, a tract of timberland and they were quite extensive lumbermen. Mr. Parker is a Republican and has been for fifteen years overseer of the poor. Aug. 31, 1828, he married Marra Bartlett in Michigan. She was born in New Hampshire, March 27, 1808. Children: Emeline (Mrs. Asa Burlingame); John B., born July 26, 1832, married, in Jan., 1859, Sarah N. Van Valkenburg, of Olean, and has five sons and a daughter; Allen (deceased), born March 22, 1834, married Emma Lott (deceased), and had a son and two daughters; Laura, born April 2, 1836, the widow of John Nelson; Alinda (Mrs. Addie Randall); Electa, born Aug. 1, 1843, married Wm. Farr.

William Walter Penfield, born in Portland, Conn., March 19, 1796, married Permelia L. H. Russell, April 10, 1817, who was born in Canajoharie, N. Y., March 14, 1799. They settled in Allegany county, where he was a farmer and tanner with his wife's father, Samuel M. Russell, until 1827, when he removed to Olean, where he built and conducted a tannery (the first permanent one in the place). He manufactured both sole and upper leather and conducted a large shoe shop, and employed about fifteen men. He was the landlord of the Olean House at the time of the construction of the Genesee Valley canal. He was always a Democrat and in religion a steadfast Episcopalian. He was one of the organizers of St. Stephen's church and for years one of its vestrymen. He died Oct. 10, 1873.

William B. Pierce, who was born in Fabius, Onondaga county, April 16, 1824, came to Olean in 1848 and followed his trade of carpenter and builder for a number of years, and in 1856 engaged in the grocery business. He subsequently became a dealer in coal, lime, etc., and at one time was one of the oldest business men in town. Feb. 11, 1850, Mr. Pierce married Eveline L. McCluer, of Olean, a niece of O. P. Boardman.

Ormel W. Pierce was born in Machias, Feb. 9, 1866. His father, John S. Pierce, was a native of Franklinville, of which town his grandfather, William Pierce, was an early settler and an extensive land proprietor. Ormel W. Pierce came to Olean in 1887 and established business as a manufacturer of galvanized iron cornice, making the first goods in this line in Cattaraugus county. Dec. 22, 1887, Mr. Pierce married Margaret, daughter of William Follett, of Machias.

John W. Pratt, son of Aaron S. Pratt, a native of Vermont, was born in Edwards, St. Lawrence county, April 14, 1849. He completed his education at Friendship Academy and taught the village schools of Bolivar and Little Genesee six consecutive terms. His home was then in Bolivar, to which place his parents had removed in 1866. At a competitive examination in the fall of 1872 he received the State free scholarship at Cornell University and entered that institution, but the change from active labor to a student's life brought on illness and he was obliged to abandon a collegiate course. Since the spring of 1878 he has resided in Olean, where he has been engaged in the grocery trade. He has been a member of the Methodist church since 1879 and Sunday school superintendent, trustee, and treasurer several years. He was a member of the school board three years. While treasurer of his church he collected and paid the large debt on the edifice. Aug. 27, 1879, he married Elnora I. Hosley, of Olean, and has two daughters.

Charles F. Repp, son of Frederick and Elizabeth (Wolfinger) Repp, was born in Scranton, Pa., June 6, 1866. In 1886 he was traveling agent for the Grand Union Tea Company, and in 1887 settled in Olean and opened a retail store for the sale of that company's goods. In the few years Mr. Repp has resided in Olean he has gained a high reputation. In 1891 he married Martha Hart, of Williamsport, Pa.

The firm of Riley & Wands (Millard F. Riley and Charles R. Wands) is one energetically engaged in the wholesale and retail grocery trade. Both members have served long in mercantile pursuits. The retail store was established in 1882 and the wholesale in 1887. They have been largely interested in Olean real estate, and in all their enterprises have been signally successful.

Charles A. Shaffer was born in Cuba, N. Y., Oct. 9, 1851. In March, 1878, he came to Olean and a year later was appointed by the village council a policeman. He was promoted chief in March, 1887, and still holds that position, having won the promotion by arresting the famous John L. Sullivan in Olean. May 12, 1870, he married Emily P. Brown, of Hinsdale; children: Belle and Joseph Francis.

Jacob H. Shanbucher was born in Liberty, Pa., March 22, 1843, spent the early part of his life with his father in farming and lumbering, and at the outbreak of the Rebellion enlisted in the 207th Pa. Vols. as second lieutenant, being mustered out as first lieutenant at the close of the war. He apprenticed himself to the trade of harness making and in 1865 located at Williamsport, Pa., where he was a clothier and merchant tailor. In 1874 he commenced keeping hotel in Olean—the Option House. In 1868 he married Sarah A. Herring, of Brooklyn.

William Shepard was born April 7, 1773. He came to Olean with his brother-in-law, Willis Thrall, and the two purchased quite a tract of wild land on both sides of Olean creek. He married Elizabeth Hinman. Children: Olean, the first white child born in the town, May 22, 1807; and William B., born Oct. 21, 1808. Mr. Shepard died Sept. 21, 1809. Mrs. Shepard married Jedediah Strong, who died June 25, 1828; Mrs. Strong died Oct. 4, 1830. Olean and William B. Shepard were married simultaneously in the old school house in their district Feb. 11, 1833; Olean married Rev. William Butt, a Methodist clergyman, and William B. married Miss Sophia Rice, of Cortland county, and remained on the homestead, where he died Dec. 30, 1883. At an early age he was an Allegheny river pilot and made many trips to Pittsburg. Mr. Shepard was a prominent citizen. He was early identified with the military interests of Olean and was commissioned captain. He was an active Methodist, of which church he was many years a member and trustee. He was a Whig and a Republican at the organization of that party. His children are Sarah, born Aug. 5, 1835, married Henry Hastings, Sept. 20, 1855; Ellen; Mary; and William E.

W. H. Simpson was born in Pittsburg, Pa. His early life was spent in Buffalo, where he learned the plumbing business, with particular reference to sanitation. He came to Olean in 1879 and established business, which increased as the town grew, and in which he has been very successful. He has been an active man in town affairs, was excise commissioner one term, an officer of the fire department nine years, and was four years its chief engineer. The present efficiency of the department is largely due to Mr. Simpson's efforts and he still takes an active interest in the affairs of the firemen.

John Sloane was born in Pilltown, County Kilkenny, Ireland, Aug. 6, 1852. Until nearly eighteen years of age he attended the National school of his native village and after that was employed in the office of Malcomson Brothers, the great linen and cotton manufacturers having mills at Belfast, Clonmel, Carrick-on-Suir, and Portlaw. He remained with them about two years, when he resigned and came to America, thus realizing the ambition of his boyhood to visit the New World. He arrived in New York city July 11, 1872. From there he went to Buffalo, where he resided five and a half years, during which time he was employed at Dun & Co.'s Mercantile Agency and later at the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern freight office. In Aug., 1879, he came to Olean as assistant to the agent of the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad. In 1880 he was appointed agent at Port Allegany, Pa., but becoming dissatisfied with railroad business and the position he then occupied he resigned and returned to Olean, where he has since resided. His first employment was in the Acme Milling Company as book-keeper, where he remained six years. He then entered into partnership with Nicholas Hotton, of Portville, and built the Empire Feed-Mills at North Olean, which he operated three years and sold to the Acme Milling Company. Since then he has been engaged in the wholesale grain and mill-feed business. His industry has been untiring and his ambition to make the most of his opportunities has placed him at the forefront of every enterprise in which he has taken a hand. If he could not succeed in one undertaking he would not hesitate to accept the inevitable and to push on to something better, until now he is a recognized representative of the progressive business interests of this city. He has been active in many other departments. In St. Stephen's church, of which for eight years he has been a warden, his services as lay reader, superintendent of the Sunday school, secretary of the Guild, and a member of many important committees of the vestry have been invaluable. He is a member of various societies and orders, in all of which he has held high positions: Master of Olean Lodge, No. 252, F. & A. M.; high priest of Olean Chapter, No. 150, Royal Arch Masons; prelate of St. John's Commandery, No. 24, K. T.; and deputy district grand master of the counties of Cattaraugus and Chautauqua; in the A. O. U. W. and Knights of Honor his voice is often heard upon important occasions when wit, wisdom, and eloquence are required to arouse the interest and enthusiasm of an audience. After a recent visit to Ireland he delivered an instructive lecture upon the old country, and while in Ireland he enlightened his countrymen by lecturing upon the institutions of America. He has sympathized with the struggles of the Home Rule party in his native land, and on one occasion he had the honor to address the constituency of its late distinguished leader, Mr. Parnell, in company with the latter. He is a Republican and chairman of the executive committee of the local organization.

John B. Smith was born in Pike, Wyoming county, and in early life went to Wisconsin, where his youth was spent in school and in learning the printer's trade. For two years he was a salesman in the establishment of Marshall, Field & Co. in Chicago, and subsequently engaged in the dry goods business in Rockford, Ill. Mr. Smith served one year on the village Board of Trustees, and has taken an active interest in every progressive public movement. He was for a time editorially connected with the Olean Record; he is now engaged in the drug business. Sept. 19, 1877, he married Eva E., daughter of Samuel Oosterhoudt, and has one son, Samuel E., born Sept. 14, 1879.

David L. Smith was born in Cameron, N. Y., May 1, 1835, and came to Olean in 1865, engaging in the business of harness making, which he still follows. Sept. 1, 1861, he enlisted in the 1st N. Y. Light Artillery and was mustered out as first lieutenant June 23, 1865. Oct. 7, 1867, he married Emma M., daughter of the late Rufus L. Page, of Olean. Mr. Smith speaks with some pride of his participation in Sherman's march to the sea and earned his commission as lieutenant for brave and heroic service on April 9, 1862, near Warwick Court House, Va.

Norman M. Smith is a son of Julius R. Smith, whose father, Dr. Norman, came to Olean about 1814 (see Medical Chapter), and whose only descendants residing here are the son above named and Adeline P. Norman M. was born in Olean, Feb. 29, 1856, and for some time has been transfer agent for the American Express Company. The family has been prominent in Olean.

Calvin S. Stowell was born at Friendship, N. Y., April 11, 1844, where he received his education and lived until 1864, when he came to Olean as clerk for the late N. S. Butler, and has since resided here with the exception of two years spent in the lower oil fields during the oil excitement of '66. He was under sheriff and followed mercantile pursuits until he accepted the tellership of the Exchange National Bank, which position he held six years. Mr. Stowell was supervisor of Olean in 1873-74 and for five years subsequent to 1881, resigning the position to accept the office of postmaster tendered him by President Cleveland. He served his town with fidelity and was honored with the appointment as a member of the commissions to purchase the armory site and to audit the accounts of the county superintendent. He is a member and has at various times presided over all the Masonic bodies. Mr. Stowell is a Democrat and a prominent member of the Board of Trade.

Fred R. Tarbell, son of Dana O. and Frances M. (Wilder) Tarbell, of New England origin, was born in Farmersville, Dec. 20, 1863, and received his education in Ten Broeck Free Academy. His father was a farmer and now resides in Olean. Fred R. became a telegraph operator at the age of fourteen and has followed that avocation to the present time. He now has charge of the office of the Postal Cable Telegraph Company at Olean.

B. U. Taylor, son of the late Rev. Alexander Taylor, a noted and well-known Baptist clergyman, was born in Maine, September 11, 1854, and in his early manhood served three years as apprentice with Rumery, Maxwell & Grant, one of the largest manufacturing firms in Boston, Mass., during which time he received instructions under Prof. Demming in the special branches relating to his line of business. He is one of the leading contractors and builders of Olean, and has given special attention to the setting of boilers, being a known authority on all matters pertaining to boiler setting, and has made also a special study to so construct an oven that it would successfully burn wet tan-bark and sawdust. Nearly every tannery company in this section of country can testify to the able and efficient manner in which he has succeeded in this special branch of business.

Frank P. Thyng, a native of Perry, N. Y., was born Aug. 9, 1820. His parents, Samuel and Elizabeth (Gilman) Thyng, were born in New Hampshire and were pioneers on Silver hill in Perry. They had eleven children, of whom Frank P. was the youngest. Sept. 7, 1848, he married Sarah E., daughter of Uriah and Sarah (Patch) Rose, of Centerville. Her father was a soldier in the War of 1812 and her grandfather served in the Revolution. They settled on a farm in Centerville and in 1852 removed to Olean, where he was a general merchant until Aug., 1862, when he was burned out. He then began a trade in oil operators' supplies. He built flat-boats, loaded them with farm produce and supplies, and floated them down the Allegheny river to the first oil field in the vicinity of Oil City. He was an oil operator and dealer and bought and sold oil wells. Mr. Thyng is a Republican. His children are: Eugenia, born Aug. 9, 1849, married Rev. T. S. Leonard, a Baptist clergyman; Elmont W., born in March, 1854, died aged nineteen; and Capt. Culver G., born Dec. 25, 1857.

Capt. C. G. Thyng, born the last week of 1857, is a native of Olean. He was early thrown upon his own resources, and his great energy, activity, and venturesome spirit carried him into the stirring life of the oil country at the age of fourteen. There he was successively a pumper, tool-dresser, gauger, well-driller, torpedoer, and scout. He was in the employ of the Bradford Oil Company in 1876-78. In 1879 he was correspondent for several newspapers and was also engaged in the torpedo business. He was in the oil-well supply trade from 1881 to 1883 and also an oil operator. In 1883 he became the head of the firm of C. G. Thyng & Co., oil producers. Captain Thyng is still an oil producer and now has a third-interest in a mining company with a capital of $1,000,000 which is operating in North Carolina. He is a member of the Board of Trade and captain of the 43d Separate Company N. G. S. N. Y. of Olean, having served as such since its organization, March 17, 1887.

Edward Troy, born in Olean, March 13, 1853, received his education in the public schools and began business as book-keeper and superintendent for the Chamberlin Manufacturing Company in 1881. Since March, 1890, he has been a member of the company and is its business manager. This concern is still engaged in the manufacture of the celebrated Chamberlin screw stump-puller. Mr. Troy is a Republican.

Charles Edgar Turner was born in Buffalo, N. Y., May 23, 1849. He was educated in the public schools and at the age of sixteen began the trade of machinist, after acquiring which he became a fireman and afterward a locomotive engineer, which he followed until 1877, when he came to Olean and took charge of the mechanical department of the O. B. W. narrow guage railroad, then in construction. He is now the master mechanic of the Olean shops of the Western New York & Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Mr. Turner was elected president of the village in 1888 and held the position two consecutive terms. At the organization of the city he was elected mayor. He is president of the Olean branch of the National Loan Association and a member of the Masonic orders up to the commandery.

Hon. George Van Campen descended from ancient and distinguished Holland ancestry, many of whom served their country in military and educational capacities. John Aerenen Van Campen, farmer, the first of the name to come to America, settled in New York (then Amsterdam) in the year 1658 and was soon followed by others of his family. By 1750 several descendants lived in this State, in New Jersey, in Pennsylvania, and in Delaware, and all became more or less prominent, especially as Indian fighters. Cornelius Van Campen was killed by the Indians on his farm in Pennsylvania. Of his six sons and four daughters was Benjamin, the father of George. George Van Campen was born Nov. 13, 1817. His maternal grandfather, George Saunders, and great-grandfather, Hezekiah Saunders, both served in the Revolution. From about 1836 until 1842 he conducted the postal service his father had organized in parts of Allegany, Steuben, and Livingston counties in 1826, and Dec. 25, 1843, identified himself in mercantile business in Randolph. In 1851 he exchanged his real estate for timber lands in Allegany, whither he removed. March 1, 1869, he came to Olean, where he immediately became identified with the business and social interests. Aug. 4, 1847, he married Sophia T., daughter of Anson and Sophia King; children: James King, born in 1851; George, Jr., born in 1854; Benjamin, born in 1866; Josephine Maria, born in 1868; and four daughters who died early. In 1863 Mr. Van Campen was appointed special consul to Liege, Belgium, and in 1867 was elected a member of the constitutional convention.

Blanchard B. Weber is a son of Matthew and Betsey (Hemstreet) Weber and was born in Ashford, April 16, 1848. Educated in the public schools and in Griffith Institute in Springville, N. Y., he entered the office of the Cattaraugus Republican in 1871 as assistant business manager and learned also the trade of printer. Jan. 1, 1873, he purchased of his brother-in-law, A. W. Ferrin, a half-interest in that newspaper (see page 96), with whom and with which he has since been associated. Dec. 1, 1887, with A. W. Ferrin and S. C. Green, he became connected with the publication of the Olean Times, the firm being S. C. Green & Co., but since Feb., 1891, it has been styled Ferrin & Weber. In all his newspaper enterprises Mr. Weber has acted mainly in a business capacity, and to his excellent judgment and shrewd management is largely due the fact that each has proven comparatively successful. He is an active member of the Congregational church.

Christopher Whitney was a descendant of three brothers Whitney who came to America in 1749 and settled at Southold, L. I., whence, in 1765, he moved to Norwalk, Conn. He moved to Tinmouth, Vt., about 1781, where his son Christopher, Jr., was born Nov. 12, 1782, and married Rhoda Wilder. They moved to Locke, N. Y., about 1805, and thence to Homer, N. Y., about 1811, where he resided till 1826 or 1827, when he moved to Hinsdale, where he was a farmer. After some years spent in Hinsdale and Allegany he moved to Olean about 1839. He was justice of the peace over twenty years. He died in 1866 in Allegany. He had twelve children, of whom Olive, Noah, Rufus, and John are living.

Russell M. Whitney, second son of Dr. Lambert Whitney, was born in Olean, April 6, 1838. With the exception of seven years in the U. S. army his life has been spent in Olean. In June, 1867, he married Lydia S. Smith, of Northampton, N. Y. He is an extensive manufacturer of wagon hubs. Like his father Mr. Whitney is a respected citizen and prominent in political affairs.

Henry Williams, son of George and Catherine (Griffith) Williams, was born in Pittsburg, Pa., in Sept., 1853. He received an academic education and taught three terms of district school. At the age of twenty he became a dealer in musical instruments in Scio, N. Y. In 1882 he settled in Olean, where he has since continued his trade, having added to it the sale of sewing machines. Mr. Williams married, in September, 1880, Emma, daughter of his partner, Henry Weaver, who was associated with him until he died in March, 1889. They have four sons.

George L. Winters, son of Alonzo, was born in Tecumseh, Mich., April 13, 1838, started in life as a school teacher, and upon the breaking out of the war enlisted in Co. C, 154th N. Y. Vols. For meritorious service he rose rapidly to the rank of captain and was wounded in the arm at Gettysburg, where he was taken prisoner and subsequently had his arm amputated by a Confederate surgeon. March 1, 1865, he married Margaret Z., daughter of John and Mary Pierce, of Ischua, who survived him. Mr. Winters was elected sheriff of Cattaraugus county in 1876 and made a most efficient officer. He was always a Republican and a highly respected citizen, and was influential in political affairs in county, district, and State. He studied law and was admitted to the bar, but on account of ill-health never practiced his profession. Mr. Winters died in Olean, June 8, 1889.

George Nathan Wood was born in Starkey, Yates county, Nov. 11, 1857, and died in Olean, Sept. 25, 1887. He was the eldest son of Elisha Wood. When ten years of age his parents moved with their family to Burlingame, Kan., where young Wood resided until 1876, when he came to Olean and entered the Times printing office, then owned by his uncle, George Dickinson. In April, 1883, Mr. Wood became business manager of the Times, which was then owned and conducted by a stock company, and through his individual efforts the paper was placed on a substantial business basis. In Sept., 1884, he purchased the plant and became editor and proprietor, and almost immediately acquired a high rank among the inland journalists of the State. Mr. Wood was conscientious, enterprising, progressive, and careful; as a citizen he was public spirited and closely identified with the material prosperity of Olean, giving to every beneficial enterprise a hearty and unstinted support, but scathingly rebuked all corrupt schemes for personal or political aggrandizement. Though he died scarcely thirty years of age he had acquired a reputation and a character as an honorable, upright man, as a kind friend and neighbor, as an exemplary son, husband, and father that is seldom equalled. Aug. 25, 1880, Mr. Wood married Nellie B., daughter of J. H. Smith, of Randolph and subsequently of Olean, who bore him three daughters.

Willard C. Wood, of the firm of W. C. Wood & Co., job printers, was born in Starkey, Yates county, in 1867. He learned the printing business of his brother, George N. Wood, late editor and proprietor of the Olean Times. He was employed after the latter's decease in the Times office until the spring of 1891. April 10, 1891, he opened his job printing establishment on Union street, where he executes job, book, commercial, and law printing.

William A. Wright was born in Eldred, Pa., in 1842 and came to Olean in 1889, where he has since been a dealer in hay, grain, carriages, and agricultural implements. He married Orsevelle Stull and has had born to him three children, Fred C., Walter W. (deceased), and Bertha.

John W. Yard, a native of Irwin, Pa., was born Sept. 15, 1835, came to this place in 1879, and has been eminently successful in his profession of architect and builder. May 26, 1870, he married Sarah C. Buoy, of Milton, Pa., who was born Sept. 18, 1838, and their children are James B., born March 14, 1871; William H., born June 7, 1872; Grace, born Dec. 24, 1874; and Blanche, born Dec. 14, 1878.

Peter A. Young, born in Rathboneville, Steuben county, April 9, 1851, located in Bradford, Pa., in 1876, and engaged in the business of producing oil. In 1881 he removed to Olean and established himself as a wholesale dealer in wines and liquors, retaining his oil interests, however, until 1884.

CHAPTER XL.*

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF OTTO.

OTTO, the twelfth town formed in the county, was taken from Perrysburg on January 29, 1823, and at that time comprised, besides Otto, nearly all of the towns of Persia and East Otto and a part of Ashford. That part of the town lying west of the south branch of Cattaraugus creek, which constitutes most of the town of Persia, was re-annexed to Perrysburg the same year. The portion lying east of Connoirtoirauley creek was annexed to Ashford on April 13, 1835. November 30, 1854, East Otto was taken from the eastern part, leaving Otto with its present area of 20,104 acres, its boundaries being as follows: Collins, in Erie county, on the north with the main branch of the Cattaraugus the dividing line, East Otto on the east, Mansfield and New Albion on the south, and Persia on the west. Between Persia and Otto runs the south branch of Cattaraugus creek, which unites with the main stream at the northwest corner of the town. This and the Connoirtoirauley are rapid streams, running in many places between almost perpendicular banks of rock rising to the height of from 200 to 300 feet. The western part of the town is the most elevated, being 1,200 feet above Lake Erie, and from this elevation, when the atmosphere is clear, Lake Erie is plainly seen, and a beautiful panorama of the surrounding country is brought to view on every side. From this point the ground gradually descends in an easterly direction to the low, swampy land lying partly in this town and partly in East Otto. Much of this ground has in later years been subdued and converted into rich farming land. Most of the soil in town is best adapted to dairying purposes, and farmers with but few exceptions are engaged in that occupation. There are in the town seven cheese factories, the largest two belonging to P. F. Jark's combination, two to the Ross combination, one to J. Dorsey, one to E. T. Ryder, and one a union factory. These in 1892 received the milk of 2,325 cows and manufactured 833,000 pounds of cheese. There are also several farm dairies manufacturing cheese or creamery butter. Good crops of grain of various kinds are also produced and considerable attention is given to fruit, apples being the principal crop relied upon, which, in good fruit seasons, brings quite a large income to the town.

The first settlement made in Otto was in the north part in what is known as Zoar valley on the banks of Cattaraugus creek. The rich bottom lands of the valley attracted the attention of settlers as early as 1810. Among those who settled about that period were Joseph Bartlett, who came from Canada; Joseph Adams and his son Blinn, from Madison county; and Gen. Phineas Orr, from New Hampshire. It is said that settlers by the name of Hyde and Austin came about the same time, but remained only a few years. It is a question as to which one of these was the first actual settler, but all were here prior to or in 1813. In 1814 Samuel Hill came from Allegany county and located in the valley, coming down Cattaraugus creek in a canoe with his family, which consisted of himself, wife, and five children. He became a permanent resident in the valley, but lived most of the time on the north side of the creek in Erie county. His youngest son, Joseph, who was three years old at the time of the voyage down the creek, is still, with his family, a resident of the town. The first settlement in the town outside of Zoar was made by Ephraim Brown on the farm now owned by Henry Bull, this being probably about 1816 or 1817. He came from Cortland county. From this time onward the town became more rapidly settled. In 1818 three brothers, Isaac, Benjamin, and Stephen Ballard, came from Vermont and articleed 360 acres of land about two miles north of Otto village, where Benjamin lived many years. His son, G. W. Ballard, 2d, now resides on the homestead. In 1819 Adam Ballard came from Oswego county and settled on the farm on which his grandson, Truman Ballard, now lives. There are quite a number of the descendants of the Ballards residing in town, but the pioneer fathers have "passed over to the other shore." About the same time the Ballards settled here Joseph and Wadsworth Foster came from Washington county and located on the farm on which Albert Foster, son of Joseph, now lives. Almond Foster, a son of Wadsworth, lives near Otto village. Ira Waterman, from Cortland, N. Y., was located in town in 1819 and the same year William Cook and Mason Hicks were settlers in the valley of Zoar. Joseph Allen, a brother of Hon. Dan Allen, of Gowanda, settled in the southeast part of Otto in 1819. He had previously lived in the valley of Cattaraugus creek in East Otto, where he located in 1809 or 1810. He was justice of the peace sixteen years and supervisor one year. Isaac Skinner settled in 1819 in what has since been known as Skinner hollow. He built a saw-mill here in 1823, and the first grist-mill in town was erected here soon after. In 1820 Abel M. Butler, of Oswego county, located near what is known as the Beverly school house. He was the first justice of the peace in Otto and on the organization of the town in 1823 was elected the first supervisor, which office he held three successive years.

Hervey Butler, a brother of Abel, came also in 1820 and lived in town most of the time until his death. He was a soldier in the War of 1812 and died at the residence of his son, James Butler, in Otto village, November 14, 1881, aged nearly eighty-eight. This son James was born January 27, 1824, and is now the oldest person living in town who was born here. Luther Town, from Madison county, settled here in 1821. C. B. Parkinson came from Springville, Erie county, in 1821 and in 1822 built a saw-mill in what is now Otto village, it being the first mill erected in town. In 1822 Allen Bates, the father of Mrs. Darius Babcock, settled in the north part of the town, and Alexander Little came from Madison county. Little had five sons. Being a blacksmith by trade he erected the first blacksmith shop in town. His grandson, Milton Little, lives in Otto village. Davis Benedict, of Monroe county, settled here in 1822 and the same year Shedrick and Edwin Farnsworth located near the south border of the town. Farnsworth built the first frame dwelling in Otto. In 1823 Robert McDuffie came from Montgomery county and settled on the farm now owned by H. W. Hinman. His son Angus and daughter, Mrs. I. Woolf, live in Otto village. James Barber located where his son James M. now lives. Otis and Peter Guile, from Vermont, were here as soon as this and the same year came Moses Boone from Onondaga county, as did also Ephraim Greene from Wayne county. In 1823 came Simeon Waterman, Alpheus Harwood, Henry Willets, and David and William Blaisdell. Among the settlers who came about this time and the years soon following were Bela Tarbox, Russell D. Gibson, Hosea Merrithew, Isaiah Tarbox, Alvin Plumb, Mary Price, and Stephen Rogers, who built the first grist-mill in Otto village, but not the first in town, there being one in Skinner hollow; he also erected the first tavern in town. Vine Plumb kept the first store in Otto about half a mile north of the village and built the first frame dwelling house in the village, where he was a resident about fifty-seven years. He died in this town in 1881. Daniel Botsford, the father of Marvin S. and Wiley S., came from Connecticut. Nelson and James C. Green came from Wayne county and David McMaster from Montgomery county. Ichabod Harding was located in the western part, and Stephen Crane had a tannery in Skinner hollow, perhaps the first in town. John Ferris, Matthew Parkinson, John Cotrael, John C. Cross, and John T. Ferris came from Schoharie county; Dexter Bartlett, the father of Nelson Bartlett, from Vermont; and Caleb Lewis from Washington county. Champlain Babcock, whose sons Darius, Delotus, and Darwin yet live in town, came from Vermont. Charles H. Morris, of Washington county, settled where his son Edgar M. now lives, where he resided until his death in 1866. Sylvester M. Cox, from Onondaga county, located on the farm now owned by his grandson, Carlton Derby. Silas Cook, the father of Theodore, came from Vermont and settled in Zoar valley. James Borden and Levingston Cross were from Schoharie county. Mr. Borden built a tannery in the village in 1827. The building was demolished by the tornado in 1860, was rebuilt, and in 1872 was destroyed by fire. Mr. Cross carried on a door, sash, and blind factory in the village many years. He died in 1883. Mr. Borden died in 1850. William Cross, a brother of Levingston, came about the same time.

Peter Karker settled a little west of the village on land now owned by A. L. Stebbins. Many anecdotes are told respecting "Uncle Peter." He was of German descent, a constituent and conscientious member of the Presbyterian church, but from early habit it seemed impossible for him to entirely keep from swearing. This was indulged in to such an extent that the church authorities thought some reproof necessary and he was accordingly summoned to trial, on the day of which he was at work for Mr. Harvey, whom he informed at noon that he could not work that afternoon. Harvey said: "Why, what is the matter, Uncle Peter?" "Oh, I is got to have a church trial dis afternoon." "What are they going to try you for, Uncle Peter?" "Dey is goin' to try me for swearin', but, by G—t! I is just so goot a man as Elder Doolittle any day." Bliss Loomis, the father of Col. H. C. and Nelson Loomis, came from Vermont. Justus Scott, the father of Judge A. D. Scott, settled in the southeast part of the town on land now owned by his heirs. Roswell Knowlton had a custom mill and carding machine in Otto village in 1829; it is claimed there was one in Skinner hollow prior to this. H. W. Ingraham, a soldier in the War of 1812, came from Rensselaer county and settled where his son Simeon now lives. Ira Root, another soldier of 1812, settled where his son, Charles A. Root, now resides. W. F. Elliott was one of the early merchants in the village. John Strickland came from Otsego county and located on the farm which has for many years been owned by his son, W. H. Strickland.

More particular mention is made of a number of the foregoing, as well as of others not here named, in subsequent pages of this chapter. With but very few exceptions the pioneer settlers of the town have "passed on to that bourne from whence no traveler returns," and but few realize the hardships and privations endured by those who felled the forests and labored in season and out for scores of years to bring the land to that state of cultivation and prosperity which now surrounds us on every side.

The valley of Zoar, whose productive soil first attracted the attention of the early settlers in this section, has within a few years been again brought more prominently into notice by the discovery of oil and gas. Twelve wells have been drilled in the vicinity and a strong flow of gas has been found in most of them, and three are connected with pipe-line to Buffalo. A number of others are utilized by individuals residing in the locality. Oil has also been found in considerable quantities in some of the wells, but owing to the low price and the large supply in other fields no measures have yet been taken to save the product and the flowing wells have been plugged. Nearly all the land covering quite a section of country in the vicinity of the valley is under lease to oil companies. For from thirty to forty years the inhabitants suffered much inconvenience as well as loss in time and expense and some deaths by drowning for want of a bridge across Cattaraugus creek. It was thought that it was almost impossible to confine the stream in a permanent channel for any length of time on account of the looseness of the soil and the strong current which sweeps through the valley during the heavy freshets, which often occur. But in 1892 a substantial iron bridge was completed and spans the creek in a place where there is good reason to expect the stream will continue to run many years. There is located in the valley a circular steam saw-mill belonging to A. J. Setter. Joel Perkins has also a steam circular mill in Skinner hollow and George Green has a saw-mill and grist-mill run by water-power in the southeast part of the town.

The first school house in town was a log structure erected of logs on lot 14 in the spring of 1823, and in that summer Job Austin was teacher. There are now eight school districts in the town, to which was apportioned $1,129.95 school moneys in 1892. The village school employs two teachers. There is a public cemetery in the village, another near the center of the town opposite the north church, and another still in the western part near J. M. Barber's.

The town was named in honor of Jacob S. Otto and the first town meeting was held at the house of Ephraim Brown on the second Tuesday in February, 1823, when these officers were chosen: Abel M. Butler, supervisor; Tyler M. Beach, town clerk; Ira Waterman, Asaph Silsby, Luther Town, assessors; Samuel Tuthill, Benjamin Austin, overseers of the poor; Willis Boutwell, Jabez Hull, Ira Waterman, Harvey Butler, commissioners of common schools; Samuel Tuthill, Joseph Foster, school inspectors; Davis Benedict, Justus Bartholomew, Ira Waterman, highway commissioners. The principal town officers have been as follows:

Supervisors.—Abel M. Butler, 1823-27; John T. Ferris, 1828-29; Joseph Allen, 1830; Elijah A. Rice, 1831; Nelson Green, 1832-36; Constant B. Allen, 1837-38; Nelson Green, 1839-44; John P. Darling, 1845-47; John Laing, 1848-50; James C. Green, 1851-52, 1867; William F. Elliott, 1853-55; Charles H. Morris, 1856, 1858; Levi Goldsborough, 1857; William E. Hunt, 1859-60, 1862-66, 1868-69; David T. Gibson, 1861; Ralph Dewey, 1870-74; Simeon V. Pool, 1875-77; Asa Ross, 1878; Dan B. Allen, 1879-85; Thomas B. Soule, 1886-89; David N. Brown, 1890; Thomas B. Soule, 1891-93.

Town Clerks.—Tyler M. Beach, 1823-25; Vine Plumb, 1826-37; Elijah Dresser, 1838, 1842; John P. Darling, 1839-41, 1843; John C. Carpenter, 1844-48; William F. Elliott, 1848-49; William Rumsey, 1850; Julius B. Maltbie, 1851, 1856; S. B. Thompson, 1852-54; William E. Hunt, 1855; Carlton H. Cotrael, 1857-58; Ephraim C. Elliott, 1859; Thomas L. Rogers, 1860-67; Elisha Duke, 1868-71, 1876, 1885; Alexander A. Courter, 1872; Benjamin G. Green, 1873-75; Thomas B. Soule, 1877-81; Baxter J. Cotrael, 1882; Charles J. Ferris, 1883-84; Oel E. Wood, 1886; Morris W. Butterfield, 1887; Elliott J. Oakes, 1888, 1890; George M. Brown, 1889; Fremont C. Laing, 1891; William S. Aust, 1892.

Justices of the Peace were elected first in 1827 and chosen as follows: Asabel Hill, one year; John T. Ferris, two years; Samuel Tuthill, three years; Abraham L. Gibbs, four years. After that they were elected in the following order: Joseph Allen, Ozi M. Goodale, Joseph Foster, Asa Leland, Isaac Mason, Arnold Bentley, Joseph Allen, Joseph Foster, Daniel Pratt, Selleck St. John, Sylvester Pierce, Hugh Orr, Asa Leland, Homer J. Wooden, Elijah A. Rice, Joseph Foster, Joseph Allen, John Wilcox, Selleck St. John, Philander Griffiths, Conrad Vosburg, Joseph Allen, John C. Carpenter, Selleck St. John, Samuel C. Everts, Tyler M. Beach, Joseph Foster, Orson Cochran, Arnold Bentley, Homer J. Wooden, Conrad Vosburg, Selleck St. John, George W. Harvey, Joseph Foster, Homer J. Wooden, David T. Gibson, Miles M. Moore, Julius B. Maltbie, Phipps Lake, Oliver Dake, Henry Bull, Orson Cochran, Ralph Dewey, Walter H. Strickland, James C. Green, Oliver Dake, Phipps Lake, Orson Cochran, Ralph Dewey, George Parkinson, Albert Hemstreet, Orson Cochran, Oliver Dake, Ralph Dewey, John A. Losee, Justus Scott, David T. Gibson, Phipps Lake, Walter H. Strickland, Orson Cochran, John T. Newman, Walter H. Strickland, Phipps Lake, Franklin Keeler, Orson Cochran, Nathan Larabee, Darwin C. Babcock, David T. Gibson, Charles E. Pratt, Dan B. Allen, Charles E. Pratt, Albert Foster, Phipps Lake, Orson Cochran, Edgar M. Morris, Charles E. Pratt, Ira Briggs, Borden J. Goodell, Edgar M. Morris, Charles J. Ferris, Alexander A. Courter, Edgar M. Morris, Albert Foster, Alexander A. Courter, Ralph Dewey, Edward T. Ryder, Henry Gold, Charles A. O'Brien, Henry Gold, Jacob E. Hanson.

Otto village (formerly Waverly) is situated in the south part of the town on the south branch of Cattaraugus creek, and contains about 400 inhabitants. The only postoffice in town is located here. There are in the village twelve stores, a grist-mill with three runs of stone and a woolen-mill with two sets of machinery and 750 spindles (both of which are propelled by water-power), a saw-mill, a cheese-box factory, an iron foundry and machine shop, a cabinet shop in connection with a furniture store and undertaking establishment, two blacksmith shops, two wagon shops, a harness shop, a meat market, two hotels, and three church edifices. On the 30th of May, 1860, the village was nearly all destroyed by a tornado. The terrible experiences of that occasion are yet vividly remembered by the older citizens who then resided here. It was about four o'clock in the afternoon when a dark funnel-shaped cloud was seen rapidly approaching from a southwesterly direction, and as it drew nearer it had the appearance of vast numbers of birds flying swiftly in circles high in the air. These objects proved to be fragments of buildings, furniture, huge branches of trees, etc., which the cyclone had gathered in its course. It struck the village with a terrific roar. The first house in its track was occupied by a Mr. Pike. Mrs. Pike and six children were in the dwelling, which was completely demolished and scattered in all directions, the sitting-room floor with carpet on it being found several rods distant on the opposite side of the street. None of the inmates of the house were seriously injured. The woolen-mill of Allen & Gibson was about one-fourth of a mile from Pike's house and in it were a full complement of hands, who saw the storm approaching and endeavored to escape. The roof with the upper story of the building was carried away, but the only fatal casualty was the fatal injury of Bradford Burroughs, the foreman, who was the last to leave the mill, he being struck by a piece of flying timber and dying a few minutes later. A number of others who had escaped from the building were lifted from the ground and carried some distance, but were finally left in different places without serious injury. Very few buildings in the village escaped some damage; many of them were entirely destroyed. For many years the place bore the marks of the storm.

The first settlement in the village was made in 1822, perhaps a year earlier, by C. B. Parkinson. Others soon followed, and in 1822 Parkinson built the first saw-mill in town just below where now stands the flouring-mill of D. N. Brown. A grist-mill was built by Stephen Rogers in 1828 and a tannery the same year by James Borden. Among the business men of the village who have died were Roswell Knowlton, Vine Plumb, William F. Elliott, John P. Darling, Constant B. Allen, Ephraim C. Elliott, William E. Hunt, David T. Gibson, Selleck St. John, James Borden, Garrison Ballard, W. D. Allen, Elisha Shippy, Davis Benedict, Jacob Slingerland, S. P. Ferris, C. N. Wilber, and Andrew Burger. Among those yet living who have once been prominent in business here are J. P. Cotrael, H. S. Cotrael, J. B. Maltbie, B. J. Ward, E. J. Oakes, and W. C. Runnals.

The most authentic data extant points to the probability that services of the Christian denomination were the first religious exercises held in Otto, and these were conducted, tradition tells us, by a Rev. Mr. Bartlett, but no society was organized. At an early date John Griffith formed an M. E. class at the house of Caleb Lewis. This class was composed of five members under Daniel Botsford as leader, and from it was organized in 1826 the Methodist Episcopal church of North Otto by John Griffith, with seven members, the first pastors being William Hoag and John Wiley. The first quarterly meeting was held in Luther Sprague's barn in 1832. In 1836 the society erected a frame edifice, the first in the town. This was replaced in 1870 by the present neat frame structure, which cost $1,800 and will seat 250 persons, and which was dedicated in October, 1870, by Rev. C. D. Burlingame. The present value of this church property is $2,100. The society has twenty-five members with Rev. B. R. Germer as pastor and a Sunday school during the summer of about thirty scholars.

The Otto M. E. church had its inception in a class formed in 1836 with four members as a branch of the church of North Otto. The early meetings were conducted by Rev. Ira Bronson. The present frame church edifice was erected in 1854, cost $5,000, will seat 400 people, and with the grounds, etc., is valued at $4,500. The first pastor was Rev. Mr. Bayard and the present one is Rev. B. R. Germer. The society has a membership of thirty and a Sunday school of fifty scholars under James Tarbox as superintendent.

The First Congregational church of Otto was organized October 18, 1828, by Rev. William J. Wilcox, at the house of Sylvanus Parkinson, the original members being Sylvanus and Hannah Parkinson, Peter and Margaret Karger, Catharine Parkinson, Abigail Cox, Caroline Plumb, Rebecca Borden, Jeremiah Spaulding, Tyler Spaulding, and Jane Cotrael; Cyrus Randall was admitted the following day and no others for a year. Rev. Mr. Wilcox was the first pastor and Sylvanus Parkinson and Jeremiah Spaulding the first ruling elders. Mr. Parkinson was also chosen delegate to the Presbytery of Buffalo held in that city in January, 1829, when the church was admitted to that body. At the organization the society adopted the name "First Presbyterian Church of Otto," which remained until December 31, 1859, when it was changed to its present title. In 1830 the membership numbered sixteen and in 1840 it was forty-five. September 21, 1858, W. W. Norton was ordained pastor, his predecessors, besides Rev. Mr. Wilcox, being Rev. Daniel T. Condee, Sylvester Cowles, Miles Doolittle, Aaron Van Wormer, Royal Twitchell, S. J. Orton, and Josiah Baldwin. The first house of worship, a wooden edifice still in use, was erected in 1861 and dedicated on October 30th of that year. It cost $3,000, will seat 300 persons, and with other property is now valued at $5,000. The society has thirty-four members with Rev. Albert W. Terry as pastor. The Sunday school has about eighty scholars.

The First Lutheran (Emanuel's) church, German Evangelical, of Otto, was organized November 14, 1875, with sixty-four members, by Rev. F. Boesch, and was re-organized in 1880 by Rev. A. Krafft. The first pastor was Rev. F. Boesch. Their house of worship, a frame structure, was built in 1876, dedicated November 12th, and enlarged in 1888, the original cost of the edifice being $2,700. It will seat 260 persons, and with the grounds, parsonage, and a school house is valued at about $4,500. The society has a voting membership of seventy-two; communicants, 245; the pastor is Rev. E. J. Sander. The young confirmed receive instruction in catechism every Sunday.

The Second Baptist church of Otto was organized with eighteen members in December, 1831, the first pastor being Rev. A. Wells in 1833. The society reported to the association for the last time in 1839, when they had fifty-seven members. It finally disbanded. No church edifice was ever erected.

Clinton F. Paige Lodge, No. 620, F. & A. M., was constituted June 15, 1867. The first officers were Ralph Dewey, master; Phipps Lake, S. W. The present officers are Frederick Truby, master; O. F. Barber, S. W.; Walter Taft, J. W.; Ernest H. Truby, treasurer; T. B. Soule, secretary. The lodge is in a prosperous condition and has a membership of 106.

Otto Lodge, No. 386, I. O. O. F., was instituted August 22, 1848, with these officers: G. S. Gowdy, N. G.; P. L. Fox, V. G.; W. H. Eddy, secretary; E. C. Eddy, treasurer. December 1, 1850, the number was changed to 137. In November, 1853, it was moved to Cattaraugus, where its first officers were P. L. Fox, N. G.; E. C. Elliott, V. G.; A. P. Woodruff, secretary; L. H. Malton, treasurer. It was disbanded December 18, 1854, and re-organized March 31, 1860, at Otto, the officers then being T. D. Gibson, N. G.; J. B. Maltbie, V. G.; E. C. Elliott, secretary; Isaac Austin, treasurer. November 15, 1869, the lodge was again and finally disbanded, the last officers being James Ferris, N. G.; George Sherman, V. G.; E. D. Smallman, secretary; Ralph Dewey, treasurer.

The W. T. Wickham Post, No. 655, G. A. R., was instituted in April, 1892. It has a membership of 23. Charles A. O'Brien is the present commander.

Otto Union, No. 236, E. A. U., was instituted February 9, 1881. Frederick Truby is president and Mrs. Celia Oakes is secretary. The present membership is forty-six.

Otto Grange, No. 381, Patrons of Husbandry, was chartered April 5, 1876. Lately they have held no meetings.

Hawthorne Lodge, No. 654, I. O. G. T., has recently been re-organized with Rev. B. R. Germer as chief templar and Miss Mabel Pierce as secretary.

A society of the W. C. T. U. was organized August 19, 1884, with twenty-eight members. Mrs. S. Ann F. Allen was its first president. The present membership is twenty-one, with Miss Jennie Cotrael as president and Miss Dora Peterson as secretary.

Constant B. Allen was born in Locke, N. Y., Sept. 2, 1805. His ancestry is traced back seven or eight generations to the early settlement of New England, where they immigrated from Wales. Both his grandfathers were active participants with the Green Mountain Boys at the time of Burgoyne's invasion, Captain Constant Barney, his maternal grandfather, being one of four rangers who multiplied themselves into as many platoons and stationing themselves on either side of the road during the night intercepted a band of seventeen Tories on their way to join Burgoyne, compelling them to surrender. His father, Hon. Dan Allen, was born June 30, 1780, and in young manhood left his native State (Vermont), settling in Cayuga county, N. Y., whence in 1813 he moved to the then wilderness in the north part of the town of Persia (q. v.). He was the father of thirteen children, Constant B. being the oldest and at the time of his arrival in this county seven years of age. At the age of nineteen he had obtained an education enabling him to teach school, which occupation he followed two years. Also about this time he attended two terms in academic schools. It was his purpose to follow the legal profession, but after reading law with Albert G. Burke, Esq., of Gowanda, some months, he was, on account of failing eyesight, compelled to relinquish that design. In 1833 he came to Otto and for twenty years carried on a successful mercantile trade, engaging also quite extensively in the manufacture of pearlsh. In 1841 he purchased the Otto woolen-mills and carried on the manufacture of woolen goods till 1867, part of the time in company with D. F. Gibson. In 1867 their mill was burned and Mr. Allen retired from active business life, except to look after his estate, consisting of several dairy farms. In Feb., 1836, he married Miss B. C. Brown, who died in Jan., 1844; children: Col. Dan B. Allen, of the 154th N. Y. Vols., and Esther (Mrs. S. V. Pool). In Nov., 1852, Mr. Allen married S. Ann French. Mr. Allen was a man of decided convictions and an ardent supporter of the anti-slavery and temperance causes. He died Oct. 11, 1883.

Col. Dan B. Allen (see also page 370), in July and Aug., 1862, raised a company in the 154th N. Y. Vol. Inf. and was mustered into the U. S. service at Jamestown, Sept. 26th, as captain of Co. B. In Feb., 1863, he was promoted major and in June, 1863, became lieutenant-colonel. He was engaged in the battles of Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, and Peach Tree Creek, and in the siege of Atlanta. He was taken sick at Atlanta and sent to the hospital, and resigned his commission on account of illness in Oct., 1864. For gallantry at Gettysburg he was brevetted colonel. Sept. 9, 1878, he married Louisa McCoy, of Ellicottville, and has resided in Otto for the last fifteen years.

Peter Aust was born in Eden, Erie county, Nov. 21, 1844. His father, Nicholas Aust, came from Lottringen, France, about 1833, and bought of a pretended land company in Buffalo a piece of wild land in Eden, for which he had to go to Batavia and pay for the second time. Peter's education was mostly in the German language. In 1866 he came to Otto. For sixteen years he was engaged in farming and has for ten years kept a meat market in the village. He married, in 1869, Mary, daughter of John Kern, of Eden. They have four sons and one daughter. The oldest son, William, has been town clerk.

James Austin was born in Washington county, N. Y., Dec. 5, 1811. In 1820 his father, Benjamin Austin, started for the Holland purchase with a span of horses and wagon, his wife, seven sons, a sister of his wife, and his household goods. He arrived in Otto on Dec. 5th and located on a farm near the center of the town, which is now owned by his grandson, Levi Austin. He was a soldier in the War of 1812 and died in 1852. But two of the seven sons who came to Otto in 1820 are living. James, the only one residing in town, has always lived here. Jan. 15, 1835, he married Hannah, daughter of Peter Ingraham. Children: Cornelia A. (Mrs. Lucien Botsford), of Wisconsin; Benjamin, of New Albion; John, of Ohio; and Phineas, who enlisted in Co. K, 64th N. Y. Vols., while a lad, and at Spotsylvania, May 12, 1864, was wounded in the hip, from the effects of which he died ten days later in Army Square hospital, Washington. They have living with them a grandson, Simeon Austin.

Isaac D. Bailey was born in Persia, N. Y., Oct. 14, 1820. His father, Asa Bailey, came to that town in 1812. The mother of Isaac D. died when he was quite young, and when ten years old he came to Otto to live with Captain Corning and this town has ever since been his home. He married, in 1844, Rachel Popple, and in 1851 took up his residence in the village, being by trade a carpenter. Mr. Bailey's house stood in the path of the great tornado of May 30, 1860. He was away. Mrs. Bailey saw the storm approaching, and at the same time four or five of the neighbor's children going home from school rushed into the house. She got them and two of her own children into the cellar just as the cyclone struck the dwelling, lifting it from its foundations and carrying Mrs. Bailey and her youngest child with it several rods, where the house was dashed to pieces, but Mrs. Bailey and her child escaped with slight injuries. Mr. Bailey's pocket-book containing, among other things, one twenty and one one-dollar gold piece was in a pocket of a coat hanging in the house. After the storm had passed some neighbors in looking over the ruins found the pocket-book on the ground with its contents intact except the gold pieces. There was a hole in the pocket-book, as smooth as though cut by a knife, where the gold had evidently escaped. In the spring of 1871, eleven years afterward, Mr. Bailey was passing over the ground where his furniture had been scattered, when, to his astonishment, he saw the edge of his twenty-dollar piece peeping out of the ground. Mr. Bailey rebuilt on the old foundation the house in which he still resides. Mrs. Bailey died April 4, 1874, and Dec. 30th of the same year he married Mrs. Lucinda E. Burroughs. By his first wife he had one daughter, Mrs. Sarah Wright, of Kenyonville, N. Y., and one son, Albert H. Bailey, of Mt. Jewett, Pa. Mrs. Bailey has one daughter by her first husband.

James Myron Barber was born in Palmyra, N. Y., April 10, 1823. In June of the same year his father, James Barber, started with a yoke of oxen and wagon, his wife, two young daughters, and son James M. for the Holland purchase. He came by way of Buffalo and thence through the Cattaraugus Indian reservation, camping on the reservation by their wagon one night. In the morning the oxen had strayed away and while the husband was hunting for them the wife was nearly distracted with fear, as the Indians and squaws gathered around the wagon, examining its contents, and talking and gesticulating in their strange manner about her "little papoose." They arrived in Otto safely and settled on the farm on which James M. now lives. Mrs. Barber, on one occasion, left her little girls in their log house, which had for a door simply a blanket, while she ran through the woods to a neighbors. On her return she saw a large bear leaving the house, but found her children unharmed. In 1848 James M. married Nancy Parkinson, and has had three sons and two daughters, of whom two daughters and one son are deceased. Mr. Barber has served as highway commissioner twenty-three years.

Nelson Bartlett, one of a family of two sons and six daughters born to Dexter Bartlett, was born in Rutland, Vt., June 28, 1813. Dexter Bartlett with his family left Vermont in 1825, coming to Buffalo on the first boat which came through after the canal was finished. The Bartlett family are conspicuous in the annals of American history. Josiah Bartlett was the second name signed to the Declaration of Independence, and from the family to which he belonged have descended the numerous race of Bartletts scattered throughout the Union. They hold annual family reunions, two or three having been held in the neighboring town of Collins, where quite a number of the descendants reside. On these occasions hundreds are assembled together and interesting reminiscences related. Nelson Bartlett was but twelve years old when his father settled in Otto and he well remembers the privations the early settlers underwent. In 1838 he bought an article of twenty-five acres of land in the western part of the town, which he still owns, and which is now increased to a farm of 276 acres. That same year he married Aroline, daughter of Davis Benedict, another of the pioneers who came into the town in 1822. They have three sons and one daughter, all married. One son, Judson C., was in the 64th N. Y. Vols. three years. In 1870 he bought a pleasant residence in Otto village. He has served his town as an officer in the past and was again elected an assessor for three years in Feb., 1893.

Marvin S. Botsford was born in Burlington, Conn., Aug. 5, 1818. His father, Daniel Botsford, was born in 1782 and in 1825 moved to Otto, his family then consisting of his wife, three sons, and three daughters. He made the long journey from Connecticut with a horse and wagon, property at that time seldom seen in Otto. He inherited the vigor and hardihood of his Revolutionary sires and died aged nearly ninety-three. He was for many years a prominent member of the M. E. church in Otto. Marvin S. Botsford was educated in the district schools and has always followed farming, buying seventy-five acres of land in the northwest part of the town when twenty-two years old. To this he has since added till he now has a farm of 222 acres. He married, first, Hannah Bartlett, who died five years after. March 29, 1853, he married, second, Mrs. Phebe Irish King. In 1868 he purchased twenty acres of land about half a mile north of Otto village and built a fine residence and out buildings, where he has since resided. By his second marriage he has a daughter, Anna, wife of Prof. John Henry Comstock, of Cornell University.

Wiley S. Botsford, youngest son of Daniel, was born in Otto, March 3, 1827, married, Nov. 9, 1846, Eliza M., daughter of Adam Ballard, of Otto, and bought of his father the farm on which he was born, which has since remained in his possession, and which now contains 180 acres. In 1873 he moved from this farm to one he purchased a short distance north of Otto village, where he resided till his death. He had two daughters: Urana U. (Mrs. George J. Sherman) and Leonora (Mrs. Walter Taft). For many years Mr. Botsford and his wife had the care of his father, who died in 1876 aged ninety-four.

Mr. Botsford died Nov. 26, 1892, and was buried on the 29th with Masonic honors, he having been for twenty-five years an honored member of that order.

David N. Brown's parents came from Vermont to Attica, N. Y., about 1819, and there David N. was born May 9, 1822. While he was quite young they removed to Persia in this county, where his opportunities for obtaining an education were limited to a few terms in a district school. When fourteen he commenced learning the cabinet maker's trade, clothing himself out of his salary of $22 per year and improving his mind by study as opportunity offered. When twenty years old he became a clerk in a store with the privilege of attending a select school a term during the winters. At the age of twenty-two he entered into trade on his own account in Gowanda, where he carried on business twelve years. In the fire of 1856 his store with most of the business places in Gowanda was burned. He did not again engage in mercantile trade, but continued to reside in Gowanda till 1861, being eight years postmaster and serving the town of Persia as supervisor two years. In 1861 he moved to Collins, Erie county, and for ten years was a farmer. In 1871 Mr. Brown became a resident of Otto, purchasing the grist-mill property in the village and selling his farm in Collins in part payment for the same. He married, first, in 1844, Caroline, daughter of Titus Roberts, of Gowanda, who died in 1868. He married, second, in June, 1872, Lucy A. Butterfield. He had one son and four daughters by his first marriage (all of whom are married) and by his second marriage he had two daughters. In politics Mr. Brown has always been a Democrat, in which party his influence is felt throughout this senatorial district. He has served as supervisor of Otto three years.

Dolphus S. Brown was born in Cheshire, Mass., Sept. 15, 1830. His grandfather came from England prior to the Revolution and was a soldier in the patriot army during that struggle. In 1852 D. S. came to Chautauqua county, where, on January 1, 1854, he married Mary J. Foley, and taking up his residence in Fredonia he was for a number of years engaged running a wagon distributing paper throughout western New York and northern Pennsylvania. In 1864 he moved to Otto and with the exception of a short residence in Cattaraugus he has resided here since. For nine or ten years he ran the stage from Otto to Cattaraugus. He has been constable fifteen years, collector twelve years, and deputy sheriff nine years. Mr. Brown has buried four children and July 19, 1888, Mrs. Brown's death occurred. His other children are: Glen, of Jamestown, N. Y.; Mrs. Charles Barber, of East Otto; and Mrs. Floyd Barber, of Otto.

Perus Bull was born in Otto, April 26, 1836. William Bull, his father, came from Hartford, N. Y., in 1835 and settled on the farm on which Perus was born, where he resided till his death in 1891, aged eighty-one. He had four sons and three daughters, of whom only two survived him, viz.: Henry, the oldest, who lives in the village, and Perus, the youngest, who since his birth has lived on the homestead. June 30, 1863, Perus married Belinda, daughter of Theodore Cook one of the early settlers in Otto. The grandfather of Perus Bull was a soldier in the War of 1812 and came to Otto some time after William Bull settled here, where he died. Perus Bull has served as assessor three terms.

Andrew Burger, born in Bavaria, Germany, Feb. 27, 1819, learned there the trade of cabinet maker, and in 1849 emigrated to America, coming at once to Buffalo, where for a short time he worked at his trade, and where, on the 27th of Jan., 1850, he married Louisa Truby. Soon afterward he moved to Springville, N. Y., and subsequently lived in Ellicottville and Olean. In 1864 he came to Otto and engaged in the furniture and undertaking business, which he carried on till his death Jan. 17, 1885. He left besides his widow one daughter, Mrs. F. Smith, of Allegany, and two sons, J. Henry and S. F. J. Henry Burger was born April 15, 1851, in Springville, N. Y. His education was confined mainly to English branches in common schools. He has followed the occupation of his father, working with him till his death, and since then carrying on the business himself. He married, Aug. 13, 1878, Flora, adopted daughter of James Butler, an old resident of this town.

George Cain, born in Charleston, N. Y., July 7, 1832, was about three years old when his father, Seth Cain, came to Cattaraugus county, settling first in New Albion and afterward in Otto, where he was engaged in farming and in the lumber business, living some of the time in Otto and a part of the time in New Albion till 1864, when he removed to the west, where he died. George married Melissa A. Curtis, Feb. 25, 1863. A. B. Curtis, her father, was one of the early settlers of the town. In 1866 they spent some months in the west with a view to locating a home, but finally returned to Otto, where he bought the homestead farm of Mrs. Cain's mother and resided here till 1884, when he sold his property in Otto and moved to Hampton, Minn. They have one son, Seth, and one daughter, Eliza.

Samuel Charlesworth, born in England, July 6, 1832, is one of a family of ten children—six born in England and four in America. His father, Nathan Charlesworth, came to this county in 1841. He was a cotton spinner by trade and after coming to America he worked some years in woolen-mills. He came to Otto in 1845 and died here in 1853. Samuel has made this town his home since he was eleven years of age. He married, May 14, 1857, Eleanor, daughter of Kelsey Ballard, who came here in the early settlement of the town. In June, 1864, his wife and only child (a daughter of nearly five years) died within a period of one week. He married Lucinda Ballard, a sister of his first wife, Jan. 1, 1867. They have three daughters and one son. One daughter, E. Maude, is the wife of Carlton Foster.

Mark Colvin was born in New Albion, Nov. 9, 1840. His father, Noah Colvin, came from Vermont among the early settlers, stopping first in Otto, but soon moving to New Albion, where he lived till 1857, when he removed to Humphrey, where he died in 1873, aged seventy-four. He had five sons and four daughters. In the summer of 1864 Mark enlisted in Co. D, 9th N. Y. Vet. Cav., and was mustered in Sept. 2d and sent to remount camp, Md. Dec. 10th he was sent to Winchester and assigned to his company, moved thence to Lowitsville, and from there started on the Gordonsville raid. He was with the troops who took Fort Woodstock. On returning his horse gave out and he was again sent to remount camp, where he drew an untamed horse, which he mounted, and while endeavoring to get him in line the animal reared and fell over back across his rider, the corner of the saddle hitting Mark's left hip and dislocating the cap. By some assistance he returned to Winchester that night, but the next morning he was hardly able to move; he was ordered to the hospital, but refused to go, and did guard duty about six weeks before he could mount his horse. After that he did picket duty in Virginia till his discharge June 1, 1865. July 5, 1865, he married Julia A., daughter of Darius Babcock, one of the early settlers in Otto. Three years later they moved to East Otto, where they remained fourteen years, when they returned to this town. They have one son, Bert B., and one daughter, Cecile R.

John Cotrael, now the oldest male resident in the town of Otto, was born in Dutchess county, June 19, 1801. By the death of both his parents he was left an orphan before his earliest recollection, and when fourteen he went to Schoharie county, where he lived twelve years. When twenty-four years old he married Jane Parkinson and on the first of Jan., 1827, with his wife and infant son, he started for the Holland purchase with horses and sleigh, arriving in Otto, Jan. 11, 1827. He soon bought an article of 200 acres of wild land, of which he afterward sold 100 acres. Mr. Cotrael has continued on the same farm to the present time. He has had five sons and two daughters. In 1874 his wife died and since then his daughter, Mrs. W. C. Runnals, has cared for him. Mr. Cotrael has ever been a man of the strictest integrity and an ardent supporter of temperance and sobriety.

Jonathan P. Cotrael, the oldest son of John, was born in Schoharie county, Jan. 23, 1825. When he was about two years old his father moved to Otto, settling about one mile east of the village. In 1845 he commenced working at the carpenter's trade, which he followed ten years. In 1853 he entered into partnership with H. S. Cotrael in the mercantile trade, which he continued ten years. In 1863 he engaged in the hardware business, continuing therein till 1877, when he retired from mercantile trade and since then gave his attention to settling up his business affairs and looking after his farming interests. In March, 1855, he married Lida Becker. Their only living child, Jennie E., is a young lady of rare attainments in music and painting. He died in 1893.

Baxter J. Cotrael, youngest son of John, was born March 29, 1845, and in addition to the village school privileges he made a specialty of penmanship, in which art he became proficient. At the age of twenty-one he engaged as clerk in the store of J. P. & H. S. Cotrael. When twenty-seven he entered into partnership with J. P. Cotrael in the hardware trade and five years later bought the latter's interest. On the 18th of May, 1876, he married Carrie R., daughter of D. N. Brown.

Sylvester M. Cox was born in Onondaga county July 7, 1807, and moved to Otto in 1825, settling near the village. He was both a farmer and a blacksmith, and acquired a large property. One of his daughters married Judge Allen D. Scott, with whom he spent his declining years. He held several town offices and in 1876 was supervisor of New Albion, in which town he resided for a time.

Silas B. Cross's grandfather and father came from Schoharie county and located about one mile east of the village in 1827. At that time Levingston Cross, the father of S. B., had not attained his majority, but had previously learned the carpenter's trade. He worked on the grist-mill that was building in the village the year they arrived. He subsequently married and located in the village and carried on a door, sash, and blind factory till his death in 1883, aged seventy-three. He was a noted drummer in the famous Otto military band and was an ardent advocate of the temperance cause for many years. Silas B. Cross, born March 14, 1837, received his education in the village school and commenced teaching at an early age, teaching in all thirty-eight terms. In 1872 he received a teacher's certificate from the State Department of Public Instruction. He enlisted in the 9th N. Y. Cav., Sept. 9, 1864, and received his discharge June 22, 1865, while in the hospital at Little York, Pa. June 24, 1873, he married Allie, daughter of James C. Green; she died April 18, 1892. He has two sons, Ralph and Neal.

Oliver Dake, born Dec. 27, 1813, in Penfield, N. Y., is the youngest and only survivor of twelve children born to Augustus and Eunice Dake. In 1832 he came with his father to Otto and settled on the farm on which he now lives. Mr. Dake married Olive Parkinson, March 8, 1840, who died March 23, 1860. Nov. 30, 1862, he married Adaline Mirick. By his first wife he had two sons and one daughter. His oldest son, Elisha, now assists in carrying on his large dairy farm. Mr. Dake comes from a long-lived family. He has been elected to several responsible offices.

Carlton E. Derby, only son of Charles F. and Sarah Derby and grandson of S. M. Cox, was born in Persia, April 18, 1853, and traces his ancestry to the Derbys of Vermont, where they actively participated in the struggle for American Independence. Dec. 30, 1875, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Nicholas Beaver, of Collins, N. Y. In Feb., 1881, he purchased the homestead farm of his grandfather, S. M. Cox, in Otto, consisting of 526 acres, where he has since resided. He manufactures his milk into cheese and butter, keeping from sixty to seventy cows. By the will of Mr. Cox, who was one of the pioneer settlers of Otto and for many years a prominent citizen and large land-owner, and whose death occurred July 20, 1889, he was appointed executor of the estate, which he still manages. He has one son.

Ralph Dewey.*—The name of Dewey was originally De Ewes. They went from French Flanders into England in the reign of Henry VIII., when the name was Dewes, and Simeon Dewes was erected a baronet of Stow Hall about 1629. The first of the name to come to America was Thomas Dewey, who came from Sandwich, Kent, England, on the ship Lion's Whelp, and landed in Boston, Mass., in May, 1630. He settled in Dorchester, Mass., in 1633, and removed to Windsor, Conn., about 1638. March 22, 1638 or 1639, he married widow Frances Clark. He held various positions, such as juror and deputy to the General Court. He died and was buried at Windsor, Conn., April 27, 1648, leaving five children. Thomas Dewey, of the fifth or sixth generation from Thomas, was born in Tolland county, Conn., Aug. 20, 1747. His son, Elijah Dewey, born in Tolland county, Feb. 18, 1782, married Mehitabel Buck, who was also born in Tolland county, July 2, 1789, daughter of a Revolutionary soldier. They removed to Madison county, N. Y., where their son, Ralph Dewey, was born June 25, 1820, and came with his parents to Perrysburg in 1829. Oct. 29, 1843, he married Caroline L., daughter of Charles Blackney, one of the earliest settlers in Perrysburg. In 1860 they settled in Otto village, where he owned and operated an iron foundry forty years. Mr. Dewey is a prominent citizen of his town and a man of high character, a member of the Methodist church, and a staunch Republican. He served his town as supervisor five consecutive terms from 1870 to 1875, and will enter upon his seventh term as justice of the peace Jan. 1, 1894. Children: Eliza (Mrs. A. D. Lake), of Gowanda; Florence (Mrs. H. L. Goodrich), of Madison county; George C., of Dunkirk; S. Clara (Mrs. C. D. Soule), of Otto; William C., of Concordia, Kan.; Luman R., of Chicago; C. Bertell, of Jamestown; Carrie F.

William Eddy was born in Mansfield in 1836, his father, Levi B. Eddy, being one of three brothers who were among the early settlers of that town, and from whom the hamlet of Eddyville derived its name. In 1862 he married Polly A., daughter of J. H. Goodrich, of East Otto. Mrs. Eddy is one of a family of nineteen children; the mother of all is still living. In 1869 Mr. Eddy purchased a farm in the southeast part of the town, where he has continued to reside. He has one son and one daughter, both of whom are married.

John Facklam emigrated from Germany in 1858, settling in Collins, N. Y., where Henry F., the oldest of three sons, was born Jan. 14, 1859, and his brothers a few years later. The father and his family moved to Otto in 1872 and in 1878 purchased a dairy farm of 208 acres. Moving onto it in Jan., 1879, he lived but about one year after this, leaving the sons with their mother to care for the farm, which they have continued to the present time. In 1887 Henry F. commenced dealing in farm implements and fertilizers. His business increasing he removed in 1889 to the village and opened a farm implement establishment, keeping also a stock of wagons, carriages, etc., to which he has since added a general stock of hardware. In boyhood he attended both English and German schools, thus becoming proficient in each language. He married, Nov. 28, 1882, Mina, daughter of Joseph Dankert, and has two daughters and one son.

Sheldon Foster, born Sept. 20, 1831, in Otto, is the second son of Joseph Foster, who settled here in 1818, and who for fifty-six years was an honored citizen of the town, dying at the age of seventy-five on the same farm on which he first located. Sheldon's school privileges were such as the common schools of the period afforded. He married, March 29, 1853, Betsey, daughter of William Bull, of Otto. He resided in Collins, Erie county, till 1857, when he returned to Otto and settled on the farm on which he now resides. Dec. 14, 1868, Mrs. Foster died, leaving a daughter and a son. The daughter, Mary, is now the wife of F. L. Mattocks, a marble dealer in Gowanda. The son, C. J. Foster, is married to a daughter of Samuel Charlesworth and lives on the homestead. Much of the time since Mr. Foster last settled in town he has held official positions, being two years town auditor, twelve years assessor, and twelve years commissioner of highways.

Albert Foster was born in Otto, Oct. 14, 1836. Joseph Foster, his father, came from Hartford, N. Y., in 1817, lived in Collins one year, and in 1818 came to Otto and articleed the farm on which Albert was born, and where he continued to reside till his death in 1874, aged seventy-five. He was justice of the peace sixteen years, was one of the original members of the M. E. church in 1826, and for a number of years kept a record of the meetings with the name of the minister and the text preached from, which is now an heirloom in possession of his son, Albert Foster, who has always lived on the homestead. Jan. 3, 1860, Albert Foster married Julia F., daughter of Stephen Soule and sister of T. B. Soule. For several years they had the care of his aged mother, who died in 1883, aged eighty-two. Children: Clarence P., a stenographer in Buffalo; Ollie (Mrs. Austin Webster); and Herbert and Lutie.

Henry Gold was born in Mecklenburg, Schwerin, Germany, April 10, 1826. His father died when he was five years old and at an early age he commenced supporting himself by working as a laborer in his native country. In 1856 he married Anna Moller and in Germany two sons were born to them. In 1866 he emigrated to America, settling in East Otto, where he hired out as a farm laborer and followed that occupation until 1874, when he purchased a farm of 120 acres in the southeast part of Otto, where he now resides. In 1873 his first wife died and he married, second, Dora Wolff in 1874. By his first marriage he had three sons and by his second he has had one daughter and two sons. His children are educated both in German and English. He has been twice elected justice of the peace.

James C. Green came to Otto in 1825. He was born May 22, 1807, in Macedon, N. Y. In 1830 he married Maria McMasters and settled on a farm of 250 acres in the north part of the town, where for sixty-two years he has continued to live. He has had three sons and three daughters, only two of whom are now living: James H., the oldest, and Sarah M. (Mrs. Waldo G. Ross). His second son, Ephraim C., enlisted in Co. C, 64th N. Y. Vols., in 1861, and was killed at the battle of Antietam, Sept. 17, 1862. In Dec., 1888, his wife died. His only remaining daughter, Mrs. W. G. Ross, now cares for him. Mr. Green was supervisor of Otto in 1851, 1852, 1855, and 1867.

Jacob E. Hanson was born in Ashford, Dec. 26, 1851. His father came into that town among the early settlers. When fourteen years old Jacob commenced work in a cheese factory and for twenty-four years he followed the occupation of cheese manufacturer. In 1887 he married Catharine Ayers, of Otto, he being at the time proprietor of a cheese factory in this town, where he has since resided. They have three sons. He was elected justice of the peace in 1892 for a full term. In March, 1892, he sold his factory interests and has since been engaged with F. C. Laing in the real estate business.

Frank J. Harvey, youngest of three sons of John S. and Thedey Harvey, was born in New Albion, March 1, 1843, his parents coming to that town from Onondaga county in 1827. For many years John S. Harvey was a prominent and highly respected citizen of the county. He was supervisor of New Albion in 1837. In 1861 he moved to Otto, where he had purchased a large farm and erected a fine residence where his son Frank J. now resides. He died Feb. 1, 1871, aged sixty-six. His wife (Thedey Reed) survived him until July 18, 1889, aged eighty-four. In the division of the estate the Otto farm came into the possession of Frank J., and to him and his wife was left the care of his aged mother. In his youth he attended Chamberlain Institute two years and also received a diploma from Bryant & Stratton's Business College in Buffalo. He married, March 22, 1866, L. Josephine, daughter of James M. Smith, of Randolph. They have four sons and three daughters living.

John A. Harvey, only son of Alfred B. Harvey, was born Nov. 3, 1869, in New Albion, on the homestead farm where his grandfather, John S. Harvey, settled. He attended the village school in Otto, the Union School in Randolph, six terms in Chamberlain Institute, and one year in the Rochester Business University. When twenty years of age he entered a drug store as clerk, which occupation he followed till Nov., 1891, when he purchased the drug store of B. L. Maltbie in Otto village, entering into partnership with Mr. Maltbie under the firm name of J. A. Harvey & Co. Mr. Harvey is a young man of excellent social, moral, and business qualifications.

Joseph Hill was born in Nunda, N. Y., March 17, 1811. His father, Samuel Hill, was one of the very early settlers in Otto, locating in the valley of Zoar in 1814. He came down Cattaraugus creek in a canoe. There were then but two other families in town, both living in the valley. Bears and wolves were seen in great abundance and game and fish were plenty. In one season Samuel killed sixteen bears and Joseph himself was a successful hunter. Jan. 22, 1835, he married Catherine, daughter of Abram Hemstreet, of Ashford. The same year he bought the article of fifty acres of land, a part of the farm on which he now lives. He took his wife and furniture on an ox-sled and his axe on his shoulder and starting for their future home he cut his road to his farm, where he had a log house partly built. Their present residence stands on the same ground on which their first log house was built and their small farm has been increased to about 400 acres. Children: Nathan, of Ohio, and Winfield. Jehiel Hill, brother of Joseph, was for many years prominent in military circles, rising from the office of lieutenant to that of general. Joseph is equally as prominent as a musician and noted especially as a fifer. At the head of the Otto Rifle Company he led the troops to the parade ground at the general trainings in the village of Lodi (now Gowanda).

Simeon B. Hinman traced his ancestry back to the commonwealth in England. Sergeant Edward Hinman was an officer in the bodyguard of Charles I. After the overthrow and execution of King Charles, about 1650, Sergeant Edward Hinman was found in New England, where he soon became one of the prominent citizens of those times. From him the numerous Hinmans in America have descended, and many of them have filled important positions in the history of New England. The records show that Simeon B. Hinman is one of the lineal descendants of Sergeant Edward. Born in Rutland county, Vt., Aug. 11, 1800, he married, in 1826, Keziah Bullis, a native of Vermont, who died in Otto village April 10, 1893. (See page 839).

Hon. William E. Hunt descends from Puritan stock, his father, Ward Hunt, having moved from Connecticut to Brandon, Vt., in the early part of the present century where William E. was born Sept. 20, 1822. When ten years of age his father came to Perrysburg. Besides the common school privileges William E. attended two terms at Fredonia Academy. In 1851 he came to Otto and engaged in mercantile business, which he followed twenty-three years, and was also for many years an extensive buyer of dairy products for New York houses. In 1866 he was elected member of Assembly on the Republican ticket by a majority of 1,160. He represented his town on the Board of Supervisors nine years, was postmaster of Otto twenty-four years, and performed all his public duties with fidelity and strict integrity. Jan. 15, 1853, he married Betsey H. Vosburg; children: two who died in infancy, and Mrs. Arthur Andrews, of Minneapolis, Minn. Mr. Hunt some years ago retired from active business and invested considerable of his means in real estate. He died March 23, 1889. Mrs. Hunt survives him.

Alexander Ingraham was born in Pittstown, N. Y., Dec. 18, 1823. His father, H. W. Ingraham, was a soldier in the War of 1812 and came to Otto in 1826, where he articleed fifty acres of wild land, to which he subsequently added more. He had six sons and two daughters and died in 1870, aged seventy-two. Alexander, the oldest of these children, has always resided in the town. In 1855 he married Sally Austin. They have one son and one daughter. Mr. Ingraham, a few years ago, saw two young girls drowned while attempting to ford Cattaraugus creek, and afterward was more determined than ever to have a bridge over the stream, which was built in 1892.

Simeon M. Ingraham was born in Pittstown, N. Y., July 7, 1828, and came with his father, H. W. Ingraham, to Otto, settling on the farm on which he now lives. He enlisted in Co. K, 64th N. Y. Vol. Inf., in the fall of 1861, and at Fair Oaks was struck by three rebel bullets, one of which would probably have proved fatal had not the ball struck his wallet, which contained papers and money. After the battle he found more than forty bullet-holes in his rubber blanket, which was caused by its being rolled up. He passed through the Seven Days' Fight, was at the battles of South Mountain and Antietam, where he was again slightly wounded, and at Fredericksburg, where he was more seriously wounded, the ball passing through his cartridge box and belt and striking a rib bone. He was at Chancellorsville and Gettysburg and was shot through the left hand July 2, 1863. With this wound he was in the hospital till into November, when he again joined his regiment. He was in the battles of the Wilderness and Spotsylvania, in the latter of which he received a severe bayonet wound in one knee and was confined in the hospital till September, when he again joined his regiment in front of Petersburg and had command of his company as first sergeant till the expiration of his term of service. He married Rosina Babcock in Feb., 1857. They resided in Leon and New Albion till the death of his father in 1870, when he bought out the heirs and removed to the homestead in Otto. Their only child, a daughter, died in infancy and May 13, 1886, his wife's death occurred.

P. F. Jark was born in Holstein, Germany, Nov. 13, 1837. His father was a farm laborer and P. F. followed the same occupation until thirty years of age, when he emigrated to America and soon after commenced cheese making for F. D. Stebbins in Mansfield. In 1877 he purchased the cheese factory at decided that in a few years he purchased the large factory in the village and Scott's Corners in Otto, where he then resided. His success in this was so other factories in Mansfield, and is now one of the largest manufacturers of cheese in this section of country. In Dec., 1871, he married and has five daughters and one son. The daughters are liberally educated, the oldest, Augusta, being an accomplished teacher of music.

Fremont C. Laing, born in East Otto, July 6, 1851, is a son of Stephen Laing (see page 558), and received a thorough education in Forestville Academy, Griffith Institute, and Fredonia Normal school. He commenced teaching school at the age of seventeen, and taught eight terms. For four years prior to 1879 he was engaged in mercantile business in East Otto, and in March, 1879, he moved to the village and started one of the most prosperous general stores in this section of country, which business he still continues. He has engaged quite extensively in dealing in Buffalo real estate. In politics a Democrat he was elected to office by a large majority in a Republican town and for four years was postmaster of Otto. On the 6th of Feb., 1873, he married Inez R., daughter of W. C. Runnals, of East Otto, and has one son, Cecil D., and one daughter, Vera M.

Frank P. Lake was born in Otto village Nov. 13, 1858, and is a son of Capt. Phipps Lake, M. D. (see page 162). The youngest of five children he received his education in the graded school of Otto and here he has always resided. He is an expert painter and decorator. Aug. 8, 1883, he married Carrie J., daughter of Rev. A. H. Johnson, a clergyman of the M. E. church, then holding a pastorate in Otto. They have one son and two daughters.

Bliss Loomis, father of Henry C. and Nelson Loomis, came from Bennington, Vt., in 1826, stopping first in Otto village, but in 1828 locating on the farm now owned by Nelson, where he died. Nelson was born on this farm April 13, 1838, and was one of the first from this town to enlist in the Rebellion. May 13, 1861, he enlisted and June 7th was mustered into Co. I, 37th N. Y. Vol. Inf., for two years. The regiment took the same route through Baltimore as the Massachusetts regiment did April 19th, but were unmolested save by "secesh slang." He was in the first battle of Bull Run and after that did guard and police duty in and about Alexandria and Washington till the spring of 1862. He was in the siege of Yorktown, the battles of Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, and Seven Days' Fight, and between Richmond and Harrison's Landing was taken sick and sent to the hospital on David's Island, from which he was discharged in November, 1862. He has preserved a complete record of the scenes and events through which he passed from day to day from the time he enlisted till he arrived home. He married, Dec. 31, 1869, Eveline, daughter of Simeon Skeels, of Otto, and has always resided on the homestead. He has two sons: Mark, who married, June 2, 1891, Minnie D. Stannard, and Guy. Henry C., the elder brother of Nelson Loomis, was first lieutenant in Co. C, 64th N. Y. Vol. Inf., lieutenant-colonel in the 154th Regt., was promoted to brigadier-general, and now lives in Kansas.

John A. Losee, born in Watertown, N. Y., Aug. 7, 1818, attended the common schools and two terms at the Watertown Academy, and married Martha A. Skeels in 1838. He came to Otto in 1847, purchasing a large farm in the central part of the town. Since 1865 he has resided in the village, his father living with him till his death in 1888 at the age of ninety years. Their oldest son, Sullivan B., was killed June 1, 1862, in the battle of Fair Oaks, while acting lieutenant in Co. C, 64th N. Y. Vols. His younger brother, a member of the same company with his son, died from exposure and sickness soon after the battle. They have one son and one daughter living and buried a married daughter some years ago. He has held several town offices.

James C. Mercer was born in Oneida county, N. Y., Oct. 22, 1833. His father, James Mercer, emigrated from England about 1820, and came from Oneida county to East Otto when James C. was two years old. When twenty-one the son became a carpenter and joiner and followed that occupation twenty-two years. For the past sixteen years he has been engaged in raising and dealing in Percheron Norman horses and is now the owner of the famous horse Imperial, the champion long-mane horse of the world, and the wonder of all beholders wherever exhibited. He has also other noted horses of the same breed. Jan. 15, 1861, he married Emerette C., daughter of Benjamin Ballard, of Otto. In 1865 Mr. Mercer came to Otto village, where he has since resided. They have one son, William F., a graduate of Chamberlain Institute, Randolph, and of Hillsdale College in Michigan. He has been a teacher in high schools several years and is now principal of Waterford Academy, Waterford, Pa., and is also superintendent of public schools in that town.

Charles A. O'Brien, born in Canada, March 7, 1843, came in 1859 to Otto, where he worked at painting about two years. May 11, 1861, he enlisted in Co. H, 37th N. Y. Vols., for two years, being the first volunteer from the town of Otto to answer the call of President Lincoln for troops. Reaching Washington about the first of June he was in the first battle of Bull Run, the siege of Yorktown, the battles of Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, and Seven Days' Fight, and on the 30th of June, 1862, was wounded and taken prisoner. He was two weeks in Libby prison and two months on Belle Island, when he was paroled, and in October was exchanged and joined his regiment. He was in the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville and was mustered out June 23, 1863. He re-enlisted Aug. 13, 1863, in Co. H, 14th N. Y. H. A., and was mustered in as fourth sergeant on Staten Island. He was acting orderly with a detachment of men in City Hall park, New York, from Dec. 4, 1863, till April, 1864, when he joined the Ninth Army Corps, being promoted color-sergeant. About the 1st of May he was made sergeant-major and participated in the battles of the Wilderness, Spotsylvania Court House, North Anna River, Cold Harbor, Tolopotomy Creek, Petersburg, the mine explosion, and Weldon Railroad, and was promoted to second lieutenant and assigned to Co. M. He served in the battles of Pegram Farm, Hacher's Run, Fort Steadman, and Fort Haskell, making in all nineteen regular battles in which he was engaged. For gallantry in the battles of Forts Steadman and Haskell he was brevetted first lieutenant in the U. S. Vols. by the president and was commissioned first lieutenant by

His father, John Strickland, was born July 25, 1783, and died Oct. 19, 1841. In 1828 he moved from Connecticut to Oneonta, N. Y., and in 1832 came to Otto, settling on fifty acres of land now included in the farm of W. H. Strickland. He had five daughters and two sons. Since the death of his father Walter H. has continued in possession of the original farm and has added to it till the place now includes 350 acres. Mr. Strickland had an academic education and at the age of nineteen he commenced teaching school, which he followed fifteen years, holding a life certificate, but on account of lung difficulty was obliged to relinquish teaching and give his attention to farming. In 1836 he was one of the first members of the M. E. church in the village and is now the only one of that little band living. Mr. Strickland married, first, Statira, daughter of Hon. Dan Allen, of Gowanda, July 13, 1843. She died Dec. 16, 1852. By this marriage he had two sons and one daughter, of whom the oldest son, John, and daughter, Mrs. Laura Smith, are still living; the other son, Dan A., died in May, 1882. In Jan., 1854, he married Mrs. Maryette B. Hunt; they have one son, Channing W., and two daughters deceased.

J. N. Tolman, born Aug. 27, 1827, in Evans, N. Y., moved in 1868 to Otto, purchasing of Edmund Palmer about 400 acres of land in the Zoar valley, where he has since resided, carrying on a large dairying business and raising extensive crops of grain. Mr. Tolman, with others in the valley, has worked industriously to secure the construction of a permanent bridge across Cattaraugus creek, which was built in 1892. In 1858 he married Eugenia Bundy; they have two sons and three daughters.

Frederick Truby, the oldest of three Truby brothers residing in the village of Otto, was born in Weidenhausen, Germany, on the 6th of May, 1835. His father died when he was ten years old and at the age of sixteen, by the death of his mother, he was left an orphan. In 1852 he decided to seek a home in America, and landing in New York in the fall of that year he came in February following to Ellicottville, where he commenced learning the cabinet maker's trade with William E. Harrison, for whom he worked most of the time till the spring of 1863, when he went to Germany to settle the parental estate. His father had been proprietor of a shoe store and manufactory. Returning to America in the fall he came to Otto, where he has since resided, being engaged in the cabinet and carpentering business until 1866. In 1858 he received his citizenship papers and in the fall of 1864 he was drafted into the service, but put a substitute into the army. In 1866, in company with his brother John, he opened a clothing and manufacturing establishment under the firm name of F. & J. Truby. John was a practical tailor and the brothers have continued their business over twenty-five years, their sales extending to all parts of the surrounding country. In 1868 Mr. Truby was elected overseer of the poor and re-elected twelve successive terms. In 1880 he received the nomination of superintendent of the poor of Cattaraugus county on the Republican ticket and was elected. He was re-elected in 1883 and 1886, holding the office nine successive years. April 29, 1866, F. and J. Truby married, respectively, Christine and Minnie Ackerman. Frederick's children are one daughter, who died when one and a half years old; Lutie; Willard F., a graduate of Chamberlain Institute and now a student in Cornell University; and Jessie.

Ernest H. Truby was born in Weidenhausen, Germany, Dec. 7, 1843. His parents both died before he was eight years old and at fifteen he commenced learning the shoemaker's trade. When nineteen he emigrated to America, landing in New York, Oct. 15, 1862, and six days after commenced work at his trade for D. M. Lockridge in Otto village. In 1863 he entered into partnership with William Heppner in the boot and shoe business. In 1865 he purchased Heppner's interest and has since continued alone. In July, 1887, his store and residence were destroyed by fire, but in Feb., 1888, he had ready for occupancy a commodious brick building where his former store stood. Mr. Truby married, June 1, 1868, Minnie Truby, and they have two sons. For twelve years he has held the office of overseer of the poor, being elected several times without opposition.

George H. Wayne was born in Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 11, 1845. His parents emigrated from Germany. In 1861 he attended the University of Rochester a few months, but enlisted in Co. E, 100th N. Y. Vol. Inf., and joined McClellan's army at Fortress Monroe. He was in the battles of Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, and Seven Days' Fight, and was wounded at Deep Bottom and lay in the hospital three months. After recovering he was at the taking of Folly Island, Morris Island, in the charge on Fort Wagner, and was wounded on Morris Island by the explosion of a shell. He was in Captain Payne's expedition of twelve men to spike cannon at Fort Johnson. He was mustered out in Buffalo in Dec., 1864. Mr. Wayne came to East Otto in 1873 and for fourteen years carried on a wagon shop and blacksmithing business. In Jan., 1887, his shops with a large stock were burned. In Nov., 1887, he came to Otto village, where he has since been doing a blacksmith business. In 1873 he married Lotilda Smith; they have two daughters.

James T. Wickham was born in Orleans county, N. Y., April 14, 1843, and when about ten years old his father, James Wickham, with his family came to East Otto. In 1861 James T. enlisted in Co. C, 64th N. Y. Vols. For several weeks he was nearly blind with inflammation of the eyes while in Camp Fenton. He was in the siege of Yorktown and arrived at Williamsburg just at the close of that battle. He was slightly wounded in the battle of Fair Oaks, was in the Seven Days' Fight, and was sent to the hospital at Fortress Monroe, thence to New York, and from there to his home. After about six weeks he returned to his regiment at South Mountain. After the battle of Antietam he was sent to the hospital, transferred to the Veteran Reserve Corps, and assigned to provost duty till his term of service expired. He contracted disease in the early part of his service, from which he has never recovered. Nov. 14, 1864, he married Helen S. Griffith. For about twelve years he has been agent for Smith & Jones, of Utica, dealers in dairy supplies.

CHAPTER XLI.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF PERRYSBURG.

PERRYSBURG, located in the extreme northwest part of the county, was originally called Perry, after Commodore Oliver H. Perry, the hero of Lake Erie. It was organized April 13, 1814, at which time it included the western half of the county, now formed into three tiers of townships—sixteen towns in all. By an act of the Legislature passed April 10, 1818, the town was divided and the northern part was called Perrysburg, which then included, with its present territory, the towns of Dayton, Persia, Otto, and East Otto. The remaining part of the former territory of Perry, which now constitutes twelve towns, was called Little Valley. Another division of the town was made January 29, 1823, when the territory of Otto and East Otto was taken off and formed the town of Otto. A third reduction was made February 7, 1835, when Persia and Dayton were taken off, leaving the town of Perrysburg with its present area of 18,328 acres, which has been divided into forty-nine lots. A small portion of the north and east parts of the town are included within the Cattaraugus Indian reservation.

Through the southern-central part of the town, running northwest and southeast, lies the "dividing ridge" or "height of land," which forms a watershed for the Allegheny river and Lakes Erie and Ontario. The drainage is mainly afforded by streams flowing north and northeast into Cattaraugus creek, which flows northwesterly and westerly between Perrysburg and Erie county and affords both mill sites and picturesque scenery. The largest of these brooks is Big Indian creek. A few streams flowing south and west also have their source in the southwestern corner of the town. The surface is elevated nearly 1,000 feet above Lake Erie and from some points a magnificent panorama is unfolded to the beholder. The soil is composed of clay and gravelly loam and is very fertile. It is especially adapted to the production of grass and corn. Within the past decade a number of large vineyards have been started northwest of Perrysburg village, and these have proven unusually profitable. It has been asserted by competent authority that some of the finest grapes produced in the famous Chautauqua grape belt have been grown in this town, which lies on the extreme northeast corner of that justly celebrated district. Both the soil and climate substantiate the belief that this industry in Perrysburg is in its infancy and susceptible of vast development.

The town was originally covered with heavy growths of deciduous trees and considerable pine, nearly all of which have been converted into lumber, principally for local consumption. An excellent quality of building stone is also found in some localities. Aside from the grape industry the inhabitants are largely engaged in farming and dairying.

In 1818 the present town of Perrysburg had forty-nine landowners, some of whom articulated tracts as early as 1815, though all of them never became actual settlers. The most authentic data obtainable gives the honor usually accorded the first settler to John Clark, who came with his family in 1815. His wife for several months was the only white woman in the town, and she did the baking for all her neighbors. About 1816 Clark opened a tavern, but a few years later went west. Also in 1815 came Phineas Spencer, one of the first school commissioners, who died September 30, 1839. Of those who became settlers in 1816 were Hugh Campbell on lot 9; William Cooper, who brought his bride hither a few years afterward; Truman Edwards, brother-in-law of Cooper; Daniel Johnson; Simeon Waterman, at whose house was frequently held the early town meetings, and who was chosen the first town clerk; Ralph Griswold; and Stephen Crocker, the first to introduce improved farming implements in the town. Among those who came in 1817 were Alanson Dewey, Ephraim Walker, Abel Jolles, George Flower, and Samuel K. Strickland. Following these came Abram and Jonathan G. Rugg, John and Daniel Prosser, Benjamin Waterman, John Dawley, Daniel Brand, Joseph Putney, John Haven, Charles Blackney, Thomas Townsend, Elijah Wells, John and David Parker, Noah Cook, John Eaton, and John Haven.

Like other pioneers the early settlers of Perrysburg were poor in worldly goods, but they were constituted by nature to successfully convert the wilderness into productive farms and pleasant homes. They transmitted to their posterity the sterling traits of New England thrift and character. Many of those named as well as other prominent settlers will be noticed in subsequent pages of this chapter. The population of Perrysburg in 1820 was 835; in 1830, 2,440; in 1840, five years after the last territorial reduction of the town, 1,660; in 1870, 1,313; in 1890, 1,112.

The first frame building was erected on lot 5 by Stephen Whitcomb. The first death was that of a Mrs. Brand about 1820. John Clark and Benjamin Waterman each opened taverns in 1816, the former on lot 28 and the latter near Gowanda. The first school was taught in 1819 by Olive Barton. An early if not the earliest saw-mill was placed in operation on lot 44 in 1820 by Isaac Balcom. Two years later E. A. Foote had another on Mill brook which at one time was equipped with a run of stone for grinding.

October 27, 1816, at a special town meeting held at the house of Simeon Waterman, Silas Nash, Timothy M. Shaw, and Dan Allen were designated as suitable justices of the peace. At this meeting Benjamin Waterman was town clerk; Simeon Waterman was chosen moderator. At the annual town meeting the next year, which convened at the same place, Silas Nash was moderator and these officers were chosen: Silas Nash, supervisor; Benjamin Waterman, town clerk; Ahaz Allen, James P. Pitcher, John V. King, and Dan Allen, assessors; Simeon Bunce, Truman Edwards, and Ira Waterman, highway commissioners; Simeon Bunce and Ahaz Allen, overseers of the poor; Dan Allen, John Clark, and John Waterford, fence viewers; Phineas Spencer, Dan Allen, and Truman Edwards, commissioners of common schools; Benjamin Waterman, Elnathan Finch, and Timothy M. Shaw, school inspectors. The supervisors, town clerks, and justices of the peace of the town of Perrysburg have been as follows:

Supervisors.—Silas Nash, 1818-21; Phineas Spencer, 1822-23; Don S. Downer, 1824-26; Joseph Keyes, 1827-29; Timothy M. Shaw, 1830; Truman Edwards, 1831-32, 1856-57; Mark W. Fletcher, 1833-34; Isaac Hull, 1835-36; William Cooper, 1837-40; Daniel Prosser, 1841-47; James Kirkland, 1848-52; William Knowlton, 1853-55; Elisha Brown, 1856-62; Samuel L. Titus, 1863; Ransom L. Blackmer, 1864; Frederick E. De Wolf, 1865, 1872-74; David F. Moody, 1866-71, 1876; James M. Pettit, 1875; Reuben White, 1877-79; A. M. De Long, 1880-81; Henry B. Gray, 1882; Alfred Clark, 1883; D. N. Parker, 1884; Albert D. Lake, 1885-87; R. P. Johnson, 1888; Henry C. Gaylord, 1889-90; L. H. Wood, 1891-93.

Town Clerks.—Phineas Spencer, 1818-21; Joseph Keyes, 1822-26; John G. McKee, 1827-28; Samuel Starr, 1829-32, 1855-58; Franklin Day, 1833-34; Abial Titus, 1839-44, 1846; Truman Hinman, 1845; Alexander H. Parker, 1847-48; Harvey C. Hurd, 1849; R. R. Davis, 1850; Nathaniel W. Hurd, 1851-55; Waldron Cooper, 1856-57; D. W. Cooper, 1858; Samuel L. Titus, 1859-60, 1867; Frank Campbell, 1861; Frank H. Chadwick, 1862-63; Le Roy Atwood, 1864; William L. Haven, 1865; A. M. De Long, 1866, 1868; Alfred Clark, 1869; L. J. Southworth, 1870-72; Courtland H. Shaw, 1873-77, 1880; D. A. Slawson, 1878-79, 1881; R. P. Johnson, 1882-84; C. C. Ranney, 1885-88; B. H. Graves, 1889-93.

Titus; Eber M. Pettit; 1839, Reuben Ward; 1840, Lester Wood; 1841, Abial Titus; 1842, Truman Edwards; 1843, John Toucey; 1844, Lester Wood; 1845, Riley S. Shepard; 1846, David Sanders; 1847, John Toucey; 1848, Jonathan Wood; 1849, Benjamin Cooper; 1850, David Sanders; 1851, John Toucey; 1852, Elisha Brown; 1853, Benjamin Cooper; 1854, David Sanders; 1855, Adney Hall; 1856, Elisha Brown; 1857, R. L. Blackmer; 1858, David Sanders; 1859, John Toucey; 1860, Adney Hall, Elisha Brown; 1861, Benjamin Cooper; 1862, David Sanders; 1863, George G. Beebe; 1864, Elisha Brown; 1865, David F. Moody; 1866, Newton Slawson; 1867, George G. Beebe; 1868, De Forest N. Parker; 1869, David F. Moody; 1870, Newton Slawson, Elisha Brown; 1871, Jonathan G. Rugg; 1872, David F. Moody; 1873, J. G. Rugg; 1874, Newton Slawson; 1875, Wilber H. Merrill; 1876, Elisha Brown; 1877, Ira W. Hawley, David F. Moody; 1878, John E. Hall; 1879, John Hall, George F. Parker; 1880, Ira Hawley; 1881, D. F. Moody; 1882, those elected did not qualify; 1883, George F. Parker, George W. Press; 1884, same as 1882; 1885, J. M. Matthewson, William H. Sanders; 1886, G. W. Press; 1887, G. F. Parker, H. F. Shaw, W. H. Sanders; 1888, W. H. Sanders; 1889, William Cooper; 1890, A. P. Dawley; 1891, E. J. Hogle; 1892, William H. Sanders; 1893, William Cooper.

East and west through the village of Perrysburg runs one of the oldest roads in this part of the county. It was laid out by the Holland Land Company and along its line the first settlers located. In some portions of the town the roads were formerly corduroyed. The highways of the present day are kept in comparatively good condition. The Erie railroad, completed in 1851, traverses the "dividing ridge" and has a station at Perrysburg village. There are cemeteries on lot 3, lot 17, lot 15, and lot 43. The last mentioned contains many of the first interments in town.

The town has long been noted for the manufacture of large quantities of excellent butter and cheese. The butter industry is carried on chiefly by private dairymen. The cheese factories are doing a good business. The Dewey factory, on lot 1, in the southeast part of the town, is run by Mrs. Lucinda A. Johnson, of Collins, Erie county, and produces about 50,000 pounds a year. The Scotch factory in the village was built in 1865 by A. Brainard and is now run by Robert McCuffin, Sr., and produces about 150,000 pounds of cheese per annum. The Tichnor factory, one mile south of Versailles, is also operated by Robert McCuffin, Sr., and makes 50,000 pounds of cheese annually.

In 1820 Perrysburg was divided into seven school districts, in only two of which schools were maintained. In 1836, one year after the town's territory was reduced for the last time, there were nine whole and four fractional districts and the cost of maintaining the schools aggregated $573.26. In 1892 the town had nine school districts, in each of which a school was maintained, which were attended by 261 scholars and taught by ten teachers. The value of buildings and sites is $7,750. The assessed valuation of the districts is $412,755; the amount of school money received from the State was $1,343.58 and the amount raised by local tax $1,466.80.

Perrysburg is the oldest and largest village in the town and is located on the Erie railway, in the southern part, at the corners of lots 11, 12, 19, and 20. Its present population is 350. It has a commodious church edifice, a fine school building erected in 1880 at an expense of $4,500, a postoffice, telegraph, telephone, and express offices, two stores, a blacksmith and wagon shop, tin shop, grist-mill, saw-mill and grape-basket manufactory, cheese factory, hotel, public hall, cooper shop, and a millinery store. The soil about the village is fertile and well adapted to grazing, farming, and fruit growing. At the west end is a fifty-acre vineyard owned by Orrin Knowlton & Son. The site of the village was originally owned by William Cooper and Elisha Ward. The first public house was a log building opened about 1821 by Elisha Ward. On the same site he erected the upright part of the present hotel in 1828. The following landlords have succeeded him: Ira A. Torrey, John G. McGee, Chancellor Campbell, Russell Briggs, Chancellor Campbell again from 1852 to 1883, Frank Campbell, George Vosburg, and Warren Hall. An opposition tavern was erected at an early day by Isaac Shaw a little above on the same street. This house was kept for many years by William Cooper, Sr., and became one of the best known stands in the county—so much so that the village was long well known as "Cooper's Corners." In later years this has become a tenement house. A third tavern, known as the Palmer House and near to the depot, was kept for a time, but long since closed, leaving the Campbell House the only one in the place. The first store was opened in 1827 by Cook & Pelton in the house since known as the Dr. Gray residence, across the street from the Cooper House. Among the later merchants have been Hooker & Gardner, A. Clark, Nathan Blackney, R. L. Blackmer, F. S. Royce, A. M. De Long, Ranney & Campbell, L. J. Nutting, and O. A. Mulkin. Orrin Clark and his sons Alfred and Julius opened a store one door above the Campbell House about 1858, where they continued for twenty-five years. Then for the next two years the store was conducted by Johnson & Bullock. Since 1885 it has been the firm of Johnson & Graves. In 1893 C. M. Garnett & Sons opened a store in the Crouse building. The postoffice was established about 1830 with William Cooper as postmaster, which office he held till after 1840. Later postmasters have been members of the Blackney and Clark families, and W. E. Bullock, J. M. Campbell, R. P. Johnson, and B. H. Graves. Dr. H. T. B. Gray was the first physician located in the place.

The Perrysburg Agricultural Works and Woodenware Manufactory were destroyed by fire in 1882 and the Sprague & Tichnor grist and lumber mills in 1883. The former were established about 1860 by Russell Briggs and after 1866 were operated many years by W. R. Briggs. After being burned they were soon rebuilt by Pelton Brothers and operated as a saw and shingle-mill, to which has since been added a planer and matcher and also a grape-basket manufactory. The establishment is now owned and operated by Warren Hall. The grist and feed-mill at Perrysburg was built in 1887 by Knapp & Campbell at a cost of $3,000. Since 1890 it has been run by Knapp & Pelton. It is operated by steam-power and is the only grist-mill in the south part of the town. East of the village, at an early day, was located a small tannery. Phineas Spencer also had a distillery and other settlers operated asheries while the forests were being cleared away.

Versailles is a pleasantly located village on the south bank of Cattaraugus creek, about five miles north of Perrysburg and six miles northwest of Gowanda. The stream here makes a rapid descent, affording good water-power for ordinary milling purposes. The village contains a postoffice, four stores, two church edifices, hotel, saw-mill, grist-mill, and a population of about 200. About 1835 a grist-mill was erected by Lee & Barker and was much patronized when water failed at other points. A second grist-mill was erected soon after by the Nortons, below the first mill and on the same race, but trouble sprang up between the two parties and the mill was never finished. It stood till 1872, when it was destroyed by fire. The first mill was destroyed by fire about 1858 while under the ownership of Norton & Green. Upon its site another grist-mill of large capacity was erected about 1859 by Slew & Popple. This, also, was burned about 1875. Soon afterward another was built on the same site by Saxe & Austin and sold to William Merrill. In 1887 the mill was again destroyed by fire. The site was then bought by Warren Hall, who rebuilt the mill and still continues to operate it. Several saw-mills and lumber manufactories were built and operated when lumber was plenty and in great demand, but all have ceased operations, save one known as the Hanford & Cook saw-mill, which yet does a small business.

The first store in Versailles was opened by Benjamin Rathbone, who began business about the time the first mills were built, and he carried on his trade in connection with the lumber business. Hamilton & Barker were among the early storekeepers and among the later ones have been Julius Horton, Norton & Slew, F. E. De Wolf, D. N. Parker, and H. Chapman. Those now in business are William & H. J. Merrill, E. Brown & Son, and Charles N. Ubel. The first public house in Versailles was kept by J. Sherman and since him have been the following landlords: Mr. Walker, George Tichnor, H. Swift, Mr. Palmer, Mr. Willey, Allen Parker, S. Hinds, and Charles Hinds, Jr. The postoffice was established about 1840, A. H. Barker being the first postmaster. Subsequent officials have been C. F. Norton, F. E. De Wolf, Henry Hugaboom, D. N. Parker, E. Brown, L. N. Bunce, and W. W. Merrill. About 1830 General Barker, of Fredonia, put up a tannery and began business. This tannery was afterward torn down and enlarged by R. Green, who ran it by steam and did a large business until burned out in 1860. In 1861 L. Palmer & Son erected a tannery in the southern part of the village and for a time did an extensive business, but ceased operations about 1887. Levi Palmer & Son are extensively engaged in gardening. They also operate large greenhouses.

West Perrysburg is a postoffice in the western part of the town, three-quarters of a mile from the Chautauqua county line, and was established October 8, 1891, with Ellen R. Hall as postmaster, who still holds the position.

In 1819, five years after the organization of the town, the Methodist Episcopal church set up her standard upon its soil. For years the church was without a meeting-house or parsonage for many miles around and religious services were held at private houses, in school houses and barns, and in groves. From 1819 to 1829 the circuit which included Perrysburg was very large and seems to have had no headquarters only as the ministers could arrange yearly conferences for themselves. From 1829 to 1849 Perrysburg belonged to the Forestville circuit, but from 1849 to the present time the town has constituted a circuit in and of itself. At times it has had as many as six preaching places; now it has but three: Perrysburg, West Perrysburg, and Versailles. At each of these places is a neat and comfortable house of worship and at Perrysburg is also a good parsonage. In 1849, according to the records of a quarterly meeting held in Perrysburg village, there were five classes in town, and the leaders of these were Charles Blackney, Benjamin Parkman, Isaac Dawley, George Kirkland, and John Waters. November 9, 1853, the Methodist Episcopal church of Perrysburg was legally incorporated. A frame church edifice was erected about this time at a cost of $1,200 and was dedicated by Presiding Elder W. F. Wilson on February 8, 1854. This has been subsequently repaired, will now seat 300 persons, and with the grounds, parsonage, etc., is valued at about $3,500. This society has thirty-three members and a Sunday school of sixty scholars. Rev. Miller Fording is pastor.

The Methodist Episcopal church of Versailles was organized January 26, 1842, with Philander Porter, Lester Wood, and Martin Lindsley as trustees. Uniting with the Baptists the two denominations erected a frame house of worship the same year, in which meetings were held until 1878, when their own present edifice was built at a cost of $2,500. It will seat 200 people and is valued, with the grounds, etc., at about $3,000. The society has twenty-one members under Rev. Miller Fording, of Perrysburg, as pastor. The Sunday school connected has thirty scholars.

The Methodist Episcopal church of West Perrysburg is the oldest body of this denomination in town. A class of eight or ten members was formed in 1822 and continued to hold services until December 19, 1851, when the "Rugg Society of the Methodist Episcopal church" was incorporated with Stephen R. Hall, C. A. Rugg, and John R. Dawley as trustees. In 1852 a frame edifice was erected on lot 38 which will seat 300 persons and is now valued, including grounds, etc., at about $1,800. Rev. Miller Fording is pastor. The Sunday school has forty scholars.

The following preachers have served the Perrysburg charge: In 1819, Robert C. Hatton and Benjamin P. Hill; 1820, John Summerville; 1821, Nathaniel Reeder and Ira Bronson; 1822, Richard Wright and Sylvester Cary; 1823, Parker Buell and Richard Wright; 1824, Josiah Keyes; 1825, Henry Knapp and John Scott; 1826, Job Wilson and John P. Kent; 1827, J. S. Barris and Zachariah Ragan; 1828, J. S. Barris and Samuel Ayers; 1829, James Gilmore and A. Plimpton; 1830, Daniel Preston and S. E. Babcock; 1831, John Robinson and Nelson Henry; 1832, J. K. Hallock and I. H. Tackitt; 1834, H. Luce and S. Gregg; 1835, L. Rodgers, I. H. Tackitt, and Darius Smith; 1836, J. Deming and Darius Smith; 1837, T. Goodwin and M. Hill; 1838, Samuel Gregg and H. J. Moore; 1839, T. Stowe and E. J. L. Baker; 1840, J. O. Rich, T. Stowe, and J. Flower; 1841, D. Smith and D. Pritchard; 1842, W. B. Lloyd; 1843-44, N. Norton; 1845, W. S. Warrallo and T. H. Cummings; 1846, J. Uncles and S. C. Churchill; 1847, A. Burgess and I. Blackford; 1848, J. E. Chapin and J. N. Henry; 1849, I. H. Tackitt; 1850-51, I. Scofield; 1852, R. L. Blackmer; 1853, Moses Elkins; 1854, A. Norton; 1855, J. Robinson; 1856, J. B. Hammond; 1857-58, S. N. Warner; 1859, E. Hull; 1860-61, Joseph Allen; 1862-63, W. W. Warner; 1864 65, J. R. Shearer; 1866-67, A. A. Horton; 1868, J. W. Davis; 1869-72, J. March; 1872-73, J. Shields; 1874-77, N. W. Jones; 1877, E. Brown; 1878, J. W. Smith; 1879, S. M. Clark; 1880-81, W. B. Holt; 1882, A. H. Bowers; 1883, A. S. Dobbs; 1884, J. C. Ridout; 1885-88, L. A. Chapin; 1888-89, W. Hollister; 1890-93, Miller Fording.

The Baptist church was legally organized at Versailles, November 19, 1821, by the election of Rufus Watson, Phineas Spencer, Benjamin Watterman, John Clark, and Dan Allen as trustees. By this act the society became the first church politic in Perrysburg and secured to themselves the forty acres of land known as lot 25, which the Holland Land Company had proposed to give to the first religious society legally organized in the town. The Methodists had preceded them two or more years, but had not become a body politic. Several years passed before a parsonage was built and the society received a regular pastor. The first was Rev. Sheldon N. Smith in 1838. Subsequent pastors have been Revs. D. Platt, Salmon Horton, M. T. Wadsward, T. T. Horton, Nathan Wood, J. C. Allison, and J. A. Pickard, the latter leaving about 1878. The society, having no church edifice, held their services in the Methodist churches and school houses. About 1878 their parsonage was destroyed by fire and as the membership of the church numbered but fifteen the land was soon after sold, the society disbanded, and the membership removed to Gowanda, joining the Baptist church of that place.

The First Congregational church of Versailles was incorporated February 3, 1846, and for a few years meetings were held in school houses. Its membership was small and the organization was maintained for only a brief period.

Andrew Bennett, a native of Dutchess county, came to Hanover, N. Y., soon after his marriage to Catharine Hiller, who died in Versailles aged eighty. His only son, John L., born June 13, 1837, married Caroline Toucey, Sept. 6, 1860. She was a daughter of John Toucey and was born in 1840. Children: Cozella, Luella, Ludelia, and Nettie. Mr. Bennett enlisted in 1862 in the 9th N. Y. Cav. and was discharged Feb. 4, 1863. He has resided in Versailles twenty-eight years. Ludelia Bennett married, Feb. 28, 1889, Adam Schmill. Nettie married Bartlett A. Press in Jan., 1889, and also resides in Versailles. John Toucey, a native of Connecticut, came to Perrysburg in 1823 and died in 1868. Children: Eunice, Hannah, Helen, Martin, Jane, Caroline, Franklin, Sylvia, Susan, Sarah, and Milton J.

Eldad Blackney came to Perrysburg and cleared a farm near the village. He married Sally Cross; children: Charles, William, Nathan, Lewis P., Asa, Eldad, Jr., Belinda, Caroline, Julia, Sally, Sarah, Esther, Clarissa, and Delia.

Lewis P. Blackney was born in New Lebanon, N. Y., May 30, 1811, and came here at the age of eleven. July 14, 1835, he married Catharine, daughter of Isaac and Abigail Rugg. She was born Jan. 28, 1814, and died Jan. 18, 1822. Children: William W., Oscar C., Maryette G., Julia M., Orlina A., Orlando L., Aurelia R., Charles O., and Lillian C. Charles O. Blackney married Carrie, daughter of William and Alice (Knapp) Sanders, and is a farmer on the Isaac Rugg farm. Maryette G. married Warren R. Hall, son of John E. and Jane (Rose) Hall. He was born Feb. 18, 1845, and is a farmer near "Rugtown."

Ebenezer Blake, son of John, came to Concord, N. Y., in 1830 and subsequently removed to Orleans county, where he died. He was present as a musician at the hanging in Buffalo of the three Thayers, who murdered a man in 1825 because of a debt he owed them. His wife was Sophronia Griswold. Their son Harry, born Jan. 26, 1835, married, July 24, 1860, Jennie L. Crumb, who died Oct. 17, 1875. Julius Crumb, her father, married Cornelia Strickland on April 22, 1832. Mr. Blake's second wife is Martha J. Allen. His children are Addison, Ella L., Frank D., and Le Verne C. Addison died July 5, 1889.

Nathaniel Blasdell, born in Vermont, came to Dayton in 1818 and cleared a farm at what is now Markham, where he died. He married Sarah Josly; children: John, William, Nathaniel, David J., Sarah, Abigail, Mercy, Lydia, and Caroline. David J. Blasdell was born in Milton, Vt., Dec. 16, 1804, and came to Dayton with his parents. He subsequently removed to Perrysburg, where he died March 4, 1875. He married Lucinda Allen, of Gowanda, Jan. 15, 1826; children: Dan A., Lewis N., Homer J., Morris C., Milton N., Herman N., and Esther M. His widow lives on the homestead in this town.

Hugh Campbell, son of William, was born in Albany, N. Y., and came to Perrysburg about 1816, where he cleared what is now the Hurd farm. At the time of his arrival he had eight children: Chancellor, Rice, Walter, Colin, Susan, Emma, Charlotte, and Janette. He was prominent in the early settlement, served as justice of the peace several years, and died in 1874. He cleared two other farms in Cattaraugus county and another one still in Michigan. Chancellor Campbell, born Aug. 28, 1810, married Ann, daughter of Russell Briggs, who died Feb. 18, 1884. Children: Ellen, Frank, Eliza, James, and James M. The latter was born Sept. 2, 1845, and May 4, 1869, married Minerva, daughter of Simon and Martha Francis; children: Clara A., Fanny E., and Helen M. He is a farmer near the village.

Frank Campbell was born Feb. 14, 1838. June 20, 1860, he married Caroline M., daughter of John and Jessie Vosburg. She was born Aug. 10, 1840. Children: Jennie, Charles W., Arthur J., and Clarence H. Aug. 8, 1861, he enlisted in Co. H, 44th N. Y. Vols., was discharged Oct. 11, 1864, and is now a pensioner. His paternal ancestor, Hugh Campbell, participated in the battle of Sacket's Harbor in the War of 1812.

William Cooper was born in Stillwater, N. Y., Dec. 8, 1793, and came to Perrysburg in 1817, settling on what is now known as the Campbell farm near the village. He was a prominent man in the new town and represented it five years on the Board of Supervisors. Children: William, James, Robert, Benjamin, Peter, Hannah, Sarah, and Nancy. He died Dec. 31, 1872. He founded the first district school in town and was influential in early religious affairs.

the remainder of his life. After Mr. Woodin located in Perrysburg he engaged in dealing in butter and cheese, and it is said of him that he bought more cheese and handled more money at that time than any other man in the county. He was first a Whig and later a staunch Republican. He served as assessor and justice of the peace many years, but when his party nominated him assemblyman he refused to accept. Mr. Woodin died Dec. 12, 1875. Mrs. Woodin survives him and resides in the village of Dayton.

Homer E. Woodin, son of William and Abi (Derby) Woodin and grandson of Homer, was born in Otto, July 8, 1860. Feb. 23, 1877, he married a daughter of Elijah Hawkins, of Persia; children: Inez M., born Nov. 23, 1879, died Oct. 16, 1890, and Homer E., born Dec. 27, 1889. He is a farmer on the Vosburg farm, where he has lived fifteen years. Elijah Hawkins was born in Vermont, Nov. 10, 1815, and died Jan. 9, 1878. His wife, Roxana Ackley, was born in Persia, Sept. 27, 1828.

Charles Zimmerman, son of Michael, married, in Denmark, Europe, Mary, daughter of John Mathias Hink, a distiller and brewer. They came to America in 1854 and to Perrysburg in 1881, where he died Sept. 20, 1872. Children: Fred, Charles, Amelia, and Henrietta. Fred Zimmerman married Amelia Durand and has children Mamie, Laura, and Bessie. Henrietta is a talented musician and Fred is musical director in the Girard avenue theater, Philadelphia. Charles also holds a similar position in a traveling troupe.

CHAPTER XLII.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF PERSIA.

PERSIA lies in the northwest part of the county and covers an area of 13,296 acres. It is irregular in form and embraces some of the most rugged uplands in northwestern Cattaraugus. Its east and north boundary lines are washed by the waters of the south branch and the main stream of the Cattaraugus, into which flow several small tributaries, which afford excellent drainage. There are a number of good mill sites, which in early days were extensively and profitably utilized. The soil of the town is composed mainly of clay and gravelly or sandy loam and is very fertile. Many of the elevations attain a height of 600 feet above Lake Erie, and in several localities the scenery is picturesque, even romantic.

The dense forests long afforded lucrative employment to the early settlers. Mills were erected and manufacturing was carried on quite profitably until the warm rays of the sun could penetrate the soil and aid in converting it into cultivated fields. Agriculture then engaged the attention of the inhabitants and has ever since been their chief industry. Dairying in recent years has developed into an important branch of the average farmer's occupation. The business of raising hops was also once attempted.

The early settlement of the town is embraced in the following posthumous narrative prepared expressly for this chapter by the late Hon. William H. Stuart, of Gowanda:

The historical and oriental name by which the town of Persia is known was given it more than twenty-five years after its dense forests had been penetrated and the sun allowed to shine upon its virgin soil. Prior to 1817 a vast region of land now embraced in other towns of Cattaraugus county was known by the town name first as Olean, next as Perry, and subsequently as Perrysburg, and remained unchanged until 1835, when Luther Allen, Chester Howe, Albert G. Burke, Truman Edwards, Ralph Johnson, Amasa L. Chaffee, and others joined in a petition to the Board of Supervisors for a division of Perrysburg into two or more towns. The result was a sub-division on February 7th erecting two new towns (Dayton and Persia) and leaving the mother town of Perrysburg to yet rejoice in her honored historic name, with new boundaries, all of which have remained unchanged until the present day. Fifty-five years have made their annual circuit since this new-born town was christened with a name so suggestive of antiquated opulence; and as all of those above mentioned who took part in the transaction have long since been gathered to the home of their fathers I have made diligent search for the name of the happy god-father, and have been thus far unable to locate him. In 1810 Turner Aldrich, with a family of sons and daughters, came from Connecticut and took up 707 acres of land covering both sides of Cattaraugus creek, comprising a large portion of the present village of Gowanda. He built a log house on the east side of the creek and commenced to chop and clear the land for a home. Soon after, Ahaz Allen came from Lancaster, Erie county, with a view of buying lands on the creek for milling purposes, and finding the Aldriches just ahead of him he continued his way a mile farther up and located 300 acres of land covering both sides of the creek at Hidi.

In those years, when the whole country was an unbroken wilderness, it was difficult to say which was the best location for a new comer to settle upon with a view of making it his permanent home. The broad flats of Zoar, with their rich soil and magnificent timber, offered grand inducements to the pioneer to go there and locate, and in company with Peter Pratt, a neighbor of his in Lancaster, Mr. Allen made his first pitch in Zoar, where he lived a year or two prior to his coming to Persia. Not finding the opportunities so propitious as anticipated for damming the Cattaraugus with any degree of safety he concluded to remove, soon as practicable, down below where the shore and bed of the stream were rock-bound, and where a more permanent foundation for dams and mills were offered to the pioneer, whose ambition was to utilize the power that nature had furnished for the conversion of those magnificent pines, oaks, black-walnuts, hemlocks, and other timber that so densely covered the hills and valleys of the Cattaraugus creek at this point into lumber. There was a man by the name of John Russel living in Concord (Willink at that time) whom he engaged to go down and erect a log house and remain in it until the following spring, when, with his wife and babe, less than a year old, he would come to take possession and relieve him of further duties. Accordingly in May, 1812, Mr. Allen with his wife and infant son in her arms embarked in a canoe at the head of the flats in Zoar, and sailed down with the current of the stream to the mansion prepared for him by Mr. Russel at Hidi, where they arrived in safety after a few hours' voyage down the turbulent Cattaraugus. Mr. Russel received them with hearty congratulations on their safe arrival, and for the first time a white family had taken up their residence in what is now the town of Persia.

John Russel continued to work for Mr. Allen that year, and together they made quite an opening on the flats around their humble cabin. But, as war had been declared between the United States and Great Britain, and hostilities already commenced upon the border, a draft was made by the provost-marshal upon all the able-bodied men of the State. Mr. Allen was a victim to the wheel of fortune upon its first turn, and was drafted as a militiaman in the service of his country. They were alone in the woods, surrounded by the perils of life among wild beasts and Indians of questionable friendship in close proximity, and their only white neighbor more than a mile below on the other side of the creek. Mrs. Allen was but nineteen years old and her oldest son, Norman, was not far from one year. Under these circumstances Mr. Allen concluded that his duty was to protect his wife and child from harm first, and then give to his country all the aid possible in defence of her maritime rights upon the high seas and the maintenance of our God-given nationality. Mr. Russel had thus far been of valuable service to him, and fully comprehending the dilemma in which Mr. Allen was placed he proffered his service as a substitute for a small consideration. Mr. Allen thanked him for his kind offer and engaged him to take his place in the ranks of the soldiers by giving him twice the amount of his proposition. He was to report for duty at Canandaigua, for which place he soon left, and was there sworn into service and was forever thereafter lost sight of by Mr. Allen, as he never returned or was heard of more.

In 1814 Thomas and Edwin Farnsworth came from the central part of the State and took up the farm lying between the Allen and Aldrich purchase, upon which they built a log house, which was the first house erected in the original boundary of Lodi on the Cattaraugus county side of the creek; it stood a little south of the old red house subsequently built by Thomas Farnsworth, in which he raised a large family, and when ripe in years breathed his last within the precinct of those walls, in which the greater part of his life had been spent. About this time Col. Benjamin Waterman came from Vermont and took up the land lying north and west of the Aldrich purchase, on the flats, a part of which are now embraced in the corporate lines of the village, and built a double log house near to where Thatcher brook empties into Cattaraugus creek. He built a stockade or corral around his house as a safeguard for his hogs, cattle, and sheep at night against the ravages of wild beasts that infested these forests in large numbers and were continually committing depredations upon the hog-pens and sheep-folds of the first settlers. Mr. Waterman's family consisted of a wife, three daughters, and one son, all small children. Other children were born to them and grew to manhood and womanhood, all of whom have died or moved away, except one, the relict of the late S. C. Springer, who yet remains among us an old lady of over eighty years.

There are incidents in the history of individuals which, if not well understood, sometimes are magnified and perverted into falsehood by designing persons whereby personal gain is looked for as a reward for their perfidy. Such a case occurred in 1823, when two persons in this vicinity were nominated for member of Assembly, one by the Democratic party, the other by the Whigs. The life and history of both individuals are so closely interwoven with Gowanda that nothing but an impartial record should go down to posterity with truth exalted and falsehood disproved. Therefore I will nothing extenuate, but give facts based upon my own knowledge as formed after thorough investigation. It was currently circulated by the Democrats of that campaign that Col. Benjamin Waterman was the party who surrendered James Bird to the provost-marshal at Buffalo in 1814 and received a reward which the government authorities had offered for his capture as a deserter from the service at Erie, Pa. It was said that he was taken to Erie, tried by court-marshal, found guilty, and shot that fall, greatly lamented by all who knew him. There was an old song written at that time entitled "James Bird," which was very popular and so pathetic that it reached the hearts of all who heard it, and brought down the vengeance and ire upon his supposed deliverer for paltry gain. This song was published and circulated by an insurance company four or five years ago, and in the circular was an extract of a letter written by John Henry, who said that he sat up with Colonel Waterman the night of his death, and after the old man had breathed his last he felt a great relief of mind, knowing as he did that the deceased was the person who was responsible for the death of the gallant James Bird, unjustly shot for desertion at Erie, Pa. I have talked with many people about the guilt or innocence of the accused and have invariably found public opinion divided on the subject with not a scintilla of evidence other than hearsay to substantiate the unjust charge made against our late townsman. But like other falsehoods that have been repeated until believed to be true by credulous and unthinking people, this story had its origin in a circumstance which occurred in the Waterman family in the first years of their advent into this place. There was a young man by the name of Gray, an acquaintance of the family in Vermont, who followed them here and hired out to work for Colonel Waterman on the farm. He continued there until the fall of the year, when all of a sudden he came up missing. His whereabouts were unknown to the family, and as he had never manifested dissatisfaction or a disposition to leave his strange actions were as much of a mystery to them as to others, who freely made comments and offered suggestions on the probable cause of his leaving. It was ascertained that Mr. Gray had received no compensation for his service, which led people to believe that there was a design on the part of Colonel Waterman to get rid of him, and when the sad event of James Bird's death reached here the wagging tongue of gossip circulated the story that Gray was the assumed name of Bird, who had come to escape the vigilance of martial law and the eye of detection of the officers ever on the alert for deserters. Circumstances corroborated the truth of the report, and for three years it was veritably believed and passed upon as a current fact, Mr. Waterman's statement to the contrary notwithstanding. Three years thereafter, on a beautiful summer's day, the illusion was dispelled by Mr. Gray returning as unexpectedly as he had left. The news of his return spread rapidly among the neighbors, and he was not infrequently interviewed on the subject of what caused him to leave so uncerimoniously three years before, but he refused to inform his interlocutors of the whys and wherefores of the case, which he said did not belong to the public, and was only a private affair between him and one of the older members of the family. But the fiat had gone forth, and the foul aspersions on the good name of Mr. Waterman had become so deep rooted that even positive proof of his innocence was not sufficient to obliterate the cloud upon his character which he carried with him to his dying day.

Colonel Waterman was a leader of men in those days and led an active life among the people. In addition to chopping and clearing his land he kept the first tavern in the place, which was then only known as Perrysburg. Solomon Dunham built the first hotel at the head of Main street in 1824. It was burned to ashes in 1845. The Albro family owned and occupied the house when burned. The first line of stages between Aldrich Mills and Buffalo was established by Col. Benjamin Waterman. His route for the first few years was by Hidi, where the first bridge across Cattaraugus creek was built and remained until 1830, four years after the main bridge at Lodi was completed. The Hidi bridge was erected in 1816 and remained standing until condemned as unsafe and torn down in 1830, never to be rebuilt. In 1814 Mr. Allen employed help and dug the first race at Hidi and built the first dam on Cattaraugus creek. He little knew the element he had to combat, when the stream was swollen to full banks and swept down with irresistible force at the rate of eight or ten miles an hour. Consequently the labor on his dam, which occupied nearly three months, was swept away in the fall freshet. Profiting by the experience of his first attempt, the following year he built another dam, the model of which was the conception of his own masterly brain. In this structure the elements found their match and were held in abeyance from that year until now (1893). Most of the original timbers are still extant and form the barrier that turns the tide which propels the machinery on the race below. Mr. Allen said they were digging the mill-race at the time of the bombardment of Fort Erie and could distinctly hear the booming of the cannon each day—Aug. 15, 16, and 17, 1814, when the fort capitulated and was blown up. Not knowing the result of the conflict they were in dread suspense for more than a week, when an Indian from the reservation who was there gave them full particulars of the fight.

While the Indians were friendly and never molested the white settlers, yet nearly every day some of them might be seen lingering around and watching with distrustful eyes the encroachment of civilization that would eventually despoil them of their best hunting grounds. The dense forests bordering on Cattaraugus creek were prolific of all kinds of wild game, and within sixty rods from the head of the race was a deer-lick, where, in the evening, the timid deer would come to slake their thirst and occasionally one paid the forfeit with his life for his boldness. Ox-teams were indispensable to the pioneer, and Mr. Allen had provided himself with two heavy yoke of oxen which he purchased in Clarence hollow, Erie county. He improvised a slip from the crotch of a tree and at the Lancaster mill bought four bags of corn meal and one of wheat flour, and hauled them through the woods (most of the way by marked trees) to his new house on the Cattaraugus. The first year (1812) he chopped and cleared about ten acres of land, which he planted to corn and potatoes the next season. I have often heard him say that this was the heaviest crop he ever saw grow upon the same amount of land. But the coons and bears were destructive neighbors, as they made sad depredations on the outskirts adjoining the forest. One night during the following winter a large bear took from the pen a hog which weighed over 100 pounds and made off with him as if he were a pigmy. The hog objected to this unceremonious intrusion and squealed as hogs never squealed before, and aroused the men, who immediately went to the rescue. The men and dogs pressed so hard upon him that he was compelled to drop his victim and hasten to his seclusion, but the hog was so scared by the bear's rough handling that on the following day they cut his throat and dressed him for the family's use. On the same day the men improvised a dead-fall by a heavy log raised to an angle of about a quarter-pitch and held up by a figure four, and bated with the lungs and entrails of the hog. The trap was set at the upper edge of the flats on the trail of the bear the night before. Bruin stopped to regale himself that night and, to his surprise, felt something drop that held him in its deadly embrace until life was extinct. He proved to be a large one and weighed over 300 pounds. They were not troubled thereafter in this immediate vicinity with bears. Wolves occasionally approached the clearing at night and raised a dismal howl, but their timidity (unless very hungry) prevented them from a near approach to the cabin of the settler.

I will here relate an incident of the killing of the last wolf seen in this town. In Dec., 1846, I was taking Mrs. N. H. Allen to her father's home three miles south. It was about nine o'clock A.M. and we had nearly reached the top of the hill on the road from Hidi, when a large wolf came from the woods below and crossed the road not over ten rods in front of us. I put my horses to their best speed to the place of destination and returned speedily home to inform of what I had seen. Three Nimrods, N. H., T. P., and Ahaz Allen, Jr., took their rifles and started in immediate pursuit. The track was fresh and they had no trouble in following the wolf through Dayton until they reached the Conewango swamp, where they were obliged to leave him for the night. The youngest two of the party abandoned the chase, but N. H., more plucky than the rest, went to the home of Aras Nash, living near by, father of Colonel Nash, of Little Valley, and put up for the night. Mr. Nash was an old hunter and joined Mr. Allen next morning. They took the track which they left the night before, and followed on until they found where he had regaled himself on some small animal. They pressed forward with renewed courage, and before night had the pleasure of seeing him in the distance, making from them on a slow gallop, seemingly tired from being followed so closely. That night they took refuge in a farm house near by, but at daylight were again on his track, and soon came upon the spot where he, too, had accepted rest. Throughout the day his footprints were so visible in the snow that they could make rapid progress, which kept the wolf continually on the alert to avoid them, and allowed of no opportunity for him to forage in quest of something to appease his growing appetite. In this way they followed him from Monday until Friday, when they came suddenly upon him, and before he could make his escape a ball from Mr. Nash's unerring rifle brought him down. As nothing had been heard of Mr. Allen since leaving home a great anxiety prevailed as to his whereabouts. But on Saturday Allen and Nash arrived in Lodi, bringing with them the carcass of a large wolf, the trophy of their successful chase, and the villagers gathered around and congratulated them on their prowess and capture of this wily enemy of the sheep-fold. The bounty paid for wolf scalps at that time was $25 or $30, which was awarded them.

When the saw-mill was completed at Hidi it was run day and night to supply the demand for lumber. This was the head-center of business, and others came in with a view to the building up of a village. Achilles Akin established the first blacksmith shop and for a few years did a thriving business. Dan Allen, brother of Ahaz, but two years his senior, came from Cayuga county and settled at Hidi in 1816. His family consisted of a wife and six children. They went into a log house just below where the mill now stands. The first frame house erected in Persia was built the previous year and is yet regarded as a comfortable residence. It stands on the hill on the road west of Hidi and is now owned by Seler Snyder. Ahaz Allen built this house and lived in it until 1820, when he gave a deed conveying the same and about 100 acres of land to his brother Dan as a settlement of co-partnership between them.

Uncle Dan, as he was familiarly called by everybody in this vicinity, lived and raised thirteen sons and daughters in this domicile. Six or seven of the youngest were born there and seven of the girls were married in this house, and not until 1842 had death invaded the sanctity of those premises, when Laura, their eighth child, sickened and died aged twenty years. The next death occurred in 1853, when the venerable father, ripe in years, fell before the sickle of the grim reaper and was buried in the Gowanda Cemetery on Buffalo street. For many years Uncle Dan kept tavern and entertained travelers in this house, and long before Phoenix Lodge of Free Masons was thought of the fraternity held secret conclave within its walls. The old Free Masons of the surrounding country met here on stipulated occasions and held their lodge meetings, after which a banquet followed of the most convivial character. In 1819 Uncle Dan Allen was elected supervisor of Perrysburg, which was one of the first towns of Cattaraugus county at that time and embraced a large area of territory since made into other towns, one of which is Persia. Phineas Spencer was appointed one of three commissioners to build the first county clerk's office at Ellicottville in 1823 and the same year was elected member of Assembly for this county. On Sept. 15, 1813, a new comer was announced at Hidi and welcomed to the family of Ahaz Allen as the first child born of white parents in Perrysburg or Persia. She was christened Caroline and lived to be twenty-three years of age, when consumption terminated the life of one beloved by all who knew her.

Ichabod Harding and Asahel Camp settled at Hidi in 1819; two years later they established the first wool-carding and cloth-dressing business in this vicinity. This industry was indispensable to the farmers, who raised sheep and took their wool to the carding machine and had it converted into rolls, from which the good housewife and daughters spun it into yarn and wove it into flannel on a hand loom, after which it was sent to the cloth-dresser, fullled, colored, knapped, sheared, and pressed, and then was called fullled cloth and ready to be made into the wearing apparel of the family. Every household of the farmer had its spinning wheel and some of them had two or three. It will be remembered that as late as 1843 full-cloth was regarded as legal tender for services performed by the day laborer, and there are those among us yet living who tell of chopping cord-wood in the center of Gowanda for twenty-five cents per cord and taking full-cloth at $1 per yard for their pay.

Nathaniel Whitcomb, one of the most eccentric characters and well known in this vicinity until a few years since, came to Hidi in 1817 from Vermont, the place of his birth. He engaged his services to Dan Allen and served him faithfully for over ten years (like Jacob of old), having in view one of his daughters, whom he hoped to win by merit of incessant toil and frugality to become his wife, but the girl could not see it in that way and he remained a bachelor until 1832, when he married Jane Darby, with whom he lived about twenty-five years, when death took her from him, but leaving to him two daughters and a son. They had buried two children and when his wife died he had three marble slabs placed at the head of their graves. Upon that commemorating his wife was this epitaph: "Father and mother, the sun shines bright and clear out of Gen. George Washington's fog; we 'v gained our improvements; oh, my God, how little we reverence him." Carved upon the top of one is a lamb reposing in death; epitaph: "The lamb that was slain now lives again to intercede for me." Upon the other is carved a dove; the epitaph underneath is: "My love, my dove, is taken away from this world's hope and fear, and left her father in a hell of a cheer." These strange, uncouth epitaphs are purely characteristic of the author and only appreciable by those who knew him. He lived to be ninety-three years of age and died in Hidi on the 18th of June, 1884. It was his request that his remains be not taken to any church to be exhibited nor any minister preach hell or damnation over him when dead, for he had enough of that when living. He had been ground down and rubbed hard by a set of scofferous cusses all his life; and as evidence of his appreciation of them he would have for a monument at the head of his grave a grindstone with about half its width in the ground and on the upper rim these words engraved in plain letters: "Grind on, ye cusses." In justice to his memory I think some of his friends ought to carry out his wish, as such a memento would convey to future generations the unique characteristics of one of the pioneers of Persia.

In 1817 Jacob Balcom with a family of sons and daughters came to Hidi and the next year moved onto the land now known as Darby flats, two miles above on Cattaraugus creek, where the south branch empties into the main stream. There were evidences that civilization had preceded them, as they found apple trees growing there planted by unknown hands years before. Some of those trees yet remain standing and have acquired a growth of nine feet in circumference around the trunk. The road into Otto via Little's mills was cut through the breakers by Ahaz Allen in 1830. Prior to that time there was a path from Darby flats after fording the south branch up the breakers, where pedestrians in the early settlement found their way into East Otto and Ashford. In the fall of 1826 Thomas Dutton, a resident of Lodi, passing this way with the view of going to Ashford, was drowned. The next spring his remains were found among the floodwood at the head of a small island some 100 rods below. The coroner, Ahaz Allen, held an inquest on the body, but the remains were so badly decomposed that it was impossible to determine whether he came to his death by violence or by accidental drowning. When he left Lodi he had $400 on his person and a silver watch, and as neither money nor watch were found with him it was the prevailing opinion that he met his death by the hand of some unknown assassin. He was buried on the upper end of the flats near the south branch, where a rude stone slab marks the spot where his ashes repose, and where picnickers from the village resort every year and hold high carnival. The Balcoms sold out to Nathaniel Whitcomb and moved west in 1834.

There is a tract of land embracing about 2,000 acres known as "Point Peter." It is bounded on the east by the south branch and main body of Cattaraugus creek and on the west by the Point Peter brook, which empties into the main stream (half a mile from Hidi) from a narrow gorge with high rock cliffs on either side, which rise to a hundred feet and form a narrow barrier between the two streams. In the state of primitive nature this was one of the most picturesque scenes known in the country, and sixty years ago was a favorite resort for young men and maidens of the village to while away the pleasant hours of a summer's day 'neath the evergreen foliage of the hemlock, which the sun's warm rays never dared to penetrate. It has often been asked, and never been answered of late, by whom or what was the origin of this uncouth name, "Point Peter," given to this part of the town. There are few now living who can vouch for the truth of what I write on this subject. No white man had explored this unknown region until six months after Mr. Allen settled at Hidi. At that time a young man named Peter worked for him. Unlike his employer he had some religious scruples against working on the Sabbath; therefore, while all the others put in their time without regard to a day of rest, he would spend Sundays in reading and rambling around the vicinity. It was on one of these Sundays that he wandered up the hill and followed along the top of the bank until he reached the high declivity separating the two streams, the one running east and the other west with only this narrow barrier between, rising on either side to a hundred feet above the water. He followed along this dizzy height and found an elbow where the brook struck the rocks and turned to a right angle, and flowed on smooth rock along the west side and then around the projecting angle, and to return on the east side, where it empties into Cattaraugus creek. By following on a few rods farther he found the passage narrowed to about a foot in width at the summit, with 100 feet at the base, where the brook rippled on either side and made him feel that one misstep on either side would send him from time to eternity. When he returned at night and told of his wonderful discovery all parties agreed that his name should be perpetuated as an explorer, and from that day to this it has been called "Point Peter." The hands of the mound builders or those of some pre-historic race were visible just above on a level plateau of land, where an intrenchment had been thrown up in the shape of a horseshoe surrounding three or four acres of land with the opening on the breakers 200 feet above Cattaraugus creek. The trench surrounding this fort was from four to six feet deep, with the dirt thrown upon the inside, which had the appearance of quite a formidable barrier against the enemy when completed. That the structure was over a thousand years old is proven by the growth of trees standing upon the ridge where they had grown after the ground had been thrown up. Pine trees four feet through grew upon these ramparts when the pioneer commenced the work of subjugation, and after 70 years of plowing and harrowing scarcely a trace of the old fort is seen.

In 1830 a road was made following the creek from Hidi to the hill, where it ascended to where the highway descends and crosses Point Peter brook, and thence to where it crosses the south branch into Otto. Prior to that period the only road to and from that region of country crossed the gulf nearly half a mile south from the corner where the cheese factory now stands. A few years later a new school house was built at the top of the hill on the road to Point Peter. It was the seat of learning for all the farmers living three miles south and also for all the families of Hidi and vicinity. From this little red school house emanated business and professional men who have made their mark in the world and who would do honor to the best college in the land. The school district was divided and the old red school house sold and metamorphosed into a dwelling some forty years ago.

In those years the people were more frugal of time than in the present age and compelled the school teachers to work at least five days and a half each week in the school room. Therefore it was optional with the teachers whether they closed the school Saturday at noon or kept all day and closed the next week on Friday evening. In 1818 there was a sufficient number of families settled at Hidi to demand a teacher for the instruction of the children. Therefore Enoch Frye, of Concord, was engaged, and is credited with teaching the first school in the town of Persia. There was an itinerant minister of the Freewill Baptist persuasion by the name of Elnathan Finch who held religious service from house to house as early as 1815 and a few years thereafter. After the old red school house was built meetings were held in it as long as it remained a school building, and all religious denominations were represented here by their ministers occasionally, and in the fall of 1840 a Mormon preacher held a series of meetings here with a view of making proselytes to his faith and join them at Kirtland, Ohio. There was quite a settlement of Mormons in Dayton, headed by a man named Nickerson, who was instrumental in having their prophets, Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and Brigham Young, hold a series of meetings in the old school house which stood on Buffalo street where the Straub carriage factory now stands. They held their meetings evenings for a week, but made no converts. The citizens complained that they were allowed to preach their absurd doctrine in their midst, and some people went so far as to preach tar and feathers and other means of driving them from the place. This occurred in 1834 or 1835.

As late as 1820 there were but three log buildings west of the Cattaraugus creek, below Hidi—one built by Merrill Aldrich stood down on Water street below the present Riverside House; Col. Benjamin Waterman's farther down the creek; and Thomas Farnsworth's up the creek near where the railroad bridge crosses. On the east side was Turner Aldrich, Sr., who came here in 1810 and located lands covering both sides of the stream to the extent of 707 acres. He had three sons and three daughters, and most of them grown to maturity. His first clearing was made where the old Eagle tavern now stands. There was an indiscriminate slaughter made of the timber in order that the sun and showers might penetrate the soil and vegetate the cereals necessary for their sustenance. The following year a bountiful crop of corn and potatoes was the reward of their first year's labor. Mr. Aldrich conceived the idea of building a saw-mill somewhere upon his premises as a means of working up the valuable timber into lumber and supply the growing demand for it. His ideas were carried out and a saw-mill built nearly opposite the Eagle tavern, and the waters of the Grannis brook carried in troughs made of basswood logs hollowed out for the purpose and laid along on the top of the ground to the mill. It was a primitive affair and did not realize the expectation of the projector, as only in freshets was there sufficient water to propel it at all. An eccentric character of those times described the mill as a "demnition queer thing." He said on turning the water on the wheel it would start up, splash the saw-gate up and down three or four times, and then stop stock still. After the water had been replenished it would be repeated until after an incredible long period it would saw through the log. "It was enough to try the patience of Job," said the narrator, "and in its girations seem to say 'Quaker, Quaker, Quaker, damn ye.'" Those words were proverbial for many years among the old settlers, but have become obsolete and only remembered by the venerable George Southwick, now in his eighty-third year.

A growing necessity finally compelled the Aldriches to sell a part of their lands to others of progressive spirit. In those days steam was an unknown agency, but where nature had formed a good water-power the artisan and mechanic hastened to apply their skill in the building of wheels to propel the machinery of the various industries. The rapidly flowing Cattaraugus was regarded as the best locality for the building of mills, factories, and foundries west of the Genesee river at Rochester, and hence the early commencement at this place. For the first ten or fifteen years little progress was made other than preparing the way for those of more enterprise that were to follow. And not until 1823, when Joseph and Ralph Plumb came here and established themselves in business, was anything done to rival the flourishing little hamlet one mile above, where were then a saw-mill, a grist-mill, and a wool-carding and cloth-dressing factory in full operation. The Aldriches had put up a grist-mill on the present site of the Romer Brothers' axe factory, but on account of a poor dam and small race it did not supply the demands of the public, and another drawback was the want of a bridge across the creek that the farmers of Dayton and Perrysburg might avail themselves of milling privileges on the other side of the stream. A man named Barto was employed and built the first bridge across the creek at Aldrich Mills. It was a good, substantial structure of the kind with an abutment in the center to support the two spans of fifty feet each, and stood about six rods above the present bridge. There was a crib built around the center abutment and filled up with stone to insure its safety, but the next spring when the ice in the creek moved out in a freshet it arose so high and came down with such velocity that the bridge was but a pigmy to resist its irresistible force. As near as I can ascertain that bridge was built in 1820 and, however much was the necessity, there was no talk of repeating the experiment until one could be made to reach across with a single span and thereby obviate all danger from high water, ice, or drift-wood. In April, 1826, the Legislature passed an act authorizing a few of the towns of Cattaraugus and Erie counties to erect a bridge across Cattaraugus creek at Lodi, chargeable to the taxable property of said towns, and Phineas Spencer, Ralph Plumb, and Benjamin Waterman were appointed commissioners to carry the same into effect. In July of that year these commissioners entered into a contract with Ahaz Allen and Edwin Farnsworth to build the bridge and have it completed by the first of January, 1827.

The architects of the plan were Brown, Sturdevant & Marvin; the master mechanics were Henry Classon and Sylvanus Parkinson. The contract called for abutments on each side of the creek to be composed of white-oak timber, flattened and dovetailed together at the end, and thirty feet face on the creek. The bridge had two archways, one on each side of the center arch, and the whole to be covered, shingled, and sided up with pine clapboards. The approaches were to be filled with stone, and when accepted by the commissioners the contracting parties were to receive $1,200 as full compensation. While the work of building was in progress the commissioners changed the plan of the abutments from wood to stone, for which they agreed to use their influence to have the Boards of Supervisors of the two counties raise $300 extra. The contractors allowed the change to be made, but they never received a dollar over and above the $1,200 in the original contract for their work. The bridge was the pride of Lodi and admired by all who passed through it for years. I well remember the first time I crossed it fifty-three years ago. I looked upon it with wonder and pronounced it the grandest bridge I had ever seen. A duplicate of that structure as turned over to the commissioners when completed could not be erected today for much less if any than $10,000. Then the hills and valleys were covered with a magnificent growth of pine, oak, whitewood, black walnut, cherry, hemlock, and other hardwoods. Men of stout hearts and willing hands were ready to work for a mere pittance compared with the price of labor today—to chop, drive ox-teams, and do common manual labor from daylight in the morning until dark at night for from $6 to $8 a month and the best mechanics for from four to six shillings per day.

It was said of Ahaz Allen that he never engaged in any undertaking but one which he did not accomplish. Old John Thatcher used to relate a story of him which was characteristic of his indomitable will power. There was a scarcity of potatoes in this vicinity one spring and Thatcher proposed to Uncle Ahaz that they go up into Zoar and buy a canoe-load and float down the stream with them to Hidi. They succeeded among the Fries and Pratts in getting a canoe and filling it as full as practicable for safety with potatoes. They both stepped in, Uncle Ahaz took the paddle and stern as commander, and Thatcher as passenger, seated amidship. They glided smoothly along until they got down to General Hill's tavern, when they disembarked and were welcomed by the general, who was a very courteous host and a good conversationalist. They thought it would not be courteous to "throw a stone into the bar," as was said of those stopping at taverns without taking a drink, and so they took two a piece and paid the general a shilling and started to leave, but the general cried out: "Hold on, boys, now for 'Auld Lang Syne'; take a drink with me." They took another drink and departed with a hearty God-speed from the general. The balance of the voyage was through more turbulent waters, but their courage was heightened by their visit with the general and so they pursued their journey fearlessly and with safety until they struck a narrow gorge, where the waters rushed down with a breakneck speed into a deep eddy. A tree at this point had partly careened over and with its limbs swept the rushing tide. Coming upon it so suddenly there was no way of avoiding it, and so they laid as low as possible, hoping the limbs would bend and let them pass under. But the limbs refused to bend, and they were the next minute turned bottom-side up, their potatoes given to the fish, and the two men struggling to save themselves. Thatcher was a good swimmer and got out all right, and looked around for Ahaz. "At first I did not see him," says Thatcher, "but in a few seconds I looked a little below and saw him crawling out on all fours. He held the paddle in a firm grip, and when he had straightened up he said: 'Well, John, I have saved so much, what have you done?' 'Barely saved myself,' I replied, 'but the canoe and the potatoes have gone to the devil and we are in a pretty fix to go back to our families without any.' 'Yes, yes, John, I understand all about that, but I don't care a cuss for the canoe nor the potatoes, and what distresses me is I hate to be beat.'

The Plumbs brought with them a stock of general merchandise, which they opened up to the public nearly opposite to where the Eagle House stands on Perry street. They were the only merchants in this vicinity. The Aldriches availed themselves of buying goods on credit until their indebtedness became so large that they were obliged to sell to the Plumbs. Soon as the Plumbs got full possession of the water-power they commenced to build and to utilize the water for all practicable industries. The first thing to be done was to supplant the brush dam with a good and substantial one, and to this end Ahaz Allen was engaged to superintend its construction. The dam then built, nearly seventy years ago, still turns the water into the race.

In 1815 Daniel Wheeler came here and engaged his service to Turner Aldrich. He worked for him until he (Aldrich) sold to the Plumbs, when they settled and Mr. Aldrich gave him a deed of the land next to the town line on Main street, where he afterward put up the house now standing on the west side of Thatcher brook and occupied by the relict of the late Halsey Stearns. Hosea Stewart, Subina Adams, and James West came about the same time, and soon after Park Daily, Timothy Smith, and John Strong followed. David Brand bought the first farm east of the village in 1815, owned now by the Torrance estate, and put up a log house and lived in it until he sold out to Ralph Plumb and moved into Dayton sometime in the thirties. Amasa L. Chaffee and Alvin Bugby came from Attica, Genesee county, in 1823. They brought their families with them and for want of a better place took up their residence in the garret of the old mill on Main street, where they remained until they erected buildings of their own on the west side of the creek. They were young men who had married sisters. Soon they purchased a water privilege of the Plumbs and erected a wool-carding and cloth-dressing factory on the north side of Main street opposite the mill. They continued together in business a few years, when Mr. Bugby sold his interest to Asahel Camp. The firm of Chaffee & Camp did a lucrative business until sometime in the thirties, when Mr. Chaffee sold out to Ralph Plumb and engaged in mercantile business on the west side of the creek. The dairy business, so prevalent in western New York at this time, was then in embryo, but every farmer had a flock of sheep, and as there was no cash market for wool nearer than Buffalo, Plumb & Camp conceived the idea of building a woolen factory for the purpose of manufacturing wool into cloth. They erected a large three-story building with an attic and put in the most approved machinery for every department, and when completed it was a model institution and gave an impetus to business in Lodi heretofore unknown. The expense incurred a large indebtedness and Mr. Camp had no resources to meet these obligations. Mr. Plumb proposed that they dissolve the co-partnership and Mr. Camp was obliged to accede. Mr. Plumb, evidently thinking the property would easily fall into his hands, made an extremely low offer. Mr. Camp saw at a glance that the opportunity of his life was before him. He soon found a farmer over in Chautauqua county by the name of Smith, who furnished the necessary collateral, and thence for many years the firm of Camp & Smith continued to do business together, Mr. Camp being the manager. When the great fire of April 30, 1856, swept it out of existence Mr. Camp was sole owner.

In 1823 Phineas Spencer, living five miles west in what is now Perrysburg, was elected a member of the Legislature and the same year was appointed one of three commissioners to build the first county clerk's office at Ellicottville. After Mr. Spencer returned from the Legislature in the spring of 1824 he moved his family down to Aldrich Mills and located on the premises now owned by Mrs. Gardner and the box factory of M. T. Hill, where he first built an ashery and afterward a distillery. Other families came that year and settled on both sides of the creek. Business began to boom and the people began to feel the need of a new name for the village. That fall a meeting of the citizens was called and the historic name of Lodi was given it by Ahaz Allen after other names had been discussed and discarded. Noah Cook, now over ninety years old and living in Perrysburg, related to me last year (1892) the story of that meeting. He said that he was running the saw-mill for Uncle Ahaz, and after the meeting the old gentleman said: "Upon my suggestion they christened the new-born village Lodi." Then said Mr. Cook: "If that is Lodi, this must be Hidi," since which time the little hamlet one mile above Gowanda has borne that original name.

In 1826 Phineas Spencer purchased goods in New York and established the first mercantile house on the west side of the creek. His store was on the lot on which the Hooker block now stands, where he continued to do business until his death September 30, 1839, when only forty-five years of age. He was a man of liberal views and a large and generous heart. His eldest daughter, Adelia, married the late Francis S. Root, of Buffalo, in 1839, and is yet living. Maria, his second daughter, married Gideon Webster in 1840, but died a few years after. Franklin Spencer married Rachel, only daughter of Zebedee McComber, in 1843. In 1855 he went to Chicago and engaged in the hardware business, where he died November 1, 1890, aged nearly seventy-one years. William Spencer remained and carried on a general mercantile business in the Plumb block until 1869. His residence on the corner of Main and Church streets, which he had erected a few years before, was sold to the late Enoch Taylor, whose widow and daughter still occupy the premises. Mr. Spencer died at the residence of his son in Buffalo some ten years ago. R. P. Spencer married Laura Camp and moved west long years ago, and resides at Lansing, Iowa. In 1833 Phineas Spencer bought the mill property at Hidi of Ahaz Allen and subsequently turned the same over to New York merchants as collateral security for a large indebtedness. At that time there were two saw-mills and one grist-mill embraced in the property and all doing a flourishing business. But in the June freshet of 1841 the head gates of the race gave way under the heavy pressure of water, which swept away the bridges and overflowed the bank at the mills, carrying away the embankment down to the smooth rock and leaving the mills high and dry. On the race above where now stands the tannery of Gaensslen Brothers was the woolen factory leased by Haviland & Stuart. After the water subsided the last named firm put a dam across the race at the factory and also a bridge, and was soon doing business as usual. But they closed up that year and for a few subsequent years there was no business done there except in the saw-mill on a second dam below the present one, where the creek turns at nearly right angles some fifty rods below. That dam and mill have long since disappeared and not a vestige of either is left. In 1843 the Hidi mill property was sold on a mortgage held by Ahaz Allen and purchased by Judge Howe. A few years later James Locke bought the same and erected a fine flouring-mill on the site of the present one. His son-in-law, Albert Eaton, had the management of the same for a few years, when he bought out Mr. Locke and continued there until he failed and moved to Denver, Col. A. F. Conger hired the property of the assignee, James Locke, and was running it successfully when it was burned sometime in the sixties. Silas Vinton, of Cherry Creek, Chautauqua county, purchased the property and moved the Howe mill from Little Valley and put it upon the old foundation, and when completed it was one of the best mills in the county. After a few years Mr. Vinton engaged in the mercantile business and sold his interest at Hidi to his son, F. C. Vinton, who ran it successfully a few years, when, like its predecessor, it was consumed by fire. Alanson Derby was the next man to buy the property and erected the mill now standing on the foundation of those gone before.

In 1824 Stephen Taylor came to Hidi with his family and bought a lot upon which he erected a large frame with the view of going into the mercantile business. The building was not completed and the frame remained standing until it was pulled down from fear that it would be blown down. Mr. Taylor had a large family of daughters and his building was called the seraglio, while he bore the euphonious title of "the Old Bashaw." Robert and Styles A. Torrance came to Hidi in 1825. Robert married one of the Taylor girls, by whom he had two sons: the late Morgan Torrance and Styles, now living at Ellicottville. Soon after coming here the Torrances got possession of the wool-carding business and were successful in building up a good trade. A few years thereafter, in company with Ahaz Allen, they put in machinery necessary for manufacturing woolen goods, which was continued under various firms until some time in the fifties, when the machinery was sold and the building converted into a tannery under the control of Weiser & Gaensslen. This firm continued about ten years, when Mr. Weiser sold to the Gaensslen, since which time the present firm of Gaensslen Brothers has owned and done a large business here and in Cleveland, Ohio.

Alvah Plumb, better known in those years as "Lord Plumb," moved to Hidi in 1824. He was a blacksmith by trade, and for want of a better anvil at first hammered out his irons on a large, hard stone. But this primitive instrument of necessity was soon superseded by a good iron anvil, when the stroke of his hammer was heard early and late forging out a livelihood for his six sons and one daughter.

In 1826 Ahaz Allen drove a horse team to Mount Clemens, Mich., and brought back with him his brother-in-law and family, Styles Torrance. The late C. C. Torrance was then but one year old and youngest of the family. They settled at Hidi, where the youngest of the family grew to maturity, and where the parents, when ripe in years, died, and sleep in the old cemetery on the hill west of the village. As late as 1830 there was a dense wilderness lying south of Hidi, extending many miles up Point Peter brook. In 1828 or 1829 a bear made occasional visits (under cover of night) to the edge of the clearing at the upper end of the flats, where in a little rivulet he turned over stones in search of craw-fish. The evidence of his bearship was sufficient to warrant Uncle Styles (an old trapper) in having a large steel trap made from some old worn-out saws, of which "Lord Plumb" was the artist, and when completed it was pronounced of sufficient strength to hold any living animal. A short piece of log chain was attached to the trap and fastened to a green beach log weighing at least 100 pounds, and the trap and clog were imbedded in the rivulet. Uncle Styles retired to await results. Some time during the following night or early morn bruin sought his accustomed haunt and began at once to overturn the stones in the rivulet in search of the succulent crabs. At the first pass he made with his paw the jaws of the trap closed on the tender flesh and held it in its unrelenting grasp. Finding his efforts to release himself fruitless bruin started down the rivulet, dragging the trap and clog with him. About twenty rods below he started up the hill and for over a mile continued on his course, until at last, on lands of Norman Allen, he was discovered by his pursuers. A man by the name of Balcom owning a large mastiff dog was the first to arrive, and considering his dog worthy to cope with bruin in his crippled condition at once set him on, but bruin with one blow laid the mastiff lifeless at his feet, which so enraged Balcom that a bullet from his rifle killed the beast. That was the last bear ever seen at-large roaming the forests of the town of Persia. The carcass tipped the scales at 400 pounds.

E. W. Henry came to Lodi in 1828 and commenced selling goods in a store next the creek and close to the bridge on the south side of Main street. In 1829 he married Phoebe, daughter of Colonel Waterman. A few years later he bought a lot on Water street, built the house next below the Riverside Hotel, and lived there a number of years. Subsequently he sold and bought at the terminus of Main street. Two years after he sold again and moved back into Persia at the foot of Church street, where he lived in 1840. He put up an ashery and did a large business in potash, which was then the only commodity that brought ready cash. At the formation of the present Union School District he donated the land upon which the first school house was built by Jasper Waterman, which was burned in 1872. He died here in November, 1873. In the fire of 1856 his store at the east of the bridge was burned.

Porter Welch came to Lodi 1831 and engaged in mercantile business with George W. White. They continued a few years together, and he afterward formed a co-partnership with A. L. Chaffee for two or three years. For the last thirty years of his life he was alone. He married in 1834 and died in 1874.

It was the purpose of Mr. Stuart, the author of the foregoing account of the early settlement of Persia, to continue this interesting narrative down to about 1850, but his sudden death on June 30, 1893, cut his labors short. It is quite probable that much valuable history which was made during the remainder of the period he intended to cover is lost in oblivion. From his many fragmentary notes, however, is gathered much of the data which forms the foundation of large portions of the succeeding pages of this chapter.

As already stated the town of Persia was formed from Perrysburg on the 7th of February, 1835. The town records were entirely destroyed in the great fire in Gowanda of April 30, 1856, and hence it is impossible to give the officers elected at the first town meeting. The supervisors have been as follows:

Supervisors.—Esek B. Nash, 1835-36, 1839, 1844, 1846-48; John Thatcher, 1837-38, 1840-41, 1845; George W. White, 1842; Seth Field, 1843; A. L. Chaffee, 1849, 1853; L. N. Gardner, 1850; Hiram Palmer, 1851-52; Levi W. Strobe, 1854; David N. Brown, 1855-56; Lemuel S. Jenks, 1857-58; William W. Henry, 1869-70; Aaron F. Bennett, 1871-72; Charles W. Blackney, 1873-74; Silas Vinton, 1875-77, 1879-80; Reuben Ross, 1878; Ward Hooker, 1881-82; B. L. Kimble, 1883-84; Frank C. Vinton, 1885-87, 1889-91; J. H. Schaeck, 1888; Frank L. Matlocks, 1891-93.

Outside the village of Gowanda two cemeteries were set off by the early settlers for the burial of their dead—one on lot 50 and the other on lot 54. Another was also laid out on lot 16 and for the care of this the Persia Cemetery Association was formed November 29, 1852, of which Norman H. Allen was the first secretary. The cemetery in Gowanda village is a large and tastily arranged plat and contains the remains of many of the town's most illustrious citizens. On the north side of the creek is Pine Hill Cemetery, which comprises about twelve acres and is controlled by an Erie county organization.

One of the oldest highways in Persia runs along Thatcher brook, on the west side of the town, and in early days was known far and near as the Jamestown road. It was extensively used by stages and emigrants between Buffalo and Jamestown and the west. The present roads are kept in comparatively good condition. The Buffalo & Southwestern division of the Erie railroad traverses the northwest part of the town nearly parallel with this highway and has a station on the Cattaraugus county side of the creek. For this road, which was completed in July, 1875, the town issued bonds to the amount of $29,000. The original line of the Erie railway enters Persia at the southeast corner, on lot 25, and runs northwest and west into Dayton, where it has a junction at that village with the Buffalo & Southwestern. On lot 60, near the hamlet of Persia, is "Allen's Switch." The road has no station in this town.

Gowanda is one of the prettiest villages in Cattaraugus county. Situated on Cattaraugus creek, in a beautiful valley bordered on nearly all sides by high hills, cut in two by the turbulent waters of a stream which furnishes almost constant water-power, and adjacent to some of the most picturesque and romantic scenery in western New York it has natural advantages unexcelled by any similar village in the State. Within an hour's ride of Buffalo, Jamestown, or Salamanca its transportation facilities are all that could be desired, while its geographical location is unusually healthful and attractive. Probably owing to the fact that it lies partly in Erie and partly in Cattaraugus county its political and social interests are somewhat divided and prevent its being thoroughly identified with either corporate organization. The site was first settled on the Erie county side by Turner Aldrich and other representatives of the Society of Friends. Mr. Turner early made improvements, from which fact the settlement was known as Aldrich Mills. It was subsequently changed in 1826 to Lodi and finally, in 1848, became Gowanda, a name given it by Judge Chester Howe. The designation is an Indian word signifying "beautiful place among the hills." Turner Aldrich, Jr.'s, wife was Nancy Collins, after whom the town of Collins in Erie county was named. She was the first white woman to come to Gowanda. While the village was known as Lodi the following persons were residents and their names were oft repeated in rhyme:

Mr. Day and Mr. Knight,
Mr. Black and Mr. White,
Mr. Starr and Mr. Moon,
Mr. Fox and Mr. Coon.

The village was incorporated August 1, 1848, on a petition to the Cattaraugus County Court dated April 24th of that year. The special election decided in favor of incorporation by seventy-five to sixteen, the corporate limits inclosing 746 acres of land situated on both sides of the creek. September 23, 1848, the first election was held and these officers chosen: Seth Field, James Locke, Francis Peacock, Daniel C. Amsden, and Harlow Crandall, trustees; Hiram Palmer, Amasa L. Chaffee, and Samuel Aiken, assessors; Joseph J. Benton, James H. McMillan, and George S. Hickox, street commissioners; Samuel C. Springer, clerk; William H. Murphy, collector; E. W. Henry, treasurer; Brazilla Coon, constable; James Locke, president Board of Trustees. The village was again incorporated in July, 1878, and the boundaries extended to include Hidi. The first election under this charter occurred September 2d, when these officers were chosen: Silas Vinton, president; J. Brown, John Kammerer, and B. L. Kimble, trustees; Wells Fuller, secretary; T. F. Kingsley, treasurer. The present officers are: Silas Vinton, president; H. R. Gaensslen, trustee, two years, M. F. Hill, one year, M. M. McGuire, one year; W. H. Bard, treasurer; F. C. Crawford, collector. The population is about 2,500.

The first postoffice established here was in about 1820 and was known as Aldrich Mills. Its name was changed in 1822 to Lodi with Col. Benjamin Waterman as postmaster, and in 1827 the office was discontinued. The mail was then received at Collins until about 1830, when the postoffice of West Lodi was established on the Cattaraugus county side of the creek with Phineas Spencer as postmaster. The name was changed to Persia in 1835 and in 1848 it became Gowanda. July 1, 1872, it became a money-order office.

Since the chapter on the press of the county was printed in this volume the Gowanda Leader has been established by Clarence Van Alstyne, editor and publisher. The first number made its appearance June 15, 1893. It is issued every Thursday.

The village has been visited with several disastrous conflagrations, but each time it has "risen from the ashes" with commendable energy. April 30, 1856, a fire originated on the Erie county side, communicated across the creek by means of the wooden bridge, and destroyed every business place but one and many residences in both localities. In October, 1875, all the business blocks on the Cattaraugus county side from Water street to Judge Woodbury's office were burned. Another destructive fire occurred July 1, 1893, which burned about $20,000 worth of property, consisting of seven or eight blocks beginning with the Commercial Hotel and running southwest along Jamestown street. July 27, 1857, a sudden freshet in Thatcher brook carried away three houses and caused considerable other damage. The village has a well organized fire department.

The first school in town was taught at Hidi by Enoch Frye in the winter of 1817-18. In 1829, a school district comprising a large territory having been organized, it was decided "to secure a site for a school house within forty rods of Dr. Merritt's place." This was purchased for $25 of Alvin Bugby and a frame structure erected upon it at a cost of $125. It is said that Solomon Dunham painted it Venetian red and the cornice white. The first school was taught in the building by a Mr. Leland in the winter of 1829-30 and the next term by Chester Howe. In 1845 a school house was built on the Erie county side on the "pine lot" purchased of E. W. Henry, and in it A. G. Love was the first teacher. The town now has six school districts, in each of which a school is maintained, which, in 1892, were attended by 514 scholars and taught by thirteen teachers. The total value of buildings and sites is $17,075 and the assessed valuation of the districts aggregates $976,310. The money received from the State in 1892 amounted to $2,121.04, by local tax $4,016.26.

In 1862 the Gowanda district school was placed under the supervision of the Regents of the University of the State of New York and remained so until December 6, 1866, when the Gowanda Union School and Academy was organized, the first Board of Education being composed of Joseph H. Plumb, David N. Brown, Nicholas Schaack, Herman Kelley, F. A. Newell, A. W. Popple, William H. Stuart, L. S. Jenks, and C. C. Torrance; of these Mr. Brown was president and Mr. Stuart was secretary. The academic department was formally opened in December, 1866, with Dr. Holcomb as principal. August 9, 1874, the school building was burned and for several years school was held in the Welch block. October 26, 1875, at a meeting held for the purpose, it was decided to rebuild on the old site and the present handsome brick structure was erected by Silas Vinton and first occupied in the fall of 1877. The academy has six departments: Academic, first grammar, second grammar, intermediate, first primary, and second primary. It contains a fine library and a well-equipped laboratory. In 1888 a bequest of $1,000 was received from the late C. C. Torrance, Esq., as a permanent fund, the proceeds to be awarded in cash prizes of $40 and $20 every June to two members of the graduating class. The school is under the visitation of the Regents. The Board of Education in 1892 was composed of J. E. Van Deusen, George W. Scott, John Kammerer, A. C. Stafford, S. C. Torrance, Silas Vinton; J. E. Van Deusen, president; C. S. Howland, clerk; F. E. Bard, treasurer; G. C. Carpenter, collector. The faculty for 1892-93 is as follows: Charles A. Black, A.M., principal and superintendent; Mrs. Charles A. Black, preceptress; Miss Nellie J. Lake, assistant; Nettie J. Ransom, Miss Virginia E. Conger, Miss Georgia M. Maltbie, Miss Lillian Ribbel, Miss Dora W. Chaffe, teachers.

The Lodi Library Association was legally organized June 18, 1827, with H. M. Parker, Norton Davison, Solon Spencer, Ira C. Titus, J. Hill, Constant B. Allen, and Solomon Dunham as trustees. Aside from this it is believed there was no visible existence of the institution. The Mary Spencer Library was founded in 1886. It comprises about 1,500 volumes and has a home in the basement of the First Presbyterian church.

The Bank of Gowanda was organized in January, 1890, with a capital stock of $30,000. The officers were Albert Gaensslen, president; J. E. Van Deusen, vice-president; W. H. Bard, cashier; F. E. Bard, assistant cashier. The present officers are the same except Vice-President Van Deusen, who has been succeeded by Edgar E. Shaw. The directors are A. Gaensslen, W. H. Bard, S. H. Arnold, A. C. Stafford, W. P. Sherman, F. J. Blackmon, F. E. Bard, and E. A. Shaw.

Gaensslen Brothers have a large sole-leather tannery at Hidi which was established on a small scale in 1853. August 2, 1862, it was destroyed by fire, but was immediately rebuilt. It was again burned September 11, 1889, and now has a capacity of 25,000 sides of sole leather annually. They employ twenty-five or thirty men. William Owen's tannery was started in 1859 and came into his possession June 1, 1890. He turns out about 12,000 sides of leather per annum.

The Gowanda Preserving Company was organized in 1882 by Silas Vinton, Dr. C. C. Johnson, and Milan J. Bronson. Mr. Vinton was treasurer and business manager. The company completed its plant in 1882 in time to commence business in July, canning vegetables and fruits. In the fall of 1890 the concern sold to the Gowanda Canning Company, the present proprietors. The Gowanda Fruit and Vegetable Evaporating Company (J. E. Van Deusen, O. B. Van Deusen, and E. O. Press) has an establishment opposite the depot with a drying capacity of 400 bushels of apples daily.

The Gowanda Printing and Manufacturing Company's establishment is located on Water street and was organized in April, 1892. The company does job printing and manufactures paper boxes. The officers are S. H. Arnold, president; R. E. Moss, vice-president; O. B. Van Deusen, secretary and reasurer; P. H. Horton, superintendent. The nucleus of this concern was established mainly by John J. Horton, who for a few years conducted quite an extensive show printing business and only recently removed it to Cleveland, Ohio.

The Gowanda Agricultural Works are owned and operated by A. C. and S. G. Keyes, who have conducted the business since 1885. The manufactory was started by James Locke in 1832 and for many years prior to 1885 was carried on by Sellev & Popple. The present company manufactures various kinds of agricultural implements and employs a large force of skilled mechanics. F. D. Hall began the manufacture of pumps in 1882 on the Cattaraugus county side, succeeding to the business of A. & H. Adams, who had a similar establishment on the Erie county side of the creek. George W. Howard started his present business in 1884. He manufactures artistic woodwork. Millen T. Hill has a large cheese-box factory and G. C. Carpenter manufactures wooden cisterns, screen doors, sash, etc.

Romer Brothers Manufacturing Company, located on the Erie county side, has a large establishment for the manufacture of axes. The business was started in 1876 and now employs about seventy-five men. Charles Kenngott's glue manufactory was established by him in 1868. He produces about 20,000 pounds of glue annually. The Gowanda Brick Company, composed of Messrs. Radigan and Conroe, was organized in March, 1890. Frank L. Mattocks owns large marble and granite works and Robert A. Kennicutt has a mineral water manufactory which he started in 1885. D. B. Forbush carries on a sash, door, and blind factory which was established by his father, Lester C. Forbush, in 1855; the present proprietor obtained control in April, 1890.

Alanson Derby's grist-mill at Hidi was built by him in 1889. It is run by water-power and has three runs of stone and a double set of rollers. Sax & Shepflin's roller flour-mill was started in 1885. It has twelve sets of rollers. L. P. Dean has a saw and planing-mill which was burned in 1882 and rebuilt the same year. There are several other minor industries which lend a large degree of business activity to this thrifty village. Gowanda has also two or three good hotels, an opera house, and the usual complement of physicians, lawyers, merchants, dealers, artisans, etc.

Persia postoffice was established in 1863 with Elbridge Eddy as postmaster. The office is located near "Allen's Switch" on lot 60.

Charles A. Facklam's cheese factory, in School District No. 5, was erected in the spring of 1889. The output is about 110,000 pounds of cheese annually.

It appears that several years elapsed from the date of Turner Aldrich's settlement on the Erie county side of the creek before religious services were held in the pioneer community. The first preacher to visit the locality was Rev. Elnathan Finch in 1815 and 1816. He was of the Freewill Baptist persuasion, but apparently effected no permanent organization. Even the length of his stay or the frequency of his visitations can not be ascertained.

The First Presbyterian church of Gowanda had its inception in services of that denomination held as early as 1826 by Joseph Plumb, who organized a Sunday school that year. The Presbyterian Society of Lodi was organized April 8, 1828, by Rev. M. P. Squire, with eleven members, over whom the first pastor was Rev. E. J. Gillett. A house of worship was erected of wood in 1832 and was burned February 13, 1842. The same year a second edifice was erected on the old foundation, and was remodeled and enlarged in 1886. It cost $10,000, will seat 300 people, and with other property is valued at $15,000. The society has about ninety members under the pastoral care of Rev. F. H. Coffran. The Sunday school has 140 scholars.

The First Methodist Episcopal church of Gowanda was incorporated September 28, 1831, being the outgrowth of a small class organized a few years before. The organizer of the society was Rev. Mr. Tacket, who is supposed to have also been the first pastor. Services were first held in a school house which stood a few yards from the present church edifice, and the first house of worship was erected in 1834-35, during the pastorate of Rev. William Babcock, who was the first to preach in the new building. The present church was built of stone, brick, and wood in 1887-88 at a cost of $13,000; the entire property is now valued at $15,000. The edifice will seat 400 persons. The society has about 100 members with Rev. C. H. Norris as pastor, and also sustains a large Sunday school. The early records of this church were burned in the great fire of 1856.

The Seventh Day Baptist church of Persia was organized at the log house of Oliver Babcock, June 8, 1832, by Elder Joel Green, a traveling preacher of that denomination. The original membership numbered eight persons. Mr. Green was soon followed by Rev. Walter B. Gillett and he by Rev. Nathan V. Hull, who subsequently became connected with Alfred University in Allegany county. These two men did more towards the building up of the church than any one who came after them. It was said by a wit of the time "that most of the members were only converted to Brother Hull, and when he went they went." He was a man of remarkable traits of character. Dr. Thomas E. Babcock followed as pastor and he was succeeded by Alexander Campbell, L. Crandall, Roy Green, Henry Green, and L. M. Cotrell. The society owned a large log school house across the highway from where the "Seventh Day" school now stands and still own the land upon which it stood. This was torn down in 1856. The organization, which at one time had nearly 200 members, became defunct October 26, 1852. In 1846 a large portion of the membership moved to Wisconsin and not a few to Allegany county.

The First Free Methodist church in Gowanda was organized April 18, 1865, by Titus Roberts, with fifty members, the first pastor being Rev. J. B. Freeland. In 1865 a frame house of worship was erected at a cost of $2,500. It will seat 250 persons and with the grounds, etc., is valued at $3,000. The society has twelve or fifteen members with Rev. E. C. Best as pastor, and connected is a Sunday school.

The Evangelical Lutheran church in Gowanda was organized in 1887 by Rev. I. Heiniger, of Dunkirk, N. Y., with twelve members. Rev. William Posin was the first pastor. A frame church edifice was erected in 1888 at a cost of $2,200, and with the grounds, etc., is now valued at $3,000. It will seat 200 persons. The society has fifty members with Rev. Louis Ulmer as pastor. Connected is a Sunday school of about fifty scholars.

The Perrysburg Baptist church of Gowanda had its inception in a similar organization near Versailles. It was formed here in June, 1888, by a council of churches, with less than twenty members, over whom Rev. R. H. Colby became the first pastor. A frame house of worship was erected the same year at a cost of $3,000, the present value of the church property being $4,000. The edifice will seat 300 people and the society has about seventy members with Rev. C. J. Pendelton as pastor. They maintain two Sunday schools.

St. Joseph's Roman Catholic church was organized with 100 members in 1888 by Father P. Vincent, who became the first pastor. In 1888 a frame church edifice was erected at an expense of $2,000 and with a seating capacity of 200 persons. The church property is valued at about $2,600. The parish has 180 communicants under the pastoral charge of Rev. Father J. Nash as resident priest. Connected is a prosperous Sunday school.

Phoenix Lodge, No. 262, F. & A. M., was instituted under a dispensation December 8, 1851, and legally chartered June 16, 1852. The first officers were Elias Hall, W. M.; W. S. Herrick, S. W.; David D. Parker, J. W.; James Locke, S. D.; Samuel Aikens, J. D.; A. L. Chaffee, secretary. At one time it had over 100 members.

Relief Lodge, No. 328, I. O. O. F., was instituted October 13, 1847, and its number changed to 511 on December 1, 1850. It was re-organized January 8, 1884, by C. D. Tuttle, D. D. G. M. The first officers were William Peacock, N. G.; P. J. Dudny, V. G.; J. P. Romer, secretary; N. Romer, treas.

Darby Post, No. 359, G. A. R., Gowanda, was organized March 27, 1883, and its first officers were mustered in April 18th, viz.: Col. Thomas J. Parker, commander; Lewis W. Henry, S. V. C.; William Young, J. V. C.; S. H. Arnold, adjutant; Jesse L. Walker, Q. M.; Joseph T. Matthews, O. D.; Charles Wilber, O. G.; James Kavanaugh, sergeant; John Hurdley, Q. M.-S. Besides these there were thirteen charter members. The post was named in honor of Capt. Albert Darby of Co. A, 64th N. Y. Vol. Inf., who died from wounds received at Chancellorsville.

Peter Ackler, born on the Mohawk river, married Abigail Gibbs in Rush, N. Y. He was a farmer and in 1824 came to Persia and settled on lot 59. He subsequently settled permanently on the farm where his son Henry F. now lives. This farm was located on the old Indian trail. He had three sons and four daughters, all of whom are living. Mr. Ackler died on the homestead in the spring of 1851. His oldest son, Willard, born in Rush, N. Y., April 8, 1823, came to Persia with his parents and has since been a resident of this town. In 1850 he married Betsey Crandall. In 1851 he purchased the Crandall homestead.

Ira W. Ackley, born in Lancaster, N. Y., in 1806, married Mary Seabrook, a descendant of the English family who settled Seabrook Island, South Carolina. He early settled in Hidi, and being a millwright assisted Ahaz Allen in building the first saw-mill there. Soon after he purchased 100 acres of woodland on lot 57, where his son John S. now lives. The place he chose for his home was near a large spring, which was evidently a resort of the Indians. The present proprietor has found numerous arrowheads, stone axes, and stone implements for skinning game, a stone rasp, and other curiosities. Mr. Ackley was elected to several town offices. He was deputized by Sheriff White to call out the militia and went with them to the Dutch Hill war. He joined the Emigrant Aid Society of Massachusetts at the time of border ruffian troubles in Kansas and was one of the original founders of the city of Lawrence, and was also the millwright in building the first mill in that city. He died where his daughter, Mrs. Alverson, now lives in 1888. Mrs. Ackley died about 1875. Children: Orlando A.; Melissa E. (Mrs. Alverson); John Seabrook, who married Alzina, daughter of William Crandall, of Persia; Thomas B. (deceased); and Mary, widow of Luther N. Wells.

Orlando A. Ackley was born in Hidi, July 7, 1831. Jan. 1, 1856, he married Elizabeth Silliman, and in 1860 located on the farm where Samuel Averill settled. On this he has found numerous arrowheads and tomahawks, etc. Mr. Ackley is a prominent Democrat, and has served as highway commissioner twelve consecutive years and as overseer of the poor four years. Mrs. Ackley died Feb. 3, 1892. Children: Ira W., born in 1861, and Denver D., born in 1870.

Ahaz Allen was born at Warwick, Mass., May 7, 1782, and died May 29, 1864. Oct. 13, 1808, at Lancaster, N. Y., he married Sibyl Hibbard, who died July 2, 1876. Mr. Allen and his family were the first white settlers in the town of Persia. They located at Hidi in May, 1812. He was a typical pioneer and became prominent in local affairs. He carried on large business operations, employing more or less help, and took an active interest in everything conducive to the growth of the young community. He had a family of twelve children, of whom Caroline was the first white child born in town, her birth occurring Sept. 15, 1813. Dan Allen, a brother of Ahaz, was born June 30, 1780, and died in Sept., 1853. He settled in Hidi in 1816, and in 1819 was supervisor of the town of Perrysburg.

Norman Hibbard Allen was born Aug. 22, 1811, near what is known as Zoar. He was the second child of Ahaz and Sibyl (Hibbard) Allen. At the age of eighteen he commenced teaching school in Cattaraugus and Erie counties, which he continued winters until 1835; the last school he taught in this vicinity was in the town of Perrysburg in the winter of 1834-35 and numbered eighty pupils. In June, 1835, he removed to Michigan, where he became a carpenter and joiner, which business he continued until the spring of 1836, when he was called back to this town by the sickness and death of his sister Caroline. In May, 1837, he returned again to Michigan, where he remained until about the close of 1839, when he settled on a farm in Persia on lot 56, and has continued farming to the present time, now living on lot 8, town 6, range 8. Nov. 29, 1846, he married Roanna, daughter of J. C. and Catharine R. Babcock, of this town, who died March 2, 1863. Children: Millard N.; Norman B.; and Harmony R., born July 29, 1856, married Edward M. Bartlett, a farmer of Fredonia, Chautauqua county. Norman H. Allen was a Whig in politics until the formation of the Republican party, with which he has since been identified. His second marriage (Oct. 25, 1864) was with Phebe, daughter of Lilly and Elizabeth (Russell) Stafford, a native of Collins, Erie county, who was born Oct. 5, 1820; her parents were from Dartmouth, Mass. They occupy the same farm and house purchased by Mr. Allen in 1850.

Truman P. Allen, son of Ahaz, was born at Hidi, Nov. 10, 1819. April 18, 1843, he married Janette J., daughter of Abel and Fanny (Sturdevant) Witherehl. For one year he carried on a portion of his father's farm on shares and in the fall of 1843 moved onto a farm of fifty-six acres on lot 8 which was given to him by his father. Here he remained until 1857, in the meantime having built upon it one of the finest farm houses in the town. In 1857 he removed to Michigan and located some 1,200 or 1,500 acres of land in Oceana county and 7½ acres in Grand Rapids. Feb. 1, 1858, on account of fever and ague, he returned and settled again on a farm at Point Peter. His business has always been farming and dealing in real estate. Children: The first child, born Feb. 14, 1844, died when four days old; Eliza S., born Aug. 4, 1845, married Darwin C. Griswold, of Sheridan, N. Y., who died Sept. 9, 1870, and she married, second, L. W. Jolls, of Collins, Erie county; Freeman S., born Feb. 1, 1849, married, July 5, 1871, Lucy Burch, of South Haven; Gilbert W., born June 15, 1854, married Frances Hartman, Dec. 7, 1876, and resides on a farm on lot 17; Alzona V., born Nov. 16, 1859, married George Erdle, of Sheridan, N. Y.; and Arthur R., born March 17, 1863, drowned in Cattaraugus creek June 25, 1874. The mother died Nov. 18, 1870. Mr. Allen married, second, Jennie L. Wheeler, of Richmond, N. H., Oct. 18, 1874. Politically Mr. Allen was a strong abolitionist; since 1854 he has been principally identified with the Republican party. He is the oldest person now living in Gowanda who was born in what is now that village. He has ever been a strong anti-slavery and anti-liquor advocate and favors equal suffrage irrespective of color, race, or sex. He also believes that no one can rightfully own real estate; "it should be as free to all human kind as the air, the water, or the sunlight, yet each should own whatever improvements he may have caused to be put on a limited amount of land."

Capt. Benjamin J. Allen, a native of Connecticut, came to Persia about 1830 and settled at Allen's Switch near what is now Persia postoffice, where his grandson, Bert Allen, now lives. In early life he took an active interest in military affairs and held the office of captain. He was justice of the peace and overseer of the poor. He was an inveterate joker and a witty storyteller, and left behind him many trite sayings. He married Sally Prentiss, of Massachusetts, who died July 14, 1869. Children: Morgan, who died in Kansas; Alpheus, who died in childhood; Sarah E. (widow of Johnson Merrill), who resides in the west part of Dayton; and Pearl S., born on the homestead in Feb., 1839, who with his sister resides near Wesley postoffice.

Millard N. Allen was born Sept. 23, 1847, at Point Peter, in a log house where his father, Norman H. Allen, first resided. He attended the district schools of his native town, the Gowanda Union School, and the Fredonia Academy one term in the last year of that institution, and also Eastman's Business College at Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He was a clerk for T. Catlin, of Newburgh, N. Y., eight months, and in 1870 became a clerk in the store of Hard & Hughes, of Dunkirk, but a few months later went into the freight office of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railroad at Dunkirk and afterward at Brocton, remaining about three years in both offices. July 23, 1874, he married Eliza M., daughter of the late Lyman Bennett, of this town, and located permanently in Gowanda in the drug and book business, being now in company with his brother Norman B. The business was begun by them June 1, 1873. He has one son, Arthur B., born April 8, 1881. At the re-organizing of Relief Lodge, No. 511, of Odd Fellows at Gowanda, Jan. 8, 1884, he was one of the new members and became an active worker, rising step by step till he passed the chairs, and on Aug. 18, 1892, was appointed district deputy grand master of the county of Cattaraugus, being re-appointed at the session of Aug. 24, 1893, at New York. During his first year in this position he instituted three new lodges of the order: Franklinville, No. 643, West Valley, No. 665, and Little Valley, No. 671, as against three lodges instituted during the nine years preceding. He has been a regular attendant of the Grand Lodge as a representative during the last five years.

Norman B. Allen, son of Norman H., was born in Persia, June 29, 1851. He was educated in the common schools and had two terms in the Union Free School in Gowanda. At the age of nineteen he entered a drug store and after about two years' experience in Gowanda and in Pennsylvania he opened in the spring of 1873 a drug store in Gowanda in company with his brother, Millard N. Allen, under the firm name of N. B. Allen & Co. About two years later the name was changed to Allen Brothers. Aug. 26, 1872, he married Ella A., daughter of the late Samuel C. Springer, of Gowanda. They have one son, Walter S., born Nov. 20, 1875.

Anson E. Alverson, son of Emory and Mary A. (Strong) Alverson, was born in Gerry, N. Y., Sept. 17, 1832. His grandfather, James R. Alverson, a soldier in the War of 1812 and a native of Connecticut, came to Gerry from Vermont at a very early day. He held town offices and raised a large family. Emory Alverson, born in Brattleboro, Vt., in 1806, married Mary Ann, daughter of Gilbert Strong, about 1830. In 1836 he removed to Gowanda and purchased a manufactory for making pails and tubs. In 1850 he exchanged this for the old Point Peter farm. In 1856 he joined his son Anson E. in Lawrence, Kan., and died in Clay county, Kan., in 1881. Mrs. Alverson died in 1857. Anson E. Alverson finished his education in the academy at Ellington, N. Y. April 26, 1852, he married Melissa, daughter of Ira W. and Mary (Seabrook) Ackley, and settled on the homestead, when he went to Lawrence, Kan., and joined the Emigrant Aid Society from Massachusetts, being one of the 107 founders of that settlement. In the summer of 1859 he and his father made an overland trip to Denver, Col., with four ox-teams. Mr. Alverson is a natural mechanic and assisted his father-in-law as a millwright. In 1860 he returned to this county and settled in Cattaraugus village. In July, 1861, he enlisted in Co. A, 64th N. Y. Vols., and was discharged Feb. 23, 1863, for disability. He served as private, corporal, and sergeant. In Oct., 1863, he went to the oil regions of Rouseville, Pa., where he was a laborer, a well-driller, and an oil producer until 1875. He then removed to Cattaraugus. In 1888 he visited Virginia, Chicago, Duluth, and Washington territory, where he remained four years. He is now a farmer just outside the corporation of Gowanda. Mr. Alverson served as highway commissioner of New Albion in 1883 and built the first iron bridge in that town. Children: Rollin A., born in 1853, died in Lawrence in Aug., 1855; Mary U., born in 1856, married Thomas Babb, of Cattaraugus, and resides in Chicago; Corlin E., born in 1860; George S., born in 1864; Nathan A., born in Dec., 1869; and Chanley W., born in 1875.

John Armes, born in Canada, near Vermont, May 13, 1788, married Catharine Rhoades, and settled first in Genesee county. He removed to Napoli in 1831, where he died Nov. 26, 1867. Mrs. Armes died March 7, 1865. Children: Justus R., who died in Wisconsin; Luther W., who married Maryette M. Rhoades, Nov. 23, 1850, settled on the homestead, and died April 11, 1891; William, who died in Pennsylvania; Emily (Mrs. John Foran), who died in Wisconsin; Clarinda (Mrs. William Allen), of Minnesota; Martha; Eusebia, of Jackson, Minn.; and Nelson E., who emigrated to Minnesota, married there a Miss Brooks, and was a soldier in the Civil war.

Victor C. Armes, son of Eusebia (Armes) Allen, was born in Napoli and was adopted by his uncle, Luther Armes. At the age of fifteen he entered Chamberlain Institute, where he was a student about four years. He then went to Minnesota, where he engaged as a teacher. Returning a year later he taught the ensuing seven years in district and graded schools, and in Feb., 1885, he purchased the drug business of Dr. J. S. Shugert and subsequently the drug stock of T. N. Kingsley (deceased). Aug. 5, 1881, he married Cora, daughter of Marcus Ellsworth. Children: Max, Gertrude, Maud, and Harry.

John C. Babcock, a native of Rhode Island, was born Nov. 14, 1782. He married Catherine Reinhardt, April 15, 1813, who was born Nov. 14, 1792. He was a sailor on a merchant vessel and about the time of his marriage he settled in Schoharie county, where he was superintendent of a turnpike connecting Cherry Valley with Albany. In 1824 he removed with his wife and three children to Cattaraugus county and settled in Persia. Mr. Babcock opened his log cabin as a tavern. He was widely known, influential and prominent, and served as overseer of the poor several years. He died on his farm March 12, 1850. Mrs. Babcock died May 21, 1838. Children: Louisa, Roanna, and John R., who were born in Schoharie county, and Horace, who was born on the homestead. (For sketch of Dr. Horace Babcock see page 167.)

Oliver C. Babcock was born in Brookfield, N. Y., June 8, 1807, and died Dec. 26, 1886. Nov. 10, 1827, he married Emma Langworthy, who was born in Bridgewater, N. Y., Jan. 18, 1806. Mr. Babcock's parents were born in Rhode Island. They were very superstitious, the mother especially, and these false conceptions were early instilled into the young mind of the son. He was taught that witches prowled around nights and plied their nefarious trades in the air and in the stillness of the household. In consequence he went from one extreme to the other and throughout life retained many of the fallacies he imbibed in childhood. Nevertheless he possessed sterling traits of character and an indomitable perseverance. He kept Saturday as the sabbath in accordance with his honest convictions and during its existence was one of the foremost members of the Seventh Day Baptist church in Persia. He had fifteen children, one of whom is George C., still living in town. Another is Francis M., who was born in Brookfield, Dec. 8, 1828, and was educated in the common schools in the Seventh Day settlement. A natural mechanic he became a carpenter and millwright and followed those avocations until about 1866; afterward he was a farmer. In 1871 he settled on the farm where his son Oliver C. now lives, where he died May 31, 1882. Jan. 1, 1854, he married Avilda Babcock, a native of Pennsylvania, who survives him. Their only child, Oliver C., married Flora A. Cook, of Forestville, N. Y., March 16, 1879, and settled on the homestead.

Robert Buchan was born in Ontario, Canada, Feb. 6, 1850. He served an apprenticeship at the baker's trade in Fergus, Canada, and in 1870 removed to Buffalo, where he worked for George Mugridge & Son thirteen years. In 1889 he started a bakery at North Evans, Erie county, which he carried on until September, 1890, when he came to Gowanda and commenced the same business. Jan. 7, 1874, he married Annie L. Heron, of Maxwell, Gray county, Can. Children: Charles A., born July 9, 1876; Robert J., born June 14, 1878; Florence A., born Oct. 25, 1882; Frank W., born April 5, 1885; Lucy L., who died in 1889; and Thomas W., who died in 1890.

Amasa L. Chaffee, a native of Rutland, Vt., was born Nov. 28, 1797. Aug. 24, 1819, he married Lydia Wade Nichols, who was born May 3, 1802, and who died July 3, 1879. In 1820, after a short residence in Attica, N. Y., he came to Gowanda and in company with his brother-in-law, Alvin Bugby, erected a wool-carding and cloth-dressing-mill, which he conducted until 1831. He was also distinguished as the first inhabitant of Gowanda who built a brick chimney in his house. He was elected justice of the peace of Perrysburg and held the position in Perrysburg and Persia most of the time until 1843. He also conducted a book-store and sold flour, which in 1837 brought $14 per barrel. In 1838 he began a general mercantile business, which he conducted to the close of his life. He was a fifer-soldier in the War of 1812 and always interested in military affairs, being captain of militia. In 1849 and again in 1853 he represented Persia on the Board of Supervisors. He was an active member of the Methodist church and in politics was first a Democrat, but joined the Republican party at its organization. Mr. Chaffee died Dec. 5, 1869. Children: Lydia A. (Mrs. Dr. David E. Ellis), of Belvidere, Ill.; Amasa W. W.; James H., of Jamestown; and Charles W., Newton A., Mary H., of Gowanda.

Amasa W. W. Chaffee, born at Aldrich Mills, Perrysburg (now Gowanda), July 21, 1826, was educated in his father's store, and at the age of twenty-one was admitted a partner with his father under the firm name of A. L. Chaffee & Son. Since then he has been constantly in mercantile business in Gowanda or engaged as a commercial traveler. July 3, 1848, he married Jane M., daughter of Harlow and Frelove (Fancher) Crandall, of Sandy Hill, N. Y. Children: Marvin W., born March 12, 1851, died in Nov., 1852; Clarence M., born Nov. 23, 1853, married Helen Osborn, of Girard, Ohio, and is a member of the firm of Snyder, Chaffee & Co., of Columbus, Ohio; Vernon E., born Dec. 9, 1859, died Dec. 12, 1876; and an adopted child, born Sept. 1, 1873.

Charles Warren Chaffee, born July 15, 1837, received his education in the common schools and in his father's store, where he was engaged from the age of eighteen years until he was about twenty-six. For five years he was the general agent of the Singer Sewing Machine Company for Cattaraugus county and a part of Erie county. In 1872 and 1873 he was the traveling agent of the company. He was next with the Howe Sewing Machine Company until they failed. In 1874 he was traveling salesman for Kingsbury, Abbott & Hullett, of New York. In 1876 he was engaged with O. P. Ramsdell & Co. and eighteen months later with Chase & Comstock, both of Buffalo. After two years he accepted an offer from E. C. Hazzard & Co., of New York, and traveled for them until 1885. He was then in the employment of Berry, Wisner, Lohman & Co. until 1890, when he was engaged as traveling agent for the Life and Reserve Life Insurance Company, of Buffalo. He has also been engaged with other concerns. June 21, 1860, he married Lydia A., daughter of Homer and Vashti (Beckwith) Woodin; children: Ida Elnora, born Sept. 27, 1862, died July 17, 1865; William Wallace, born Sept. 25, 1864; and Dora Woodin, born July 20, 1870.

Newton A. Chaffee was born Aug. 31, 1841. Aug. 2, 1862, he enlisted in the 154th N. Y. Vols. and Aug. 29th the regiment was in active service as a part of the Eleventh Army Corps. He was at the battles of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg and marched with General Sherman's army to the sea. He was quartermaster-sergeant eighteen months, after which he was detailed to corps headquarters, where he served until he was discharged June 20, 1865. He is a member of Darby Post, G. A. R., and has served as its commander. From March 20, 1868, to Sept., 1883, he was a merchant at Dayton, and was also postmaster and loan commissioner. He returned to Gowanda and formed a partnership with his brother, A. W. W. Chaffee, as merchant tailors, which closed in Feb., 1891. June 6, 1866, he married Luna, daughter of Homer and Vashti Woodin. They have an only daughter, Lorena, born Aug. 19, 1867.

Elisha Darby, son of Daniel and Abigail (Sawyer) Darby, was born near Salem, Mass., March 20, 1790. He married Dolly Calkins, of Arlington, Vt., daughter of John Calkins, a soldier in the Revolution. Elias Haskell Darby, uncle of Elisha Darby, rendered distinguished service to his country by lending money to the government and aiding in restoring American commerce. He also established an institution for the education of seamen in the U. S. navy. Daniel Darby was a captain and led his company in the struggle for independence. Elisha Darby, in 1828, moved with his wife and five children to this town, settling on lots 5 and 6 at the junction of the north and south branches of Cattaraugus creek. He purchased the improvements of Ephraim Rolf, who succeeded Walter Morehouse, the first and original settler on the place. Mr. Darby died June 11, 1872; Mrs. Darby died April 1, 1870. Children: Almira (Mrs. Asahel Hulett), who died in Dayton; Harriet Jane (Mrs. Nathaniel Whitcomb), who died in Gowanda; Olive E. (Mrs. Alfred Herrick), who died in New Albion; Charles F.; Abi S. (Mrs. Colin Campbell), of Perrysburg; and Amelia, who died aged six years. Charles F. Darby, born Aug. 27, 1822, taught seven winters of school, and married, Aug. 26, 1849, Sarah M., daughter of Sylvester M. Cox, of Otto. He settled on the homestead on Darby flats, which he still owns. Children: Sylvester, deceased; Carlton E., who married Lizzie Beaver; Carrie S. (Mrs. Addison Austin), of Otto; and Nellie S.

H. W. Dorsey was born in Port au Prince, Hayti, June 7, 1840, where he lived until Dec. 26, 1860, when he embarked on a coasting vessel bound for Porto Rico, arriving Jan. 13, 1861. Remaining there until the 20th of the same month he embarked on the three-masted schooner Mobile for the United States and arrived at New Orleans, La., on Feb. 14th. Mardi Gras was being celebrated. Meeting no one who spoke Spanish, and not being able to speak English, he found himself a veritable stranger in a strange land and unable to prosecute the search he had undertaken to find his father, mother, and sister, who had left Hayti in 1856, and whom he had not heard from since. His father had held an important office in the Haytian government, but with many others allowed himself to become a victim to his ambition and in 1855 found his army of insurgents defeated, his property confiscated, and a price set upon his capture and delivery to the Bayez government. He fled, taking his wife and daughter, and the son, being away at school, knew nothing of their flight until some time afterward. As soon as H. W. could make himself understood he began making inquiries for Sir Allen De Orsey, the name by which his father was known at home. He inserted an advertisement in the New Orleans papers, but immediately after Fort Sumter was captured and the Rebellion begun. The city was blockaded until Butler came, and the first mails brought a copy of the New York Tribune, in which he found an answer to his advertisement, wherein he learned that his father was living with his family at Montrose, Pa. He was given transportation to New York city by the steamer Merrimac and was soon reunited with the family. He soon became imbued with the spirit of war and after President Lincoln's proclamation of emancipation enlisted and served until mustered out Oct. 25, 1863. His parents having died during his term of service he had his only sister to care for and after placing her at the Davenport Institute in Elmira, N. Y., he came to Gowanda in Oct., 1869.

Albert Gaensslen was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, March 18, 1828. In June, 1849, he came to America and was employed at his trade in Hamburg, Erie county, three years. In 1852 he began business for himself in Hidi by converting the old woolen-mill into an upper-leather tannery. He began the trade of tanner and currier in Germany at the age of fourteen. He is a member of the present firm of Gaensslen Brothers. Mr. Gaensslen is a worthy and respected citizen, is a Democrat in politics, has served as justice of the peace, and has been excise commissioner sixteen years. He is also president of the Bank of Gowanda. May 20, 1852, he married Eve Federspad and has one son living, Henry Gaensslen, born May 20, 1855, who, in 1879, married Frances Storms, of Buffalo, by whom he has a daughter, Harmony A., and a son, Albert A.

Frank D. Hall, born in Perrysburg, Sept. 8, 1855, is a son of Stephen R. and Ann J. (Ostrander) Hall. Stephen R. was born in Chautauqua county and his wife in Perrysburg. Frank D. attended the academy at Forestville and afterward engaged with Brown & Cole, proprietors of the Adams pump works at Gowanda, remaining with them two years, when he became a member of the firm as Brown, Cole & Co. Three years later he purchased the business and removed it to the Cattaraugus county side, where he still carries it on. He married, Nov. 28, 1877, Eva M., daughter of Silas Titus. Children: Ethel M., born July 31, 1880; Edith A., born Nov. 21, 1881; and S. Rolland, born April 25, 1890.

Calvin Hartwell, born about 1797, married Minerva, daughter of William Higbee, a pioneer of New Albion (q. v.). About 1828 he came from Albion, Orleans county, to Snyder hill in New Albion with his wife and two children. He eventually sold his farm and about 1850 bought a partially improved one in Skinner hollow in Persia, where he died April 1, 1861. Mrs. Hartwell died in Cattaraugus, Nov. 7, 1884. Mr. Hartwell served in the War of 1812. Children: Sophronia (Mrs. Charles Luce), who died in Adrian, Mich.; Mary D., deceased; Laura (Mrs. Merritt Rich), who died in Persia; Russell S.; Daniel, of Wisconsin; Almedia (Mrs. Richard Ingersoll), of Leon; Almira (Mrs. Lorenzo Perkins), who died in Orleans county; and Alvira (Mrs. Horace Snyder), of Buffalo. Russell S. Hartwell was born Feb. 20, 1832, was a carpenter until twenty-seven years of age, and in 1858 bought a farm in Persia, where he resided four years, when he sold and bought another in Leon, where he resided eight months. He sold again and bought in Dayton, where he was a farmer another year, and in 1866 he purchased his present home in Persia. He also resided in Cattaraugus thirteen years. He married, in Dec., 1860, Rachel M. Ingersoll, who died Sept. 17, 1879. Dec. 27, 1882, he married Mrs. Mary McCollister, who has borne him a son and a daughter. He is a Democrat and has been highway commissioner in New Albion and overseer of the poor and highway commissioner in Persia.

Millen T. Hill was born in Geneseo, N. Y., Feb. 18, 1818. His grandfather came from Scotland and settled in Rhode Island, and afterward removed to Genesee county. An uncle of his mother, one Macmillan by name, bearing the title in his native country (Scotland) of Lord Sterling, was a member of the court-martial which tried and sentenced Major Andre. At the age of two years Millen T. Hill came to Cattaraugus county with his parents, who settled in what is now New Albion. Mr. Hill came to Lodi in 1827 and has been a resident of what is now the village of Gowanda ever since he learned the trade of cabinet maker in Lodi, which business he carried on many years. Afterward for a number of years he carried on the lumber business, purchasing a saw-mill on Thatcher brook which had been built by Phineas Spencer. In 1856 he began manufacturing cheese boxes. He married Patience, daughter of Willard and Ruth (Sisson) Slocum. They have one daughter, Jane, who married Jesse Walker, who, in July, 1889, fell from a building and died three weeks later.

George W. Howard was born in Norfolk county, England, in 1840. In 1856 he immigrated to this country, settling first in Gowanda, where he has since made his home. In 1868 he married Mary A., daughter of J. S. Pierce, of Persia. Her father removed to this county from Schoharie county, N. Y., and was a native of Bennington, Vt. George W. Howard has children Frank, Arthur, Georgie, Blanche, Bessie, Beatrice, Myrtle, and Hazel. In Sept., 1861, he enlisted in Co. A, 64th N. Y. Vol. Inf., from Gowanda, and was afterward transferred to the regimental band. He served in Hancock's Second Army Corps until discharged at the expiration of his three years' term of service. He has been commander of Darby Post, No. 359, G. A. R.

Lemuel S. Jenks, born in Covington, N. Y., about 1815, early became a teacher of common schools, and subsequently received the appointment and served as a guard in the prison at Auburn. He became a partner with William Sunderland, of Auburn, and sold dry goods and Yankee notions from his own conveyance on the road, which he continued until about the time of the completion of the Erie railroad in 1851. In 1840 he married Marietta Waldron, of Scipio, and soon after settled in Gowanda. He was supervisor of Persia from 1857 to 1868 inclusive.

August T. Johnson, born in Sweden in 1854, emigrated to America in 1872, and labored with the farmers seven years. From 1879 to 1892 he was engaged as a clerk in mercantile business. Feb. 10, 1892, he opened a grocery store in Gowanda, where he is now engaged. Feb. 44, 1882, he married Jennie, daughter of Rev. Harvey Totman, of Cassadaga, N. Y. Children: Floyd H., Elden V., and Edna Johanna.

John Kammerer, born in Baden, Germany, July 21, 1832, spent his boyhood in attending school and assisting in his father's grist-mill and brick-yard. At the age of seventeen he went to New Brezek, France, engaging as clerk in a general store and remaining two years, until the breaking out of the French Revolution. He returned to Baden, where, in 1852, he was drafted into the German army. He had six brothers and one sister. Four of the brothers were conscripted. John Kammerer remained in the service three months, when he came to the United States, landing in New York city in the fall of 1852. A few months later he removed to Buffalo, where he learned the trade of tinsmith. In 1856 he removed to Hamburg, Erie county, where he worked as a journeyman. In 1861 he started a tinware store and hardware trade at Langford, carrying on the business until 1868, when he removed to Gowanda and bought out the hardware business of J. H. Chaffee. In 1871 he sold this to C. H. Rich & Co., but bought it back again one year afterward, and since then he has carried on the business in the same store. In 1858 he married Regina Federspiel, a native of Buffalo, whose parents came to this country from Loraine, France. Children: Frank W., born in August, 1859, married Jennie, daughter of James Wilber, of Collins Center; Mary, born in 1861, married F. P. Boeschat, of Buffalo; and Tillie, born in 1864, married C. F. Rollinson. He has been for several years a member of the Board of Education.

Robert A. Kennicott was born in New Albion, July 5, 1863 (see page 842). He attended school in Chicago, his father having removed to that city. In 1877 the family returned to this county, where he attended the Chamberlain Institute at Randolph. In 1883 he established a grocery trade at New Albion, which he carried on two years. In 1885 he removed to Gowanda and commenced the manufacture of mineral waters, which business he still continues. He married, June 20, 1883, Cora, daughter of T. M. Whipple, of Little Valley. They have a son, Harry, born Jan. 2, 1885.

Alanson C. Keyes was born in Ludlow, Mass., Oct. 3, 1822. When nine years of age he removed with his parents to Ellicottville. His father located on a farm in Otto, where he remained twenty years, removing thence to Allegany. In 1847 Alanson went into the store of James Nutting in Randolph as a clerk, remaining until 1850, when he married Harriet Thompson, of Granville, N. Y., and formed a partnership with A. G. Dow in the hardware trade and manufacture of tinware in Ellicottville, which partnership continued one year. From Ellicottville Mr. Keyes removed to Allegany and commenced the same business on his own account, remaining until 1883, when he removed to Fredonia. In 1885 he removed to Gowanda and purchased the foundry and machine shops known as the Gowanda Agricultural Works, which he carries on in company with his son Samuel G. Besides this son, who was born Jan. 26, 1856, his children are Zelia (Mrs. Benjamin H. Green); Cora G.; Alfred C., who married Hannah, daughter of James Hermance; and Truman D., superintendent of the Gowanda Agricultural Works. Samuel G. Keyes married Jennie Phelps and in 1876 he engaged in the hardware and oil well supply business at Four Mile one year. He then spent a short time at the Albany Law School, after which he engaged with the Oil Well Supply Company (Limited), of Bradford, Pa., as book-keeper, and remained eighteen months. In 1881 he became cashier of Dow, Fullager & Coleman's Bank at Bradford, where he remained until 1884. In 1885 he became correspondent for the First National Bank of Bradford and continued until 1887, when he went to Mankato, Kan., and organized the First National Bank of Mankato; he was its cashier until July 1, 1890, when he came to Gowanda.

Alexander Little, a native of Vermont, removed to Otto from Nelson, N. Y., in 1822, the journey by horse and ox-teams occupying more than two weeks. Mr. Little's family then consisted of five sons and two daughters:

Margaret, Thomas, Harvey, Nelson, Milton, Lewis, and Jane. Margaret married Thomas Beverly and lived in Otto many years, removing to Gowanda, where both died. Thomas married Sarah Frye, of Collins, N. Y., a farmer who died July 11, 1890; her death occurred July 12, 1878. Harvey married Urania Botsford in Feb., 1836, and engaged in farming on forty acres of land in Otto, but ten years later removed to Toronto, Canada, where he learned the trade of millwright, which he carried on three years, when he returned to Otto and resumed farming. After the death of his wife in 1843 he again took up the business of a millwright on the Allegheny river, building a number of new mills and rebuilding many others. In 1849 he married Sarah M. Randall, a native of Madison county. By his first marriage two children were born: Catharine M., who married Ezra Eames, who died in Nov., 1889, and Eliza J., who married E. T. McCutcheon and resides on the homestead in Otto. In 1869 Mr. Little removed to Gowanda, where he has since lived in retirement. Nelson Little was engaged in the real estate business in Buffalo, where he died about 1864. Milton and Lewis emigrated to California and both died in Monterey. Jane married Marvin Wheat, a lawyer, of Cayuga county, who settled in St. Antonio, Texas. Since the first year of the Rebellion he has not been heard from. Mrs. Wheat still lives in St. Antonio. Alexander Little's wife was Catharine McKinney, who died in Feb., 1873. He died in 1852.

James Locke was born near Moravia, N. Y., Jan. 16, 1802. His father died when he was five years old, leaving a widow and eight children wholly dependent for support upon their own scant earnings. The early years of his life were consequently passed in a continued struggle with want. His entire attendance at school was less than six months, but he was taught to read and write by an elder brother, and when sixteen years old had acquired a fair common school education. He early developed a taste for the English classics, which he retained all his life, and few men in his locality were more conversant than he with the standard works of the language. Having served an apprenticeship with Allan Wood, of Sempronius, and mastered the carpenter's trade he was selected by Isaac W. Skinner when only twenty-two years of age to go to what was then known as Skinner hollow and build a grist-mill. Having finished this in the winter of 1824-25 he was engaged for a time as a journeyman at Buffalo, and in March, 1826, proceeded to Gowanda, then Lodi, where he bought some land of Thomas Farnsworth and erected a small foundry. He married, the following year, Lucinda, daughter of Philip Wheeler. A few years later Mr. Locke erected a larger establishment upon the site of the present foundry, where he carried on business for a time in connection with the late John L. Vosburg. Having been compelled by ill health to choose a different occupation he subsequently engaged in mercantile business with Amasa L. Chaffee and later with Clark White. Upon the death of Mr. White he retired from active business for a few years, but in 1853 erected a grist-mill and saw-mill about a mile south of Gowanda upon the property since purchased by Silas Vinton. In 1859 he disposed of this and never afterward engaged actively in business affairs. Mr. Locke was one of the men peculiar to his day and generation. He was a strict Presbyterian in belief and long connected with that church; an earnest temperance man, obeying the law and willing to act in enforcing obedience by others; decided in his ideas, prompt and energetic in action, intolerant of wrong; of sterling integrity, just in his dealings, sound in judgment, he had the confidence of the community. He died Aug. 27, 1872.

Lucius T. Luce, born in Barre, N. Y., April 13, 1813, married Mary Eliza beth Benson in Wyoming county, and in 1857 settled on the old Harrison Payne farm. He was a farmer in New Albion, Dayton, Persia, Little Valley, and Salamanca, and eventually gave his property to his son Obadiah, with whom he died in Dayton, Feb. 18, 1890. He was a member of the M. E. church. Mrs. Luce survives and resides in Dayton. E. Augustus Luce, their fourth child, was born in Washington county, March 6, 1846, and Aug. 22, 1864, enlisted in Co. A, 13th N. Y. H. A. He was in five general engagements and at the final evacuation of Petersburg. He was discharged Aug. 23, 1865. He was confined in the hospital six weeks with typhoid fever. Since his return he has been engaged in farming, market gardening, and fruit growing. Aug. 23, 1868, he married Esther A. Pickett, of Salamanca; children: Charles H., Joseph N., and Mary Luetta.

Frank L. Mattocks was born in Gerry, Chautauqua county, May 26, 1851, a son of Truman and Mary E. (Marsh) Mattocks. His father carried on the granite and marble business many years, first in Buffalo and afterward in Elington, Chautauqua county. He removed to Cattaraugus, where Frank L. commenced the business and worked with his father from the age of fifteen until twenty-four. Oct. 12, 1874, he married Mary H., daughter of Sheldon Foster, of Otto, and located at Gowanda, where he established his present granite and marble monumental works. His children are Eugene, born in Dec., 1885; Bessie, born in Dec., 1887; and Edna, born in Oct., 1889. Mr. Mattocks has served his town as supervisor since 1892.

Esek B. Nash was born in Herkimer county in Feb., 1800. In 1824 he settled in the southwest part of Persia on lot 59. He was a very prominent man and represented Persia on the Board of Supervisors for a long term of years, and also held other important town offices. Mr. Nash and his wife were members of the M. E. church and he was class-leader over forty years. He taught school in early life. About 1821 he married Marcella Brayton, of Poland, Herkimer county, and died on the homestead June 8, 1874. Mrs. Nash died June 1, 1879. Children: Ansel A., of Pine Valley; Almerin E., who died about 1863; Elvinton A., of Buffalo; and Oranon I., owner of a part of the homestead. May 13, 1862, the latter married Helen Sackett, of Cattaraugus, and settled on the farm where they now reside; children: Grace L., Minnie E., Georgia H., and Gertrude B. Mrs. Nash was a teacher and all her daughters except the youngest have followed the same calling.

Edward Overfield was born in this town Dec. 16, 1864. His parents were John and Carrie (Krohn) Overfield. Mr. Overfield, Sr., carried on a boot and shoe business in Gowanda many years. Edward Overfield for a number of years was a commercial traveler for B. T. Babbitt. He married Carrie M. Reppard, of Hamburg, Erie county, and in 1889 purchased the Union Hotel now conducted by John Cooper.

Thomas J. Parker, a native of Junius, Seneca county, was born Aug. 17, 1813. In 1823 he removed with his parents to Hamburg, Erie county, where he lived until 1830, when he came to Lodi, now Gowanda. His first business here was an apprenticeship to the tailor's trade with his brother, Francis B. Parker. After three years he assumed the business and carried it on until 1861, when he entered the army as colonel of the 64th N. Y. Vol. Inf. The 64th Regiment was organized in 1853 with Thomas J. Parker as colonel, and at the breaking out of the Rebellion Colonel Parker addressed a communication to the adjutant-general of the State, tendering the services of the organization, which were duly accepted. On the 28th of August Colonel Parker pro ceeded to Elmira, where he was assigned enlistment quarters by General Van Valkenburgh at barrack No. 3. On the 25th of November he was commissioned by Governor Edwin D. Morgan colonel of the 64th Regt. N. Y. S. Vols. with rank from Nov. 13, 1861. The regiment was ordered to the front on the 10th of Dec., 1861, and on the 13th Colonel Parker was, by special orders, constituted provisional brigade commander of the 64th, 57th, 85th, 89th, and one Massachusetts regiment. On the 7th of Jan., 1862, the 64th was transferred to Gen. O. O. Howard's brigade of Richardson's division of Sumner Corps. A full account of the 64th Regiment will be found in Chapter XV. The Olean Advertiser of June 19, 1862, anent the battle of Fair Oaks, says:

"Colonel Parker has shown himself to be a brave, intrepid commander, and his abilities were acknowledged on the field of battle by being assigned to the command of the First Brigade of General Richardson's division. Captain Kenwick is hearty and emphatic in his praises of Colonel Parker for coolness, courage, and military skill upon the battlefield. He says Colonel Parker has no superiors and few equals in the division to which he is attached for all the requisites of a competent leader. The men of the 64th won for themselves at Fair Oaks the thanks of their commanding officers and covered themselves with honor. The county of Cattaraugus, through her stalwart sons in this regiment, has with her best blood written upon our nation's history her abhorrence of this wicked, devilish rebellion. The men of the 64th will do their duty. All honor to the glorious 64th! All honor to its commanding officer, Col. T. J. Parker!"

Sept. 2, 1841, Colonel Parker married Lavina H., daughter of Stephen Hooker, of Perrysburg. They had six children: Ellen L., born Feb. 15, 1843, who married Mortimer W. Stuart, of Gowanda; Loretta A., born Feb. 20, 1845, who married Lafayette Van Ostrand, of Buffalo; Clara A., born Nov. 11, 1847, died Sept. 14, 1848; Marcus W., born July 15, 1849, who married Josephine Hughes, and resides in Chicago; Henry A., born Oct. 10, 1856, died Dec. 3, 1861; and George W., born June 30, 1863, of Silver Creek, who married Alice Graves. Colonel Parker held the office of justice of the peace for Persia from 1852 for thirty years. He was deputy county clerk from March 6, 1871, for three years under William W. Welch, and in the Legislature of 1872-73 he was deputy clerk of the Assembly. No man now living in Cattaraugus county has been longer or more prominently identified with military affairs than has Colonel Parker. From the interesting period of general trainings to long after the Rebellion he was active in almost every movement.

Dorus Payne, son of Stephen and Sally (Angell) Payne, was born July 10, 1805. He married Catherine Smith, June 10, 1829, and soon after came to Cattaraugus county and settled on Snyder hill in New Albion. In 1840 he sold his farm and moved to the farm now occupied by his son, Sheldon A. Payne, in Persia, where he died April 6, 1890. Mrs. Payne died Oct. 16, 1889. Children: Nancy Emeline, born Sept. 27, 1832, married Henry F. Ackler, June 10, 1855, deceased; Clarissa M., born April 13, 1839, married Gilbert Milk, and resides in New Albion; William H. H., born Sept. 13, 1844, died July 4, 1848; Alvira D., born May 12, 1848, married, June 9, 1879, Z. T. Jenks, and resides at Allen's Switch in Persia; Electa T., born April 28, 1850, married Judson Herrick, and resides in Binghamton; and Sheldon A., born March 3, 1835. In 1854 the latter went across the isthmus to California and was a miner until the Rebellion broke out in 1861, when he enlisted in the 6th Cal. Vols., being discharged in Dec., 1865. He was wounded by a minie-ball Aug. 7, 1864. In March, 1877, he returned and resides on the homestead.

Charles S. Phelps, son of Dudley (see page 440), was born in Allegany, Oct. 31, 1858, was educated in the public schools and at Alfred University in Allegany county, and taught school in Broome and Cattaraugus counties three years. In 1878 he entered the drug store of Dr. A. W. Bullock at Allegany. In 1881 he engaged in the same business with Moore & Smith, of Dunkirk, where he remained five months. From there he went to Olean with

J. B. Smith, druggist. Jan. 1, 1884, he became a partner with Dr. J. V. D. Coon at Olean, and a year and a half later he removed to Gowanda and purchased the drug business of Clark & Horton, which he still continues. Jan. 13, 1885, he married Carrie D., daughter of Dr. J. V. D. Coon. Children: Paula M., born Feb. 25, 1886, and Helen C., born Oct. 28, 1888.

William H. Press was born in Nunda, N. Y., Oct. 8, 1830, where he resided with his parents until 1834, when they removed to Erie, Pa. Seven years afterward the family removed to Persia, where William H. has since resided. He was a farmer and dealer in horses until 1871, when he removed to Collins, Erie county, and settled within the corporation of Gowanda. He continued farming and dealing in horses until May, 1888, when he started the business of undertaker in the Erie county portion of the village. Nov. 6, 1850, he married Harriet, daughter of Amos Pearsons, of Collins; children: May, born May 1, 1852; Ida, born May 6, 1857; and an adopted son, Bartlett.

Joseph Rich, born in Onondaga county about 1801, married there Phebe Snyder, and there their first five children were born. In 1825 they came to the south part of Persia, where their primitive log-house was warmed by a Dutch fireplace. Mr. Rich died aged sixty-three; Mrs. Rich survived him about three years. Children: Susan, who died aged ten; Merritt, a farmer on the homestead; Leonard (deceased); Abbott (deceased); Mary (Mrs. Humphrey), who died in Iowa; Amanda (Mrs. James Easterly), of Cattaraugus; Betsey (Mrs. Alson Brownell), of Persia; Wilder, and Wilber (twins); and James H. James H. Rich, born Dec. 19, 1839, was a farmer on the homestead, and July 10, 1862, married Emma E., daughter of Jesse Johnson, who was born Aug. 8, 1845. Mr. Rich came to an untimely death by being thrown from a loaded wagon Oct. 24, 1865.

Leander Ridout was born Oct. 25, 1836, and was raised a farmer. Feb. 8, 1863, he married Esther, daughter of Augustus Snyder. In 1864 they settled in Persia and in 1866 he purchased the farm at Snyder's corners where he still resides. Mrs. Ridout died Jan. 20, 1890. June 8, 1891, he married Clara Pulse.

Nicholas Schaack, a native of Luxemburg, Germany, emigrated to America when nineteen years of age and settled in Langford, N. Y., where with his brother he opened a merchant tailoring establishment in 1847. In 1850 he removed to Gowanda and was a journeyman tailor employed by Samuel Warner until 1856. He then removed to Berlin, Wis., where he pursued his trade. About 1862 he returned to Gowanda, and was a partner of Jonathan Potter. In 1870 Mr. Potter retired and in 1872 Mr. Schaack and A. W. W. Chaffee consolidated their business under the firm name of Chaffee & Schaack. In 1877 his son, Joseph H. Schaack, purchased the interest of Mr. Chaffee and was with him until the death of the father Aug. 25, 1880. In 1854 Mr. Schaack married Eve, daughter of Adam Toepp, of Langford, N. Y.; she died in July, 1885. Children: Joseph H., born in May, 1856, who married, Oct. 4, 1876, Ada, daughter of William A. Fish, of Gowanda, and has children Helen (born in April, 1881) and Ralph (born in 1883); Emma M., born in 1860, who married I. R. Leonard, of Gowanda; and Albert G., born in 1867, a dry goods merchant who began business in Oct., 1886. In Oct., 1890, the latter sold his goods to his brother-in-law, I. R. Leonard, and was a clerk in Buffalo until Aug., 1891. In October following he re-opened his present dry goods store. Joseph H. Schaack was supervisor of Persia in 1888.

William T. Smallwood, a native of York, England, came with his parents to this country when four years of age and settled in northern Pennsylvania, whence he subsequently removed to Wyoming county, N. Y., where he and his wife both died. William T. Smallwood came to Gowanda at an early date, and in company with Titus Roberts carried on an extensive tannery several years. He was afterward engaged in the boot and shoe business until his death in 1871. His wife was Flotilla, daughter of Titus Roberts, who died in 1878. Children: Charles and Freddie (who died in infancy), Mary C., and William R. The latter was born Jan. 26, 1856, and June 27, 1878, he married Blanche, daughter of Dr. Horace Babcock. Mr. Smallwood is of a very ingenious turn of mind and invented and manufactured an eight-day sixteen-dial clock, which he finished Sept. 1, 1886.

George Snyder married a Miss Kelley and with his family settled in the south part of Persia in 1825. He died in Sept., 1844. He was one of the most prominent of the early settlers. Augustus Snyder, his son, was born May 5, 1806, came to New Albion with his father, and with his brothers Horace, Benjamin, and Harry settled on Snyder hill, which was named in their honor. He subsequently sold out and in 1846 removed to the place where his son Horace now lives, where he died Nov. 17, 1872. April 4, 1832, he married Ann, daughter of Jacob Rich, who was born Feb. 3, 1814, and who died Dec. 31, 1890. Mr. Snyder served as justice of the peace from about 1856 until his death. Children: Elliott, Esther, Homer, and Emogene. Elliott was born on Snyder hill April 30, 1833, was educated in the common schools and at Gowanda Academy, and has been a farmer and dealer in cattle and horses. He is also breeding fine horses and cattle for market. He is a Democrat and has served as assessor, highway commissioner, and justice of the peace. March 6, 1871, he married Mary, daughter of Almond Brown, of Mansfield.

Hon. William Henry Stuart was a son of Warren and Mary Ann (Wolcott) Stuart and was born in Chaumont, Jefferson county, May 2, 1820. In his veins ran the proudest blood Scotland ever knew and among his ancestors were a signer of the Declaration of Independence and a governor of Connecticut. His brothers and sisters were Elisha S., Roger Wolcott, and Samuel M. and Esther, Adeline, Maria, and Amelia. Mr. Stuart's education was limited to the common schools, but he early developed a passion for literature which he retained throughout his life. By a wide range of reading and careful observation he stored his capacious mind and retentive memory with lore beyond the ken of the average college graduate. He went to Michigan in 1830 and remained a year, when he returned to Rochester and worked a year in a printing office. Going again to Michigan in 1834 he went to work on a farm owned by a relative, receiving forty acres of land for a year's labor. Returning east he acquired the mysteries of woolen manufacturing and eventually established himself in that business. With his brother Samuel he engaged in woolen manufacturing in Wheatland, Monroe county, where he remained a few years, when, in 1840, he and his brother removed hither and established a woolen factory in Gowanda, then Lodi. Here he married, Jan. 27, 1842, Barbara Allen, daughter of Ahaz Allen, the pioneer of Hidi. She was born Oct. 2, 1822, and died Sept. 14, 1861, having borne five children: Eber, who died Oct. 2, 1858; Maude, who died Feb. 2, 1881; Alice (Mrs. Charles Blackney), of Kalamazoo, Mich.; Cora (Mrs. Constantine Blackney), of Gowanda; and Glenn D., of Kalamazoo, Mich. Mr. Stuart married, second, July 1, 1863, Mrs. Jane (Popple) Davis, of Collins, Erie county, who survives him. He was engaged in farming at Collins and at Hidi during the life of his first wife and moved to Gowanda village in 1863, where he resided until his death on June 30, 1893. He was always intensely and actively interested in politics. In 1865-66 he was librarian of the State Senate and in 1869 was elected member of Assembly, where he served one term. Shortly afterward he was appointed postmaster of Gowanda, which position he held five years. He was frequently a delegate to conventions and was one of the best posted men on county, State, and National politics in New York State. Originally a liberal Democrat he joined the Republicans in 1860 and was thereafter a staunch supporter of the principles of that party. He was also a Mason. Mr. Stuart's mind was of a decidedly literary bent. Had he devoted himself to literature he would have taken a high rank in that profession. Many of his productions were heavily freighted with historical data, and his political articles commanded wide influence. For forty years he contributed regularly to the local newspaper, of which he had at one time full editorial charge. As a poet he wielded a graceful pen and drank often at the Pierian spring. He possessed a phenomenally retentive memory and a great love for his fellow man. He was charitable, kind hearted, and honest and commanded the respect and confidence of all with whom he came in contact.

Stiles Clay Torrance, son of Stiles A. and Lydia C. (Southwick) Torrance, was born at Hidi, Nov. 22, 1843, and worked on his father's farm at Point Peter until sixteen years of age. In 1860 he went to Tinker's Creek, Ohio, and engaged in raising broom corn and the manufacture of brooms, which he carried on two years. Aug. 11, 1862, he enlisted in the 103d Ohio Vol. Inf. for three years. He was in the siege of Knoxville and with Sherman in his campaign from Chattanooga to Atlanta. After the regiment reached Atlanta the Twenty-third Corps, with which the 103d was connected, fell back to Nashville. After the battle at Nashville the Twenty-third, under command of General Schofield, was transferred to Fort Fisher and from that point fought their way up the Cape Fear river to Wilmington, whence they were transferred to Newberne. Thence they fought to Goldsborough, up the cape, and to Salisbury, where they received their discharge. After the close of the war Mr. Torrance was engaged in farming one year and then went to Wyoming territory and spent a year and a half in gold mining, returning to this State via California and the isthmus. Nov. 22, 1871, he married Myra S., daughter of William and Rachel (Healey) Smith, of Collins, Erie county. Children: Stiles A., born Sept. 10, 1872; William M., born April 4, 1874, graduated from Gowanda Academy at the age of fourteen; Lucy, born April 14, 1876; Chester, born Dec. 7, 1877; Rachel, born Aug. 15, 1886; a child born July 27, 1890.

Oliver B. Van Deusen was born in Sprout Brook, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1825. His father, a native of Great Barrington, Mass., possessed a large farm, carried on the wool-carding and cloth-dressing business, and had a large saw-mill. Oliver B., when nine years of age, went to live with his brother at Pike, Wyoming county, making the journey by wagon and afterward a number of other trips by the Erie canal before the building of the New York Central railroad. Six years afterward he returned to the homestead. He attended the district schools and the Cherry Valley Academy and taught in the schools of his neighborhood until 1851. January 2d of that year he married Barbara, daughter of David C. Winne, of Cherry Valley, and with his wife removed to Pike and carried on a large business in the manufacture of lumber, sash, doors, blinds, and cooperage until 1866, when he rented his factory and removed to Rochester, where he engaged in the manufacture of iron planes one year. In 1867 he again returned to Pike, engaging in general merchandising and also purchased one of the first creameries in Wyoming county. He continued the mercantile business until 1877, when he engaged in farming. In 1880 he sold the store. In 1881 he removed to Gowanda, clerking one year for Harry N. Hooker. In 1882 he engaged in the coal trade with his son, J. E. Van Deusen, which they carried on together until 1887. He was also a partner in the Gowanda Fruit Evaporating Company. In 1887 he purchased the interest of Henry Machmer, of the firm of Machmer & Yaw, merchant tailors. Children: James Eugene; Kittie Arabella (deceased); Carrie E., born Dec. 11, 1861, who married Palmer H. Horton; and Allen W., born Nov. 24, 1866.

James Eugene Van Deusen was born at East Pike, N. Y., Sept. 22, 1851. In 1866 he removed with his parents to Rochester, where he attended the public schools. Returning in 1867 to East Pike he entered his father's store as clerk, and in 1869 he went to Allegany as clerk in the office of the Erie railway. Here he remained until 1871, when he accepted the position of agent for the Buffalo, New York & Philadelphia railroad at South Wales, Erie county. Eleven months later he was given the agency at Holland on the same road and in 1873 he accepted the position of agent of the Buffalo & Southwestern railroad at North Collins, Erie county, and afterward at Lawton's, Collins, and Gowanda, where he has held the position since Oct. 24, 1874. Mr. Van Deusen married Ella M., daughter of Harry N. Hooker, of Gowanda. Children: Harry H., born July 9, 1876; George B., born Sept. 20, 1878; Ward W., born Nov. 25, 1880; and Julia E., born March 4, 1889. Mr. Van Deusen has been president of the village, vice-president of the Bank of Gowanda, president of the Board of Education, a trustee of the Presbyterian church, one of the original promoters of the Gowanda Water Works Company, and a member of the Gowanda Fruit Evaporating Company and the Gowanda Printing and Manufacturing Company.

Silas Vinton was born in Villenova, Chautauqua county, April 20, 1824. He was the son of John Vinton, who came into western New York in 1810 from Massachusetts and settled in Villenova in 1812, and died in 1829, leaving a widow and six children. His mother was a daughter of William Welch, of Connecticut, who was a Baptist preacher and preached on one charge for sixty-five years, commencing at twenty-one; he died aged eighty-six. The mother did all in her power to give her children an education and Silas left home when fourteen years of age to work one year for his clothes and three months' schooling. At the age of nineteen he commenced teaching and taught six terms. At the age of twenty-four he married Louisa A. Carr, of Cherry Creek, who was the mother of Frank C. and J. Platt Vinton, now of Gowanda. He resided in Rock county, Wis., from 1846 to 1850, and was superintendent of schools while there four years. He then returned to Cherry Creek, where he entered into mercantile business. He was elected superintendent of schools and served six years, was chosen supervisor of the town for five years and was chairman of the Board of Supervisors of Chautauqua county the last term, and was postmaster at Cherry Creek ten years. In 1874 he moved to Gowanda and has served Persia on the Board of Supervisors five years. He was one of the directors of the Buffalo & Southwestern railroad during its construction, and received and still holds the first pass issued by the officers of the road. He has been engaged in mercantile business over thirty years. He has been the contractor and builder of a great many of the large buildings in Chautauqua and Cattaraugus counties, having built the Chautauqua county insane asylums, poor house, and barns at a cost of nearly $60,000, the insane asylum at Machias, the Cattaraugus county jail at Little Valley, and many of the largest and best buildings at Gowanda. He married, second, in 1884, Miss Mary Dawson, of Gowanda. Frank C. has been supervisor of Persia six years.

William W. Welch was born in Gowanda, Nov. 25, 1835. He married Frances E. Swift, July 5, 1860, and was clerk of Cattaraugus county one term beginning Jan. 1, 1871. He was also supervisor of Little Valley in 1875. He has served in public capacities with eminent ability. The family has been prominent in the history of northwestern Cattaraugus as well as in Gowanda, and in every position its members have been distinguished citizens.

Martin H. Woodin, son of Homer and Vashti (Beckwith) Woodin, was born in Otto, Sept. 1, 1831, and received such educational advantages as the primitive schools of his district afforded. He has always been a farmer and owns a farm in Leon, where he lived twenty years. He is a staunch Republican. Sept. 17, 1856, he married Ruth S., daughter of Hiram and Mahala Pratt, of Otto. Children; Jennie, born in 1858, married William Garven, and resides on the homestead in Leon; and Claribell, born in 1869.

CHAPTER XLIII.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF PORTVILLE.

PORTVILLE is situated in the southeast corner of the county and is bounded on the north by Hinsdale, on the east by Allegany county, on the south by Pennsylvania, and on the west by Olean. Its territory is comprised in township 1 and the south half of township 2 of the third range of the Holland purchase, and contains an area of 23,106 acres. It is drained by the Allegheny river and its tributary brooks. Of these Oswayo creek enters the town from Pennsylvania and flows northeasterly; Dodge creek from the east empties into the river at Portville village; and Haskel creek from the north enters the river near Weston's Mills. Wolf run, in the northeastern part and tributary to Haskel creek, is a considerable stream. The Allegheny river enters the town about midway on its southern boundary and flows north and northwesterly through a broad and beautiful valley.

The surface of the town is hilly and rough except the valleys along the streams, which are level and very fertile. On the highlands in the northern part the soil is susceptible of profitable cultivation, but in the southeastern part it is so mountainous and broken that it has few inhabitants. Its highest hills are from 500 to 600 feet above the valleys.

As near as can be ascertained William, Asahel, and Rufus Pinkerton were the first permanent settlers in Portville. William, the most prominent of these brothers, settled on the east bank of the Allegheny just below the mouth of Oswayo creek in 1809, and built a saw-mill the next year on the creek about forty rods below the site of Smith's mills. Asahel and Rufus removed farther west in 1819. William remained and died in town. Contracts for land in township 1 were made by the Pinkertons, John Young, Jacob Swartz, Daniel Edwards, John Holdrich, Simeon Munson, Samuel Todd, Richard Frayer, Isaac Phelps, Ira Higgins, Daniel Church, Daniel McKay, Reuben Clark, and James Green in 1806, but we are unable to learn of a settlement being made in Portville earlier than 1809. Gideon Haskel and his brother-in-law, Mr. Hill, came in 1810 and settled in the western part of the town on the creek which bears Mr. Haskel's name. They built a saw-mill on this stream a short distance above, where the railroad crosses, the same year. The next year Mr. Haskel built a frame house, the first one erected in town.

John Morris came in 1813 and was the first settler on the site of the village of Portville. He removed from Olean, where he had arrived in 1811, an unsettled young man and a native of Rhode Island. He was an adventurer who had been on Blannerhasset's Island with Aaron Burr and had served in General Shelby's command of Kentuckians in Mad Anthony's campaign against the Indians. In 1814 his son, Rev. Dexter Morris, was born, his birth being the first in Portville of which there is any record. Mr. Morris soon sold his improvements to the Dodges and joined his wife's people in Ohio. He returned again to the valley of the Allegheny river and opened a tavern, and, as his son said of him, "kept tavern all along the Allegheny river from Olean to Pittsburg." The Dodge brothers came the same year, and from them Dodge creek received its name.

Allen Rice was a resident of Portville as early as 1818, as he built the first dam across the Allegheny river at Weston's Mills in that year. Dennis Warner came from Ontario county to Olean in 1816 and was a salesman for Judge Martin in his store until 1819, when he became the owner of a saw-mill on the opposite bank of the river from that of Allen Rice's, which was furnished water-power from the same dam. Luman Rice, a brother of Allen, settled in Olean in 1817 and was there a hotel keeper until about 1822, when he removed to Portville. Joel, Jonathan, Enoch, and Alpheus Wakefield settled in 1832 on Haskel creek in the northwest part of the town, and became thrifty farmers and prominent townsmen. Alpheus was supervisor of Portville in 1839-42 and 1850. Several representatives of this family reside in the neighborhood. Rodolphus Scott and Alfred Dodge settled in the vicinity about the same time. The settlement of the town increased very slowly until after the advent of Wheeler, Dusenbury & Co. in 1834-35. Mr. Dusenbury and Mr. Wheeler were then young and very enterprising and gave employment to a large force of men. At that time there was little or no attention given to the Sabbath day, and with very few exceptions everybody drank whisky. They determined to raise the standard of morals, and for a period of over forty years the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage has been prohibited by law in the town.

Portville remained a part of Olean until April 27, 1837, when, by act of the Legislature, that part of Olean composed of township 1 and the south half of township 2 of range three was erected into the town of Portville. March 6, 1838, the first town meeting was held at the house of Luman Rice in the village of Portville. The meeting was called to order by William Wales, a justice of the peace. Luman Rice was chosen moderator and Isaac Senter and Harvey D. May were poll clerks. The meeting then adjourned to the district school house and there elected the first set of officers: Supervisor, Luman Rice; town clerk, Addison J. Wheeler; assessors, Lemuel Smith, Harvey D. May, Alpheus Wakefield; commissioners of highways, Ezra May, Smith Parish, Joseph Crandall; collector, Henry T. Leighton; constables, Charles C. Jewell, Henry T. Leighton, Harlow M. Hopkins; commissioners of common schools, Henry Dusenbury, Walter Ray, Darius Wheeler; inspectors of common schools, Lemuel Smith, Harvey D. May, Ambrose P. Willard; justices of the peace, Smith Parish, Stanton H. Laing, Olcott P. Boardman; sealer of weights and measures, Addison J. Wheeler; overseers of highways, Henry Terry, Albert Burdick, Clark Lillibridge, Gardner Coon, Amos Scofield, Barzilla Scofield, Rodolphus Scott; overseers of the poor, Isaac Senter, John Conrad. The principal town officers have been as follows:

Supervisors.—Luman Rice, 1838; Alpheus Wakefield, 1839-42, 1850; Henry Dusenbury, 1843-44, 1846, 1853-54, 1857; John Meddaugh, 1845; David Bockes, 1847, 1851; Lemuel Smith, 1848; Henry T. Leighton, 1849; Smith Parish, 1852; Samuel J. Mersereau, 1855-56; Lewis D. Warner, 1858-61, 1869-73, 1879; G. T. Lowry, 1862; John G. Mersereau, 1863; John E. Dusenbury, 1864-68, 1874-78; Martin Link, 1880-81; William E. Wheeler, 1882-86, 1888; Frank E. Tyler, 1887, 1890; W. B. Mersereau, 1889, 1891-93.

Town Clerks.—Addison J. Wheeler, 1838; Isaac Senter, 1839-40, 1842; Addison J. Wheeler, 1841; Harlow M. Hopkins, 1843; William Wales, 1844-60; Orson S. Keyes, 1861; Henry C. Scofield, 1862-64; J. M. Copp, 1865; John H. Warden, 1866-76; H. J. Crandall, 1877-93.

Justices of the Peace.—Smith Parish, Stanton H. Laing, Olcott P. Boardman, 1838; Isaac Senter, Luman Rice, 1839; William Wales, David Coon, 1840; James R. Barnes, Darius Wheeler, 1841; John Meddaugh, Thomas Shelly, 1842; Smith Parish, David Bockes, 1843; William Wales, Charles C. Jewell, 1844; James R. Barnes, 1845; Alpheus Wakefield, 1846; David Bockes, Leonard Anson, 1847; William Wales, Harlow M. Hopkins, 1848; John Meddaugh, 1849; Harlow M. Hopkins, 1850; Norman Wheaton, 1851; Willis M. Howe, 1852; Mark Comstock, William Wales, 1853; John L. Smith, Harlow M. Hopkins, Lewis D. Warner, 1854; John Sanderson, 1855; Willis M. Howe, Joseph Crandall, 1856; Lewis D. Warner, Willis M. Howe, Adam T. Warden, 1857; Lewis D. Warner, Willis M. Howe, Andrew D. Rice, 1858; Adam T. Warden, Asa E. Halbert, Oliver B. Langworthy, 1859; Guy T. Lowry, 1860; Oliver B. Langworthy, 1861; Lewis D. Warner, 1862; Adam T. Warden, Atwood Fales, 1863; Schuyler M. Gaston, 1864; Oliver B. Langworthy, 1865; Atwood Fales, William E. Hornblower, 1866; Mark Comstock, Allen Sherman, 1867; S. M. Gaston, Adam T. Warden, Willis M. Howe, 1868; William E. Hornblower, Guy T. Lowry, 1869; Henry Conrad, 1870; Guy T. Lowry, Lewis D. Warner, 1871; Schuyler M. Gaston, H. D. Bennie, 1872; H. B. Smith, W. W. Weston, 1873; A. G. Packard, Jacob Bedford, 1874; Guy T. Lowry, Lewis D. Warner, 1875; E. M. Bedford, 1876; John Millgate, 1877; A. G. Packard, 1878; Guy T. Lowry, 1878 to 1887, 1889 to 1893; Oliver B. Langworthy, 1878 to 1893; A. G. Packard, 1880 to 1884; A. J. Armstrong, 1882 to 1886; Dexter Wakefield, 1887 to 1890; R. F. Main, 1887 to 1889; N. C. Hitchcock, 1888 to 1893; H. C. Holcomb, 1892 to 1893.

Like the other townships situated in the valley of the Allegheny river Portville has been a lumber town, and being located at or near the head of navigation by rafts it became something of a port, hence the name of the village, which became the name of the township when it was set off from Olean in 1837. Lumber manufacturing, mainly of hemlock, is quite extensively carried on at the present time by Mersereau & Co., at Gordon's mills, and at Weston's Mills. The output, though somewhat diminished, is still high in the millions of feet. Agriculture receives the attention of the people along the valleys of the river and Haskel creek and their tributaries.

The only thoroughfare which entered the town of Portville until 1856 or 1857 was the Allegheny river. The Genesee Valley canal was completed to Olean in 1856, and by the great energy and influence of the late Hon. John G. Mersereau, who devoted his time and talents to its accomplishment, the canal was extended to the little hamlet of Mill Grove, which gave to Portville quite an advantage over Olean in the carrying trade until it was abandoned in 1878. In 1874 the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad was completed and this gives to the inhabitants good transportation facilities.

The village of Portville is situated southeast of the center of the town, on the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad, at the mouth of Dodge creek, on the Allegheny river, and on the Lackawanna & Pittsburg (narrow gauge) railroad. It is a pleasant village of 600 or 800 inhabitants and contains the immense tannery of the Wheelers and Dusenburys, the lumber mills of Mersereau & Co., two churches, three hotels, a Union Free School, a postoffice, seven or eight stores, and the usual complement of mechanics.

Mill Grove is a hamlet on the river and on the railroad one mile south of Portville. The Genesee Valley canal terminated at this place. Jonathan Dodge owned the site in 1820.

Main Settlement is the name of a neighborhood in the southeastern part of the town, where the Seventh Day Baptist church is located. It was named in honor of its early settler, James S. Main. It contains, besides the church, a school house, about a dozen dwellings, and a station on the narrow gauge railroad. Near here is Carroll postoffice, which was established June 17, 1892, with A. Van Brunt as postmaster.

Weston's Mills is a post village on the Allegheny river and Western New York & Pennsylvania and Lackawanna & Pittsburg railroads. It was founded by the Weston brothers in 1851 and built on the site of Allegany village, plotted by Allen Rice, which never appeared except on paper. Since the Weston brothers came here and prosecuted their immense lumber business it has grown gradually until it now contains a population of 450. The manufacturing interests are Weston Brothers' lumber-mills and a kindling-wood manufactory conducted by Ezer Borst. It also contains a neat Union church, a general store, a school house, a blacksmith shop, and the necessary mechanics.

Portville is divided into ten school districts with a school house in each. The schools the past year were attended by 587 scholars. The entire expense of maintenance was $5,155.62. The valuation of property taxable for school purposes is $610,309 and the school houses and sites are valued at $9,815.

The Portville Union Free School was organized August 17, 1881. The first Board of Trustees was composed of J. E. Dusenbury, W. E. Wheeler, E. M. Bedford, Wallace Sibley, and L. D. Warner. In March, 1882, the academic department was organized and placed under the supervision of the Regents of the University of the State. The large wooden school building has recently been repaired and repainted. The library contains about 800 volumes. The school is attended by about 250 pupils. The principals since the organization have been Elbert Place, 1881; R. C. Lennon from 1882 to June, 1883; Miss Christina Lennon to June, 1885; and W. H. Smith since 1885. The present trustees are J. E. Dusenbury, William E. Wheeler, H. J. Crandall, J. H. Fairchild, and L. D. Warner; the teachers are W. H. Smith (principal), Julia Flint, Mamie Meddaugh, and Effie Flint.

The Portville leather manufactory, the great industry of the town, had its inception in 1849, when Mark Comstock erected upon its site a tannery with a capacity of 500 hides per year. This was operated by Mr. Comstock for six years, when C. K. Wright was his partner two years and then became sole owner. In 1858 Mr. Wright rebuilt and enlarged the works, applied steam-power, and manufactured 10,000 hides annually. He continued the business, and most of the time with partners, until 1887. In 1862 the firm of Wright & Munson enlarged the capacity to 20,000 hides per year. In 1870 the firm of William F. Wheeler & Co. succeeded J. & H. H. Clark, and was associated with Mr. Wright under the firm name of Wright, Wheeler & Co. This firm soon after admitted as partners B. F. Thompson & Co., of Boston, Mass., the firm name now being William F. Wheeler & Co., Mr. Wright having retired in 1886. In 1875 the tannery was again enlarged and the business increased to 40,000 sides of finished leather annually. Previous to this the finishing had been done in Boston. They tan and finish 2,000 sides weekly and also finish 1,600 sides per week at their tannery in Hickory, Pa. The firm employs 150 men. The members of the company, the sons of Henry Dusenbury and William F. Wheeler, have, besides their tanneries, extensive timber lands and lumber business in Pennsylvania, are bankers in Olean, and are large oil producers.

The Portville mills were built by J. H. Fairchild, the present proprietor, in 1884 in Portville village. The motive power is steam and the mill contains three runs of stone. The capacity is 500 bushels of grain per day. He also has a steam shingle-mill which turns out 500,000 shingles annually.

Hotton Brothers' warehouse and feed-mill were erected by them in 1891 on the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad in Portville village. The former has a storage capacity of 20,000 bushels of grain. The firm also conducts a general grocery store.

Gordon's mills are located a mile and a quarter northwest of Portville village on the Allegheny river. The first mills were built on the site in 1867 by Luther Gordon and entirely rebuilt in 1885. The motive power is steam. The capacity is 30,000 feet of lumber daily. About 25 men are employed.

The A. Weston Lumber Company's mills are situated in the village of Weston's Mills, on the Allegheny, which furnishes a part of the motive power. The firm built a dam across the Allegheny and an entire new mill, on or near the site of the mill erected by Allen Rice, in 1851-52. A few years later they added planing and matching and shingle-mills, and still later a circular saw for sawing dimension timber. They also have a kindling-wood factory, which utilizes the waste from the saws. The yearly output ranges from 10,000,000 to 17,000,000 feet of lumber. They employ from 100 to 150 men.

The E. Borst Wood Company, of Weston's Mills, manufactures kindling wood from refuse timber. The mills contain fifteen presses and give employment to twelve men. Ezer Borst is the proprietor.

In 1829 the Holland Land Company deeded to the Methodist Episcopal church 100 acres of land, being the south part of lot 7, township one, range three. This deed is now in the possession of C. W. Van Wart. The trustees named in it were James Brooks, Darrar Swain, Luman Rice, Dennis Warner, and Dennis Lamberton. A society was formed in 1831 which consisted of Smith Parish, Joshua T. Mason, John Wolcott, Delia Wright, Olive McCormick, Clarissa Warner, Marcia Boardman, and Amy Dodge and two sisters. The only survivor of this little band is Mrs. Delia Wright. Meetings were held in the school house near Gordon's mills with Smith Parish as class-leader, and later at this place and also at Mill Grove, where Mrs. Samuel Smith acted as class-leader. The church was duly incorporated December 23, 1844, and in 1846 a house of worship was erected at a cost of $1,500 and with a seating capacity of 450. The same edifice is still in use and with the grounds, etc., is valued at $6,000. The society has 135 members under the pastoral charge of Rev. J. W. Barnett. The Sunday school has 164 scholars.

The First Presbyterian church of Portville, in the Presbytery of Buffalo, was organized June 17, 1849, at a meeting of which Rev. Sylvester Cowles was moderator and Asa E. Halbert was clerk. The first members were Henry and Caroline Dusenbury, William F. and Flora Wheeler, Adam T. Warden, Lucinda Comstock, William and Mary Ann Larabee, Gilman and Lucy Sander-son, and Caroline Gleason. Henry Dusenbury and A. T. Warden were elected elders. The Lord's Supper was first celebrated September 9, 1849, by Rev. Mr. Hammond, of Angelica. The first pastor, Rev. Sylvester Cowles, began his ministry as early as June, 1850, and continued until February, 1853. The next pastor, Rev. J. A. Woodruff, remained nearly two years and was succeeded by Rev. C. Kidder, who was here about eight months. In 1856 Rev. E. H. Taylor came and remained about two years. In October, 1858, Rev. I. G. Ogden assumed the pastorate and officiated nine years, being succeeded by Rev. O. Myrick, who remained a year and a half. Rev. J. E. Tinker came in the spring of 1870 and officiated until April 3, 1881. The next pastor was Rev. F. W. Fisher, who remained until October 23, 1885, and was succeeded by the present one, Rev. Samuel W. Clark. April 1, 1886, there were ninety-two members, the present number being 202. The first clerk of the church was A. T. Warden, whose successors were Henry Dusenbury, H. M. Hopkins, C. K. Wright, Rev. J. E. Tinker, and Rev. F. W. Fisher. Since October 23, 1885, E. G. Dusenbury has kept the records. The elders are William F. Wheeler, C. K. Wright, E. G. Dusenbury, and William Holden. The church edifice was built of wood, completed, and dedicated November 25, 1852, by Rev. Sylvester Cowles. It was remodeled in 1873 at a cost of $5,000. In 1883 the building was beautified with stained glass memorial windows—one for Mrs. William F. Wheeler, contributed by her children, one by the children of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dusenbury for their parents, and one for John G. Mersereau by his grandchildren. The organ was then presented to the church by Hon. William F. Wheeler and the Dusenbury brothers, who also were to the expense of having the church frescoed, and with the aid of the Young Ladies' Missionary Society contributed the bell. From 1881 to 1890 this church contributed for all purposes $35,410. The Sunday school has 175 members.

The Seventh Day Baptist church of Portville, situated in Main Settlement, was organized in 1862 by Rev. J. C. West, with twenty members. The society met for worship in the school house of the neighborhood for several years. They now have a neat house of worship.

The Union church edifice at Weston's Mills was built by subscription in 1891. The building is of wood, cost about $2,000, and has a seating capacity of 225 persons. It is elegant in proportion and finely finished, and seated with folding chairs. The society is undenominational, but is regularly supplied with preaching by the Methodist clergyman at Portville. The Sunday school has 120 pupils with Wallace Weston as superintendent. The church is controlled by a board of three trustees, the present ones being Wallace Weston (chairman), William H. Petty, and James Hollands.

Portville Lodge, No. 578, F. & A. M., was organized in January, 1865, and chartered June 9, 1866. The first officers were Wilson Collins, M.; M. B. Bennie, S. W.; Massena Langdon, J. W.; T. S. Jackson, treasurer; Henry C. Scofield, secretary. Among the past masters have been M. B. Bennie, Schuyler M. Gaston, John H. Warden, Lewis D. Warner, John Hendy, Ezer Borst, and E. M. Bedford. A chapter of the Eastern Star was organized on the 13th of July, 1893.

Portville Lodge, No. 170, A. O. U. W., was instituted Aug. 28, 1878, with twenty-five members and Wallace Sibley as P. M. W.

H. W. Wessel Post, No. 85, G. A. R., was organized January 20, 1879, with thirty-six members. The first officers were Martin Link, commander; E. M. Bedford, S. V. C.; William Holden, J. V. C.; Cornelius Fitz Patrick, adjutant; G. T. Dennis, chaplain; R. V. King, O. D.; Jacob Both, O. G. It now has a membership of fifty-four. The officers are William Holden, C.; James H. Fairchild, S. V. C.; W. H. Skiver, J. V. C.; H. C. Mills, surgeon; L. D. Warner, adjutant; Jacob Both, chaplain; L. E. Carr, O. D.; John L. Brooks, O. G.; Joel A. Burdick, Q. M. The post has two auxiliary organizations, viz.: Col. L. D. Warner Camp, No. 23, Sons of Veterans, and a Woman's Relief Corps.

John R. Archibald, son of Andrew and Jenette (Rea) Archibald, natives of Scotland, was born in Tompkins county Feb. 11, 1822. His mother died when he was three weeks old and he was raised by his uncle, James Ray. In 1838 he came to Portville and worked for his cousin, Walter Ray, a lumberman at Mill Grove. In 1840 he was a sawyer for John Meddaugh and continued with him nine or ten years, making yearly trips as a pilot down the Allegheny. In 1854 he commenced business as a lumberman. In 1862 he was a dealer in groceries with his nephew, John Archibald, and became sole proprietor of their business two years later, continuing as a merchant fifteen years. In 1874 he purchased a steam mill with a daily capacity of 25,000 feet of lumber. He stocked and operated this from January until June 14th, when it burned with 800,000 feet of lumber, which was a total loss. Since 1880 he has given his attention to his farm and real estate. He has always been a Democrat and has been a nominee for supervisor, and served as assessor three years. In Sept., 1846, he married Fanny, daughter of John Meddaugh, who was the mother of all his children: Walter B., Emma G., James, and Frances H. (Mrs. William Hill). Mrs. Archibald died March 20, 1889, and Oct. 16, 1891, he married Nancy Meddaugh.

Ezra M. Bedford, son of Jacob and Marilla (Wright) Bedford, was born in Rushford, N. Y., Jan. 16, 1837. The family is of English origin and came to Portville in 1851, settling in the east part of the town. Ezra M. has been both a farmer and a lumber manufacturer. In Jan., 1876, he opened a grocery store in Portville, which he conducted until 1882. In 1886 he bought the site of his present building of William F. Wheeler & Co. and placed his store on the foundation of the establishment formerly owned by J. E. Dusenbury, where he is still engaged in general trade. Mr. Bedford has served as justice of the peace, assessor, and commissioner of highways. Dec. 24, 1863, he married Ellen Deming, of Genesee, Allegany county, and has one son. Mr. Bedford enlisted in the 85th N. Y. Vols., served through the Peninsula campaign, and was discharged on account of disability in 1862.

Ezer Borst was born in Middleburgh, N. Y., in 1832. In 1857 he came to Weston's Mills and engaged as a contractor in the manufacture of staves and lath for Weston Brothers, where he employed from twenty to twenty-four men. He still continues the business with ten or twelve hands. In the spring of 1888 he instituted the "Borst Wood Company" and began the manufacture of kindling wood, which he still carries on. In 1854 he married Miss A. M. Kinney, of Nelson, Pa. Their children are Jabez W.; James H., of Hawley, Minn.; Charles H.; Morris (deceased); Kate (Mrs. A. J. Crannell), of Weston's Mills; and Russel L. Jabez W. is superintendent of the Wood Company, and C. H. and R. L. have each a position in this manufactory. Mr. Borst married his second wife in 1872; she died in 1874; and in 1885 he married Mrs. L. A. Kinney, who is the mother of his daughter Libbie.

Albert G. Burdick came from De Ruyter, N. Y., to Portville in 1837. In 1838 he married Cynthia E., daughter of Capt. Matthew M. Crandall, and settled where his son, A. O. Burdick, now lives. He annually went down the river as a raftsman, and served as constable several years. His sons Daniel C., Joel A., Matthew K., and Addison O. served in the Civil war. Joel A. was a prisoner in Andersonville over seven months. All came home at the close of the war and all are living. Daniel C. Burdick was born Feb. 22, 1838. In 1862 he enlisted in Co. A., 85th N. Y. Vols., joined his regiment at Suffolk, Va., and was discharged at the close of the war. He participated in seventeen battles. May 20, 1861, he married Laura J. Sanford, of Ceres, N. Y. On his return from the war he joined his wife in Main Settlement, and has since been a citizen of Portville, except two years he spent in Steuben county. They have one son, Adelbert E. Mr. Burdick served as constable six years.

Benjamin S. Colwell, of English origin, is a son of Smith and Louisa (McGee) Colwell. His father, a native of Rhode Island, was born Feb. 20, 1801; his mother, of Scotch descent, died in Portville in June, 1882, aged eighty-one. His father died Jan. 2, 1888. In 1810 the parents of Smith Colwell removed to Plymouth, Chenango county, where he assisted in clearing land. In 1824 he was married and settled on a part of the homestead. In 1841 the family removed to Addison, Steuben county, where Benjamin S. Colwell began his business life. He was a lumber jobber for Abijah Weston and the late John G. Mersereau in the south part of Chenango county, and in Lindley, Steuben county, until 1856, when he removed to Portville and since then has been interested in the lumber business in this town, in Pennsylvania, and in Harrisville and Manistique, Mich. He is also interested in car manufacturing at Knoxville, Tenn., and in the Kelley Lamp Works of Rochester, N. Y. In 1845 he married Sally M. Orr, of Addison, who died Aug. 5, 1864. She was the mother of all his children: George W., born in May, 1846, a capable and prominent business man, a manufacturer of lumber, and a merchant; Marion O., born Jan. 2, 1850, married D. E. Storms; Carrie L., born May 9, 1860, the wife of Dr. D. W. Mitchell; and Carrie Belle, a graduate of the Elmira Female College and a teacher.

Mark Comstock, son of Joseph L. and Nancy (Fox) Comstock, was born in Beekmantown, N. Y., in June, 1816. When about eighteen he started on foot for the western country. At Ogdensburg he boarded a steamboat and passed up the St. Lawrence river, through Lake Ontario to Ontario Beach, and thence to Rochester. From there he went to Buffalo and in 1837 or 1838 came to Portville, where he still resides. He was in the employ of Dusenbury, Wheeler & Co. as a jobber sawing their lumber until about 1848, when he built the first tannery in Portville and began tanning upper and sole leather in 1849. He purchased stock of his own and tanned hides and skins on halves for the farmers. He had several partners, and in 1855 he sold his half-interest to his then partner, C. K. Wright. Mr. Comstock has since been dealing in real estate and groceries and engaged in farming. He has served as assessor thirteen years and as highway commissioner several terms. In 1840 he married Lucinda Robinson, a member of the Presbyterian church, who died Feb. 19, 1892. Children: five sons died in infancy; Nancy (Mrs. Dr. Young); Ellen.

Joseph Crandall, son of Luke and Martha (Maxson) Crandall, was born near Providence, R. I., May 2, 1794, and soon after attaining his majority he removed to Georgetown, N. Y. He married Susan P. Main in Feb., 1820, who was born in Stonington, Conn., Feb. 17, 1800. In 1830 he moved with his wife and six children to Portville and settled on lot 10, where William Atherton had built a saw-mill in 1810. He engaged in farming and stock raising, having brought with him a flock of sheep and half a dozen horses. He was elected justice of the peace, but refused to qualify, and was an organizer and one of the first trustees of the Methodist church. He died March 19, 1870; Mrs. Crandall died Jan. 9, 1882. They had twelve children, eight of whom are living. The first, Russel A. Crandall, born Jan. 9, 1821, came to Portville with his parents and has since resided here. He had one term at the academy and became a farmer and a pilot on the river. He married Mary Jacobs, Feb. 18, 1846, who was born in Caledonia, N. Y., March 2, 1822. They settled on a part of the homestead, where they still reside. Mr. Crandall is one of Portville's oldest residents and a pillar of the Methodist church, which he has long served as trustee. He has also been assessor twenty-three consecutive years. Children: J. Henry, Hyanthus O., Adell V. C. (Mrs. C. B. McDowell), and Minnie A. (Mrs. E. E. Alderman).

Joseph Henry Crandall, son of Russel A., was born April 11, 1847, and was educated in the common schools and in Chamberlain Institute, earning the money to pay his expenses by measuring bark. He taught a district school two winter terms and in 1868 engaged as a clerk in the store of J. M. Copp at Portville. Sept. 26, 1871, he became the partner of his employer under the firm name of J. M. Copp & Co., and subsequently conducted the business alone. He was burned out in 1875 and again in 1885. He conducted two branch stores, one of dry goods and the other of groceries, in Rexford when oil was produced there. Both were consumed by fire on the same day in 1880. Since then he has given his attention to his business in Portville. He is also a farmer and breeder of pure blood registered Oxforddown sheep. Mr. Crandall has always been a Republican and has served as town clerk since 1877. He married Minnie Saunders Main and has one daughter, Ethel M., born Dec. 29, 1876.

Henry Dusenbury, son of John and Ruth (Sands) Dusenbury, was born in Hancock, Delaware county, May 5, 1801. In 1815 his father with his family moved to Windsor, Broome county. Henry was soon employed by his father as a clerk, and early conducted mercantile and lumbering business on his own account. In 1828 he went to Deposit and remained there engaged in the same lines until 1834. Here he became the senior member of the firm of "Dusenbury, Wheeler, May & Co.", formed to conduct lumbering on the upper Allegany. This firm purchased at first a tract of 1,500 acres on Dodge creek (Portville) with a saw-mill containing three upright saws. Mr. Dusenbury came to look after its operations. The important duties and responsibilities devolving on him were discharged with rare acumen, and, during his business life of many years, he ever manifested his capability to safely and prosperously conduct important affairs. This company began operations in lumbering with this mill, established a store, ran their lumber to market down the Allegany and Ohio rivers, bought extensive tracts of timber lands in and about Portville and in Pennsylvania, built modern mills of great capacity, and has contributed to the prosperity of this section to the present by annually giving employment to a large number of men in their lumbering operations, tanneries, oil fields, etc. In inaugurating and conducting these enterprises Mr. Dusenbury was a potent factor. No detail of the business escaped his attention, no contracts were made that were not fulfilled to the letter, and none of this company's paper was ever protested. Mr. Dusenbury was endowed with penetration, sagacity, and integrity. He was methodical, accurate, prompt, and reliable. His word was as good as a bond. He took time to investigate and decide every enterprise, but when a project was decided upon he pushed it to completion with energy and zeal.

Mr. Dusenbury was an old-time Whig and joined the Republican party at its organization. He was a firm believer in and an ardent advocate of the distinguishing principle of the old Whig party: "Protection to American industries." He was a diligent reader, well informed in political history, and was an able and dangerous opponent in political discussions. He represented the town of Portville six years on the Board of Supervisors of Cattaraugus county and his party in numerous conventions. In 1831 Mr. Dusenbury united with the Presbyterian church of Deposit and was a consistent Christian through life. When he came to Portville there was practically no Sabbath, and intoxicating liquors were used freely in conducting business. Mr. Dusenbury and Mr. Wheeler from the first had the understanding that their company was to do business on Christian principles. They took their stand as Christian men not to break the Sabbath themselves and not to furnish rum in getting their lumber to market if it had to rot on the banks of the river. Mr. Dusenbury was not a bigoted sectarian, but recognized all genuine Christians as his brothers in Christ. He was instrumental with others in organizing the Presbyterian church of Olean in 1838 and was one of its elders and regular attendants until 1849, when he, with W. F. Wheeler, by their means and influence effected the establishment of the Presbyterian church at Portville, which he generously supported and guided with his counsel as an officiating elder to the close of his life. He was very charitable, and contributed liberally to various benevolent objects regularly each year. He died in June, 1860. In 1827 Mr. Dusenbury married Miss Caroline Butler, an estimable Christian lady, a kind friend, devoted wife, and an affectionate and faithful mother. Mrs. Dusenbury survived her husband, dying in February, 1871. Their children were Catherine (who married Allan Sheldon, at one time a wholesale merchant in company with Hon. Zach Chandler and now a banker in Detroit, Mich.); Elizabeth (the wife of Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., a distinguished bishop of the Methodist Episcopal church; their son George is the present business manager of the Chautauqua Assembly); Henry (died at the age of twenty-two years); John E.; William A. (born in 1838, married Miss Helen Truesdell, of Belfast, N. Y., and died in August, 1890; his widow and three sons survive him; he was a man of good business abilities, careful, economical, and successful; he was a merchant with his brothers, but later removed to Pennsylvania, conducted their mills at Tionesta, and engaged in large lumbering operations); Edgar G. (born in October, 1841, was in mercantile business with his brothers, and is now giving his attention to the large tannery at Portville—the Portville Tanning Company; he is an efficient business man, and possesses great firmness and executive ability; he is also an earnest and working Christian and an elder of the Presbyterian church); and Caroline (resides in Buffalo).

John E. Dusenbury was born in Portville, then a part of Olean, June 10, 1836. He received a practical business education from his father and an academic education at Binghamton Academy. He was early taught that honest labor is man's mission in life. He commenced his active business life as a merchant, the successor of Dusenbury, Wheeler & Co. He inherited many of the characteristics of his father which brought financial success to his business undertakings, and at his death was specially fitted to take his place in the operations of this firm. Mr. Dusenbury appointed his sons John E. and William A. executors and trustees of his estate, and the business has continued uninterruptedly to the present with but a change in name of firm. This now includes John E. and Edgar G. Dusenbury (sons of Henry Dusenbury) and Nelson P. and William E. Wheeler (sons of Hon. William F. Wheeler). Their business consists of lumbering operations near Portville and in Pennsylvania, development of their oil territory, and in tanning. John E. Dusenbury is an able financier. He was vice-president of the First National Bank of Olean until June, 1892, when he succeeded Hon. William F. Wheeler as president. He is a real estate manager, an oil producer, and a general adviser in manifold business affairs. As a recreation he is breeding trotting horses of the finest strains to be obtained in the United States. Mr. Dusenbury has been an unswerving Republican all his political life, has served his town on the Board of Supervisors ten years, and taken prominent part in numerous conventions. He is an industrious, persevering, and successful manufacturer, a courteous gentleman, a genial companion and friend, deserves and enjoys a large circle of appreciative acquaintance, and ranks worthily among the representative men of Cattaraugus county.

J. H. Fairchild, son of John F. and Sarah (Hoyt) Fairchild, was born in Rochester, July 28, 1841. The family went to Livingston county about 1849 and he removed thence to Belfast, Allegany county. In Jan., 1863, he enlisted in Co. E, 93d N. Y. Vols., and served to the close of the war. In 1864, at the battle of the Wilderness, he received a severe wound from a minie-ball, which passed through his left hip and confined him in the hospital a year. He was discharged June 10, 1865. Since 1875 he has resided in Portville, where he is proprietor of a grist-mill and a dealer in flour, feed, and grain. Three of his brothers were also soldiers. In 1868 he married Rosalia Petty, of New Hudson, N. Y., and they have five sons and three daughters.

Thomas Grierson, a native of Dumfries, Scotland, came to America in 1860 and settled in Otto, whence in 1861 he removed to Portville, where he followed his trade as a miller and was also a farmer. He died about 1866. His wife was Agnes, daughter of James and Mary McQuenn. Children: William, James, Alexander, Robert, Mary, Geanie, John, Janet, Thomas, and Joseph. Mrs. Grierson died in 1848.

William Holden, the son of James and Christianna Holden, was born in St. Helen's, Lancashire, England, June 2, 1843. His parents emigrated to America and landed in New York on June 1, 1856, and settled in Buffalo, where William learned the trade of tanning. Aug. 14, 1862, he enlisted in Co. D, 16th N. Y. Vols., and was promoted to first lieutenant, his commission being dated July 23, 1863. When discharged in 1865 he ranked as lieutenant. He received a severe wound at the siege of Port Hudson and another on the border of Texas. With his regiment he returned north and participated in the battles of Winchester, Fisher's Hill, and Cedar Creek. At the close of the war, returning home to Buffalo, he resumed his trade and in Dec., 1868, settled in Olean, where he remained five years. Since then he has lived in Portville, where he has been engaged in the grocery trade. In the spring of 1889 he was commissioned postmaster of Portville. He is a member of the Presbyterian church and one of its elders. He married Henrietta Toomer, of Buffalo, in Sept., 1865, and they have a son and four daughters.

Nicholas Hotton, born in Germany, July 18, 1858, emigrated to America with his parents in 1861 and in 1869 came to Portville, where he has since resided except about four years spent mainly in Clymer, Chautauqua county. In 1876 he became a clerk for Mark Comstock, in 1882 a partner, and in 1883 succeeded to the business. In 1886 his brother, Anthony W. Hotton, became his partner and the present firm of Hotton Brothers was formed. In 1886 he built a feed-mill in Olean, which was conducted by Hotton & Sloane until 1890, when Mr. Hotton sold it to the Acme Milling Company. Mr. Hotton is a member of the Presbyterian church. June 11, 1885, he married Louise Bon-sack, of Portville; children: Harold J. and Nicholas, Jr.

Anthony W. Hotton, born in Patterson, N. J., April 12, 1863, came to Portville with his parents in 1869 and became an employee of the Portville Tanning Company for six years. In the summer of 1883 he entered his brother's store as a clerk and in 1886 became a member of the present firm of Hotton Brothers. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity.

Peter Keyes, Jr., was born in Pittsfield, Vt., Sept. 4, 1809. His parents removed to Eagle, N. Y., in 1815, where he died aged eighty-two years. His homestead is still owned by his descendants. His oldest son, Peter Keyes, Jr., married Hannah Blossom in Portage, N. Y., April 1, 1832. She was born in Pike, N. Y., Dec. 29, 1811. Mr. Keyes was a lumber manufacturer in Portage eight years. In 1840 he moved to Portville, where he built a saw-mill on Deer creek and followed lumbering in company with the late Smith Parish over thirty years. In 1844 he was one of the organizers of the M. E. church and was elected one of its five trustees, serving either as trustee or steward nearly all the rest of his life. He died Jan. 9, 1867. Mrs. Keyes survived until March 10, 1889. Children: Myron Peter, born Dec. 18, 1835; Orson S., born March 2, 1838, began preparation for the ministry, was postmaster of Portville, a druggist with Dr. Jackson, a soldier in the Union army, and a prisoner in Andersonville, where he died; and Abby, born June 22, 1843, who married Prof. H. E. Dickinson. Myron Peter Keyes was reared a farmer and lumberman. He married Eusebia Dickinson, of Whitney's Point, N. Y., Nov. 8, 1855, and has followed his father's occupation. He is a staunch Republican. Children: Herbert F., Norton E., and Leona E.

Oliver B. Langworthy, son of Asa and Ruth C. (Crandall) Langworthy, was born in Coventry, R. I., Sept. 2, 1823. At the age of eight he removed with his family from North Stonington, Conn., to Genesee, Allegany county, where he remained until he became twenty-one. In the fall of 1847 he came to Main Settlement in Portville, where he has since resided. A raftsman thirty-nine years he ran lumber as a jobber to most of the ports along the Allegheny and Ohio rivers to Cincinnati. He also purchased and had manufactured lumber on his own account. He was a carpenter by trade, and now attends to his farm. He has served as a magistrate a long term of years. Feb. 8, 1848, he married Happy I. Maxson; children: Byron A., born Aug. 9, 1851; Evaline A., born Sept. 7, 1855, died Aug. 16, 1883; Alice O., born June 12, 1861, married W. J. Haight, of Olean; and Fred O., born May 24, 1870.

Eugene Leavens, son of Royal and Mary (Davis) Leavens, was born at Glens Falls, N. Y., Aug. 26, 1829. His grandfather, Hezekiah Leavens, a native of France, married a German lady. They were Huguenot Protestants and fled to America from Romish persecution. They were of the old school and practiced a dignified, stately politeness. He was a merchant at Glens Falls, where he and his wife both died in 1834. Royal Leavens, the father of Eugene, was a self-taught scholar and master of the Greek, Hebrew, Latin, French, German, and English languages. He was for years a teacher and a magistrate, and also followed mercantile pursuits. He died aged fifty-five. Eugene Leavens, three years after his father's death, began alternately laboring in summer and attending school in winter. Mr. Leavens became expert as a riverman. In Sept., 1851, he came to Portville and entered the employ of Weston & Mersereau. He soon became an expert in managing their machinery and saws and in June, 1854, took entire charge of the establishment, which he conducted until Feb., 1857. He then executed a contract with Dusenbury, Wheeler & Co. to deliver on the banks of Tionesta creek in Pennsylvania.

nia at least 3,000,000 feet of lumber per year for three years. In 1860 he returned to Portville, where he had a half-interest in the grocery of Weston & Mersereau and again took charge of the mills. In Nov., 1867, he became a partner in the entire business under the firm name of Weston, Mersereau & Co. In 1889 the Westons retired and since then the business has been conducted by William B. Mersereau and Mr. Leavens, the firm being Mersereau & Co. The output of these mills is 12,000,000 or 15,000,000 feet of lumber annually. In Nov., 1851, Mr. Leavens married Charlotte, daughter of William Davis, of Glens Falls. Children: Helen Emily (Mrs. W. B. Mersereau); Edith R. (Mrs. R. C. McLennan); and Frederick, who died aged fifteen. Mrs. Leavens died April 19, 1888.

Sheffield B. Main, son of Dewey and Lucinda (Colgrove) Main, was born in Stonington, Conn., March 22, 1788. He married, in 1818, Emily, daughter of Dea. Jared Stillman, and with five children they came from Chenango county to Portville in 1833, settling on the farm on which his son, James S. Main, now lives. At intervals he engaged in carpentering and piloting rafts to Warren, Pa. The settlement took his name, which it still bears. He was commissioner of highways and a deacon of the Seventh Day Baptist church, which he aided to organize. He died Feb. 23, 1878. Mrs. Main died in 1854. They had five daughters and one son. James S. Main, born in Lincoln, N. Y., June 9, 1824, in early life was also a river pilot. Aug. 28, 1847, he married L. Malvina Hamilton, who was born in Hornby, Steuben county, in 1829. Her father, Seymour Hamilton, was a pioneer of Portville. Mr. Main was a soldier in the Union army. Both are members of the Seventh Day Baptist church. Their adopted daughter is the wife of Henry J. Crandall.

Milton M. Main, son of Dewey, was born in Connecticut, March 6, 1802. March 23, 1823, he married Theda C. Carpenter, of De Ruyter, N. Y., who was born in Chatham, N. Y., Aug. 27, 1804. About 1829 Mr. Main removed to Friendship, where he resided until March, 1831, when they settled in Portville. He was for several years a riverman. The neighborhood soon organized a school, which was taught by Keziah Carpenter, sister of Mrs. Main. Mr. Main died Feb. 17, 1878. Mrs. Main survives. "Aunt Theda," as she is familiarly called, has been a member of the M. E. church nearly seventy years. Of their ten children eight attained mature age and six are now living. Two of the sons served in the late war, one, William O., dying in Andersonville prison. Riley F. Main, the youngest of the family, resides in Portville village and owns the homestead. He married Julia E. Flinn, of Belfast, N. Y.

Archibald McDougald, of Scotch descent, was born in Ontario, Canada, June 28, 1840. In 1859 he came to Portville, where he has since resided. He engaged with Wright, Thompson & Bingham, tanners, and was in their employ in all about twelve years. The past ten years he has conducted a meat market. He served as constable thirteen years and has been tax collector five years. Jan. 18, 1862, he married Eliza, daughter of the late William Wales, Esq. Children: Ellen E. (Mrs. A. Holcomb) and Archibald W.

Hon. John G. Mersereau, son of Joshua Mersereau, was born in Guilford, Chenango county, Sept. 23, 1799. He descended from good French Huguenot stock. The first of his race in America was an officer of rank in the French army, who had ventured to defend his faith against the imputation of a Romish priest and fled for refuge to the United States and settled on Staten Island. The grandfather of Mr. Mersereau won an honorable distinction in the Revolutionary service as a commissary. Washington, Lafayette, and other eminent soldiers and statesmen of that time esteemed him highly. Washington was frequently a guest at his home on Staten Island. Mr. Mersereau passed his early years in his native town and there commenced his business career as a manufacturer of lumber. He pursued this vocation through life faithfully, energetically, and successfully. His first operations were on the headwaters of the Susquehanna, later in Steuben county, and in Tioga county, Pa. In 1850 he removed to Portville, which was his home until his death Aug. 10, 1883. Mr. Mersereau was a progressive business man, and believed that the best machinery and the best facilities for manufacturing would make the best goods and insure the best returns, and was prompt in adopting them. He, with Weston Brothers, built the mills in which they placed the first gang-saws operated on the waters of the Allegany. Mr. Mersereau was characterized by sterling integrity, rare sagacity, executive ability, and great benevolence. He would severely reprove a delinquent in rugged English; a half-hour later he would bestow upon him favor to the extent of his ability. He was a patriotic citizen and decided in his political convictions. He first cast his lot with the Whig party, was one of the first to join the Republican organization, and was ever after a valiant soldier in all its battles. He was never an aspirant for office or political place, but while a resident of Steuben county he was twice elected to the Legislature, where his strength of character won for him the regard of Thurlow Weed, A. B. Dickinson, other prominent members of his own party, and of all with whom he came in contact. He was supervisor of Portville in 1863. To him more than to any other man is due the extension of the Genesee Valley canal from Olean to Portville. Mr. Mersereau was a member of the Presbyterian church from his early manhood and a thorough Christian. Religion was not with him merely a belief in a creed, but a life to lead, and was shown in liberal charities to the needy, tenderness to the afflicted, care for the sick, and the unbounded love of his noble nature for all mankind. Mr. Mersereau was twice married. His first wife, Miss Julia Redfield, was the mother of his children. They were Almira, Harriet (Mrs. W. W. Weston), and Samuel.

Samuel Mersereau was born in Guilford, Chenango county, Oct. 6, 1823. His early business training, which was of more than ordinary value, was acquired in the banking house of that eminent banker and business man, Gen. John Magee, at Bath, where he remained some years. He resided later in Lindley, where he served as supervisor. In 1849 he came to Portville, engaged in lumbering with his father, and pursued this business until his premature death Oct. 7, 1857, at the age of thirty-four years, serving in various town offices, among them supervisor, with great acceptability. He married Esther Butts*, of Rome; she died April 18, 1855, aged thirty-one years. They had three children: Almira, who married Hon. W. E. Wheeler (their children are William, John, Eleanor, Lawrence); William B. (a prominent manufacturer of Portville, who is now representing the town as supervisor for the fourth time; he married Helen E. Leavens, of Portville, and their children are Edith, Esther (deceased), Roland, Eugene, Egbert, and Harrison); and John D., who resides at Manistique, Mich., where he is connected with the extensive lumber operations of the Chicago Lumbering Company and the Weston Lumber Company; the financial management of the large business of these firms is conducted by him and A. J. Fox. Mr. Mersereau is in charge of the office. His wife was Nellie Coleman, of Ann Arbor, Mich. They have one daughter, Irene.

*She was a descendant of the historic Gov. William Bradford, who, born in Yorkshire, England, in 1589, cast in his lot with the Pilgrims, and was one of that immortal band of Mayflower passengers that landed at Plymouth, Mass., in December, 1620. He was high in the counsels of the leaders of the colony, and held with dignity and acceptance the important office of governor of Plymouth Colony for thirty-one years, dying, surrounded by honors, in Plymouth, May 9, 1657. His history of the colony shows his great scholarship and erudition, and is a treasured volume.

The Mersereau family has in the past as well as the present been entrusted with the administration of the civil affairs of Portville; by its interest in a large business it has added to the progress and welfare of the community; by its well-known integrity, and the carrying out of principles which trend to the right, it has been an important factor in the prosperity of this eminently intelligent village.

Ashley G. Packard was born in Naples, N. Y., Nov. 5, 1824. His father, a small farmer and tanner, removed to Tioga county, Pa., when Ashley G. was two years old, where he died about 1840. At the age of twenty the son came to Portville and has since resided in the town or near vicinity. His paternal ancestor, Samuel Packard, emigrated from England and landed at Old Colony, Mass., Aug. 10, 1638. His mother, Rebecca (Rose) Packard, was born in Connecticut, Oct. 13, 1795. Her mother, a Webster, was a cousin of Daniel Webster and is still living in Tioga county, Pa., where an annual reunion of her descendants is attended by five generations. Both of Mr. Packard's grandfathers were Revolutionary soldiers and four of his brothers did service in the Rebellion. Mr. Packard was a raftsmen thirty-six consecutive years, for thirty of which he was a pilot. Since then he has been a farmer. He has served as justice of the peace eight years and also as assessor. Dec. 31, 1847, he married Virtue V., daughter of Capt. Matthew M. Crandall. She was born in Cortland county, Oct. 7, 1824. Their only child, Berdett A. Packard, born Nov. 1, 1848, married Ella Lewis, and now resides in Tombstone, Arizona.

Hon. Smith Parish, son of Jeremiah and Piety (Abbott) Parish, was born in Stockbridge, Vt., Oct. 29, 1804. His father, a native of Connecticut, was a soldier in the Revolutionary war and married in 1787. In 1807 he removed with his family from Stockbridge to Cherry Valley, N. Y. In 1818 he settled in Luzerne, N. Y. At the age of fourteen Smith Parish lost his mother, and in Aug., 1819, he started on foot with a companion for the Holland purchase. Late in the fall he returned and in the spring of 1820 persuaded his father to come, and, again on foot, they traveled to Farmersville, where they joined his brother, and where his father settled. For the next ten years Smith resided alternately in Cattaraugus county, in Luzerne, and in Chittenden county, Vt. In the spring of 1829 he went to Quebec on a raft of timber. In May, 1830, he visited Olean and in October ensuing came to Portville. In 1834 he bought 1,000 acres of pine timber land. Prior to this he had been engaged as a lumberman, jobber, pilot, and dealer. June 17, 1834, he married Catherine Wales, and was a lumberman until 1841, when he sold his property to William Smith and removed to Portville village, where he resided until his death. He was here a large dealer in lumber, shingles, and merchandise, and a pillar of the M. E. church, of which he was one of the founders. Mr. Parish was elected a justice of the peace at the first town meeting of Portville in 1838. He was supervisor in 1852 and member of Assembly in 1864.

David L. Parish, oldest son of Hon. Smith Parish, was born in Portville, passed his youth at school and in the store, and at the age of twenty-seven engaged in dealing in lumber and shingles. In 1871 or 1872 he entered mercantile business. He was burned out in 1875, rebuilt two years later, and again lost heavily in the conflagration of 1885. He rebuilt at once and completed the first permanent building after the fire. A Republican in politics he has steadily refused to accept office. June 20, 1867, he married Mary R. Thomas, of Bolivar, N. Y.; children: Smith and Edna.

John A. Peckham, son of Hiram, was born in 1842 in Clarksville, Allegany county, whither his parents had removed from Connecticut, their native State, about 1830, settling on a tract of 700 acres, where they lived to more than three-score and ten years. Mr. Peckham held several important town offices. They raised nine sons and five daughters. Their son, John A. Peckham, enlisted as a musician in the 154th N. Y. Vols. He was mustered in Aug., 1862, and discharged at the close of the war. He was in seventy-four battles and skirmishes and marched to Atlanta with General Sherman. He was wounded five times, had typhoid fever, typhoid pneumonia, and varioloid. In 1865 he married Marinda Moore, of Georgia, and after the war settled in Portville, where he still resides. He has been a sawyer, but is now a stone mason. Mrs. Peckham died in Sept., 1873, being the mother of all his children: John H., born in May, 1866; Florence A., born in 1868, died aged nine years; H. Franklin, born in Feb., 1872; Evalina, born in Aug., 1873. In 1874 he married Nancy J. Castle.

David Persing, son of John and Elizabeth (Garretson) Persing, was born in Columbia county, Pa., Dec. 17, 1822. Raised a farmer he began his business life as a lumberman on Pine creek in Tioga county, Pa., and followed this avocation until 1864, most of the time conducting also a farm. In 1857 he bought a farm in Genesee, Allegany county, which he still owns. In 1880 he retired and settled in Portville, where he now resides. It was discovered that his farm was good oil territory and since then he has been an oil producer. Sept. 15, 1850, he married Lurana L. Stanton, of Otselic, N. Y.; children: William D., of Clarksville, N. Y.; Freeman S.; Cora B., widow of George W. Gibby; and McClellan L., of Kalamazoo, Mich. Freeman S. Persing, born in Ceres, Pa., Feb. 11, 1858, received an academic education and taught common schools several terms. In 1879 he settled in Portville, when he engaged in the hardware business. July 3, 1878, he married Mary M. Lewis, of Genesee.

Luman Rice, a native of Glastonbury, Conn., was born Jan. 18, 1787. He settled in Olean in 1818 and kept the old tavern built partly of logs, with a framed wing at either end. The next year he purchased the unfinished tavern now a part of the Olean House, finished and opened it to the public, and remained its landlord until 1822, when he removed to Portville, where he became the owner of 300 acres of land embraced in the south part of the village. He opened his house on the river as a tavern and later built a commodious hotel on a more eligible site which was burned and rebuilt. Besides conducting his tavern he was a lumberman and a farmer. In 1844 he went to Cincinnati and with Judge Chamberlain opened a lumber yard. In 1849 he returned to Portville, where he spent the remainder of his life. He was a prominent citizen and the first supervisor of this town. Dec. 2, 1810, Mr. Rice was married, in Homer, N. Y. Children: Delia A. (Mrs. Alfred Wright); Marcia P. (Mrs. O. P. Boardman); Luman E., who married Sally Harrison, of Cincinnati; Ambrew D., who married Sarah S. Smith; Harriet L. (Mrs. Smith), of New Orleans; Susan B. (Mrs. John D. Park), of Cincinnati; and Malvene M. (Mrs. Harvey Scovil), of Chicago.

Ambrew D. Rice was born in Olean, Feb. 11, 1820. He went to Portville with his parents in 1822, where he has since resided except about four years spent as a lumberman in Michigan. He erected a saw-mill on Weymouth creek in 1849, which was the first in the southeast part of the county with steam as a motive power. Lumbering has been the leading occupation of his life. Mr. Rice is now a farmer and a druggist with his sons Herman L. and Butler H., under the firm name of A. D. Rice & Sons. He was appointed postmaster by General Grant and held the position about sixteen years. July 26, 1850, he married Sarah S., daughter of Lemuel Smith. Children: The sons mentioned and Harriet E. Herman L. Rice was born in Portville, Jan. 16, 1852. He was a druggist's clerk in Rochester and Chicago seven years and is the inventor of several patent medicines of value. Since 1875 he has been a member of the firm of A. D. Rice & Sons.

Rodney A. Shattuck, born in Oswego county, N. Y., April 24, 1852, spent most of his youth in Wayne and Cayuga counties. In Dec., 1883, he came to Portville and engaged in manufacturing boots and shoes. About 1887 he opened a small store, where he manufactured and sold ready-made work. In the spring of 1889 he formed a partnership in the shoe trade with B. S. Colwell under the firm name of R. A. Shattuck & Co. Mr. Shattuck is also an excellent musician and since he has resided in Portville he has been the leader of Shattuck's Orchestra. Sept. 8, 1878, he married Lucy Allen, of Stockbridge, N. Y., and has a daughter and a son.

W. Hazleton Smith, A.B., son of Peter and Rachel (Hazleton) Smith, was born in Mansfield, March 28, 1860. His father was a pioneer farmer and the son attended the common schools, the village school in Little Valley, and the Ten Broeck Free Academy, from which latter institution he was graduated in 1880. He taught alternately in the districts schools while he pursued his academic course and in 1880-81 was principal of the Ellicottville Union School. He entered Cornell University, from which he was graduated with the degree of A.B. in the class of 1885. In the fall of that year he became the principal of the Portville Union School, which position he has since held. During his vacation at the close of his first year he had charge of the department of English literature at Round Lake and now holds a like position in the summer school at Silver Lake. In Jan., 1889, he issued the first number of the Educator, of which he is the founder, proprietor, editor, and publisher. The paper is devoted to current history, science, and literature. Its circulation extends to every State in the Union and its subscription list exceeds 20,000. Aug. 18, 1886, he married Catherine B. Graves, of Franklinville.

Frank E. Tyler was born in Rushford, N. Y., Dec. 21, 1848, and was reared in Attica, N. Y. In 1870 he arrived in Portville with $20.50 in his pocket, and this he unfortunately dropped into the Allegheny river. He at once went to work for his uncle, Luther Gordon, as a laborer, and three years later was made sole manager of his large lumber business, which position he still holds. He also purchased timber lands and mills in Michigan, where he had large interests. At the same time he was engaged in producing oil in the Bradford field. He has been for several years and still is a partner with E. M. Bedford in mercantile business and is also a director of the First National Bank of Brockport, N. Y. Mr. Tyler in politics is a Democrat and represented his town on the Board of Supervisors in 1887 and 1890. In 1875 he married Mary J., daughter of the late Adam T. Warden, of Portville; children: Gertrude E., born in 1876, and Frank E., Jr., born in 1888.

Charles W. Van Wart, son of William and Mercy (Carpenter) Van Wart, was born in Johnstown, N. Y., May 21, 1832. His parents removed to Black Creek when he was a small boy and thence they went to Michigan in 1844, where his mother died in 1846. They soon after returned to Black Creek, where his father married Polly Alexander. In Nov., 1847, they settled in Portville, where Charles W. has since resided. He became an equal partner at the blacksmith's trade with the late Adam T. Warden, which partnership continued twenty years, when Mr. Warden withdrew and Mr. Van Wart has since conducted the business alone. In politics a Republican he has served his town as constable and collector and is now a member of the Board of Health. In religion a Methodist he has been a member of that church the past forty-five years and has served as one of its stewards twenty-five years. He has also represented his church as a layman every fourth year since laymen were admitted to the General Conference. In June, 1850, he married Rachel Phillips, of Portville; their only living child, Kate, married Herbert F. Keyes, a blacksmith with Mr. Van Wart.

William Wales, a native of Vermont, was born Dec. 28, 1796, married Eliza West, of Allegany, Aug. 7, 1839, who was born Nov. 10, 1818, and about 1840 came to Portville and entered the employ of Smith Parish. He began business for himself keeping the hotel erected by Luman Rice and later he conducted a grocery store till near the close of his life. He died in Feb., 1861. Mrs. Wales died March 6, 1882. Mr. Wales was elected justice of the peace in 1840, served twelve consecutive years, and was again elected in 1853. He served as town clerk from 1844 to 1860 and was postmaster of Portville many years during his residence here. He was a member of the Methodist church. His oldest daughter, Eliza, born Aug. 13, 1840, is the wife of Archibald McDougald, of Portville.

Adam T. Warden, born in Scotland in 1806, married there Elizabeth Henderson. He was a boiler maker by trade and removed to England and thence to Germany during an agitation among the trade unionists. In 1841 he emigrated to America and engaged in blacksmithing. About 1848 he came to Portville, where he died April 19, 1891. His son, John H. Warden, was born in Hamburg, Germany, in Feb., 1841. He came to Portville with his parents and learned of his father the trade of blacksmith. He subsequently became a harness maker and started in that business about 1865. In Dec., 1879, besides his harness business, he had a half-interest with his father in a furniture store and undertaking establishment. In Dec., 1886, he purchased his father's interest and has since conducted the business alone. He served as town clerk eleven years and was postmaster of Portville during Cleveland's first administration. Mr. Warden married Miss M. P. Smith, of Portville; children: Grace E. (Mrs. H. Watts) and Maggie A.

Dennis Warner was born in Phelps, Ontario county, July 13, 1799, and was descended from New England stock. His grandfather, Dea. Jesse Warner, at a very early day emigrated from Connecticut to Phelps, where he bought a large tract of land at the nominal price of eighteen cents per acre and subsequently gave to each of his boys a farm of fair dimensions. Deacon Warner died at the great age of ninety-six years. Dennis Warner resided in Phelps until he was eighteen, when he went to Olean and entered the store of Judge F. S. Martin as a clerk. Feb. 8, 1820, he married Miss Clarissa Andrews, a niece of the pioneer, Luman Rice. She was born in Homer, N. Y., Oct. 8, 1801. Soon after their marriage they settled on the southern bank of the Allegany, opposite where the village of Weston's Mills is situated. Mr. Warner purchased a saw-mill and engaged in the manufacture and sale of lumber. Allen Rice owned a saw-mill across the river, and both mills were furnished power by the same dam. Mr. Warner died in Pittsburg, Pa., April 21, 1826, on one of his trips to that place to market his lumber. He was an active and prominent young man of pleasing address, and served the town of Olean efficiently in town offices. After Mr. Warner's death Mrs. Warner fought the battle of life for herself and three children for many years until her children were of an age to lend her a helping hand. She died in 1850 at the home of her daughter in Gloversville, N. Y.

Col. Lewis D. Warner, oldest son of Dennis Warner, was born in the home on the Allegany in 1822. He was early accustomed to labor and deprivations, and when old enough was bound out as an apprentice to learn the tanning and currying business, in which he endured so hard a life of service that even now he regrets he did not run away. At the close of his apprenticeship, and at the age of twenty-one, he received a decent suit of clothes, his first pair of boots, and $6 in cash. In the fall of 1845 he returned to Portville, where he has since resided. He was several years in the employ of Smith Parish and made an annual trip down the river. About 1854 he began business as a carpenter and joiner, which trade, with rafting, he carried on until 1862. His patriotism then impelled him to serve his country as a soldier. Accordingly he recruited a company and went to the seat of war as captain of Co. C, 154th N. Y. Vols. This regiment was organized in Jamestown, N. Y., and transferred to Virginia in October of that year. "From that time until the first of May," Colonel Warner says, "we did a large amount of marching and counter-marching, but were in no engagement. May 2d, at Chancellorsville, we were a part of the Eleventh Corps, the record of which is well understood by readers of war history. The most unfortunate thing about the 154th was that we had not learned to run when we ought to have done so. The regimental loss on that day was over 200 in killed and wounded. Our next engagement was at Gettysburg, where the losses were heavy. The remainder of the summer we were with the Army of the Potomac. The following autumn the Eleventh and Twelfth Corps were transferred to the west. Our first work was relieving the army shut up in Chattanooga. We took an active part in the battles of Chattanooga and Mission Ridge and then marched to the relief of Knoxville. Returning to Lookout Valley we remained in winter quarters until the commencement of the Atlanta campaign of 1864, and participated in nearly all the battles and skirmishes incident to that campaign, which closed with the occupation of Atlanta. In the organization of the march to Savannah our corps (the Twentieth) formed a part of the left wing of the army. In that and the march northeast through the Carolinas and until the close of the war we were ever present for duty. After Johnston's surrender we started home, marching all the way to Washington, where we were mustered out and sent home, arriving there about the 1st of July, 1865." Colonel Warner was commissioned captain in Aug., 1862; major in May, 1863; lieutenant-colonel in Sept., 1864; and colonel in Jan., 1865. With the exception of two short periods, when the regiment was in winter quarters, he was with his command continuously during its term of service; except sixteen months, during which he held the rank of major, he was in command of and responsible for the regiment, and was never accused of cowardice. He was always ready and present to lead his command, never flinched from any duty, and a truer, braver, soldier never drew a sword, and it is the unanimous testimony of his comrades that he never knew fear. Since his return he has followed his trade with the exception of a six years' clerkship in the office of Weston, Mersereau & Co.

and a year and a half in the county clerk's office. He has also had political honors. He has served as supervisor of Portville ten terms, has filled the office of justice of the peace nearly twenty years, and has been inspector of elections about fifteen years. Colonel Warner is modest and extremely unassuming, a true patriot devoted to his country, is one of Portville's most honored citizens, and a leading representative war hero of Cattaraugus county. In July, 1893, at the unveiling of the statue erected by the State of New York at Gettysburg to the memory of the New York soldiers who participated in the battle, Colonel Warner was marshal of the Second Division, Eleventh Army Corps. In Dec., 1857, he married Miss Mary M. Cossitt, of Pompey, N. Y., and their surviving children are three sons and a daughter, all married.

William Wallace Weston.—The student of early American history can not have failed to notice the connection of the English Westons with the early settlement of this country. Thomas Weston, of Bristol, Eng., was one of the London "merchant adventurers" who fitted out the Mayflower in 1620. He and others of the name were prominent in Virginia settlements and in that of Massachusetts Colony. The Westons of this county, however, come not of this stock, but descend from the Scotch branch of the family, the paternal grandfather of William Wallace Weston coming to Warren county in this State from Edinburgh, Scotland, when a lad, with one John Ferguson. He passed his life in Warren county, marrying and having a family of six children, of whom James D. was one of the younger. James D. Weston became an extensive lumberman on the upper Hudson and its tributaries, and brought his sons up to be fully acquainted with all departments of lumbering. He married Lela Adams, a descendant of the early Massachusetts Warrens and Adamses so conspicuous in Revolutionary days. Her father, Abijah Adams, was a native of Connecticut and one of a family of twelve children, each measuring six feet and upwards in height. He was an ensign in the Revolution, and was once sick for six weeks with the measles in the forests of Long Island encompassed by British soldiers. After his recovery, as he was an expert swimmer, he escaped from captivity by swimming the Sound and dodging the cannon shot of the English squadron by diving. After the Revolution he conducted a pottery of the red-clay ware then in use for some years, but later removed to Luzerne in Warren county, this State, where he engaged in lumbering during his active life. He died aged eighty-two years.

William Wallace Weston, son of James D. and Lela (Adams) Weston, was born in Warren county, March 4, 1830, received an academic education, and like his immediate ancestors became a lumberman. In 1849 he was connected with the lumber company (Fox, Weston & Bronson) at Painted Post, Steuben county, of which his older brother, Abijah, was a member. In 1850 he came to the Allegany valley the junior member of the firm of Weston Brothers (A., O., and W. W. Weston), who, in company with John G. Mersereau, purchased a small mill at the mouth of the Oswayo, remodeled it, and brought eastern methods and the gang-saw to the complete revolution of lumbering methods in this section. This was the commencement of their operations here and the next year they began to build a mill at Weston's Mills, where a small village has been evolved by their operations. From 1850 to the present writing (1893) Mr. Weston has actively devoted himself to the interests of Weston Brothers located in this vicinity, and today is as energetic and vigorous as many a younger man. His brother Orren has been connected with him for many years until the enormous growth of their western business demanded his removal to Tonawanda about 1887. In or about 1850 the firm of Weston, Mersereau & Co. also was formed by the Weston Brothers and John G. Mersereau. This firm and its successors (Weston Brothers retiring in 1888) has had an extensive and prosperous career. The operations of the Weston Brothers have been and are extensive. They have manufactured here large quantities of lumber and have owned large areas of land in this vicinity and northern Pennsylvania. They now, with others, own over 200,000 acres of valuable pine lands in the northern peninsula of Michigan, where they have mills producing annually 80,000,000 feet of lumber. Their headquarters are at Manistique, where they control the Chicago Lumbering Company, the Weston Lumber Company, the White Marble Lime Company, and the Weston Furnace Company—all extensive in their operations. Commencing life with limited capital, but thorough knowledge of their business, their sagacious foresight led them into purchases of large tracts of timber land which rapidly appreciated in value. Their operations at Weston's Mills now consist of mills with 80,000 feet daily production (which employ from 100 to 120 men), planing-mills, shingle-mills, etc., and a general store doing an annual business of $40,000. The firm is now "A. Weston Lumber Company," an incorporation organized in Jan., 1892. Weston's Mills postoffice was established in 1873 with W. W. Weston as postmaster. He still holds the position. Mr. Weston has shrunk from political position sedulously through life, but as a matter of duty served his town five years as commissioner of highways. He is a public spirited and esteemed citizen and an honorable business man. One of his neighbors and friends with whom he has extensive business transactions says of him: "An honest man does not live." He is kindly and pleasant in his manners, a strong friend, a generous neighbor, an agreeable companion, and an ardent Republican who keeps himself thoroughly informed on all the matters of the day. May 3, 1858, he married Harriet, daughter of Hon. John G. Mersereau. Their only son, Wallace, was born Sept. 15, 1862; he married Emma Kintzel and they have two children, Edith H. and Dorothy V. He has a financial interest in the firm, is secretary of "A. Weston Lumber Company," and is in charge of the office at Weston's Mills.

Hon. William F. Wheeler* was born in June, 1811, in the town of Hancock, Delaware county, N. Y. He was the son of William Wheeler, a native of New London, Conn. The elder William Wheeler lived for some years in Blandford, Mass., and when twenty-one years old came from there to Hancock with three brothers. They had no capital, but purchased pine timber, built a cabin on the bank of the Delaware river, and began the business of lumbering. They cut the trees, hauled them to the river-bank, and "run" them in rafts to Philadelphia. Their first raft was "stove," as raftsmen say; that is, broken to pieces and lost. This did not discourage them. They came back without money, but with good credit, and at once began getting out more timber. William Wheeler piloted the next raft himself and it went safely to Philadelphia. He continued in this branch of the lumbering business ten years, when he married Eleanor Knox, of Blandford, built a mill, and manufactured lumber for the Philadelphia market. In 1813 the family moved to Deposit (then called Cook House from the Indian name, Kookoose) in Delaware county. Here young William F. Wheeler spent a happy boyhood of work and play in company with his four brothers and two sisters. He could ride a slab either side up on the river, or a horse without saddle or bridle. When fifteen years old he went to Philadelphia on his father's lumber and acquired a fondness for rafts and the life of a lumberman. When ready to return his father gave him his choice: to ride home by way of New York or to walk home and save his money. He chose the latter way and walked home with other young men. His father owned mills and timber on the Starucca creek, fourteen miles from Deposit. Here the son enjoyed taking charge of men at work getting in logs in winter and piling lumber in summer. This kind of occupation did not fit him well for the quieter life of a farmer, for which his father intended him. In April, 1833, he was placed in charge of a large farm belonging to his father in Greene, Chenango county, but though he worked hard he was always thinking of pine trees, saw-mills, and rafts. Hearing of great forests of pine timber in the valley of the Allegany river, he studied maps and statistics of this region with his father and others and decided that this was the only source of lumber supply for the whole valley of the Mississippi. The elder William Wheeler (always called "Deacon Wheeler") and "Deacon" Ezra May (also of Deposit) went to the Allegany river to look the ground over. They bought 1,500 acres of pine timber and a saw-mill on Dodge creek in what is now the town of Portville, then a part of Olean. On their return to Deposit a company was formed consisting of Ezra May, William Wheeler, William F. Wheeler, Henry Dusenbury, Edgar Gregory, and Russell Kelsey, the firm name being Dusenbury, Wheeler, May & Co. The purpose of the company was to buy more land, build a store, and, in time, do a large lumbering business. This plan was carried out. At the end of a year Mr. Kelsey sold his interest in the firm to Henry Van Bergen, of Cincinnati. Every member of the new firm was an experienced and practical lumberman. It was their avowed purpose not only to do business in an energetic and thorough manner, but also to exert a strong moral and Christian influence in the community where they lived.

In February of 1834 William F. Wheeler first came to the new place of business, making the journey by stage to Friendship and walking the remaining seventeen miles. Life in the wild forests of the Allegany was very different from that along the more settled shores of the Delaware. Nothing like a Christian Sabbath was known in the region to which the young man had come. His first Sunday was spent in the saw-mill looking out upon the water pouring over the dam and thinking of home and the friends he had left. The partners in Deposit had made a contract with a builder to put up the new store. It was to be built and raised without the use of liquor. This was difficult to accomplish, for no substantial building had ever been raised in that vicinity without liquor being provided for the men. Deacon May had come, and both he and William F. Wheeler determined that in this case no liquor should be furnished. Their builder said they could never find men to raise it, and they replied: "Then let the timber rot on the ground." The timber was heavy and the building could not be raised without many men. Mr. Wheeler rode on horseback for six miles, calling on men to come to a "cold water raising." The men laughed and said they had never heard of such a thing. But they came and the building was raised. It was then said: "There must be liquor in it to treat the customers," for this was the universal practice all along the river. But in this also the strict principles of the firm prevailed, and no liquor has ever been sold upon their property. The first lumber they produced (pine lumber of good quality) was sold in Pittsburg at $4.75 a thousand feet, and they were obliged to take horses for part of the payment. This price made them a loss of more than a dollar on a thousand feet. The prospect was gloomy; prices were low; the new firm was in debt; and it was necessary to buy more land in order to succeed. But their courage never failed. At this time mail reached them only once a week, the post-office being first in Olean and afterward in Mill Grove. Religious services were held in Mr. Wheeler's dining room; and in 1836 the firm built a little school house, which was also used for a church. Sometimes a Methodist and sometimes a Presbyterian was the minister. At one time they engaged a Seventh Day Baptist to work at rolling logs through the week and preaching Sundays, and they paid him the same price for both kinds of work. Previous to this Mr. Wheeler had been in the habit of riding on horseback to Olean and attending service held in an upper room in a house then owned by David Day, afterward by C. V. B. Barse, and now, in 1892, by F. W. Higgins. The Rev. Mr. Morris, an Episcopal clergyman from Ellicottville, conducted these services, which were not held at regular intervals.

The mercantile business was conducted chiefly by Mr. Dusenbury. Mr. Wheeler said of him: "Mr. Dusenbury was a thorough-going, upright business man, well fitted for the position he occupied. Conscientious in every act, reliable as the sun, he watched every need and development of our business, and his stability gave success to the firm. We were well fitted to work together, as each possessed qualities lacking in the other." Their custom was to make all indebtedness payable on the first day of July without interest, and they never failed to meet the payments at that time. This promptness kept their credit good. The banking business was all done at Bath in Steuben county, seventy miles away, that being the nearest bank. In 1837 they opened a lumber yard in Cincinnati; and about a year afterward they purchased 4,000 acres of pine timber and a mill on Tionesta creek in Forest county, Pa. To make this purchase Mr. Wheeler made a long journey on horseback through the forests with snow six inches deep. After riding thirty-six miles the first afternoon he spent the night in a log house and pushed on the next day by a path through the woods, there being no road. When the path came to an end he followed the creek, in which he rode for about eight miles. Reaching the property he examined the timber and secured the land, having to go to Franklin to draw the necessary papers. He then returned on horseback through the woods to his home. He had promised to make a cash payment of $8,000 (then a very large amount) within thirty days. Reaching Portville after his ride of 150 miles from Franklin he changed his horse for a fresh one and rode on to Bath without taking rest. Here he obtained some money and then rode on to Deposit to see his father and obtain the rest. He made the journey of 200 miles in four days from the time of leaving Portville. They soon purchased more property in Pennsylvania, where they have continued the lumbering business to the present time.

In 1839 Mr. Wheeler married Miss Flora Atkins, daughter of Judge Q. F. Atkins, of Cleveland, Ohio, then living in Olean. She was a most devoted member of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Wheeler himself had united with the Presbyterian church in Deposit at the age of twenty years. As there was no Presbyterian church in Cattaraugus county it was thought best to organize one in Olean, it being a central point. This was done in 1838, both Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Dusenbury being active in its organization, which took place in the house occupied by Judge Atkins. Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Dusenbury with their families attended church regularly in Olean until the formation of the Portville church, services at first being held in a wagon shop purchased for a church. In 1849 a Presbyterian church was organized in Portville and Mr. Dusenbury and Mr. Wheeler were prominent among its founders. Services were here held first in a school house and afterward in the Methodist church. In 1852 the Presbyterian church building in Portville was erected. For eight years Mr. Wheeler was superintendent of the Sunday school and for several years he was the sole trustee of the public school. In 1850 Mrs. Wheeler died, leaving three children: Nelson P., Egbert (William E.), and Augusta (Mrs. E. A. Skinner), two having died. In 1851 Mr. Wheeler, of Deposit, died, and in the following year William F. Wheeler married Miss Marilla Clarke, of Peacham, Vt., a wife in every way worthy of him, and who survives him. Of this marriage there was but one child, a daughter, Lilla C. After the death of Mr. Dusenbury in 1860 Mr. Wheeler, with his two sons and the three sons of Mr. Dusenbury, continued the business under the name of William F. Wheeler & Co. This establishment has not remained merely a firm of lumbermen; its business has extended in many important and different directions, and through all their varied and complicated transactions the most kindly relations have always existed between the members of the firm, and their trust in each other's integrity and honor has remained unbroken.

In 1860 Mr. Wheeler was elected an elder in the Presbyterian church. When in 1871 the First National Bank of Olean was organized (it being the first National bank in the county) Mr. Wheeler was elected president and held this office continuously until his death. In 1879 he was elected to the State Legislature, but refused to be a second time a candidate. He always took a deep interest in politics and was pronounced and outspoken in his opinions; at first one of the early Whig party, afterward a strong and active Republican. He was always public spirited and generous, taking an interest in all enterprises for the good of his own and neighboring towns. One of his greatest pleasures was in making a benevolent use of his means. His gifts were not confined to his own church or his own denomination. The churches of his own village and (with a single exception) all those of Olean have received aid from him. The different churches of Deposit (his early home), and of the regions in Pennsylvania and in Michigan where his property lay, have received substantial tokens of his generosity. Many a poor student, struggling toward an education, has found his hand stretched out to help. The children of the Orphans' Home at Randolph for years have had abundant cause to thank him. His abounding cheerfulness, his hearty friendliness, his sound judgment, and his wise counsels have blessed many who needed a friend. He retained his strength of mind and his vigor of body to a remarkable degree into old age. He continued to ride on horseback until he was eighty years old, and he took pleasure in driving a pair of spirited horses of his own raising until within a few weeks of his death. On the 6th of June, 1892, a few days before his eighty-first birthday, and surrounded by his wife and children, Mr. Wheeler died at his home in Portville, where he had spent his long and useful life.

Hon. Nelson P. Wheeler, son of Hon. William F. Wheeler, was born in Portville in Nov., 1841. He was educated in the academies of Olean, Deposit, and Homer, is a member of the firms of the Wheelers and Dusenburys, and with his family resides in Tidioute, Pa. He has had charge of the large lumbering and tanning interests of Wheeler & Dusenbury and Wheeler, Dusenbury & Co., and went to Pennsylvania in 1870. Mr. Wheeler is an elder of the Presbyterian church and in 1879 he was a Republican representative in the State Legislature. In 1877 he married Rachel A. Smith, of Cincinnati. They have three sons and two daughters.

Hon. William Egbert Wheeler, son of the late Hon. William F. Wheeler, was born in Portville, Nov. 21, 1843. He prepared for college in Deposit and Homer, N. Y., and entered the sophomore class of Hamilton College in 1863, where he remained one year. He then entered the junior class of Yale College and was graduated in the class of 1866. After leaving college he became interested in the long established firms composed of the Wheelers and the Dusenburys, of Portville. In 1870 they began the manufacture of leather in Portville, where he has charge, and in 1878 they began the production of oil, in which also he is still engaged. Mr. Wheeler is a director and the vice-president of the First National Bank of Olean and a director of the National Bank of Westfield, N. Y. He has always been a Republican and was a member of the County Committee of his party in 1884, has attended several State conventions, and has been a member of the school board many years. He was supervisor of Portville from 1882 to 1886 inclusive and again in 1888; was elected to the Assembly from the First District of Cattaraugus county in Nov., 1891, and was re-elected by the whole county in Nov., 1892. In 1875 he married Allie E. Mersereau, granddaughter of Hon. John G. Mersereau. They have three sons and a daughter.

Darius Wheeler, born in Newfane, Vt., March 8, 1801, moved with his father and family in 1813 or 1814 to Hoosick, N. Y., thence to Greene, N. Y., in 1819, and finally to Genesee flats in Nunda (now Hume), Allegany county, in 1820, where his parents spent the remainder of their lives. In the fall of 1831, with his brother-in-law, Elijah Elmer, he came to Portville on a tour of observation. In 1832 he settled here permanently. Messrs. Wheeler and Elmer purchased of Griswold Warner a saw-mill on the site of Mersereau & Co.'s mills, and a large tract of timber land, and Mr. Wheeler was an extensive lumberman in the firms of Wheeler & Elmer, Wheeler & Smith, and Wheeler & Holly until 1850, when he sold to Weston, Mersereau & Co. and afterward gave his attention to farming. He died Nov. 6, 1877. He served as assessor and was otherwise prominent in town affairs. He married Isabel Jacobs, Jan. 6, 1834, who died in 1883. Children: Franklin, born Dec. 6, 1834; Ruth (Mrs. Frank Bell), born Jan. 21, 1837; Samuel J., born June 1, 1842; and Augustus H., born July 20, 1846.

Charles Knapp Wright.—The historian considers that he is performing a duty to posterity when he uses his pen to give a sketch of the character, struggles, difficulties, and successes of the men of the pioneer period of our civilization, and presenting for its perusal the reasons of their successes, founded as they are on sterling qualities of head and heart. Conspicuous among the early business men of Portville, an active force in all that goes to make up the better elements of community, and a liberal, popular, yet unostentatious citizen, we find Charles K. Wright. He is of English ancestry, which has come down through generations of New England representatives to New York State. His father, James Wright, a lumberman, located in Delaware county, where by his first wife he had eight children. In 1814 he removed to Eldred, then Ceres, Allegany county, and by his second wife, Urania Holiday, had these children: Alfred, John H., George P., Eliza A. (Mrs. George Crandall), Hiram E., Caroline A. (Mrs. Edward Percival), Charles K., and Albert J. Charles K. was born July 10, 1825, and was six years old when his father died.

Work on the farm and attendance at pioneer schools occupied him until he was twelve years old. He then remained on the farm with his mother and brother William until he was seventeen, then worked as a farm hand elsewhere nearly two years, and in 1843 came to Portville to learn the wagon maker's trade, and worked two years, receiving $6 a month as wages. He then started in business on his own account, but in nine months' time was seized with inflammatory rheumatism, which ultimately settled in his chest and has made him a life-long sufferer. Having no inherited wealth he exhausted his frugal savings in the year and a half he was prostrated by his disease, and as soon as he could do any labor he engaged with Dusenbury, Wheeler & Co. as clerk in their store, receiving $5 a month for the first year. During this year he saved one-half his salary. The next two years he was paid $15 a month and in this time he saved $300. His disease again unfitting him for labor he expended his money in a vain attempt to recover his health by a residence on the Atlantic coast of New England. He returned to Portville in 1848 in circumstances that would dishearten many men.

In broken health and with only $5 as his entire capital the outlook was not promising. He had, however, become known to the people as a reliable, temperate, and religious man, worthy of trust and confidence, and Hon. Smith Parish, a leading lumberman, offered to stock a store if Mr. Wright would become his partner and conduct it, his services to be equivalent to Mr. Parish's capital. This offer was gladly accepted, the store* was erected under Mr. Wright's supervision, and was conducted successfully by him for five years, when his health again failed and compelled him to sell his interest. Mr. Wright now became a pioneer tanner. Mark Comstock was running a small tannery in which he was tanning 500 hides annually. Foreseeing that a rapid increase of this industry could be made Mr. Wright bought one-half of the tannery. After two years, becoming thoroughly conversant with the business, and Mr. Comstock not being sanguine enough to believe in its extension, Mr. Wright bought the whole plant and enlarged it to a capacity of 10,000 hides a year. In 1857 B. F. Thompson & Co., of Boston, became partners, and continued as such until 1861. For the next two years Mr. Wright ran the business alone, but in 1863 J. & H. H. Clark, of Keokuk, Iowa, purchased an interest, and the tannery was enlarged to produce 30,000 hides annually. In 1870 the Clarks sold to William F. Wheeler & Co. and another enlargement was made, increasing the output to 52,000 hides annually. In 1887 Mr. Wright sold his share of the tannery to his partners. The same year, in company with James E. and N. E. Clark, of Keokuk, Iowa, he established and built the tannery at East Olean of a capacity of 32,000 hides yearly of "Union Crop Sole Leather." Here he was very successful in business. May 1, 1893, the firm was merged in the U. S. Leather Company.

Under the religious care of his mother Mr. Wright became a Sabbath school scholar at a very early age, and has, from that time, interested himself in Sabbath school work, and since he has lived in Portville has been either teacher or superintendent. He has been a member of the Presbyterian church for over thirty years and has been an "elder" for many years. He was a commissioner in attendance at the General Assembly that met at Portland, Oregon, in 1892, and has frequently been a delegate to the Presbytery. While living at Eldred, and at the age of ten or twelve, he joined the old Washingtonian Temperance Society, and from that time he has been actively connected with some temperance organization. In politics he has been an unswerving Whig and Republican, but never sought office, and has taken the Royal Arch degree in Free Masonry and the Encampment degree in Odd Fellowship. He married, May 26, 1851, Mary M. Bennie. Mr. Wright has fought the battle of life courageously and with success; he is beloved and respected by all good citizens for his sterling qualities and worth; and the example of his life is a valuable lesson to the aspiring youth of today and coming time, as it shows that true Christian character united with courage and energy is the key-note of honorable success.

Alfred Wright, son of James, was born in Colchester, N. Y., June 3, 1809. In 1813 the family removed to Eldred. In early youth he was bound out as an apprentice to the trade of carpenter and joiner in Smethport, Pa., where he served until he became twenty-one. He then prosecuted his trade in Olean and Portville. Feb. 4, 1834, he married Delilah A., daughter of the late Luman Rice. He settled permanently in Portville in 1838, where he died Oct. 8, 1888. Many edifices that were burned in the fire of 1875 were monuments to his skill and industry, and several yet remain. Mr. Wright was a member of the Methodist church and one of its trustees. He had one daughter, Martha A., widow of Levi W. Simpson.

CHAPTER XLIV.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF RANDOLPH.

RANDOLPH* was formed from Conewango on February 21, 1826, and included the territory embraced in townships 1 and 2 of the ninth range of the Holland Land Company's survey. April 2, 1847, nearly all of what is now South Valley was taken off, reducing the territory of Randolph to township 2, comprising its present area of 23,040 acres. It lies in the western tier of towns and is bounded on the north by Conewango, on the east by Cold Spring, on the south by South Valley, and on the west by Chautauqua county. The southwestern part of the town is broken and hilly; the northern and eastern part is nearly level, being an extension of the Conewango flats. Its streams are rather small, the largest being the Little Conewango, which flows nearly west through the eastern and level part of the town. Its tributaries are Mill creek and Dry and Rogers brooks. The rivulets of the southern part of Randolph drain into the Allegheny through South Valley. A soil composed mainly of clay predominates in the lower lands, while in the higher regions is found a clayey and gravelly loam, which is generally quite fertile. The lowlands and foot-hills were originally covered with a dense forest of towering pine trees, and other parts of the town supported a vigorous growth of hardwood and hemlock. These forests have to a great extent disappeared, and instead fine crops of grass and grain are annually harvested. Since the advent of the railroads dairying is the leading pursuit of the farmers.

The first settlement of the town was made by Edmund Fuller on lot 31 in 1820. Mr. Fuller was accompanied by Howard Fuller and came from Oneida county. They bargained for an extensive tract of wild land. Edmund sold his interest to Thomas Harvey in 1822, and both of the Fullers removed west. Edmund returned in a few years and settled in Little Valley. Samuel J. York came a year after the Fullers and located on lot 55. His brother Jeremiah came in 1823, settled in the same locality, and became the first supervisor of the town three years later. Jacob Vandamaker came in 1821 and settled near Fuller. His son John J., born the next year, is credited with being the first child born in the town. In 1822 H. S. Latham, brother of C. H. Latham, who has resided in the town since 1840, settled on five acres near Fuller's and built the first frame house in Randolph. He also commenced to build a small tannery, but sold to Thomas Harvey before completion. Harvey, who succeeded Fuller, was a man of ability and enterprise in settling the new neighborhood. He had six daughters and several sons. Two of the daughters married soon after, one David Salisbury, the other Clement Russell in 1824. Their marriages were the first in town.

Benjamin Clark came in 1823 and built the second frame house in Randolph. In it he kept a tavern and a store until 1830; he sold it to Joel Scudder and removed to Pennsylvania. Otis Hitchcock came in 1823 and lived until June, 1873. Solomon Nichols came from Monroe county in January, 1823. He "articled" 120 acres, which he paid for in 12 years. David Hodges, who came with Nichols, was the first who received a deed of land in town. Nichols possessed a military spirit and rose from captain to the rank of colonel. Elisha R. and Josiah Cook, who both served in the War of 1812, came in 1823. James Powell, his brother Dennis, and the Macapes family came the same year, as did also the Sample family and Timothy Torrance. Uriah D. Wood came in 1824 and Zebedee Woodworth about the same time. Sylvester Caswell and Darius Bowen came from Monroe county and Abraham G. Bush from Ontario county in 1825. Bush was supervisor of Randolph in 1836. He conducted several large business enterprises and died in 1863. The Helms family came as early as 1825. Chauncey C. Helms was supervisor in 1834 and 1835 and died in November, 1866. Daniel Dixon came from Genesee county about 1833 and is said to have sold the first store goods in East Randolph. John N. Angle was a prominent early settler who came in 1830. Samuel Ewing came in 1831. Ezekiel Scudder, a Revolutionary soldier, came in 1827 and died here. Several of his sons settled in town. David Thurston came in 1829 and is still living. The Draper family and Gilbert Gorsline came about the same time. Asahel Crowley came from Mt. Holley in 1831 and his brother Addison in 1835. They were merchants and lumbermen. Hon. Marcus H. Johnson; who was born in Olean, October 21, 1809, the third white child born in the county, has resided in Randolph village since 1843. About the same time Hon. A. G. Dow became a citizen and still resides here. His brother Amos has been a long time resident of East Randolph.

By virtue of the act of the Legislature passed February 1, 1826, the first town meeting was held March 7, 1826, and the following officers were elected: Supervisor, Jeremiah York; town clerk, Andrew D. Smith; assessors, Zebedee Woodworth, Benjamin Clark, Solomon Nichols; collector, A. G. Bush; constable, Comfort Gillette; commissioners of highways, Frederick Sample, Abraham Kierstead, Alfred Smith; overseers of the poor, James Powell, Timothy Torrance; commissioners of common schools, Jerial Smith, H. S. Latham, Otis Hitchcock; inspectors of common schools, Andrew D. Smith, Henry Booth, Albert Helms. The principal town officers have been as follows:

Supervisors.—Jeremiah York, 1826; Thomas Harvey, 1827-28; Zebedee Woodworth, 1829-32, 1837, 1843; Samuel Ewing, 1833, 1838, 1840; Chauncey C. Helms, 1834-35; Abraham G. Bush, 1836; John Sample, 1839; Horace Ewing, 1841-42; Horace H. Holt, 1844; Addison Crowley, 1845-46, 1854; Marcus H. Johnson, 1847; Enfield Leach, 1848-49; A. G. Dow, 1850-51, 1853, 1856-59, 1862, 1867; Spencer Scudder, 1852; William K. Miller, 1855; Benjamin McClean, 1860-61; Amos Dow, 1863; Samuel Scudder, 1864-66, 1871-74; Rodney R. The New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio railroad (locally known as the "Nypano"), completed in 1871 under the name of the Atlantic & Great Western railroad, enters the town from Cold Spring, traverses across the northeast corner through the village of Randolph, where it has a depot, and entering Conewango makes a detour to the west into Randolph again, whence it passes into Chautauqua county. This is the main thoroughfare of the county as well as the town, and is now a part of the Erie lines.

The Randolph Cemetery Association was organized October 13, 1874, by Asahel and Addison Crowley, Enfield Leach, Porter Sheldon, James C. Knapp, Melzor R. Pingrey, Sylvester C. May, Alexander Sheldon, A. G. Dow, Spencer Scudder, Alexander Wentworth, Rufus Crowley, Marvin Bennett, William P. Loomer, and John L. Douglas, the first Board of Trustees being Spencer C. Scudder, Jos. E. Weeden, Abraham V. Doxstader, Benson Archer, Alexander Wentworth, Frederick Larkin, Albert G. Dow, Addison Crowley, and Enfield Leach. The old town burial ground, situated west of Dry brook, was enlarged by the purchase of several acres contiguous and now contains some fine monuments. The East Randolph Cemetery Association was organized February 15, 1853, its incorporators being Samuel Barrows, Benjamin Chamberlain, A. G. Otis, H. Helms, C. C. Helms, A. Helms, Ziba Hovey, A. J. Hovey, A. Lyman, A. C. Merrill, H. Hall, C. Davenport, E. Holdridge, S. G. Frisbie, William Lockwood, G. L. Ostrom, A. S. Payne, William Foy, S. Deland, and W. K. Miller. The first Board of Trustees was composed of Benjamin Chamberlain, A. C. Merrill, Samuel Barrows, Enoch Holdridge, Chauncey C. Helms, and Enoch Jenkins. The association purchased suitable grounds in the western part of the village of East Randolph, where lie the remains of Judge Benjamin Chamberlain and many other notable pioneers.

The town of Randolph in 1830 had a population of 776; in 1850, 1,606; in 1870, 2,167; in 1890, 2,448. In 1892 it had eleven school districts, in each of which a school was maintained, the number of scholars attending being 632. These were taught by fifteen teachers. The school houses, including sites, are worth $16,350. The assessed valuation of the property of the districts is $721,174. The amount expended for schools was $4,883.65.

The beautiful village of Randolph is situated on the west side of Little Conewango creek in the north part of the town. The site is a plain sufficiently elevated and inclined towards the brook to secure good drainage, and is surrounded by fertile and well-tilled farms. The Conewango valley here spreads out to the extent of several thousand acres. A. G. Bush, an early settler, said: "In 1823, as I stood upon one of the Napoli hills which overlooks the Little Conewango valley, the great pine forest which presented itself to view was the most splendid scene I ever beheld." The locality has lost its wildness, but none of its beauty. This is the location of Chamberlain Institute and a good railroad depot; there are also Congregational, Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal, and Roman Catholic churches, a commodious school building, numerous handsome business blocks and stores, a bank, hotels, several manufacturing establishments, shops, etc., and a population of 1,200. The village water works afford a constant supply of pure water and the streets are lighted with electricity. Randolph became an incorporated village by a special act of the Legislature passed May 21, 1867. The first election was held April 7, 1868, and these officers were chosen: Warren Dow, president; Charles P. Adams, James C. Knapp, Charles F. Hedman, Matthew R. Cheney, and David S. Swan, trustees; Charles P. Ingersoll, Addison Crowley, and Ladwick H. Carter, assessors; Alexander Wentworth, clerk; Albert Marsh, collector; Erastus S. Ingersoll, treasurer; Lafayette Carter, fire warden. The officers elected in 1893 are Charles W. Terry, president; O. H. Scudder (one year) and James White (two years), trustees; J. A. Crowley, treasurer; H. D. Litchfield, collector; W. L. Rathbone, water commissioner. The Randolph postoffice was established about 1830 with A. G. Bush as postmaster. October 1, 1867, it became a money order office; it now issues international money orders.

East Randolph is a pleasant post village situated in the corners of four towns—Randolph, Conewango, Napoli, and Cold Spring. The larger part is in the northeast corner of Randolph. The place lies on Elm creek and on a permanent mill stream (formed by springs) known as Mill creek. Sidewalks and omnibuses connect it with Randolph, and the boundary lines meet about half way between the two villages. This village contains several fine residences, Methodist and Union church edifices, a school house, a fine brick hotel, a foundry and machine shop, a State bank, Hall's wood manufacturing shops, and ten or twelve stores. The village is furnished with a good water system. The postoffice was established in 1850 with Merrick Nutting as the first postmaster. It issues money orders.

Bowen is a postoffice three miles south of Randolph village. The office was established in April, 1892, with E. W. Burley as postmaster, who still holds the position.

The Randolph Eclectic Medical College was organized and formally opened in the fall of 1848, the prime movers in the project being Dr. Frederick Larkin, Dr. A. H. Davis, and Dr. B. S. Heath. T. S. Sheldon was president of the Board of Trustees, and the faculty was composed of Dr. J. R. Bush, Dr. C. J. Kenworthy, Dr. S. H. Potter, Dr. B. S. Heath, Dr. Frederick Larkin, Dr. A. H. Davis, and J. E. Weeden, Esq. Forty students registered at the first term and the institution seemed to promise a successful career, but a feeling of jealousy culminated in its removal to Syracuse, N. Y., where it flourished for several years, being finally merged into an eclectic college in New York city.

Early in 1848 the Randolph Academy Association was organized with these trustees: Dr. Alson Leavenworth, Samuel Barrows, Merrick Nutting, Albert G. Dow, Addison Crowley, Joseph E. Weeden, and Thaddeus S. Sheldon. The summit of the hill between Randolph and East Randolph was agreed upon as a location for the building. Six acres of land were purchased of A. G. Bush and Zebedee Woodworth, and there the academy building was afterward erected. The deed is dated June 26, 1848, and during its existence the institution was known as the Randolph Academy and Female Seminary. Funds were raised by the sale of shares of stock at $25 a share; 132 persons purchased, of which number 93 took one share each; 215 shares were sold, amounting to $5,375. In 1849 Joseph Ditto, a man of large experience as a builder, drafted a plan of a building and proposed to erect and complete it for $5,000, the structure to be 80 feet long, 44 feet wide, and three stories high. The proposition was accepted and during 1850 it was nearly completed in time for the fall term of school. The trustees engaged Prof. Samuel G. Love, then of Gowanda, for principal. The first term opened in August, 1850, with 184 students. December 19, 1850, an application was made to the Board of Regents that the academy might be incorporated and become subject to their visitation, and that Benjamin Chamberlain, Merrick Nutting, David Benson, Thaddeus S. Sheldon, Albert G. Dow, Addison Crowley, Joseph E. Weeden, Spencer Scudder, Samuel Ewing, Samuel Barrows, William K. Miller, and Rufus Crowley be trustees of the Randolph Academy Association. The application was approved and the charter bears date January 24, 1851. Of the twelve trustees named only three are living, viz.: Joseph E. Weeden, Addison Crowley, and Albert G. Dow. The principals succeeding Prof. S. G. Love, who remained three years and now resides in Jamestown, N. Y., were Rev. T. Durland, A. M., 1853-54; Henry S. Welton, A. M., 1854-55; Rev. J. W. B. Clark, A. M., 1855-57; Rev. William H. Marsh, A. M., 1857-58; Rev. O. L. Gibson, A. M., 1858-59; Professor Love, again, 1859-64; Rev. Charles H. Holloway, A. M., 1864-65; Erastus Crosby, A. M., 1865-66.

Among the incorporators of the Randolph Academy, and the first and only president of its Board of Trustees, was Judge Benjamin Chamberlain. He had been a contributor to this institution and to Allegheny College to the extent of nearly $100,000, and had always manifested a deep interest in the success of this school. His health declining and having no children he expressed a desire in 1865 of doing something for the academy, and mainly through the efforts of Rev. A. S. Dobbs, then a Methodist Episcopal clergyman in Randolph, the judge made the following proposition: If the stockholders of the academy would consent to a change of the name from Randolph Academy Association to Chamberlain Institute, and the citizens would purchase a certain piece of land adjoining the institution comprising about twenty acres and have it conveyed to Chamberlain Institute, and secure the passage of a law by the Legislature by which the Erie Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church should thereafter elect the trustees, he would furnish to the trustees so elected $50,000 to erect a boarding hall for the institution, and would endow it liberally by his will. The requirements were all complied with, and in July, 1866, the conference elected as their first board the following trustees: Benjamin Chamberlain, A. G. Dow, C. R. Dean, William K. Miller, H. K. Van Rensselaer, Rev. A. S. Dobbs, E. S. Ingersoll, J. C. Knapp, J. G. Johnson, R. R. Crowley, E. McManus, Rev. G. W. Maltby, and Rev.

CHAMBERLAIN INSTITUTE.

WESTERN NEW YORK HOME FOR HOMELESS AND DEPENDENT CHILDREN.

M. Norton. To a building committee of this board $50,000 was paid by Judge Chamberlain and the erection of a building soon commenced. It was of brick, 140x40 feet, three and four stories high, with an ell, 40x60 feet, three stories high. Judge Chamberlain died February 10, 1868. The building was not finished until some months afterward. By his will he left an endowment to the institution of $400,000, but the courts decided after long litigation that parts of the will were invalid. Only about $45,000 was received, and that in bonds and mortgages. On March 16, 1872, six years after the name Chamberlain Institute was adopted, the boarding hall, including the library, cabinet, furniture, etc., was burned, but was rebuilt within twelve months, the building committee being E. S. Ingersoll, Stephen Burlingame, William M. Brown, Frank Hovey, and J. H. Chaffee. The institution now has an aggregate wealth of $113,061.40 as per last report to the Board of Regents. The principals have been as follows: Erastus Crosby, A.M., 1866-67; Rev. A. S. Dobbs, A.M., D.D., 1867-68; Ruggles E. Post, A.M., 1868-70; Rev. James T. Edwards, A.M., D.D., 1870-1893; Rev. E. A. Bishop, A.M., 1893. In 1887 the ell erected in 1864 was enlarged at an expense of about $3,000. The present Board of Trustees is composed as follows: William H. Henderson, president; E. Holdridge, vice-president; Henry K. Van Rensselaer, secretary; Erastus S. Ingersoll, treasurer; W. P. Bignell, D.D., Dr. T. L. Flood, Rev. B. F. Wade, Rev. H. H. Moore, D.D., Rev. J. A. Krumer, D.D., Rev. A. A. Horton, B. R. Johnson, J. V. Goodwill, and A. G. Dow. The Chamberlain Chimes is published at intervals by the students.

The Western New York Home for Homeless and Dependent Children is situated about midway between the villages of Randolph and East Randolph. It had its inception in the mind of Rev. Charles Strong, chaplain of Sing Sing prison in 1876. While there his attention was directed to the neglected and vagrant children of the criminal classes, and he determined to found a home in a rural neighborhood, away from the tempting influences of crowded cities, where the unfortunate little orphans and homeless waifs could be properly educated into good citizens. He had the hearty co-operation of several benevolent citizens and made his plan practical by opening his own house to receive these little unfortunates September 29, 1877, when the "Home" was founded by the admission of two little boys. A society was soon formed, which made the institution permanent, among its first members being William H. Henderson, Asahel Crowley, C. P. Adams, R. R. Crowley, T. E. Adams, Nelson Saunders, Addison Crowley, L. H. Carter, Norman M. Allen, and forty other citizens of Cattaraugus county. Mr. Strong was encouraged by subscriptions and continued his work without compensation for himself or family. In two years they were caring for thirty or forty children. In 1880 the buildings were destroyed by fire. An effort was immediately made to rebuild, but the struggle to obtain necessary funds was hard. When Mr. Strong was about to give up the project in despair Charles Merrill, of Randolph, came to the rescue with his characteristic zeal, energy, and tact and the institution was again opened May 1, 1882, with six children as inmates. Miss Celia Bennett, from Oakfield Seminary, is the matron of the institution. The number of children in the Home on October 1, 1892, was 115. There were twenty-five adopted during the year. Most of the children are between the ages of five and ten years. Under five they are adopted about as fast as they are admitted. It is unsectarian; Sunday is religiously observed, always with a Sunday school inside the Home and sometimes by visiting a neighboring church. The institution depends entirely upon private contributions and the aid of various societies. The Home is a brick building, three stories above the basement, with broad verandas on three sides. A brick school building has just been completed at a cost of $10,000. The officers of the Board of Trustees are William H. Henderson, president; Norman M. Allen, vice-president; Charles Merrill, secretary, treasurer, and superintendent; George V. Forman, chairman finance committee; M. C. Hawley, M.D., is house physician.

Apparently the first banking business executed in Randolph was transacted by A. G. Dow, who established a private bank in February, 1860. In 1866 he erected a building in which to conduct his business, and in 1875 took his son into partnership under the firm name of A. G. Dow & Son. This continued until 1880. T. J. Chamberlain conducted a banking business in East Randolph about three years succeeding 1870.

The State Bank of Randolph was organized July 1, 1874, with a capital of $65,000; January 1, 1877, this was increased to $100,000. The original stockholders were Charles P. Adams, Nelson Saunders, R. R. Crowley, Alexander Wentworth, Thomas J. Wheeler, Addison Crowley, Melvin A. Crowley, J. C. Hurd, Anna E. Lee, Robert Carson, William H. Henderson, Asahel Crowley, and A. L. Kellogg. The first officers were Thomas J. Wheeler, president; Addison Crowley, vice-president; and Charles P. Adams, cashier. In 1892 Addison Crowley was president.

The People's State Bank of East Randolph was organized in July, 1891, with a capital of $50,000. The Board of Directors is composed of S. J. Benedict, Thomas L. Ostrom, M. V. Benson, William H. Henderson, and William E. Searle. The officers are M. V. Benson, president, and William E. Searle, cashier.

Thomas Harvey built the first saw-mill in Randolph on Dry brook in 1823. This was as well the first manufactory of any kind. It was abandoned after a dozen years for lack of power, as Dry brook in the summer season entirely disappears. Walter Crowley erected a saw-mill on Battle creek, lot 30, to cut the pine in the locality. Soon afterward Abraham G. Bush built a mill at the village on the Little Conewango, which he and Zebedee Woodworth successfully operated thirty years. The country round about was then a forest of splendid pine trees, some of which are described by those still living who saw them as having attained a height of 225 feet. In 1866 a new mill was erected on this site and in 1870 Enfield Leach (yet a merchant of Randolph) became interested in it. The mill was further enlarged and scroll-sawing and planing were added. This establishment was known as the Red Lion mills. In 1872 the manufacture of handles was commenced and to turn the additional machinery steam was employed as an auxiliary to the water-power. The mills were then two stories high and more than 100 feet long. In 1874 they were destroyed by fire, and the pine timber being all exhausted were never rebuilt. A steam saw-mill was built in 1856 by four mutes from the State asylum. It had a capacity of 4,000 feet per day. In 1874 Gibbs's handle manufactory was erected in the village with steam as the motive power. It was capable of turning out a car-load of handles daily. This industry has long been abandoned. Willard & Sawtell's Champion milk-vats were patented March 20, 1872, and a manufactory was established on Main street in 1873 by Willard & Hammond. They manufactured yearly 200 to 300 sets and continued until a better patent was obtained about 1880.

The Elko Mining, Milling, and Manufacturing Company was organized July 8, 1892, with a capital stock of $125,000. Its directors are C. P. Vedder, George Z. Erwin, H. J. Coggsall, A. C. Wade, J. S. Whipple, J. E. Hazard, and W. C. Hazard. The officers are C. P. Vedder, president; J. E. Hazard, vice-president and general manager; and J. S. Whipple, secretary and treasurer. This company has a large plant, furnished with the best machinery, situated in Randolph village. Their paint mines are located in the township of Elko, hence the name. They produce four distinct kinds of paint mineral, all of which unite perfectly with linseed oil. They manufacture house paints in 21 different colors, a wood-filler for furniture, and rough-stuff for carriage work.

The Randolph Furniture Works, a company organized for the manufacture of furniture, was incorporated in the fall of 1891 with a capital stock of $12,000 and the following directors: Silas L. King, George E. Seager, D. D. Lockwood, Sarah Lockwood, William H. Henderson, Charles C. Sheldon, and C. W. Terry. William H. Henderson was elected president; Silas L. King, vice-president; D. D. Lockwood, secretary; Charles C. Sheldon, Silas L. King, and George E. Seager, building committee. Land was purchased and the foundation commenced in early winter; the next year the plant was completed. The product is shipped to all parts of the United States.

The East Randolph tannery is located on Elm creek in the village of East Randolph. Frank Williams purchased the plant in the fall of 1889 and conducted it until his removal to Randolph in June, 1890, when he enlarged it by erecting new buildings. The present output is 1,200 sides per week. Seventeen men are employed and the tannery consumes 2,500 cords of bark per year. Mr. Williams came to Randolph in the fall of 1889, an entire stranger, and has become one of the leading citizens of the place.

The Randolph grist-mills were erected by Judge Benjamin Chamberlain and F. G. Otis and the first grist was ground therein January 1, 1856. They were opened mainly to supply the lumbermen with flour to feed their army of laborers and teams. The Luna Lumber Company alone received a ton of feed per day and large quantities of flour. The mills passed through the hands of several owners until 1881, when William F. Moore became half-owner and January 1, 1889, Hon. Enoch Holdridge acquired the other half. Mr. Moore has had the control and management since he became proprietor. He was superintendent of the Dexterville mills at Jamestown fifteen years. Thomas Smith's feed and grist-mills and woodworking shop, in the village of Randolph, is leased by J. L. Woodmancy, who conducts a general custom business. E. & E. D. Holdridge's mills are located on Hall's brook on the site of the first grist-mill of East Randolph, erected in 1824, by Philemon Hall. The motive power is furnished by the brook, which is formed from springs a mile distant and constitutes one of the most reliable water-powers in the county. The mills are three stories high, have three runs of stone, and do an extensive business.

The East Randolph foundry and machine shops are located on the site of a small foundry erected about 1848 by Nutting & McCollister, who were succeeded in 1855 by Samuel Allen. In August, 1857, Mr. Benedict, the present proprietor, with three others, comprising the Randolph Steam Engine Company, purchased the property and manufactured stationary engines and mill machinery. September 17, 1863, the shops were consumed by fire. They were immediately rebuilt by Benedict & Lake, who operated them until 1873. In December, 1873, Mr. Benedict became sole owner and has given his attention mainly to the manufacture of stationary and portable engines and boilers for mills. The works were partially burned again in April, 1888, but at once rebuilt by Mr. Benedict in an enlarged form.

Jeffords's steam mills are located on the Erie railroad and are conducted by Freedom L. Jeffords, the proprietor. The motive power is steam and the capacity is 20,000 feet of lumber per day. Cars are run to the mills and loaded directly from the saws. Moore's steam mills in the southeast part of the town are owned and operated by Wesley Moore. They were built by Isaac Hotchkiss in 1867. The capacity is 10,000 feet of lumber per day. Burley's steam saw-mills on Dry brook in "Bowenville" are owned by Charles W. Burley. He also does planing and matching and deals in rough and dressed lumber. Morton's shops for the manufacture of shingles, staves, and cooper work are located on the north branch of Hall's brook and were built by Capt. Amos Hall, who used them for the manufacture of furniture. In 1873 L. L. Morton purchased the plant of Enoch Holdridge and converted it into a cooperage and continued the manufacture of shingles and staves. The steam saw-mill, planing-mill, and cider-mill, located on Hall's brook in East Randolph, were originally built by Capt. Amos Hall. In 1865 J. F. Stewart purchased the property and in 1878 was succeeded by his son, A. A. Stewart, who is now the sole proprietor. He has added to the buildings, put in a planing-mill, and enlarged the cider-mill. He uses both steam and water-power. James H. Berray's mills in Randolph village manufacture shingles and barrel staves and are operated by steam-power. Mr. Berray also manufactures cider and jelly. E. Hall & Co.'s sash, door, and blind factory is located in East Randolph on Hall's brook, which furnishes the motive power. The first building on the site was a wool-carding-mill erected by Jonathan Wood at a very early date. The present building was built about 1858 by Hall Brothers. In 1862 Erastus Hall became the sole owner. It is now conducted by him and his sons Lyman and Milo.

F. Butcher & Son's woolen factory and carding-mill in East Randolph is operated by steam-power and manufactures all-wool stocking yarns and flannels and does wool-carding, cloth-dressing, and general custom work.

William E. Smith & Co., of New York city, are proprietors of a combination of nine cheese factories. Two of these are in Randolph and one in Leon. The others are in Chautauqua county. All are under the management of D. H. Thompson, of Randolph, as superintendent.

The Randolph Driving Park Association was organized August. 14, 1872, with a capital of $4,000. A plat of twenty-five acres was fitted up, but in 1874 the whole was merged into an agricultural organization.

The Methodist Episcopal church of Randolph was legally instituted December 16, 1830. A meeting house was put up a few years later, but was left unfinished. In 1840 the building was moved from Fifth avenue to a site near where it now stands. In 1858 it was placed on the present foundation and enlarged. In 1865 it was completed and dedicated and the same year the parsonage was built. Recently it has been repaired and furnished with opera house seats, and will seat 350 people. The church property is worth $4,500. The society has eighty members with Rev. S. M. Sartwell as pastor. The Sunday school has 50 pupils; Miss Martha Van Rensselaer is superintendent.

The Regular Baptist church of Randolph was organized with eleven members July 13, 1825, by Rev. Jonathan Blake, a missionary of the State Board of Massachusetts, who was installed the first pastor. In 1845 the present house of worship, a wooden structure, was erected at a cost of $2,200. It will seat 300 persons and with the grounds, etc., is valued at $3,000. The society now has sixty-three members with Rev. John L. Bailey as pastor, and connected is a Sunday school of fifty-four scholars. Since its organization this church has had a total membership of 495. Rev. B. C. Willoughby, the pastor from 1842 to 1847 and now eighty-seven years of age, still resides within the parish.

The Freewill Baptist church of Napoli was formed June 14, 1831, by Rev. Hiram Whitcher, with nine members. Several accessions occurred during that summer, among others being two young women, Sally Tewksbury and Anna Babcock, who proclaimed their conversion at a meeting held on the evening of August 4th, and were baptised immediately afterward, at midnight, in Cold Spring creek. On the 15th following Jotham Metcalf was chosen the first deacon and Freeman Dart the first clerk. Meetings were held in various places in Napoli and Conewango until the summer of 1848, when the society decided to have a house of worship, and for that purpose the First Freewill Baptist church of East Randolph was organized on June 10th. A church edifice was erected that year and first occupied on February 10, 1849. Some years afterward the society became enfeebled and finally suspended service entirely, the house being then used by various denominations. In 1865 it was seriously damaged by a flood and soon abandoned. It stood, however, in a partly demolished condition until 1874, when, on September 9th, a Board of Trustees, consisting of Aaron B. Fox, Jonathan C. Hurd, Jerome Higbee, and Franklin C. Hovey, was elected, funds were collected, and the edifice was repaired at a cost of $1,000. It will seat 300 persons. The property is valued at $2,500. The building was opened to all denominations and remains a union house of worship.

The First Congregational church of Randolph was organized January 7, 1836, by Rev. Sylvester Cowles, at the house of Dr. Luther P. Cowles, who was chosen the first clerk. Walter and Mary (Todd) Crowley were born in Attleboro, Mass., came with their parents to Vermont while that State was known as New Hampshire Grants, and settled in Mt. Holly, cleared a farm, and raised four sons and three daughters, all of whom eventually came to Randolph. Asahel, their son, born in Mt. Holly, Feb. 14, 1809, came to this town in 1831, where he still resides. The ensuing two winters he taught common schools, being also a lumberman. In 1833 he engaged in merchandizing. In 1835 his brother Addison came from Vermont and in 1836 joined him in business with Joseph Stanley. They conducted a general mercantile trade, erected a large store, and were the largest dealers of the place. They also dealt extensively in cattle and lumber. Mr. Stanley retired from the firm about four years later, and subsequently their brother Alvin became a partner. They also manufactured lumber, which they rafted to market down the Allegheny and Ohio rivers. They established a lumber yard at Cincinnati, of which Alvin had charge. They drove cattle to the eastern markets and were extensive farmers and builders. Asahel Crowley had charge outside while Addison conducted the store. Asahel Crowley married Clarissa M. Johnson, of Mt. Holly, in 1836. She was born May 3, 1815. Mr. Crowley has seconded all the enterprises for promoting the interests of the town: the bank, the Randolph Academy, the Home for Homeless Children, the railroad, and other institutions.

Addison Crowley came to Randolph in 1835 from Mt. Holly, Vt., where he was born March 8, 1811. He taught in the common schools and in 1836 joined in business with his brother Asahel and Joseph Stanley. Addison was interested in the organization of Randolph Academy and a liberal contributor to its stock. He was one of the original incorporators of the Bank of Randolph, was its first vice-president, and is now its president. He also gave his aid and influence to establish the Western New York Home for Homeless and Dependent Children. Now a staunch Republican he was first a Whig and the first year he was in Randolph he cast the only Whig vote in town. In 1855 he called the first Republican caucus held in Randolph and was the only one in attendance. In 1840 he subscribed for Horace Greeley's "Log Cabin" and has had the New York Tribune continually since its first issue. He was supervisor in 1846, 1847, and 1854. In 1849 he was sheriff of the county and again in 1855. He was appointed by President Lincoln postmaster at Randolph and immediately resigned the position, when Andrew Johnson assumed the presidency. He was a trustee and treasurer of Randolph Academy. Jan. 10, 1839, he married Mary E. Shattuck, of Warren, Pa., who was the mother of his daughter Ella M., who married B. G. Casler, of Randolph. She was also mother of his son Melvin A. (deceased). Mrs. Crowley died in Nov., 1843, and in May, 1851, he married Arvilla M. Champlin, of Napoli; of their seven children four are living: Addie M. (Mrs. Erie W. Fenton), Kate S. (Mrs. Walter B. Saunders), Jerome A., and Libbie E. Mrs. Crowley died Oct. 24, 1887.

M. Johnson Crowley, son of Asahel, was born in Randolph, Aug. 3, 1841.

He attended Randolph e bedemy and assisted his father as a lumberman, cattle dealer, and farmer. HACagan business as a merchant in company with A. Wentworth, Esq., at Little Valley, in the fall of 1860. In the spring of 1861 they removed the store to Randolph, where Mr. Crowley enlisted in the 64th N. Y. Vols. and was mustered in Sept. 17, 1861, as first corporal of Co. B, being discharged Dec. 30, 1861, upon a surgeon's certificate of disability. He was graduated from Bryant & Stratton's Business College at Cleveland, Ohio, in May, 1863, and became his father's partner in the lumber and cattle business, but again enlisted in the same company and regiment Feb. 14, 1865, being detailed on special duty in Elmira. Joining his regiment in April he received a warrant to rank as first sergeant of Co. B from March 1, 1865, and was transferred to the 194th N. Y. Vols. as second lieutenant, but was afterward commissioned first lieutenant and quartermaster of his old regiment, the 64th. He was discharged at Alexandria with the 64th July 15, 1865. He resumed lumber and cattle dealing with his father and alone until 1875, when he retired from active business. Aug. 29, 1865, he married M. Addie, daughter of W. F. Weed, of Franklinville. Their son William A. died Dec. 14, 1877.

Hon. Rufus Crowley was born in Rutland county, Vt., July 25, 1800. He was a captain of militia, a merchant, and member of the Vermont Legislature. In 1841 he removed to Yorkshire, where he was in the mercantile business with Lorenzo D. Cobb, now of Buffalo, most of the time for seven years. In 1847 he was elected to the Legislature by the Whigs. In 1848 he removed to Randolph, where he resided until his death in 1872. In 1857 he was again elected to the Legislature by the Republicans. For many years he was secretary of the Board of Trustees of Randolph Academy.

Maj. Osmond N. Dexter, a native of Connecticut, came from Dexterville, Chautauqua county, to Randolph at an early day and erected a blacksmith and trip-hammer shop on Dry brook in company with his brothers Edward and Frederick, and manufactured axes, hoes, and forks. Later he removed to the farm now owned by his sons Marcus M. and Henry B., and there erected a shop in company with his brother Frederick. They carried on a general business in blacksmithing and farming. Later they divided the farm and Major Osmond N. continued the business alone. He died in Feb., 1872. Mr. Dexter was a superior mechanic, an extensive reader, a Democrat, and quite a politician. He early took an interest in military affairs and rose through all the grades to major, hence his title. He married Rozilla, daughter of Joel Scudder, who died in July, 1881. Children: Frances M. (Mrs. J. Buxton), Albert, Isophene (Mrs. Warren Abbey), Marcus, Henry. Marcus Dexter was born in Randolph, Feb. 19, 1854, was educated in the common schools, and Jan. 16, 1882, he married Bertha Spaulding, of Randolph. He settled on the homestead in company with his brother Henry and is engaged in farming.

Homer Dixon, youngest son of Daniel, was born in East Randolph, May 12, 1837. He was a natural mechanic and followed the trade of carpenter. In 1860 he embarked in the grocery trade, in which he is still engaged. In Oct., 1867, he married Justina Green; children: Mary E. and John Leonard. Mrs. Dixon died Nov. 3, 1874, and Oct. 12, 1888, he married Mrs. Martha (Davis) Warren, daughter of Rev. Austin Davis. Mrs. Dixon was a resident of Washington eighteen years and much of the time a clerk in the Treasury Department. Miss Mary E. Davis is a painter and a portrait artist of more than ordinary ability.

Andrew J. Dixon, son of Daniel, was born in East Randolph, Feb. 15, 1830.

He, too, is a natural mechanic and began business about 1848 as a carpenter and joiner, which has been his life work. Many of the finest residences in East Randolph are monuments to his skill as an architect and builder.

Albert Gallatin Dow was born in Plainfield, Cheshire county, N. H., Aug. 16, 1808, and was the eighth of the ten children born to Solomon and Phebe Dow. The family soon removed to Hartland, Vt., and from there in 1816 to Pembroke, Genesee county, N. Y. Here his boyhood days were spent, his experience in no wise differing from that common to pioneer life. Educational advantages were few, the labor required was severe and exhausting, the fare was plain and the clothing scanty, but these external disadvantages and discomforts and privations laid the sure foundations of industry, economy, and self-reliance upon which the superstructure of a successful life has been built. The common school in the log house and three months' attendance at a private school afforded the only training received by him outside the home circle during the ten years spent by him in Pembroke. His father died Nov. 9, 1822, and soon thereafter, in his fifteenth year, he began the battle of life upon his own account and commenced the business career which has continued uninterrupted for seventy years. After leaving Pembroke he resided in Batavia, Genesee county, one year, and thence removed to Panama in Chautauqua county, where he remained about six months. In 1827 he removed to Silver Creek, which he made his home for about nineteen years. In 1845 he removed to Randolph, where he has since resided continuously for a period of forty-seven years. At Silver Creek he first engaged in shoemaking, which trade he had previously learned, and continued in this occupation for nearly fourteen years. In Jan., 1840, then in his thirty-second year, he entered the hardware business, having George S. Farnham as a copartner. This partnership continued about a year and on its dissolution Mr. Dow conducted a hardware store at Sinclairville about a year and a half. In the fall of 1842 he resumed the same business at Silver Creek in copartnership with Horatio N. Farnham and this continued until his removal to Randolph in 1845. In 1843 he opened a dry goods store at Randolph, his nephew, James Nutting, being associated with him. This store they conducted as copartners until 1851. Upon his removal to Randolph in 1845 he opened a hardware store in that village. He continued in this business until 1863, associating his son Warren as a copartner in 1860. In 1860 he established a private banking business, which, after his retirement from the hardware trade, occupied his entire attention until 1880, when it was discontinued. In October, 1875, his son Charles M. became a partner in the banking business, which from that time until its discontinuance was conducted under the firm name of A. G. Dow & Son. In 1881 he organized the Salamanca National Bank at Salamanca, being its principal stockholder and first president, holding that office until his resignation in April, 1890. Since that time he has continued a director of this institution, but has not been otherwise actively engaged in business except to supervise and guard his investments. Such is the brief history of an unusually long and remarkably successful business career. A fine fortune has been accumulated from the slow gains of legitimate business. There has been no sudden rise followed by an equally quick collapse. A steady growth in prosperity has been the result of close application, unremitting industry, sure judgment, and undoubted integrity. Pre-eminently a careful and prudent man, Mr. Dow has always shown a broadmindedness and generosity of disposition which have won the respect and admiration of those who know him best.

A. G. Dow

Mr. Dow has found opportunity in the midst of engrossing business cares to interest himself in public affairs and to discharge faithfully and well the duties of various public offices. In his political affiliations he was a Democrat until the war of the Rebellion sundered his party ties. Since 1861 he has found his convictions best represented in the principles of the Republican party, and for upwards of thirty years he has been an active and unswerving member of that organization. He was early elected to local office at Silver Creek and commencing in 1848 he was for eight years a justice of the peace at Randolph. He has served as supervisor of the town ten years and in 1863 and 1864 served in the Legislature as member of Assembly from the Second District of Cattaraugus county. In 1873 he was elected State senator in the Thirty-second District, composed of Cattaraugus and Chautauqua counties, and served as such one term (1874-75). In all of these positions he displayed the good sense, broad judgment, and faithful devotion to duty which characterized him in private affairs. In 1850 Mr. Dow joined his neighbors in organizing Randolph Academy, which, continuing under that name until 1866, was then changed to Chamberlain Institute, and has been for upwards of forty years a great power in the intellectual and moral development of western New York. He was one of the original trustees of this school and has held that office uninterruptedly to the present time. He has taken an active part in religious work. In Silver Creek he united with the Presbyterian church. Upon removing to Randolph he joined the Congregational church of that village, has never dissolved his relation therewith, and has served it in various official capacities. Oct. 4, 1829, shortly after completing his twenty-first year, Mr. Dow married Freelove, daughter of Wheaton Mason, of Batavia. To them were born five children: James, born July 1, 1830 (deceased); Warren, born Jan. 15, 1833; Sarah, born Jan. 22, 1837 (deceased); Mary (Mrs. James G. Johnson), born June 13, 1842; Albert G., Jr., born April 17, 1844. Mrs. Dow died Aug. 21, 1847, and April 23, 1850, Mr. Dow married her sister Lydia A. This union continued upwards of forty years and afforded a home life of rare happiness. Mrs. Dow possessed a strong and winning personality, which gave her great influence over her surroundings. At once tender and forceful, unassuming, and yet full of courage and resources, she gave herself without stint to the service and happiness of others. To remarkable executive faculty she joined the happy power of stimulating others to action. Kind by natural impulse, her unostentatious charities were regulated by such good sense they never demoralized the recipients. Interested in all good works, she exerted a strong influence for truth and right living, and her gracious memory will never depart from the hearts of those who knew her. Her sad and untimely death, June 11, 1891, was occasioned by an accident at a railway crossing near her home in the village of Randolph. To this marriage was given one son, Charles M., who was born Aug. 1, 1853, and upon arriving at majority engaged in banking with his father. He organized the Jamestown National Bank in 1888 and has been the president of that institution from its beginning.

A plain and temperate mode of living has brought Mr. Dow the reward of long life and his eighty-sixth year finds him in good physical health accompanied by unabated mental vigor. He is quietly enjoying the prosperity won by long years of industry, sagacity, and integrity. Throughout his long life he has been plain, unassuming, actuated by honorable motives, sincere in all his dealings, a strong friend, a kind neighbor, and an upright citizen. He has been pre-eminently a just man. Starting in life with no advantages except such as flow from health and inherent integrity, his indomitable purpose to accomplish the tasks set before him, but only by right and honorable means, has achieved fortune and brought him what he values more—the respect of the community in which he lives and the friendship of all classes.

Amos Dow, born in Hartland, Vt., May 22, 1811, came to Pembroke, N. Y., with his parents in 1816, where his father died in 1822 and his mother in 1826. After the age of twelve he supported himself and thus early learned self-reliance. At the age of eighteen he opened a shoe shop at Silver Creek. In 1838 he was proprietor of a tannery and shoe shop combined. In 1846, having previously sold his tannery, he changed to mercantile business. He served in Silver Creek as commissioner of schools and about five years as justice of the peace. From 1855 for eighteen years he was a merchant in East Randolph. In 1872 he purchased the private bank of Thomas Chamberlain, which he continued until the fall of 1891. In 1863 he represented Randolph on the Board of Supervisors. In his long and extensive dealing with men his established reputation for sterling integrity is beyond a doubt. In politics he is a staunch Republican and is liberal in his religious sentiments. In 1827 he married Eliza A. Gates, by whom he had five children.

Abraham V. Doxstader was born in Johnstown, N. Y., came to this town in Nov., 1836, and cleared a farm of 260 acres. He has been a man of push and perseverance and has contributed liberally to church, educational, and charitable objects. In the retirement of old age he enjoys in his present home in Randolph village the esteem and confidence of a large circle of friends. He married Ann Veeder, who died Nov. 25, 1881. Children: Sarah C., Margaret, Alida, George A., and Loraine (deceased).

The Eddy family in America is of English origin and descended from two brothers who came from England in 1630 and settled in Rhode Island. The race in the United States are distinguished as preachers of the gospel. Walton Almy Eddy, son of Job and Fanny (Winslow) Eddy, was born in Middlefield, N. Y., Jan. 7, 1821. Job Eddy, son of Zephaniah, was born in Rhode Island, Dec. 6, 1780, and moved with his family to Otsego county in 1794. He married, in Otsego county, Fanny Winslow, June 3, 1810, who was born Feb. 17, 1789. He was a farmer and in the fall of 1825 moved to Cherry Creek, Chautauqua county, where he was a pioneer. He died Feb. 6, 1866. His first wife was mother of his six children, who are all living except the oldest, Barton Eddy. Mrs. Eddy died Feb. 10, 1836. Walton A. Eddy became a carriage maker. March 15, 1843, he married Sarah M., daughter of Thomas Berry, of Cherry Creek. In August following he settled in Waukegan, Ill., where he opened a shop and prosecuted his trade about four years. He settled in Randolph in 1858, where he has since resided. Mr. Eddy has been a carriage manufacturer and inventor and patentee of several parts for carriages. He devoted his time for seven years to manufacturing a patent carriage seat, his own invention. About 1870, with his son, F. J. Eddy, he built a side-wheel steamboat and launched it on the Allegheny at Cold Spring, christening it the W. A. Eddy. They ran the steamer down the river, jumped the eight-foot dam at Corydon, Pa., and landed it at Ironton, Ohio, where they sold it. In 1874 he built another, The Randolph, sixty feet long, in company with C. C. Sheldon (his son-in-law) and his son, and sold it in Louisville, Ky. The same season E. C. Topliff and Chauncey Harding built a similar steamer, The Cattaraugus, which they sold on the Ohio river in West Virginia. Mr. Eddy is now serving his third term as overseer of the poor. Children: James D., born in Illinois, died in infancy: Evaline, born in Illinois, Dec. 28, 1845, married George Lake; Clara, born Jan. 24, 1849, at Cherry Creek, married Edward L. Phillips (deceased); Fanny and Job (twins), born Nov. 1, 1851, at Cherry Creek—Fanny married Charles C. Sheldon and Job married Ella Walkup; and Janette B., born in Randolph, Oct. 31, 1863.

Hon. James T. Edwards, D.D., LL.D.,* was born in Barnegat, Ocean county, N. J., Jan. 6, 1838. His parents were influential, well-to-do people, and among his large connection are many names of men whose influence has been felt as a power in moulding the character of society and the church. James Edwards, his great-grandfather, fought with Washington at the time of Braddock's defeat and during the whole of the Revolutionary war, in which he was severely wounded. His parents were Job and Susanna Edwards. The former was known as an eloquent local preacher and twice served as a member of the State Legislature. The latter was a woman of unusual force of character and in her earlier years was a teacher. She made sacrifices to give her son a liberal education and always warmly sympathized with his aims. Dr. Edwards prepared for college at Pennington Seminary in New Jersey and graduated from Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn., in 1860. After graduation he filled the chair of natural science in Amenia Seminary in Dutchess county, N. Y. Having served one year in this institution he took charge of the same department in East Greenwich Academy in Rhode Island. The study of law had many attractions for him, and he decided to make that his profession. Arrangements were made for him to enter the office of Hon. William L. Dayton, of Trenton, N. J., but Mr. Dayton was shortly afterward sent as minister to the court of France. The professor's plans were thus frustrated, and before any new arrangement was made he found the work of teaching so congenial that the idea of practicing law was permanently abandoned. His favorite departments of instruction were the sciences and belles-lettres, and to this work he devoted himself with an unflinching enthusiasm which was contagious and inspiring. Besides training his classes in the lecture-room he was constantly delivering addresses before institutes and teachers' associations throughout the State. For a long time he was a member of the Executive Committee of the State Teachers' Association and at the time of his leaving Rhode Island was its president. He married, in 1862, Miss Emma A. Baker, daughter of Rev. Charles Baker, who by her varied accomplishments and unflinching interest in his studies and work has been to him a "helpmeet" indeed. They have three daughters: Grace, Laura, and Florence; the first named is the wife of S. Winsor Baker, of Jamestown, N. Y.

In the fall of 1862 Professor Edwards enlisted as a private in the 1st R. I. Vols., but immediately received from Governor Sprague a commission as second lieutenant, and was soon after elected first lieutenant of a company composed of members of the Young Men's Christian Association of Providence. Afterward he was made adjutant of the parole camp near Alexandria, Va. While in this position he rendered valuable service by his humane treatment of the paroled prisoners, who, when he entered upon his duties, were being shamefully neglected. Upon leaving the army he was elected principal of the seminary at East Greenwich. For more than sixty years this school had done excellent work in educating the youth of Rhode Island and other States, but a burdensome debt of $22,000 had for a long time hung over it to the great annoyance of its friends. Through Professor Edwards's earnest efforts the entire debt was lifted by subscription. In addition to his duties as principal of the seminary he was elected and served as State senator when he was twenty-six years old, being the youngest member of that body. During this session he distinguished himself as a ready debater in an exciting discussion upon the military record and expenditures of the State during the war of the Rebellion. He was elected to the Senate the second time and also chosen presidential elector on the ticket which elected General Grant for his first term, and stumped the State in his support. Professor Edwards took an active part in the discussion of the fifteenth amendment, which was carried in the Senate, but defeated in the House, at this session. He was elected the third time to the Senate and made chairman of the Committee on Education. During this session the temperance question was pressed to the front and legislators were compelled to give it attention, whether in sympathy with the cause or not. The professor was an earnest advocate of a prohibitory bill which was triumphantly carried in the Senate, but failed to become a law because of its defeat in the House. He also took an active part in the establishment of the first Normal school in the State. During this session he made a speech upon the "just limitations of the pardoning power" which attracted general attention and exercised a marked influence in effecting a wholesome reform in the use of that prerogative by the governor of Rhode Island.

In 1870 Professor Edwards moved to this State to take charge of Chamberlain Institute at Randolph. In 1872 its brick boarding hall, erected at a cost of $50,000, was destroyed by fire, being insured for only $10,000. Through the exertions of Professor Edwards and the liberality of its friends it was rebuilt by subscription in less than a year, and stands in its beautiful proportions, free from debt. In 1876 Allegheny College at Meadville, Pa., conferred the degree of D.D. upon the professor and in 1890 he was made Doctor of Laws. He continued at the head of Chamberlain Institute for the long period of twenty-two years, resigning in 1892. During this time 6,000 students were in attendance; 450 graduated from its several departments; and more than 500 certificates were received from the Regents of the State University. There was an average attendance for sixty-three terms of 167 students whose average age for the whole time was seventeen and one-tenth years. Probably there is not a town in Cattaraugus and Chautauqua counties which does not contain representatives from this old school. Its patronage during the administration of Dr. Edwards was drawn from quite an extended area, often embracing several States. In the educational gatherings of this section Dr. Edwards has long been a familiar figure, often lecturing, dedicating school buildings, and engaging in kindred work. As a minister he has preached frequently, being especially called upon for anniversaries, church dedications, and funerals. He has been twice elected delegate to the "General Conference," the lawmaking body of the M. E. church, and three times reserve delegate.

Dr. Edwards is an ardent lover of the natural sciences and has endeavored to make these studies of practical value in this region by discussing, at agricultural fairs, farmers' institutes, and conventions, their principles as applied to agriculture. He built the first silo in southwestern New York and showed the wholesomeness and utility of ensilage. He is the author of numerous published addresses and of two volumes entitled respectively "The Grass Family" and "The Silva of Chautauqua Lake." Dr. Edwards has been identified with the great Chautauqua movement from its beginning, for most of the time in the three-fold capacity of trustee, professor, and lecturer. For nine years he has had charge of the department of physics and chemistry in the College of Liberal Arts. In the fall of 1891 he was nominated by "certificate" as senator from the Thirty-second District, in accordance with a law passed in 1890 permitting a nomination of senator on the presentation to the secretary of State of the certified names under oath of 500 voters desiring such nomination. Seven hundred and fifty names were forwarded and the nomination was endorsed by a People's convention which met in Jamestown and by the regular Democratic convention held the same day. He was elected by over 1,000 majority. As chairman of the Committee on Education during the last session he was influential in passing three important bills which bear his name, viz.: The "University bill," covering all the higher education in the State; the "Library bill," which appropriates $55,000 annually to school and township free libraries; and the "School Commissioner bill," which allows women to vote for school commissioners. Dr. Edwards is a many-sided man and the people instinctively regard him as their man. It can not be said that he is a politician. Positions have sought him. He has been called to places of trust by the people because they judged him fitted by intelligence, a broad statesmanship, purity of life, executive abilities, and eloquence as a public speaker to represent them as a lawmaker. He has always taken an active part in public affairs and held the theory that every citizen who enjoys the blessings of a free government should be willing to bear his share of its responsibilities. He is an attractive, scholarly speaker, with an agreeable voice well balanced by a graceful delivery, and always receives a hearty welcome whenever he appears in the pulpit or upon the platform. Senator Edwards, in addition to his duties as legislator, holds the position of extension secretary of the Chautauqua system of education.*

Herbert J. Ellsworth, son of Stiles B. and Victoria (Jenks) Ellsworth (see page 514), born in Conewango, June 23, 1865, received his education in Chamberlain Institute, and commenced business as a salesman in his father's store. A Democrat in politics he was elected town clerk of Conewango when he cast his first vote and was postmaster there in 1887, at the age of twenty-two. May 11, 1891, he began business in East Randolph in the sale of groceries and crockery. Jan. 10, 1888, he married Myrta, daughter of F. Butcher.

Samuel Ewing was born in New Jersey in 1788. He served an apprenticeship at coach making and married Margaret Morford. He removed to Rochester as early as 1816 and later resided in Victor several years. About 1830 he came to Randolph and settled on the east line of the town where Joseph Macapes now lives. He was first an old line Whig and later a Democrat, and was an active politician. He was supervisor, assessor, highway commissioner, and town superintendent of schools and served two years as county superintendent of schools. He also served as justice of the peace and assessor in Ontario county. He practiced land surveying in Cattaraugus county. Mrs. Ewing died in Jan., 1881, and Mr. Ewing in Jan., 1885. His son Joel was born March 31, 1830, married a daughter of George Williams, and is also a land surveyor.

Simeon Fisher, born in Wardsboro, Vt., in 1793, came to Randolph in the fall of 1839 and engaged in the manufacture of chairs, being the first in that line in Randolph. He continued till his death in 1854. He was a member of the Presbyterian church and several years a magistrate and town clerk. His oldest child, Lucy Celinda, born in 1817, married Orton Nutting in 1839.

*Dr. Edwards, since this sketch was written, has been appointed president of the McDonough School for Boys at Baltimore, Md., founded in 1875 by John McDonough, who left $1,000,000 to educate poor boys. The professor took charge of this institution in August, 1893, and makes his home there.

Davis B. Foskit, born in Madison county, N. Y., Feb. 22, 1808, removed with his parents to Homer, N. Y., and in the fall of 1827 came to Randolph, where he was a farmer and lumberman. About 1834 he married Sally Cross.

Dallas Foy, son of David, was born in Poland, N. Y., July 29, 1844. Educated in the common schools and Randolph Academy he was reared a farmer, and Aug. 21, 1864, he enlisted in Co. G, 13th N. Y. H. A. Joining his regiment near Portsmouth, Va., he did garrison duty until the close of the war, and was discharged June 22, 1865. Feb. 15, 1882, he married Rose S., daughter of Ansell Goodspeed, and settled on a farm in Randolph. They have a son and a daughter.

Horace H. French, son of Harrison and Almira (Sweeney) French, was born in Russell, Pa., May 16, 1835. His father was born in Hopkinton, N. H., and came to Chautauqua, N. Y. His mother was born in Massachusetts. He began business as a merchant and lumberman in East Randolph and engaged in the latter occupation at Cold Spring in 1859. He enlisted in Co. F, 64th N. Y. Vols., Aug. 20, 1861, and was promoted sergeant. He was disabled by illness and served as a recruiting officer with headquarters at his home in East Randolph. He participated in the battle of Chancellorsville, where a shell bruised his shoulder. At Gettysburg he lost his right arm by a wound from a minie-ball, which caused its amputation, and was in the hospital about eight months, being discharged Jan. 28, 1864. He was orderly-sergeant when he was wounded and after his discharge was commissioned (brevet) second lieutenant by Gov. R. E. Fenton. Upon his return in February he was elected collector and constable of Randolph and has served six years as deputy sheriff of Cattaraugus county. He has been an extensive operator in oil. March 28, 1860, he married Mary S., daughter of Archibald C. Merrill, of East Randolph. They had an only daughter, Mabel V., who died March 9, 1882.

Ephraim F. Giles was born in Pawlet, Vt., May 18, 1813. He married Maria Jenks, of Schroon, Essex county, N. Y., Jan. 1, 1842. March 27, 1843, he came to Randolph and was "the village blacksmith" thirty-one years. Since then he has not pursued any regular avocation. Mr. Giles has a remarkably retentive memory and is especially prominent for originality and eccentricity. He is an independent thinker. During his forty-eight years' residence here he has visited Jamestown only twice, East Randolph, once and a half miles away, but four times, has never been in Steamburgh, has never seen the Allegheny river, and has never rode on any of the railroads in Cattaraugus county. In his younger days he had the reputation of being a first-class wag, and was never known to be outdone in stories of the Baron Munchausen kind. He has been the author of half a dozen such books that have never been printed. On one of his four visits to East Randolph he purchased a broom of E. McManus, agreeing to pay for it the next time he came to his store. He did not visit that village for years and not until Mr. McManus had left it. Now at nearly four-score years he is a oracle on the events which have transpired in Randolph since he came here. His mind is clear and his health is good. Mrs. Giles died Dec. 8, 1859. Children: Lydia M. (Mrs. C. S. Edwards), of Syracuse; James M.; Delia, widow of Adelbert Gates, who died of disabilities incurred in the Civil war; Agnes (Mrs. W. F. Ingraham), of Jamestown; and Walter F., a popular salesman in Randolph.

Ansell Goodspeed was born in Warsaw, N. Y., April 9, 1828. His father, Oliver Goodspeed, was a farmer. At nineteen years of age Ansell was an apprentice to the trade of tanner and currier. In 1851 he married Phebe Crawford, of Java, N. Y., who was the mother of a son and a daughter. In 1856 he removed to Napoli, where he was a farmer three years. He then removed to East Randolph and resumed his trade as a currier. In 1878 he bought a small farm in Randolph (Mud Creek district), where he has since been a farmer. He served Napoli as assessor. Mrs. Goodspeed died March 24, 1880. Oct. 30, 1883, he married Mrs. Cordelia (Rice) Wait.

Gilbert O. Gorsline, born in New Haven, Vt., in 1810, removed at the age of nine years to Salt Point (now Syracuse), N. Y., and resided with an older brother about a year, when the latter died. He was apprenticed to the trades of tanner and currier and shoemaker and in 1829 came to Randolph and purchased the Latham tannery (the first erected in town), where he carried on all his trades until about 1836. He was then a lumberman in Napoli (now Cold Spring) about three years and ran his lumber down the Allegheny and Ohio rivers to Cincinnati. He started the first raft from the bridge over the Little Conewango at Randolph village. In 1839 he became a farmer in the Cook neighborhood in Randolph. He subsequently sold that and settled on the farm his son Wallace now occupies. Mr. Gorsline has been highway commissioner, assessor, school commissioner, and constable. Feb. 1, 1829, he married Adaline R., daughter of William Seeley, of Batavia, N. Y. Children: William Wallace, born Feb. 18, 1836; and Gilbert O., Jr., born July 3, 1839. The latter enlisted as a musician in the Civil war in April, 1861, was clerk for Colonel McCunn, was drill-sergeant of the post at Elmira, went to the front with the 35th N. Y. Inf., and after the first battle of Bull Run was on the staff of General Wadsworth as bugle-major. He was transferred to the staff of General Patrick and also served on the staffs of Generals Pope, McDowell, King, and Hooker, and was wounded at the battle of Antietam. After his wound had healed he re-enlisted and served as a musician on a gunboat about two years and was discharged at the close of the war. He is now a farmer. Sept. 6, 1868, he married Marguerette Hallenback, who was the mother of all his children—three sons and one daughter. She died May 6, 1883. May 4, 1886, he married Mrs. Eva Dawson, of Cattaraugus.

Philemon Hall, born in Guilford, Conn., about 1772, was a cook in the Revolutionary war. He married in his native town Mary Parmalee and a year or two later removed with an ox-team and sled to Bloomfield, N. Y., and located on his father's claim of 150 acres given to him for service in the Revolutionary war. He was there a farmer and later a hotel keeper in Bloomfield village, where he was burned out. In 1820 he settled in the southwest corner of Napoli. In 1822 he built a saw-mill on the location now occupied by the grist-mill of Enoch Holdridge. About 1824 he built a grist-mill on the same dam and near the saw-mill. He brought the few irons from Bloomfield and the mill-stones were wrought from a pebble rock in Great Valley. Mr. Hall carried on quite a business. He died in 1857 and was succeeded by his sons Joel, Horace, Amos, and Erastus, of whom only Erastus, an octogenarian, is living. He was born in Bloomfield, N. Y., May 24, 1809, and is a natural mechanic. As a millwright he has built numerous mills in western New York and in Canada. He invented and patented a shingle-mill, and is now the senior member of the firm of E. Hall & Co. In Sept., 1827, he married Emeline Rathbone, who has been his helpful companion sixty-four years.

Children: Lyman, Milo, Henry, Philander (a soldier in the Civil war), and Mary (deceased, who married Jefferson, a nephew of Judge Chamberlain.

Amos A. Hall, son of Horace and grandson of Philemon Hall, was born in Napoli, May 24, 1837, one of twelve children. Sept. 4, 1860, he married Frances Jones. In Aug., 1862, with three brothers, he enlisted in Co. E, 9th N. Y. Cav. Oct. 1, 1863, he received a severe wound from a minie-ball in his right knee joint and amputation of his leg was necessary. He was transferred to the general hospital at Central Park, where he remained until he was discharged Aug. 23, 1864. In 1865 Hon. Enoch Holdridge, postmaster of East Randolph, resigned in favor of Mr. Hall, who held the position until displaced by Grover Cleveland. During this service he became a jeweler and afterward conducted a jewelry store sixteen years. His wife and son Lewis C. succeeded him. He died April 4, 1888. Children: Fred A., of the firm of Hall & Waters, harness makers in East Randolph, Lewis C., Cora L., George W., and Charles P. Hall Brothers (Lewis C. and George W.) are clothing dealers.

John Hammond, son of Jared and Hannah (Bennett) Hammond, was born in Ridgebury, Pa., Nov. 17, 1832. His father, a native of Connecticut, was a farmer. His mother was born in Pennsylvania. John was raised a farmer and enlisted in Co. G, 171st Pa. Vols., in Oct., 1862. He joined his regiment at Suffolk, Va., and was discharged as corporal Aug. 8, 1863. In June, 1864, he settled permanently in Randolph, where he has since been a druggist, tin-smith, and manufacturer and dealer in the Willard & Hammond Champion milk-pan. Since discontinuing the latter business he has been engaged in producing oil in McKean county, Pa. May 5, 1880, he married Harriet Hanson, of Gloversville, N. Y.; they have one son, Rex.

Chauncey C. Helms and his brother, Christopher C. Helms, came from Monroe county, N. Y., to East Randolph and built a saw-mill and grist-mill. They contracted for several hundred acres of wild land and also had a pearl and pot ashery in operation before 1830. Christopher C. died in 1830 and Chauncey C. conducted the business alone. In 1832 he built another dam farther down and put up a double saw-mill. He was a leading merchant many years, an extensive dealer in lumber and cattle, a man of great influence, and was supervisor of Randolph in 1834 and 1835. He died in Nov., 1866. Byron and Christopher C. Helms, sons of Christopher C., early became lumbermen and Byron was a competent river pilot. Later they were manufacturers and dealers in lumber and were partners in lumbering and farming, which they conducted twenty-two years. Byron Helms is now proprietor of the Commercial House. Christopher C. is a farmer, liveryman, and owns the Brooklyn House.

Albert Helms, a native of Otsego county and the oldest of thirteen children, was born June 13, 1796. At the age of sixteen he was a soldier in the War of 1812 and was present at the battle of Sacket's Harbor. He married Asenath, sister of Freedom Jeffords. In 1826 he came from Rush, N. Y., to East Randolph, where he resided until his death Feb. 28, 1889. When he settled here he purchased a tract of wild land and at once began to convert the pine trees into lumber. He was also for years a merchant and a manufacturer of potash and pearlash. Late in life he was a farmer. Mr. Helms had three children by each of his three wives: Mortimer A., Emily A., Romina L., Asenath M., Eunice R., Mary A., Adelbert H., Cordelia, and Gaylord. Adelbert H. Helms was born in East Randolph, where he now lives, Nov. 22, 1842. In 1864 he enlisted in Co. G, 9th N. Y. Cav., and served to the close of the war. He is a carriage and ornamental painter, grainer, and sign writer. Recently he has done some fine landscape painting. He is a trustee of the village, to which position he was elected in 1888, and is the secretary of the Board of Water Commissioners. May 1, 1865, he married Eliza J., daughter of Chauncey C. Helms. They have one son, Clair A., born July 6, 1877.

T. Frank Hines, born in Evans, N. Y., Dec. 3, 1844, early learned the tin-smith's trade, and served in the Union army three months. He followed his trade as a journeyman eighteen years. In 1880 he opened a general hardware store in East Randolph, which he continued a year and a half, when he sold and came to Randolph. In 1885 he bought the tin shop of his employer, George Mason, and a year later purchased the general hardware store of B. G. Casler, which he conducted alone until Sept., 1888. He then formed a partnership with C. W. Terry under the firm name of Terry & Hines. In May, 1890, he purchased the interest of Mr. Terry. In Feb., 1874, he married Ida Wheeler, and had three children. Mrs. Hines died Sept. 25, 1887.

The Hobart family in America is of English origin and descended from Edmund Hobart, who landed at Charlestown, Mass., in 1633. Abel Bradford Hobart, of the eighth generation from England, and a son of William, was born in Potter, N. Y., Feb. 6, 1798. He married, in East Bloomfield, Feb. 6, 1822, Marana, daughter of Thaddeus and Elizabeth (Doud) Stanley. She was born in Goshen, Conn., July 2, 1796, and died in Randolph, May 3, 1872. Soon after his marriage he removed to Phelps, N. Y., where he carried on the business of tanning leather about five years. He moved thence to Napoli, where he resided twenty years. He lived in Carroll, N. Y., three years and in Randolph twenty-two years. Here he was a deacon of the Congregational church fifteen years, when he resigned. For many years he was employed as colporteur in the distribution of Bibles. He died at Le Roy, N. Y., while on a visit, Sept. 6, 1871. Children: Homer Harrowby, Elizabeth H. (widow of Florentine F. Mighells), Harlton S., Ellen E., Helen Wooster, Huldah M., Harlow D. S., and Howland Bancroft.

Hon. Enoch Holdridge, eldest son of Rev. Price and Lydia (Robinson) Holdridge, was born in Nelson, N. Y., Aug. 29, 1818. His father, a pioneer preacher of the Methodist Episcopal church, settled in Napoli in 1832. He traveled hundreds of miles through forests, storms, and sunshine. Enoch came to East Randolph in 1838 and worked for Capt. Amos Hall one year at $12 per month, and continued with him about fifteen years, transacting a large amount of business along the Allegheny, Ohio, and Mississippi rivers. He has been engaged on his own account in lumbering, farming, and merchandizing, and now owns with his son Ernest D. the "upper grist-mill" in East Randolph, located on the site of the first grist-mill of the place erected by Philemon Hall in 1824. Mr. Holdridge also has a half-interest in the Randolph mills in East Randolph village. He married Sarah, daughter of Jeremiah and Mary May-see. She is the mother of his three children: Josie, born Feb. 22, 1846, wife of Rev. W. W. Woodworth; Gertrude, born April 26, 1849, died Dec. 27, 1852; and Ernest D., born May 20, 1856. The latter was educated in Chamberlain Institute, engaged in teaching, and began the study of law, but was obliged to abandon it on account of ill-health. Enoch Holdridge was first a Whig and joined the Republican party at its organization. He has received many political honors. He has served the town of Conewango as justice of the peace twenty-one years, supervisor eight years, and in 1872 was member of Assembly. In 1861 he was appointed postmaster of East Randolph, and voluntarily resigned in 1865 in favor of the veteran soldier, A. A. Hall, who lost a leg in battle. He has served as a trustee of Randolph Academy and at the organization of Chamberlain Institute was elected trustee, which position he still holds. He has been an efficient, honorable, and upright man and officer.

George Hubbard, son of William C. and grandson of Dr. H. H. Hubbard, of Springville, N. Y., was born in Randolph, May 6, 1854. His mother was Adaliza, daughter of Daniel Thurston, one of the pioneers of Randolph. Nov. 5, 1879, he married Isabel L., daughter of Orris McCullough, of Evans, N. Y., and settled on a farm. He also manufactures and deals in lumber and wood.

Spencer E. Hubbell, son of Eli and Mary (Huxley) Hubbell, was born on the Hubbell homestead Nov. 7, 1844. His father was a pioneer of Conewango. In the spring of 1863 he removed with his parents to Randolph and was a student in Chamberlain Institute until he was graduated in 1867. He began business as a merchant in Randolph village, but abandoned it about 1870 on account of failing health. In 1867 he married Maryette E., daughter of Abel Merchant, one of the first pioneers of Napoli. When he left his store in Randolph he purchased the Merchant homestead of his father-in-law and added to it fifty-five acres, making a farm of 220 acres, which he still owns. He removed to it and remained there until Dec., 1888, when he purchased a stock of general merchandise of Adams & Co. in East Randolph, where he is now a merchant. Mr. Hubbell was secretary and treasurer of the Axeville cheese factory six years and treasurer and salesman of Spring Valley factory six years. He served Napoli as supervisor in 1887 and 1888, and held several minor town offices. In politics he is a staunch Republican. He is a member of the M. E. church, superintendent of the Sunday school at Napoli, and is now a steward and trustee of the church of East Randolph.

William B. Hughes, son of Isaac B. and Sarah (Hindman) Hughes, was born in Jefferson county, Pa., Dec. 11, 1847. His father was a farmer. He learned harness making, and manufactured and dealt in harnesses, horse furnishing goods, etc., until the fall of 1890. He enlisted in the Union army in 1864 and was discharged at the close of his term of enlistment. He has always been a Republican and an active worker in that party. He was prominent in East Randolph, where he resided twenty years, and was elected one of the Board of Trustees when the village was incorporated. In the Republican county convention held in Sept., 1891, he was the nominee for sheriff and was elected by a majority of 1,450 votes. Feb. 22, 1872, he married Sarah Davis, of Mansfield, daughter of Robert Davis.

Jonathan C. Hurd, born in Bridport, Vt., March 24, 1824, received a good English education, and began business as a clerk in a general store. In 1845 he came to East Randolph, where he has since resided. He purchased a tract of pine timbered land and engaged in lumbering four years. In 1847 he was elected constable, which kept him employed until 1853. In 1853 he opened the first drug store in East Randolph with his brother-in-law, Dr. A. B. Parsons, and has been a druggist most of the time since. Mr. Hurd was originally an old line Whig and joined the Republican party at its organization. He was deputy sheriff eight years. From 1870 till 1877 he was in the dry goods trade in East Randolph, and thence removed the business to Sawyer City, Pa., where he still continues a general store. He has also bought largely of farmers' live stock, and produce. In 1871 he was one of the organizers of the State Bank of Randolph, and has been most of the time one of its directors. He is a member of the Congregational church of his village.

Hon. Erastus S. Ingersoll, son of Peter and Lois M. (Smith) Ingersoll, was born in Ellington, N. Y., on the 24th of April, 1837. He obtained his education in the common schools and in Ellington Academy and taught district schools from 1856 till 1860. He began merchandizing at Cattaraugus in 1860 and continued until 1865; since then he has been a merchant in Randolph, and since 1880 has had a branch store at Kennedy, N. Y. He has always been a Republican and has several times represented his district as a delegate at State conventions. He has served seven years as supervisor of Randolph, was trustee of Chamberlain Institute twenty years and three years president of its Board of Trustees, and chairman of a committee to erect a building in place of the one burned in 1872. He was the chairman of a committee to erect the buildings for the Western New York Home and has since been one of its trustees; he has been several times president and trustee of the village of Randolph. Mr. Ingersoll was elected to the Assembly of the State Legislature in 1886 and served on the Committees on Claims, Indian Affairs, and Joint Library. He was re-nominated for the position by acclamation and elected by a plurality of 756 votes. He was placed on the Committee of Ways and Means, was chairman of the Committee of Roads and Bridges, and a member of the Committees on Public Health and Joint Library. Aug. 22, 1860, he married Lizzie J., daughter of N. Christie, Esq., of Cattaraugus. Children: N. Christie, born May 9, 1868, and Ralph E., born July 19, 1877.

Liberty Jefferds, son of Matthew and Salla (Helms) Jefferds, was born in Rush, N. Y., April 18, 1813. His father died in 1819 and his mother removed to East Randolph during his boyhood. He married, first, a daughter of Robert Helms, who was the mother of his son Lucian, a lumberman in Sheffield, Pa. His second wife was a daughter of Eldred Bentley, of Chautauqua county. Mr. Jefferds settled in East Randolph and was there engaged many years in manufacturing and dealing in pine lumber and hand-made pine shingles, which he rafted down the Allegheny and Ohio rivers. Later he was a farmer and lumberman in Randolph and Cold Spring about twenty years. He now resides with his son, Lyman Jefferds, in Tyrone, Pa. Mrs. Jefferds died Nov. 30, 1887. Children: Cordelia (Mrs. Joseph Arnold); Freedom L., born in Randolph, Dec. 23, 1838; Marcus, of Pennsylvania; Delilah (Mrs. Charles Kirkpatrick); Lyman; and Lydia (Mrs. Marion Pickard). Freedom L. Jefferds was raised a farmer and lumberman. Sept. 13, 1863, he married Clarinda, daughter of Samuel Foy, an early settler of Napoli. Mr. Jefferds now owns and conducts the Jefferds steam mills near the east line of this town, where he manufactures annually from two to three million feet of lumber. He also conducts a farm of fifty acres.

Freedom Jefferds was a native of Monroe county, N. Y., and one of a large family of children. His father was a prominent man in that county, being familiarly known as Judge Jefferds. Freedom Jefferds, one of the younger sons, married, in 1848, Lurancy D. Willard, of Attica, N. Y., and soon after settled in East Randolph, where Mr. Jefferds was engaged in the mercantile business in company with Horace H. Holt, the firm name being Holt & Jefferds. In 1848, having been in partnership with Mr. Holt since 1840, Mr. Jefferds sold his interest in the store to Merrick Nutting and soon moved onto a tract of timber land in Cold Spring, where the village of Steam-burgh now stands. Large mills were at once erected. Lumbering was followed as a business for a number of years and the land upon which he had settled in a few years developed into a splendid farm, where he resided until his death. Mr. Jefferds followed this line more or less during the remainder of his life, farming being looked upon by him as an unremunerative "side issue." The lumber, as fast as sawed, was drawn to the Allegheny river and there rafted and run to Cincinnati for market. Freedom Jefferds was one of the most prominent men in the town of Cold Spring and well known throughout the county; he was an ardent Democrat and never neglected an opportunity to further the interests of his party, though he was in no sense a politician; he was active in educational interests; measures for the material improvement of the town always met with his hearty approval, and if financial aid was needed in the furtherance of any project his name was always found at the top of the subscription list. He gave lands upon which to build a hotel and stores in Steamburg and subscribed liberally toward the erection of suitable buildings. He was one of the original stockholders in the Randolph Academy and Female Seminary, and freely gave a right of way across his farm to the Atlantic & Great Western Railroad Company and materially aided that corporation in the building of their line. J. C. Calhoun, the auditor of the Railroad Company, was a close friend of Mr. Jefferds and a frequent guest at his home. During the war he was an enthusiastic supporter of the Union cause and was largely instrumental in causing resolutions to be passed authorizing money to be raised for volunteers and to provide means for the support of their families; the action of the town authorized bounties of from $150 to $600 per man. Mr. Jefferds represented the town of Cold Spring on the Board of Supervisors in 1856, 1857, 1860, and 1863. He was a charter member of Conewango Lodge, No. 340, I. O. O. F., instituted at East Randolph in 1850. In the latter years of his life he was agent for the Devereux Land Company and disposed of large quantities of land held by that company in Cold Spring and surrounding towns. He was a man of many friends, of imperturbable good nature, and a practical joke was one of his chief enjoyments. His old-time friends, to this day, relate many a lively story of his pranks and side-splitting escapades. He was charitable to a fault and many a poor family has cause to bless the liberal heart and hand of Freedom Jefferds. He was not a church member, though he contributed liberally to the church, and was never known to use an oath. He succeeded in obtaining a competency and had about concluded to retire from actual business, but while yet full of plans for the future welfare of his family, and the consideration for his own comfort, he was stricken with an incurable disease, and, suffering much pain, he passed away in the prime of his manhood, leaving a widow and four children surviving him.

Owel M. Jefferds, son of Freedom and Lurancy D. (Willard) Jefferds, was born in Steamburg, Feb. 20, 1854, received his education in Chamberlain Institute, and commenced business as a druggist in East Randolph, where he was engaged five years. He was teller of the State Bank of Randolph five years until Sept., 1887. He was railway postal clerk from Hornellsville to New York from Sept., 1888, until May 1, 1890, when he resigned to accept the position of editor of the Courant at Randolph. In Aug., 1877, he married Emma J. Harding, of East Randolph; children: Lamont A. and Wynne I.

Marcus Hamilton Johnson, son of James G. and Sophia (Stone) Johnson and brother of Hon. James G. Johnson, was born in Olean, Oct. 21, 1809, and is credited with being the first white male child born within the limits of the city of Olean. Through his long business career he was a merchant in Ellicottville and Randolph. He was supervisor of Randolph in 1847, was appointed treasurer of Cattaraugus county by the Board of Supervisors in 1841 and again in 1842, was elected to the Assembly in the fall of 1843 and re-elected in 1847, and was appointed in 1855 United States Indian agent for the State of New York and held the office four years. Feb. 12, 1833, he married Sophronia Willoughby and has had one son, James G., an attorney in Randolph.

Bela R. Johnson, son of Gile and Millie (Rich) Johnson, was born in Dayton, N. Y., Jan. 11, 1843, was educated in the common schools supplemented with a few terms in the academies, and in 1873 located in East Randolph and opened a general hardware store, which he still continues. He is a staunch Republican and has served Conewango as supervisor two terms, justice of the peace four years, and for over ten years has been a trustee of Chamberlain Institute. He is a member of the M. E. church, its recording secretary, trustee, and class-leader, and has served as superintendent of the Sunday school a longtime. Dec. 30, 1868, he married Bettie Wheeler. They have two sons.

Harvey L. Jones, son of Abner P. and Lydia (Seabury) Jones, was born in Poland, N. Y., Nov. 29, 1832. His father was a native of Vermont and a carpenter and joiner by trade. His mother was born in Rhode Island. Abner P. removed with his family to Cold Spring in 1835, where Harvey L. spent his youth attending the common schools and learning the blacksmith's trade. At the age of eighteen he became a pilot on the Allegheny and Ohio rivers, which business he continued for more than twenty-five years. He was also a mason. About 1846 he came to Randolph. In 1854 he was elected constable and continued in office until 1861. He was appointed deputy sheriff in 1857 and served about two years. At the first call for troops he enlisted in Co. B, 64th N. Y. Vols., and went to the front as first lieutenant; owing to the illness of the captain he commanded his company and was commissioned captain in Jan., 1862. Because of the disability of his superior officers he commanded the 64th Regt. after the battle of Fredericksburg until he was discharged Jan. 11, 1863. He escaped with two slight wounds, one received at Fair Oaks, the other at Antietam. He served as constable, policeman, deputy sheriff under Sheriff Welch, and deputy U. S. marshal. In Feb., 1859, he married Cordelia, daughter of Mason Sheldon, who was born in Clear Creek, Chautauqua county. Their children were Addie L. (Mrs. Horace L. Greene), Genevieve S. (Mrs. Charles W. Clapp), Howard H., Ida G., and one deceased.

Nathan Keech, a native of Otsego county, removed with his parents to Augusta, Oncida county, when he was seven years old, where he married Matilda Case. He removed with his bride to Randolph about 1828 and first settled on what is now known as the Nickerson farm. He was quite a dealer in real estate, and frequently sold his improvements. After about three years he returned to Augusta and remained there until 1861, when he returned and bought a farm on the south line of Conewango, now known as the Dix farm. He sold this to his son, Esau P. Keech, and removed to an improved farm on the Jamestown road and finally to the place now owned by his son Esau P., in Randolph, where he died about 1874. He had ten children, six of whom attained maturity. Esau P. Keech, born in Augusta, N. Y., in 1835, married Mary Emogene Marole in 1859. Previous to this he spent three years in gold mines in California. In 1861 he settled on a farm in Conewango and in 1863 became a farmer in Canada. Returning about 1868 to Conewango he settled in 1882 where he now lives. He has been an indomitable worker and has chopped hundreds of cords of fire-wood.

Frederick Larkin, M.D., son of Edmund, was born in Thompson, Conn., Feb. 12, 1814. His father was a skillful physician and surgeon in Thompson. The son was educated in the common schools and studied medicine with his father, but mechanical work being more congenial he abandoned the medical profession and learned the watchmaker's trade. He opened a jewelry store which he conducted about twenty-five years. He came from Chautauqua county to Randolph in 1841. Since coming to Randolph he has been an extensive dealer in real estate and quite a manufacturer and shipper of lumber. Fifteen buildings in the village erected directly or indirectly by him are standing witnesses of his industry and energy. He is a man of fine scientific attainments and a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He filled the chair of professor of physiology in the Randolph Eclectic Medical College, which was afterward merged into the New York Central Eclectic Medical College at Syracuse, which institution conferred upon him the honorary degree of M.D. The doctor is an able and eloquent lecturer on scientific subjects, and possesses a special liking for physiology and archæology. He wields an able and racy pen and has written numerous logical articles on science and several on religious questions. He is not considered "orthodox" by the clergy. He is versatile and lucid, and has a happy manner in communicating information to others.

Frederick Larkin, Jr., was born in Randolph, Dec. 25, 1858. He attended the public schools and Chamberlain Institute and was an apprentice at the watchmaker's trade with his father. In 1879 he opened a jewelry store. As a memento of his handicraft he has made from the crude material a watch, constructing all its parts with such tools as are found in an ordinary jeweler's shop. June 2, 1887, he married Kittie M. Hovey, of East Randolph.

Enfield Leach was born in Genesee county, Sept. 12, 1816. In 1822 he came with his parents to Randolph. In the fall of 1836 he taught school in the "red school house" near Joel Scudder's tavern and was next engaged in Livingston county two and a half years. Since returning to Randolph he has led an active business life. He has been a merchant and an extensive dealer in lumber with partners and alone most of the time since the fall of 1839. In the fall of 1842 he married Mary A., daughter of Zebedee Woodworth.

John E. Leach, son of Enfield and Mary A. (Woodworth) Leach, was born in Randolph, Sept. 15, 1849, received his education at Randolph Academy, and commenced business as a clerk at the age of fifteen. He was superintendent of Indian schools for the Allegany and Cattaraugus reservations in 1883, 1884, and 1885. In the spring of 1886 he was appointed inspector of postoffices, which position he held until the fall of 1889. In Dec., 1875, he received the appointment of kitchen keeper at Sing Sing prison from Capt. R. R. Crowley, inspector of State prisons, and served until Feb. 22, 1877. In the spring of 1868 he was special agent of the Erie canal with headquarters at Tonawanda, and served one year. He was early town clerk of Randolph several years. In Aug., 1890, he succeeded his father as a general merchant. April 26, 1870, he married Ida, daughter of Buel Scudder, of Randolph. Children: Charles B., born March 2, 1871, and John B., born June 14, 1881.

William Lee, of Scotch-Irish origin, and son of Col. Edward Lee, of the British Army, was born in New Bliss, Ireland, in 1824. He came to America when quite young and began an extensive business as a railroad contractor, early developing great ability as a manager of laboring men. He so organized his men that none excelled him in pushing work to rapid completion. He was a bold contractor and after successfully completing several large railroad jobs he was appointed superintendent of construction of the Atlantic & Great Western railroad. He had resided in Sidney, Ohio, fifteen years and removed thence to Randolph in 1866. He owned a controlling interest in the town of Leetonia, which was named in his honor. Mr. Lee, during his residence of six years in Randolph, endeared himself to the people, and was distinguished for his great energy and force of character and for his social qualities and kind hospitality. He died Feb. 9, 1872. He married Anna Wallace, in Perrysburg, Ohio, June 2, 1856. They have two sons and two daughters: Edward Wallace Lee, a prominent physician in Omaha, Neb.; James B. Lee, a member of the Ogalalla Cattle Company, who resides at Ross, Wyoming; Elva Lee, a student in Bryn-Mawr Female College; and Ellie Lee, who died in infancy. Mrs. Lee, having decided to make Randolph her future home, erected a palatial residence and is interested in all the improvements of the village.

Deacon Alvin Lyman, son of Jabez and Lois (Johnson) Lyman, was born in Royalton, Vt., Oct. 20, 1809. Feb. 12, 1832, he married Eleanor, daughter of Amos and Lydia (Whitcomb) Huntington, of Bethel, Vt., who was born Jan. 7, 1813, and settled on a farm in Bethel. In 1835 they removed to Napoli. About 1841 they settled in East Randolph, where Mr. Lyman had built a good residence. In the fall of 1868 they removed to the farm within the limits of Randolph village now owned by their son, Capt. J. H. Lyman, and now reside on Jamestown street. Mr. Lyman was a millwright and farmer and followed both avocations. Both were members of the Freewill Baptist church of East Randolph, of which he was a deacon twelve or thirteen years. He also served this town as justice of the peace and assessor and was a highway commissioner in Napoli. Four of their seven children died in childhood; those living are Joel H., Mary E., and Helen A. J. H. Lyman, born in Randolph, May 11, 1845, enlisted in Aug., 1861, in the 9th N. Y. Cav., and served with the Army of the Potomac and with General Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley. At the battle of Port Republic he was shot through his right leg by a musket ball. He was mustered out as quartermaster-sergeant in Nov., 1864, and was commissioned second lieutenant in the 7th U. S. Inf. in April, 1866. He served until July, 1866, at Governor's Island as recruiting officer and was then ordered to Florida to join his regiment. He was made adjutant-general on Gen. J. G. Foster's staff in Sept., 1866, and served in that capacity and commanded his company until 1870, and resigned as captain in 1871. Since then he has resided in Elmira, N. Y., and in Randolph.

Major Macapes was born about 1798 and came to Randolph about 1825, locating within the limits of the village on land now owned by A. G. Dow and his son Charles. He reared two sons and two daughters and died on the homestead in May, 1883. Mrs. Macapes died in Feb., 1883. Their oldest child, Emily, the wife of James Turner, is the only one of the family who resides in Randolph.

Harry Marsh, a native of Oblong, Conn., born May 29, 1787, removed with his parents to Bristol, N. Y., in his childhood. He served in the War of 1812, and married, July 13, 1814, Louisa King. They settled in Randolph in 1829 on Sample hill. About 1859 he retired to Randolph village, where he died July 26, 1875. Mrs. Marsh survived until Jan. 14, 1887. Mr. Marsh was a deacon of the Congregational church from its organization until old age, and being a strong advocate of temperance he raised the first frame building in town without the use of intoxicating liquor. Of his eleven children ten grew to maturity and seven are still living. The youngest son, Albert Marsh, was born in Randolph, Feb. 15, 1831, and followed farming until Aug., 1861, when he enlisted in Co. B, 64th N. Y. Vols., and served until May 12, 1864, when, at the battle of the Wilderness, after capturing the flag of the 44th Va. Regt., he received a wound in his back and a severe shell-wound in his right leg, which made amputation necessary at the thigh. For this he was promoted second lieutenant. He has been collector a number of years and postmaster about three years. He and his sister, Delia A. Marsh, have a home in Randolph village. Lieutenant Marsh was voted the best soldier of his company and received the prize of $100 therefor as pledged by Alexander Sheldon.

George Marsh, oldest son of Deacon Harry, was born in East Bloomfield, N. Y., July 30, 1817. In Jan., 1829, he came to Randolph with his parents. At the age of twenty-two he began business as a lumberman in Cold Spring (now Elko). He was a lumberman for thirty years and in 1862 added a feed-mill to his saw-mill. In 1870 he removed to Kansas, where he was engaged in farming seven years. Since then he has resided in Randolph. He was first an Abolitionist and at one election he cast the only vote of his party in town. He has been a Republican since the organization of that party. Aug. 25, 1840, he married Almira Wadsworth, of Cortland, N. Y. They have had eleven children. Their oldest son, Duane W., enlisted in Co. A, 154th N. Y. Vols., July 24, 1862, was taken prisoner at the battle of Gettysburg, July 2, 1863, confined on Belle Island, transferred to the rebel hospital on account of illness, and was paroled and sent to the Union hospital at Annapolis, where he died Aug. 23, 1863. George, their youngest son, resides in Randolph.

Hollis Marsh, son of Hollis and Polly (Scudder) Marsh, was born in Kiantone, N. Y., Aug. 30, 1837. This branch of the Marsh family is of Welsh origin and is descended from three brothers, one of whom settled in Maine, one in New Hampshire, and the other, the great-grandfather of Hollis, second, in Vermont. His grandfather, Joseph Marsh, came from Vermont and settled at the "forks," the confluence of the Little Conewango with Conewango creek, about 1830. He was a farmer. Some time in the forties he removed to Michigan, where he died. His son Hollis married Polly Scudder, taught school, and later engaged in merchandizing in Randolph in company with A. G. Bush. He died of pneumonia in May, 1837. Hollis Marsh, his son, born after his father's death, was reared a farmer, and in Oct., 1861, enlisted in Co. E, 9th N. Y. Cav. At Washington he was ill with pneumonia, was sent to the hospital, and was discharged an invalid. Dec. 15, 1858, he married Ellen

M. Coy, of Randolph. The last ten years he has been secretary and superintendent of Randolph Cemetery. They have a son and a daughter.

Otis Marsh, son of Hiram H., was born in Sinclairville, N. Y., Nov. 25, 1838. His father, a miller, went to California by the overland route at the time of the gold excitement and died there. Otis enlisted in Co. C, 9th N. Y. Cav., in Sept., 1861, and served to the close of the war, re-enlisting as a veteran in the same company and regiment. He has three children.

Aaron D. McIntyre was born in Villenova, July 10, 1836. His mother, Sophronia Smith, who married Justin McIntyre, is yet living, and her mother, now ninety-six, is a pensioner of the War of 1812. Aaron D. learned the tanner's trade at Silver Creek and settled in East Randolph about 1865, where he was employed in the tannery. In 1874 he came to Randolph village, where he still resides, and where he is now a beekeeper. Sept. 4, 1862, he married Addie Pike; children: Ida S. (Mrs. Jacob Huntley), George, and Nellie O. (Mrs. Charles Tubbs). Mrs. McIntyre died Nov. 8, 1888.

Edwin McManus was born in Hanover, N. Y., March 29, 1825. His father, Joseph McManus, was a farmer. His grandfather, Christopher McManus, served in the war for our independence and his father served in the War of 1812. His ancestors were of Scotch-Irish descent. Edwin McManus was a school teacher for two years and then entered the general store of George Hopkins, of Villenova, as a clerk. Two years later he was sent by Mr. Hopkins to Cherry Creek to take charge of a branch store, which he conducted about two years. In 1865, in company with his brother-in-law, Sidney U. Main, of Batavia, he came to Randolph from East Randolph and opened a drug store. In 1880 Mr. Main retired from the firm and was succeeded by Edwin P. McManus, the firm name being E. McManus & Son. This ceased in 1882 by the death of the junior member. Since then Mr. McManus has conducted the business alone. At the organization of the Episcopal church he was elected its treasurer and one of its wardens, which positions he has since held. He aided in establishing the present system of water works and was influential in erecting the Union School building. First an old line Whig he has been a Republican since the organization of the party. He has served three consecutive terms as justice of the peace and was the trial justice of the town. He married Sophronia Pingrey; children: Edwin P. and Cora Belle.

Isaac Merrill, born in Connecticut, April 14, 1879, came from Westmoreland, N. Y., in 1821, and settled on lot 54 in Cold Spring, where he resided until approaching old age. He died Oct. 18, 1858. He married Rebecca Benedict, Jan. 31, 1804. She was born in Connecticut, March 11, 1781. Archibald Crosswell Merrill came to Cattaraugus county with his parents. At the age of thirteen he was apprenticed to Daniel Hazeltine, of Jamestown, to the clothier's trade. He supplemented his common school education with a few terms at Allegheny College in Pennsylvania. In 1837 he married Emily C. Goodwin, of Jamestown. In 1838 he came to East Randolph and in 1841 removed to Concord, Ohio, and established business as a cloth-dresser and wool-carder. Eight years later he returned to East Randolph, where he was a merchant, farmer, postmaster, and assessor many years. He was a member of the M. E. church from 1831 and all of the time officiated as class-leader. He was also a steward and trustee, and for twenty-five years was a trustee of Chamberlain Institute. He died in East Randolph, July 19, 1885. His widow survives and resides with her son, Marcus F. Merrill. Children: Mary S., Marcus F., Lucyette (Mrs. Van M. Benson, deceased), and Clara C. Marcus Fenton Merrill was born in East Randolph, July 7, 1840, was educated in the common schools and Randolph Academy, and enlisted in Co. E, 9th N. Y. Cav., Oct. 7, 1861, being discharged Oct. 27, 1864. He was engaged with his father as a clothier until the spring of 1866, when he went to Chicago, where he was a dealer in flour and feed, an express messenger, and a carpenter and joiner. He married there, in 1868, Mrs. Mary M. (De Lap) Washburn. In 1870 he returned to Randolph, where, with his father, he was a furniture dealer and undertaker. He continues as the successor of the firm and is now postmaster of East Randolph. He is a prominent member of the M. E. church, a trustee, steward, and class-leader. As a soldier he was commissary of his company.

Florentine F. Mighells, a descendant from a Norwegian family, was born in Lima, N. Y., in 1806. He married, at Lancaster, Nov. 3, 1830, Sophronia D. Dopkins, who was born at Hoosick, N. Y., Oct. 5, 1809. Soon afterward he settled in Burford, Canada West, where five of his children were born, and where he was proprietor of a flouring-mill and saw-mill. Between 1838 and 1840 he removed to Ellery, N. Y., where he was a farmer until about 1845, when he located in Randolph village and engaged in general merchandise trade. He also owned a tract of timber land comprising the whole of lot 35 and a part of lot 36, containing 525 acres, and built the first saw-mill in "Bowenville," the one now owned by Charles W. Burley. He spent over four years in California and when he returned he settled on this property where his widow and youngest son now reside, and where he conducted quite a large lumber business. He was a member of the M. E. church and one of its stewards. Mrs. Mighells died in Randolph, March 6, 1851, being the mother of ten children. Dec. 28, 1859, he married Mrs. Elizabeth H. (Hobart) Howe, who survives him; children: Sophronia (Mrs. Morse), Ellen (Mrs. Abbey), Eldora (Mrs. Nelson Dewey), and Elliot C.

In 1886 he became a partner with P. L. Moore under the firm name of Moore & Piper. Dec. 25, 1880; he married Miss H. E. Weegar. They have one daughter.

Meletiah H. Price, son of Meletiah and Hannah (Grow) Price, was born in Cortland county, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1808. He settled with his father where Steamburg now is about 1827, on a tract of pine land of some 250 acres, which included the entire village. They were lumbermen, and despairing of ever making a farm of the claim M. H. exchanged it for a farm partly cleared in Conewango now owned by A. Pope and R. Deland. He removed to it about 1838 and his father died there about 1850. About 1856 he sold this farm and went to Wisconsin, but returned in the following fall, and eventually bought a farm on lot 17 in Randolph, which he sold finally and removed to South Valley, where he died Feb. 12, 1879. He married Lucinda Potter, of Cold Spring, May 15, 1833, who was born in Connecticut, March 14, 1815. They had nine children. Their oldest son, Alfred B. Price, was born in Conewango, Oct. 7, 1838, and enlisted in the 64th N. Y. Vols. in April, 1861, but the quota being filled he was rejected. In Aug., 1861, he enlisted in Co. C, 9th N. Y. Cav., and at Westfield was attacked with typhoid fever, for which he was sent to the hospital and thence discharged. Aug. 2, 1862, he enlisted in Co. A, 154th N. Y. Vols., and participated in all the battles of his regiment, being discharged at Elmira, June 21, 1865. July 27, 1865, he married Ellen, daughter of Zalmon and Mary (Metcalf) Smith, of Napoli. Mr. Price has been a farmer and lumberman in Randolph. Children: Minnie (Mrs. Alfred Drayton), Verie (Mrs. A. B. Cross), Nora (Mrs. T. S. Lane), and Zalmon. The latter married Lillie Abbey, and is a farmer with his father.

James Rathbone, son of Philander and Cynthia (Van Brunt) Rathbone, was born in Albany, N. Y., Oct. 8, 1826. He moved with his parents to Abbott's Corners, N. Y., where he remained until he attained his majority. He spent several years as a clerk and began business as a merchant with his father in Sinclairville, Chautauqua county. Later he was there associated with others. In 1875 he removed with his family to Randolph and for two years conducted business in Red House and Forestville. In 1877 he opened a grocery store in Randolph, which he continued until his death, Feb. 14, 1886. Feb. 5, 1856, he married Mary A. Spiking, of Sinclairville. His son, William L. Rathbone, succeeded his father in business.

Charles C. Rich, son of Zalmon and Julia A. (Young) Rich, was born in Persia, July 18, 1851. His father was a farmer. Charles C. began business as a clerk in a general store in Cattaraugus. In 1872 he came to Randolph and opened a hardware store in company with his brother, H. Clarence Rich, the firm being styled Rich Brothers. This continued until Oct., 1880, when the business was divided, C. C. Rich taking the furniture part and H. C. Rich the hardware. Charles C. continued alone until his health failed. In 1883 he purchased the opera block and resumed trade. In 1884 his brother William H. became his partner, which continued until Feb., 1890, when William H. sold his interest to William Myres. Mr. Rich is a stockholder and a director of the Randolph State Bank. In June, 1874, he married Louise, daughter of John Fenton. She died in 1881. In Nov., 1883, he married Eugenia A. Searles. H. C. Rich was supervisor of Randolph in 1882.

William Rogers, born in Salem, N. Y., Feb. 20, 1807, removed with his parents to Cortland county when he was eight years old, and married, in Cincinnati, N. Y., Sept. 11, 1830, Hannah Wiles. He was a farmer there until 1836, when he removed to Randolph, rented a farm four years, and in the spring of 1840 permanently settled on the place he still owns on lot 28. Mrs. Rogers died Dec. 12, 1865, and in 1873 he left the homestead and has since resided with his oldest son, George Rogers. Children: George, born Feb. 19, 1831; Giles, of Sheridan, N. Y.; Gilbert, a soldier in the Union army; Jane (Mrs. Alfred Sample), of Kennedy, N. Y.; and Jerome, who died at the battle of Malvern Hill. George Rogers began business as a lumberman and manufactured extensively hand-made pine shingles. Oct. 7, 1856, he married Emily, daughter of Davis B. Foskit, and settled where they now reside.

Frederick Sample settled on Sample hill in 1823 and was soon after joined by his brothers Samuel, John, Jackson, and Jacob. The neighborhood of this colony of the Sample family soon became known as Sample hill, which name it still bears. John Sample was born in Herkimer county, N. Y., April 21, 1797. Dec. 5, 1819, he married Betsey Sheffer, who died July 21, 1822, being the mother of his daughter Margery. In 1825 he came to Randolph and located on lot 63. He returned to his home and Nov. 2, 1826, married Mary Hess. Mr. Sample had a good education for his day and taught several terms of common school. He was assessor, supervisor, and magistrate a long term of years. He died March 4, 1873. Mrs. Sample died June 29, 1890.

Freeman E. Sample, oldest son of John, was born on the homestead in 1828. He married Polly Palmer in 1853 and settled on eighty-five acres of land in Poland, where he died July 9, 1889. He was an ambitious scholar, received a good academic education, began teaching when sixteen years old, and taught in winters until he was twenty-five. He became prominently identified with the Patrons of Husbandry and was a worthy member of Union Grange, No. 244, of Jamestown. He was supervisor at the time of his death. Children: Eric H. and Ethel E.

Arthur A. Stewart, son of J. F., was born in Randolph in 1854. Educated in the public schools he began business as proprietor of the mill which he now owns and conducts, the capacity of which he has at least increased three-fold. In Sept., 1890, he married Mrs. A. M. (Reed) Zibble.

Edwin Stone, born in Brownville, N. Y., June 24, 1831, began business as a carpenter at the age of eighteen years. In the fall of 1850 he came to Conewango. Nov. 17, 1851, he married Orlantha Priscilla, daughter of Gaius Wood, and settled as a farmer in Rutledge. Mr. Stone has 37 acres in the village of Randolph, where he has resided since the spring of 1876. He has been a dealer in real estate, has built and renewed several farm buildings, and built and conducted a cheese factory two years. In Sept., 1864, he enlisted in the Rebellion, and was discharged June 23, 1865. While moving a building at the company quarters a roof fell upon his head, which fractured his skull and incapacitated him from further duty. Children: Frank A., who married Emma Hollenbeck, of Leon; and Minnie.

Horace D. Swan came from Madison county, N. Y., to East Randolph as early as 1827, and there built the first iron foundry in town, which he and his partner, James Pease, conducted about a year, trading his interest for a saw-mill in Cold Spring. He conducted a lumber business two or three years, and was a resident and merchant in Randolph, where he was also justice of the peace five or six years from 1832. Returning to Cold Spring he was a farmer and served as supervisor from 1839 to 1842 inclusive, and also kept a country hotel. He finally became a farmer in Napoli, and died at Oil City, Pa., while marketing produce, aged sixty-two. He married, in Madison county, Polly Salisbury, who was born in 1800, and who survived until Dec., 1878. Of their five sons four are living: James A., of Dakota; Daniel S.; and Alonzo F. and Horace D., of Napoli. Daniel S. Swan, born in Villanova, Chautauqua county, June 23, 1829, was a clerk in a country store at the age of seventeen, and six years later opened a store in company with Deacon Allen in Cold Spring, where he was engaged two years. He then removed to East Randolph and opened a general store. In 1867 he removed to Randolph, where he has since resided. He was a merchant about five years, a lumberman four years, and has run a large number of lumber rafts down the river. Since 1877 he has engaged largely in producing oil. A staunch Democrat, he has been supervisor, justice of the peace, and overseer of the poor. In 1864 he married Lizzie M., daughter of Andrew P. White, of Ellington, Chautauqua county. Children: Eva M., Agnes W. (deceased), Lizzie M. (died July 1, 1886), and Arthur W. (born in 1880).

Charles W. Terry, son of William A., was born in Franklinville, March 25, 1846. At the age of eight years his parents removed to Sugar Grove, Pa. At the age of fourteen he was employed by a Mr. Clark in the lower oil field and at fifteen was sent to Blossburg, Pa., to superintend the sinking of a test oil well. In 1861 he enlisted in the 9th N. Y. Cav., but was rejected on account of age and size and not having permission of his parents. In 1862 his parents moved to Conewango, and Charles attended school at what is now called Chamberlain Institute, walking about four miles night and morning. In Aug., 1864, he enlisted in the 9th N. Y. Cav., and was with Sheridan on his raid from Winchester to Appomattox. After being discharged he again attended school at Chamberlain Institute, and received a State Regents' certificate as an academic scholar in Nov., 1867. In the winter of 1869 he was one of the teachers in Chamberlain Institute under Professor Post, and had charge of the common English department and advanced classes in arithmetic, algebra, and geometry. In 1868 he engaged in the drug business with J. C. Hurd at East Randolph as clerk, and continued in the business as clerk and proprietor till 1876. He married Adelle M., daughter of A. B. Fox, of East Randolph, Feb. 19, 1870. They had one son, Leland B., born July 3, 1874. In Feb., 1875, Mr. Terry was elected justice of the peace in Randolph for four years. In the fall of the same year he moved into Conewango and the next spring was elected town clerk. In Feb., 1877, he was appointed justice of the peace for one year and was elected for four years from Jan. 1, 1878, and in Feb., 1881, was re-elected for four years more. In 1876 he entered the office of M. V. Benson at East Randolph and read law three years. June 1, 1877, he was appointed by the collector of internal revenue at Buffalo deputy collector for the counties of Chautauqua and Cattaraugus, and held the position till July 1, 1882. In 1877 he was elected journal clerk of the Board of Supervisors, and was re-elected continuously till the fall of 1882, when he was elected county clerk for three years. At the expiration of his term as county clerk he moved to Randolph and in the spring of 1887 was elected supervisor of the town, and has been re-elected each succeeding year, being the present incumbent of that office. He has always taken a lively interest in politics, is an ardent Republican, and has been several years a member and secretary of the Republican County Committee.

Dominicus Thoma was born in Baden, Germany, July 21, 1815. In 1832 he emigrated to America in a sailing vessel. Sept. 1, 1833, he came to East Randolph from Montgomery county, and was engaged in the sale of German clocks, until 1841. In Dec., 1839, he married Mary E. Smith. About a year later he settled on a farm in Randolph, where he resided about three years. In the fall of 1844 he removed to Fredonia, N. Y., where he was engaged in manufacturing and dealing in lumber until the fall of 1857. He then returned to East Randolph, and with three others purchased the foundry and machine shop then standing on the site now occupied by S. J. Benedict's establishment. Three years later he sold to his partners, and opened a grocery store, which he continued five years. Since then he has been a sawyer. He has served several years as town clerk of Conewango. Children: Marion, widow of C. E. Hall; A. Jennie (Mrs. Frank Barber); Blanche E.; and R. Adaline (Mrs. Manly D. Milks). In Oct., 1840, he received his naturalization papers from Judge Benjamin Chamberlain, and cast his first ballot in November following for Martin Van Buren. In 1856 he joined the Republican party.

The children of Davis Williams were Sophia B., Huldah J., Aarah A., Norman D., Abigail P., Mary A., Rollin B., and Saraette M. Mr. Williams was a pioneer of Cattaraugus county, and resided in Leon, Otto, and East Randolph villages. His wife survives him.

The Willoughby family in America trace their ancestry back as far as the eleventh or twelfth century. Their record in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, describes them as descendants of Sir John de Willoughby, a Norman knight.

Tracing from him through a lineage of lordships we find George Willoughby, the seventh baron in the line of descent, who was doubtless the father of Joseph Willoughby, who was born in 1691. "Being a young man of great intelligence, master of the fine arts, expert in fencing, a charming musician, and of pleasing address, he was a great favorite of Queen Anne, reigning sovereign of England, and was chosen by her one of her 'Life Guards.'" "The Lord Chamberlain attempting to enter the Queen's bed-chamber dishonorably, he resented the indignity, fought the Lord Chamberlain, and slew him. Instead of being executed for murder he was banished from the Kingdom about 1714, and went to Carthagenia, South America, where he resided about two years. He then emigrated to Norwich, Conn., and settled there. Later he removed to Northville and settled on a farm, where he died in 1751." Bliss Willoughby, his oldest son, was born in 1721, and married, second, Rosanna Cole in 1771 or 1772. He had settled in Shaftsbury, Vt. He preached the gospel and was also a magistrate and government surveyor, and surveyed a large portion of the southern part of Vermont. He was sent to England to ask religious toleration of the Queen and accomplished the object. With a large number of "New Lights," as adherents of his creed were styled, he became a Baptist. He died Sept. 27, 1807. His son Bliss was born and lived on the Shaftsbury homestead, where his son, Rev. Bliss C. Willoughby, was born Jan. 23, 1807. When the latter attained the age of twenty he came to Sheridan Center, N. Y., where he resided three years. In 1830 he settled in Rutledge, where, in 1831, he experienced conversion to Christ and where, in 1832, he married Joanna M. Fitch, who died Dec. 10, 1888, aged eighty-one. Children: one died in childhood; a daughter died Feb. 4, 1886; and Albert F., born in Rutledge in Conewango, Sept. 3, 1833. Rev. Mr. Willoughby, a few years after his conversion, placed himself under the able tutelage of Rev. William Arthur, father of the late President Chester A. Arthur, then pastor of the Baptist church of Perry, N. Y. He afterward attended the academy in Wyoming and soon after was licensed to preach. He was ordained July 27, 1841, and has been pastor of the following churches: Clear Creek, Cherry Creek, Randolph, Kennedy, Fredonia, Rutledge, Eden, Warren (Pa.), Meadville and Pleasantville (Pa.), Sinclairville, and Union City (Pa.). He closed his regular pastoral labors with the church at Randolph. Since then he has supplied the church of Napoli two seasons and still occasionally preaches a sermon. Nov. 8, 1890, he married Mrs. L. D. Barr, of Cranberry, Pa.

Oscar C. Wood, son of Gaius and grandson of Gen. Seth Wood, an early settler of Conewango, was born there April 16, 1844. In Nov., 1863, he married Rosetta L., daughter of William Snow, and settled on a farm of 175 acres, which he sold nine years later and bought in East Randolph the farm he now owns. He was proprietor of five creameries from 1873 until 1885, in which he manufactured both butter and cheese, his sales from one factory in 1873 aggregating $60,000. Since Sept., 1887, he has conducted a hotel in East Randolph. His hostelry was burned May 14, 1888, and he has since erected a handsome brick structure on the site. In connection he has a livery stable. He has served as constable several years.

Capt. Samuel Woodford, born in Connecticut in 1784, married there Phebe Fillmore, cousin of Millard Fillmore. In 1831 they were farming in Ellicottville and June 10, 1837, they settled on a farm in Napoli a short distance from the corporation of East Randolph. This they sold and came to the village of East Randolph, where he died Jan. 10, 1857. He served in the War of 1812 under Gen. William Henry Harrison and led his company as captain at the battles of Lundy's Lane, Kingston, and others. He served as commissioner of highways in Ellicottville and Napoli. He and his wife were members of the Baptist church. She died May 13, 1867. Of their eleven children five are living: N. S., Cyrus Fillmore, John V., Emily S. (widow of David Woodin), and Henry J. Henry J. Woodford was born in Ellicottville, March 4, 1833. He was proprietor of the Half-way House between Randolph and Little Valley and subsequently of the East Randolph House, which he conducted with a livery about fifteen years. Since then he has been engaged in the hardware business, in oil speculation, and in dealing in real estate. He has also bought and sold many high blooded horses. He owns the famous horse "Barnum," long "king of the turf." Mr. Woodford married Sarah J. Whitaker, a native of Vermont, Aug. 6, 1853. Children: Elva Augusta, Lelia W. (Mrs. W. E. Searle), Bertie (died Feb. 4, 1857), Frank McClellan.

Austin Woodruff, born in Aurora, N. Y., July 6, 1820, was educated in the academy at Aurora. His father, a farmer and lumberman, died Jan. 14, 1838. He was a clerk in a store in Machias a year, and then returned home and managed the farm and saw-mill until 1844, when, with his brother, Henry Seymour Woodruff, he opened a general store in Yorkshire. In 1846 and 1847 he was proprietor of the Globe Hotel in Yorkshire. In 1849 Austin came to Randolph, where he still resides. Here he has been a merchant and a dealer in live stock. Originally a Whig he joined the Republican party at its organization, and has been assistant revenue assessor several years, resigning the position in favor of Capt. F. C. Jones, a veteran of the war; he was also for six months in the Pension Bureau at Washington. He has served a number of years as assessor of this town and was long a trustee of Randolph Cemetery.

Capt. Zebedee Woodworth was born in Rensselaerville, N. Y., May 14, 1779. His father removed with his family to Fenner, N. Y., and in 1825 Zebedee came to Randolph and settled on Sample hill. Later in his life he removed to the village and gave his attention to his lumber business. He filled most of the town offices, being supervisor six years, and in the militia rose to the rank of captain. Captain Woodworth died Nov. 23, 1867, the day of the fifty-second anniversary of his settlement in Randolph. Children: Mary A. (Mrs. E. Leach), George, Sophia W. (Mrs. S. Holbrook), deceased, Charles, Spencer, and Susan (Mrs. Bemis), deceased. George Woodworth was born in Madison county, Jan. 14, 1823. He has principally followed farming, but has also manufactured and dealt in lumber and for forty-five years was a dealer in cattle. Mr. Woodworth now resides in Randolph village and has retired from active business. In Sept., 1846, he married Miss C. Coy. Children: Mina (Mrs. Henry Seymour); Lewis, who married Cora Pierce, and is a farmer and deputy sheriff; and Flora (Mrs. Frank Elliott.)

CHAPTER XLV.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF RED HOUSE.

RED HOUSE was erected from Salamanca on the 23d of November, 1868, and comprises all of township 1 and about one-half of township 2 in range seven of the Holland survey. It is bounded on the north by Salamanca, on the east by Carrolton, on the south by Pennsylvania, and on the west by Cold Spring and Elko, and contains an area of 36,392 acres. The name is derived from a raftsmen's house which was painted red, and which stood on the bank of the Allegheny at the mouth of Red House creek. In the days of rafting it was quite a celebrated resort, but the name and characteristics of its proprietor have passed into oblivion, and the structure itself has long since disappeared. The name of the color of the building was first applied to the eddy in the creek, then to the stream, and finally to the town.

Lying upon the south border of the county, a little west of the center, the surface of this town is not unlike that of adjacent territory, but its location in the best timbered section of southwestern New York affords to the inhabitants an employment suggestive of earlier times of frontier activity. Broken into a mountainous upland its highest summits reach an altitude of some 800 feet above the Allegheny river, which flows through the northwest corner and has as tributaries Red House creek and Saw-Mill run. The soil of the lowlands is composed of a sandy loam, which gradually becomes admixed with clay towards the elevations. The best farming lands in the town are included within the Allegany Indian reservation, which lies on either side of the river and inhabited almost entirely by Indians. Aside from this Red House contains very little territory devoted to agriculture. Portions of the town are still in a wilderness condition. Lumbering yet forms the chief industry of the people, and in this connection no township in the county exceeds this in quantity or quality.

The first settler in Red House was Darius Frink. He was born in Sterling, Conn., removed to Carroll, Chautauqua county, in 1826, and in 1827 located permanently on the creek near the Allegheny. For a number of years he was the only white resident of the town. His grandson James was supervisor of Red House in 1886. Nelson Frink, the father of James, was a life-long citizen and representative farmer. James Rosenberry, the second settler, came in 1837 and located on lot 31. He had previously lived in Great Valley and Salamanca. Other pioneer settlers were Lysander Whaley, Caleb Owens (who was subsequently murdered in Steamburg), Howard Fuller, Elijah

Pease, Hubbard Clark, Richard Wright, William Coan, Abner Thomas, Richard Burgett, Sylvester Dunbar, Marcus Frisbie, Stephen Carr, Francis Strickland, George Decker, and David and Ezekiel R. Kelley.

The first town meeting was held February 23, 1869, when these officers were chosen: Francis Strickland, supervisor; T. E. Bristol, town clerk; D. A. Scouten, John Sharp, F. F. Deyo, S. D. Woodford, justices of the peace; Abner Brown, commissioner of highways; Nelson Frink, E. R. Kelley, Francis Strickland, assessors; Daniel Carr, collector; J. C. Wright, overseer of the poor; Albert Sheffield, William Critchell, Daniel Carr, William Backus, S. F. Pease, constables. The supervisors have been as follows:

Supervisors.—Francis Strickland, 1869; Howard Fuller, Jr., 1870, 1879-81, 1883-84; Richard Burgett, 1871; Clark W. Bosworth, 1872, 1876; E. R. Kelley, 1873-74; S. D. Woodford, 1875; Elias C. McIntosh, 1877, 1885; Lafayette I. Darling, 1878; B. L. Grover, 1882; James Frink, 1886; Frank A. Burgett, 1887-93.

It was not until 1851 that a school house was built in the town, and in it Caroline Barnes was the first teacher. This building was erected on the Little Red House creek. In 1892 there were six school districts, in each of which a school was maintained; there were 211 scholars, who were under the instruction of six teachers. The value of the school buildings and sites was $1,560, while the assessed valuation of the districts for school purposes aggregated $267,765. The amount of money received from the State was $768.89 and by local tax $184.26. The population of Red House in 1890 was 1,156 against 487 in 1880.

Anent the subject of facilitating travel the most important matter considered after the organization of the town was the construction of a substantial bridge across the Allegheny. In 1869 the supervisor was authorized to issue bonds not to exceed $6,000. October 15, 1870, the sum of $1,000 was voted by the town to build the approaches and during the session of the Legislature that winter Hudson Ansley, Esq., succeeded in securing an appropriation of $3,000 from the State to aid in constructing the bridge. The structure is over 500 feet long and spans the river near Red House station. The expense to the town was defrayed by a tax of seven cents per acre on the lands of its citizens. A similar bridge was erected on this site in 1860.

The New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio railroad crosses the northwest corner of the town, traversing the north bank of the river, and has a station here known as Red House. Along the south side of the Allegheny runs the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad, on which is Shongo station, nearly opposite that of Red House, and near it is the northern terminal of the Allegany & Kinzua railroad, which traverses the west edge of the town and runs into Pennsylvania, having a single station, Freck's, in this township. This latter road is operated mainly for the transportation of lumber.

Red House, the principal village or hamlet in the town, is situated wholly on the Indian reservation, on the Allegheny river, and on the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio (Erie) railroad. It contains two or three hotels, stores, a postoffice, and a scattered collection of dwellings. The postoffice was established in 1869 with Theodore Bristol as postmaster. Richard Burgett erected a tavern here in 1871.

Freck's is a postoffice on the Allegany & Kinzua railroad, in the southwest part of the town, and was established a couple of years ago to accommodate the lumbermen of that locality. Here were located the immense saw-mills of H. C. Freck & Co., after whom the office was named. These mills were burned May 7, 1893. Their capacity was 20,000,000 feet of lumber per month. The loss was estimated at about $20,000.

Hall's is a postoffice on lot 14, town 1, and on the highway running from Red House to Limestone. It was established January 20, 1893, with E. J. Hall as postmaster. Mail is received daily from Red House.

The first saw-mill in town was erected on the Little Red House in 1849 by Marsh & Frisbie. In 1853 another was built on the same stream by the Bay State Lumber Company, who owned 20,000 acres of timber land in the south part of the town, and who also opened the first store here. Other large saw-mills, prior to 1875, were put up and operated by James Appleby, John Sharp, Francis Strickland, A. H. Reynolds, Clark W. Bosworth, and J. F. Eighme. Darling & Gibbs built a handle factory in 1873 on lot 18. A few attempts have been made to produce oil, but these can not be regarded as successful.

The first religious society organized in town was formed by the Methodists, December 2, 1860. The United Brethren and the Baptists also held services soon afterward. The principal work in this direction, however, has been of a missionary character, the meetings being convened mainly in school houses.

The Burgett family in Red House have been among the town's most prominent and enterprising citizens. Richard Burgett opened a hotel in the village in 1871 and the same year was elected supervisor. Frank A. Burgett has held the office by re-election since 1887.

Darius Frink, the first permanent settler in Red House, was a native of Sterling, Conn., and for one year was a resident of Carroll, Chautauqua county. In 1828 he came to this town, where for many years he was the only white inhabitant. During the last few years of his life he lived on lot 18 in town 2, where his son James subsequently resided. The latter has served his town in official capacities, being supervisor in 1886. Nelson, his brother, lived and died in town.

Howard Fuller settled first in Randolph, then in Pennsylvania, and in 1839 in Cold Spring, whence he subsequently removed to Red House. He was a prominent pioneer and long carried on an extensive mercantile and lumbering business. He was supervisor of Cold Spring four years and held other local offices. His son Howard, Jr., served as supervisor of Red House in 1870, from 1879 to 1881, in 1883, and in 1884. He came here in 1858.

James Rosenberry was born in Butler county, Pa., and became the second permanent settler in Red House, locating on lot 31 in 1837. He went to Great Valley in 1815 and thence to Salamanca in 1816, where he lived until his removal hither. He died here, the oldest man in town.

CHAPTER XLVI.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF SALAMANCA.

SALAMANCA, including the present town of Red House, was formed from Little Valley on the 19th of November, 1854, with the name of Bucktooth, and embraced all of townships 1 and 2 and about one-fourth of township 3 in the seventh range of the Holland Land Company's survey. The name was changed in 1862 to Salamanca in honor of Señor Salamanca, a Spanish banker and a large owner of stock in the Atlantic & Great Western railroad, who had visited the town a short time before. The territory remained with its boundaries unchanged until the town of Red House was taken off in 1868, from the southern part, which reduced the area of Salamanca to 11,827 acres, leaving it the smallest town in the county.

It is an interior township situated south of the center of the county, and is bounded on the north by Little Valley, on the east by Great Valley, on the south by Red House, and on the west by Cold Spring and Napoli. The surface is very hilly except the valley of the Allegheny river and the valleys of its tributaries. The principal stream is the Allegheny, which enters the town about midway on the east line and flows nearly west about four miles, when it turns south and flows into Red House. Its principal affluents in this town are Newton run, Little Valley creek, and Bucktooth and Saw-Mill runs. When lumbering was a leading business these streams afforded good water-power. Since the timber has been exhausted their mill-sites have been abandoned. The soil in the valleys is very fertile, while the hills, where not too rough for cultivation, produce paying crops of grass, oats, potatoes, and apples.

Owing to the fact that most of the land in town fit for profitable tillage is embraced in the Indian reservation Salamanca was not early settled by white men. A few pioneers located on Little Valley creek. John Parr came about 1830; John Boutell was one of the earliest; and Leicester J. Worth came in 1834. James Rosenberry is credited as the first settler and is said to have come in 1815 and located on lot 9, where he made slight improvements and moved farther up the valley. In 1837 he settled in Red House, the second settler in that town, where he cleared a farm, and where he died. He was born in Butler county, Pa., November 21, 1797. James Green was an early settler, but did not remain long in the town. John L. Boardman came in 1836 and settled on the reservation where the village of West Salamanca has since been built. He was one of the party who navigated the Allegheny river from Pittsburg to Olean Point in a flat-bottom stern-wheel steamer.

Mr. Boardman resided here until 1870, when he removed to Randolph, where he died in 1874. He was supervisor of Little Valley in 1844, 1845, and 1849 and of Salamanca (then Bucktooth) from 1855 to 1858 inclusive. Other early settlers were William P. Crawford, Adam Johnson, R. C. Brainard, and Absalom Smith; Thomas L. Newton, who settled on Newton run; the Wright families who located in the northern part of the town; George Hill, who settled on Saw-Mill run; and George W. Drake, who located on Bucktooth run.

The magnificent pine forest on the reservation was an irresistible attraction to white men and many of the "squatter" order, encouraged by the Indians, who had an insatiable appetite for whisky, in direct violation of the law settled temporarily among them, exchanged "fire-water" and some provisions for their towering pine trees, and cut and floated them to saw-mills down the river. Jesse T. Fosdick states that an annual farce was enacted by the sheriff by removing all white people from the reservation. This the sheriff accomplished by taking a family at a load, by the shortest route, to the line of the reservation, repeating his journeys until he had treated all the squatters to a ride. This usually kept them off the reservation for a half-hour! For several years this was continued, and thus the supremacy of the law was maintained!

The first town meeting was held by authority of an act of the Board of Supervisors of Cattaraugus county erecting the town of Bucktooth, passed November 19, 1854, and convened at the house of John Boardman, February 27, 1855, the following officers being elected: John Boardman, supervisor; G. W. Drake, town clerk; Russel Granger, Willard E. Fellows, Marcus Frisbie, Warren Wright, justices of the peace; William P. Crawford, Lysander Whaley, Richard Jaquish, assessors; Peter S. Monfort, collector; John Parr, town scaler; Christopher Cross, James Rosenberry, Thomas L. Newton, commissioners of highways; Charles W. McMillan, Peter S. Monfort, George Cross, Abner Thomas, constables; John C. Cross, Leicester J. Worth, overseers of the poor; H. V. McKay, superintendent of common schools; William P. Crawford, poundmaster. The principal town officers have been as follows:

Supervisors.—John Boardman, 1856-58; E. P. Parks, 1859-60; David Harrower, 1861, 1863; Warren Wright, 1862; E. C. Tophill, 1864-65; Hudson Ansley, 1866, 1868-70, 1880-81, 1891; Jesse T. Fosdick, 1867; John Hill, 1871-72; H. O. Wait, 1873-75; S. H. Brainard, 1876-77; J. J. O'Donnell, 1878-79; O. S. Vreeland, 1882-86; Fred Stillman, 1887-88; Carey D. Davie, 1889-90; James S. Whipple, 1892-93.

Town Clerks.—G. W. Drake, 1856-58, 1861; A. V. Tuller, 1859-60; John Nelson, 1862-65; Hiram L. Thompson, 1866-67; Timothy O'Brien, 1868-72; S. H. Brainard, 1873; James H. Palmer, 1874; R. Hevenor, 1875; Charles Jenks, 1876; Jacob Butterfuss, 1877-81; Park Stevens, 1882-83; George McClary, 1884; J. W. Mulcahy, 1885, 1888-89; Fred Stillman, 1886-87; Samuel McMullin, 1890-93.

Justices of the Peace.—Josiah P. Wright, Richard Wright, 1856; James Rosenberry, Alphonso Ames, 1857; W. H. Payne, G. W. Drake, 1858; George E. Noble, 1859; H. H. Currier, Luther Cram, Clark Wheeler, Abner Miller, 1860; H. E. Fellows, William Franklin, Samuel Boyer, Luther Cram, 1861; S. Boyer, R. C. Brainard, Nelson Frink, 1862; W. H. Payne, A. A. Pixley, A. B. Rice, 1863; Patrick Shafer, 1864; Willard E. Fellows, David W. Kelley, 1865; John P. Lines, William T. Clark, 1866; S. D. Woodford, Peter Frank, 1867; A. A. Pixley, 1868; H. M. Seymour, Samuel Dunham, 1869; Albert Hosley, 1870; Charles Gallagher, W. B. Evans, Patrick Shafer, 1871; Charles E. Gallagher, 1872; H. M. Seymour, 1873; John J. O'Donnell, 1874; W. B. Evans, 1875; Charles E. Gallagher, 1876; A. Hosley, 1877; A. A. Pixley, A. L. Brainard, 1878; A. A. Pixley, 1879; Samuel Taylor, 1880; James S. Whipple, E. S. Griswold, 1881; A. A. Pixley, 1882; William H. Crandall, 1883; Samuel Taylor, 1884; James O. Spencer, 1885; T. H. Doud, 1886; William H. Crandall, 1887; Silas H. Seymour, 1888; James O. Spencer, 1889; Thomas H. Doud, 1890; William H. Crandall, 1891; Silas H. Seymour, 1892; James O. Spencer, 1893.

A State road was constructed in 1837, which extended through the Indian reservation, following the river near its north bank. This highway was the first thoroughfare in the town. About this time John Boardman established a ferry at Bucktooth Mills, where he also had a store and tavern. His building was built partly of logs and partly of frame, and is now the only landmark left to indicate the location. An appropriation to improve roads and bridges was ordered by the first town meeting in 1855. And since then the town has been liberal in providing for good highways. The first bridge spanning the Allegheny river was constructed in 1860. It stood on the site of the present iron structure at the head of Main street in Salamanca. It was replaced by a second one, of wood, in 1869, at a cost of $8,000. This was repaired in 1877 at an expense of $3,200, and was finally superseded by the present beautiful and substantial iron bridge. The iron bridge at West Salamanca was built over the Main branch of the Allegheny in 1876. This contained four spans and aggregated more than 500 feet in length; the remaining 200 feet of the structure was of wood, and the whole cost nearly $13,000. In the winter of 1893 the wooden portions were replaced by new iron spans, making the bridge 700 feet long, and reaching continuously from the east to the west bank of the river. The new section is 538 feet long and cost $16,000, which sum included the removal and erection of one of the old spans across Little Valley creek at West Salamanca. The New York, Lake Erie & Western railroad, completed in 1851, enters the town from Great Valley and passes down the north side of the Allegheny river to the village of West Salamanca, where it turns northward and follows up Little Valley creek. The New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio railroad enters Salamanca from Red House and follows up the Allegheny to its terminus at the village, where it connects with and is now a part of the Erie lines. The Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad makes a detour from Kill Buck to Salamanca village, and leaves the town at the line of Great Valley. The Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad enters Salamanca from Great Valley, on the south side of the Allegheny river, and leaves the town at the Red House line.

In 1855 Salamanca had a population of 453; in 1870, 1,881; in 1880, 3,498; in 1890, 4,572. In 1892 the town had five school districts, and maintained a school in each of them. Twenty-five teachers were employed, and 1,158 children attended school. The school houses and sites were valued at $48,858. The assessed valuation of the districts was $950,848. The total expense of maintaining the schools was $17,922.53.

West Salamanca, the oldest village in town, is situated on the Allegheny river at the mouth of Little Valley creek, and is a station on the Erie and New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio railroads. The place was known as Bucktooth until 1862, and gave its name to the town at its erection from Little Valley in 1855. It received the name of Salamanca in 1862 and of West Salamanca in 1873. It was the only railroad station in town until 1863 and was originally the junction of the Erie and New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio railroads, which had here turntables, shops, and engine houses. But sufficient grounds for railroad purposes could not be leased except at exorbitant rates, and the whole was removed to an unoccupied site a mile and a half east, which was rented of the Indians, and without their knowledge or intention the village of Salamanca was founded. John Boardman, the first to engage in business in West Salamanca, opened a small store near the river in 1836 and had a trade with the Indians. William P. Crawford had a grocery store near his residence about 1845. In 1860 John Hill opened the first general store. He was succeeded by W. F. Hallock in 1877 and the store was burned in 1878. The "People's store" was occupied by Senear & Nelson in 1864. Other merchants were Hevenor & Buck and Hevenor Brothers. Among the several thrifty merchants now in the village are J. S. Beers, a long-time jeweler, and J. J. McKay, a merchant and his father's successor as manager of the stock-yards. The village of West Salamanca was incorporated in 1884 with Richard J. McKay as the first president. The two villages meet; West Salamanca lies almost entirely within the reservation. Its real estate is legally held by valid leases from the Seneca Nation. Its population is about 500. It contains three churches (Methodist, Baptist, and United Brethren), a Union School, six or eight stores, three or four hotels, and a postoffice established in 1840 with John Boardman as postmaster.

Salamanca village is situated on the Allegheny river, eight miles southeasterly from the county seat, and on four railroad lines, viz.: The Erie, the New York, Pennsylvania & Ohio, the Western New York & Pennsylvania, and the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg. On account of its superior railroad advantages the Board of Supervisors of Cattaraugus County, at their annual session in November, 1892, voted to remove the county seat hither, but to legalize the removal the resolution must be ratified by a majority of the voters of the county in November of the present year. The village lies wholly within the Indian reservation and has grown to its present size and importance since the location here of the union depot and railroad shops in 1863. Legal occupancy of the land is vested in and authorized by a system of leases as detailed in Chapter V. of this volume. Under the present system the real estate titles are almost equal to a fee simple. The village now has a population of about 4,000. The principal streets have sufficient sewers to afford good drainage, an adequate water system is in operation, and electricity is employed for lighting. It has a Union Free School, several church edifices, a number of commodious brick business blocks and handsome residences, good hotels, etc.

The village of Salamanca was incorporated, by a vote of the inhabitants, at an election held August 30, 1878. Of the two hundred and fifty-six votes cast only twenty-three were against incorporation. At the first election under the charter, held October 5, 1878,* the following officers were elected: O. S.

Vreeland, president; C. O. Day, E. O'Brien, and William Bartlett, trustees; James McGuire, treasurer; Phineas Stevens, collector; and Carey D. Davie (appointed), clerk. The village has a well-equipped volunteer fire department, the officers of which are: R. H. Carew, chief; F. C. Chesley, first assistant; Frederick Eckhart, second assistant; E. B. Fitzgerald, secretary; H. C. Little, treasurer.

The Salamanca Union Free School was established under the Regents of the University of the State of New York, October 12, 1875, the first trustees being F. B. Mills, E. H. Space, John Keenan, Ira McKibben, C. E. Gallagher, John Nelson, A. Hosley, W. G. Hevenor, and T. A. Heller. The board was organized by electing A. Hosley, president; C. E. Gallagher, clerk; O. B. Senear, collector; J. B. Shaw, treasurer. G. L. Weeks was the first principal of the school. Three buildings are now occupied for school purposes. The one on Maple street, the central school house, erected in 1884, is a large and handsome brick structure, 77 by 110 feet, having two stories and a basement. An extensive circulating and reference library is connected with this building, as are also large zoölogical and geological collections for the use of classes. In the physical and chemical laboratories are found every facility in the way of instruments and apparatus. The building is well lighted, is heated with steam, and has a seating capacity for 800 students. It cost $35,000. The Newton run division is in a handsome frame structure, 30 by 50 feet, and two stories high. It is surmounted with a belfry, cost $2,800, has accommodations for 160 pupils, and was first occupied in 1875. The school on the south side of the river is known as the South Side school. This is a building two stories high, of brick, and cost something over $2,000. It has a seating capacity for 150 pupils. The school registration for 1891-92 was 961, the number of pupils of school age in the village being over 1,000. Of these 60 are at Newton run, 110 at the South Side school, and the remainder are at the central building on Maple street. There is an average daily attendance in all the schools of about 700. The principals of the Union Free School have been G. L. Weeks, E. B. Vreeland, E. L. Blanchard, R. H. Bowles, T. B. Dates, A. B. Davis, A. H. Sage, Henry A. Balcom, H. H. Snell, and J. H. Carfrey. The first Regents' credentials seem to have been awarded during the principalship of E. B. Vreeland. Since that time the attendance has increased with the rapid growth of the village and credentials in large numbers have been awarded of the higher certificates and diplomas. The schools are now under the principalship of J. H. Carfrey, assisted by eighteen teachers, and are supported at a cost of $11,000. The present officers of the Board of Education are as follows: President, M. W. Frank; clerk, Miss Alice Pickett; treasurer, E. F. Hoy; collector, B. E. Phillips.

Wildwood Cemetery Association was organized in 1881 with Thomas A. Heller, president; O. S. Vreeland, secretary; A. H. Krieger, treasurer. The association purchased a tract of twenty-two acres and gave it the name of Wildwood Cemetery. It is situated near the north bank of the Allegheny river, about three-fourths of a mile east of the business part of the village.

The First National Bank of Salamanca was organized by the election of the following Board of Directors on April 15, 1880: Edward H. Space, Warren W. Wellman, William T. Fish, Asher W. Miner, J. P. Colgrove, Henry O. Wait, William G. Hevenor, Hudson Ansley, Abijah J. Wellman, Richard J. McKay, and Christian F. Nies. The officers chosen were Edward H. Space, president; J. P. Colgrove, vice-president; and Warren W. Wellman, cashier. Mr. Space resigned as president and H. O. Wait was elected to the position in January, 1881. In July, 1885, Edwin F. Hoy was elected assistant cashier. The capital is $50,000 and the stockholders receive a semi-annual dividend of from five to six per cent.

The Salamanca National Bank was organized December 26, 1881, by A. G. Dow, of Randolph, the stockholders being Albert G. Dow, Daniel S. Swan, James G. Johnson, Warren Dow, Charles M. Dow, David B. Packer, and Natt W. Davis. The capital stock was $50,000. The Board of Directors consisted of Albert G. Dow, Warren Dow, Charles M. Dow, Daniel S. Swan, and James G. Johnson, who chose Albert G. Dow, president; Charles M. Dow, vice-president; and Warren Dow, cashier. The bank was opened for business in January, 1882, in a small one-story building on the site now occupied by the Becker-Maney building. March 1, 1882, Warren Dow resigned as cashier and Hiram Fosdick was appointed to the position, which he has since held. April 1, 1882, Mr. Dow individually commenced the erection of the present bank building, which was completed and occupied by the institution in November following. January 9, 1883, the property was purchased for $5,500. April 1, 1889, A. G. Dow resigned as president and the late Richard J. McKay was elected to the position. In August, 1891, the office of president was again made vacant by the death of Mr. McKay and September 1, 1891, E. B. Vreeland was chosen to the position, which he continues to fill.

The West Salamanca live-stock yards were established in 1872 by W. H. Westinghouse, of Salamanca, and W. D. Talcott, of Silver Creek, N. Y., and operated by them until 1876, when R. J. McKay assumed the management for H. J. Miner, of Dunkirk. June 1, 1882, Mr. McKay acquired the sole charge by lease and August 1, 1883, took in as partner Hon. John B. McPherson, of New Jersey. The yards are extensively patronized as a resting and feeding place between Chicago and New York.

The Salamanca tannery was purchased in November, 1888, by the present proprietors, James Horton & Co., of George Williams. The firm is composed of James Horton, H. H. Crary, Walter Horton, E. G. Davidge, W. G. Garrett, and L. R. Johnson, all practical tanners. F. W. Simmons is the general superintendent. There are eight buildings well equipped and substantially built. The output is 500 sides of Union Crop sole leather per day. The tannery consumes about 12,000 cords of bark yearly and gives employment to eighty-five men. In 1863 a tannery was first erected on this site and was successively operated by Curtis & Demming, Curtis & Williams, C. H. & G. L. Williams. The present firm removed the old buildings and erected the plant now in operation.

The Salamanca Iron Works are located on the south side of the Allegheny and near the tracks of the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad. The plant was erected in 1885 by S. H. Lego & Son, who conducted business until May 15, 1891, when it was purchased by T. L. De Nike, H. G. Forbes, and H. F. McCann. Four months later Mr. McCann became sole proprietor. November 1, 1891, E. D. Van Etten purchased an equal interest with Mr. McCann and the business has since been conducted by these men. They manufacture castings, iron columns, mill machinery, etc., making a specialty of a machine for grinding matcher heads in planing-mills. They also do repairing and deal in boilers, oils, belting, and mill supplies.

The "Hemlock Mills," situated on the south bank of the Allegheny, are operated by steam and have a capacity of 50,000 feet of lumber in twenty-four hours. They belong to the estate of James G. Fitts and occupy the site of a saw-mill erected by John Green. In 1856 the site became the property of the Tuna Lumber Company, composed of S. W. Bradley, David Harrower, Anthony Fay, and a Mr. Barker. They removed the old mill and built another for water-power. This was burned in 1863, was rebuilt by them, and was finally owned by S. W. Bradley. At his death about 1868 the property was transferred to Hall & Whitmore. In 1883 it passed to the firm of Fitts & Kent.

The Weaver Lumber Company, of Rochester, has a lumber manufacturing plant in Salamanca on the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad. The superintendent is H. G. Osborne. This concern succeeded W. J. Osborne Co., who built the mills in 1888.

The Salamanca steam grist-mill was built by George W. Hagadorn and completed in December, 1876. Since December, 1883, the property has been owned by Mrs. G. W. Hagadorn and is now conducted by R. H. Hoag & Co. The motive power is steam and the capacity is sixty bushels of feed per hour. The Sowl Milling Company's City mills were built in 1887 by Sowl, Stevens & Co. The Salamanca Steam Laundry was established by M. D. Chase in 1883, passed through several hands, and finally became the property of Charles Nies and L. J. Parker.

The Salamanca Embroidery Company (limited) erected a brick building, 30x90 feet, near the eastern limits of the incorporation, in 1883. In 1886 the plant was rented by Ferdinand Breuschwyler, who conducted it nearly a year, when he returned to his native country, Switzerland. Jacob Huberlin was manager a year, when Mr. Breuschwyler returned and has since been either manager or proprietor. He does embroidery in chenille, silk, and cotton, and gives employment to thirty-five hands.

The Salamanca Gas Company was organized June 1, 1886, with a capital stock of $50,000. The officers are Daniel O'Day, president; G. W. Colton, treasurer ; D. N. Payne, general manager ; Mr. Ryan, superintendent. They supply the village with natural gas for fuel and artificial gas for light through fifteen miles of street mains.

I. M. Crawford and wife, in the spring of 1886, erected a small conservatory for the purpose of growing bulbs and house plants. This ultimately evolved their present business and establishment, known as the South Side Greenhouses.

E. W. Very & Son are proprietors of the Salamanca Marble and Granite Works, one of the largest establishments of the kind in Cattaraugus county. They deal in all of the leading varieties of granite and American and foreign marble, and also contract for building stone and flagging for sidewalks.

The Indian Congregational church, organized by Rev. Charles Potter, erected a house of worship a few miles below Salamanca on the Allegheny in 1858, and for several years enjoyed the labors of Rev. William Hall, the long-time missionary among the Indians. The First Baptist church of Bucktooth was formed among the Indians in 1858 by Rev. N. Smith. May 22, 1860, the body was incorporated and the same year a church edifice was erected at a cost of $1,200. It was built a few miles below West Salamanca and would seat 200 persons. In 1874 a native Seneca, A. D. Blinkley, was ordained pastor and Peter Sundown was elected deacon.

Episcopal services were held in West Salamanca as early as 1863 by Rev. P. P. Kidder, then rector of St. John's church of Ellicottville, which resulted in the organization of St. Mary's church at West Salamanca in 1865, represented by twenty-five families and a membership of thirty-four. A house of worship was erected and was first occupied November 19, 1865. J. H. Waterbury, its organizer, was the first rector; Jesse T. Fosdick and John Hill, wardens. The society continued to worship in this house until 1875, when the edifice was sold to the Methodists of the place and since then the society has worshiped in Salamanca. They erected the frame church on Wildwood avenue in 1877. The removal of the church was occasioned by the removal of business following the removal of the railroad depot and shops from West Salamanca to Salamanca. The church property, including buildings and grounds, is valued at $5,500. The membership is 200 with Rex. T. A. Parnell as rector. The Sunday school has sixty-five scholars.

The First Methodist Episcopal church of Salamanca was organized and incorporated February 10, 1873, with H. O. Wait, S. S. Palmer, and George B. Stebbins as trustees, and with twenty-three members. The church edifice was completed and dedicated January 11, 1874. Rev. J. E. Brown had preached to a small audience prior to the organization. The first pastor (1873) was Rev. L. L. Luce. The church now has 171 members with Rev. Azara C. Spencer as pastor. The house of worship cost $4,000 and with the grounds and other property is now valued at $5,000. It will seat 450 people. The Sunday school has 150 pupils with Mrs. A. C. Fisher as superintendent.

The West Salamanca Methodist Episcopal church is a part of the parish of the M. E. church of Salamanca and attended by the same pastor. It was organized in 1875 by Rev. H. H. Moore. April 2, 1875, the edifice erected by the society of St. Mary's Episcopal church was purchased and has since been the church of the Methodist people of the West village. The property is valued at $1,500. The building has a seating capacity of 200 persons. It has thirty-five members and a Sunday school of 125 scholars. Rev. A. C. Spencer as pastor.

The First Baptist church of Salamanca was organized March 3, 1873, by Rev. G. W. Varnum, with twelve members, and was formally recognized by a council composed of neighboring churches July 24, 1873. On that day the church edifice was dedicated, which cost $2,300, much of which was contributed by the first deacon of the church, Samuel Learned. Elder D. E. Burt was the first pastor. The present number of members is ninety-five. W. W. Wellman, K. Kelsey, and J. L. Sowl are trustees. The present pastor is J. W. Millard. The church has a seating capacity of 300 people. The property is valued at $3,000. The Sunday school is attended by 100 pupils under R. C. Hinkley as superintendent.

The First Congregational church of Salamanca was organized March 11, 1875, by Rev. J. D. Stewart, who called a council of neighboring Congregational churches to assist him. The membership then consisted of twenty-seven persons and Rev. Mr. Stewart became their first pastor. The society met for worship in the Baptist church until the church edifice on River street was completed in 1876. This structure is a part of the present edifice. In 1887 a brick front was erected. The church was re-seated and will now seat 300 persons. The property is valued at $6,200. Rev. C. H. Crawford succeeded Rev. J. D. Stewart and since 1878 the pastors have been Rev. H. M. Higley, Rev. Robert Sharp, Rev. W. D. Henry, Rev. G. E. Soper, Rev. H. M. Altman, Rev. Mrs. Guernsey (wife of Rev. H. E.), and the present one, Rev. M. L. Dalton, who began his pastorate May 1, 1891. The membership is 103. The Sunday school has 230 pupils with an average attendance of 140. A. W. Ferrin has been superintendent since May 1, 1883.

In 1850 a few Catholic families moved into the town of Salamanca and settled on the line of the Erie railroad. Soon after Father McKeevers, from Ellicottville, visited them and attended to their spiritual wants. For some years priests from Ellicottville and later from Jamestown occasionally said mass and administered the sacraments in private houses and in public halls. In 1862 a frame church edifice, 32x50 feet, was erected just beyond the reservation limits at West Salamanca. Rev. Patricio Burns was the first pastor and attended it once a month from Jamestown, where he resided. The parish had grown to a membership of about 300 and the needs of a resident priest were felt. Soon after the erection of the church a parsonage was built and the entire property was valued at $3,000. Rev. Father McMullen was the first resident pastor, and the Catholic people of Little Valley and Great Valley were identified as members of his parish. The priests who followed Father McMullen were Fathers Wagner, Bloomer, and Baxter, each remaining but a short time. In 1870 Rev. John Byron was placed in charge and in 1875 leased land on West River street in Salamanca on which, in the following year, he erected St. John's church. A suitable building near the church was purchased for a parsonage. In 1882 the Catholic population of the town had so largely increased that St. John's church was no longer suitable and the present edifice, St. Patrick's church, was erected at a cost of about $18,000. It is a brick structure and one of the finest church edifices in the county. Under the supervision of Father Byron a frame church was erected in the village of Little Valley and also one at Kill Buck in the town of Great Valley. The church at Little Valley is now attended from Randolph. The one at Kill Buck is no longer used, the people in that vicinity attending service at St. Patrick's in Salamanca. Father Byron worked hard and well in Salamanca. He died May 31, 1889. He was succeeded in the parish by Rev. M. P. Connerly, a priest of the Buffalo diocese. He remained in the charge about eight months, and was succeeded by Rev. P. Berkery, who commenced his charge of the parish May 1, 1890. In 1892 a parochial school building was erected at a cost of about $10,000. The parochial residence was given up to the Sisters of St. Joseph from Buffalo, who have charge of the school, as a convent, and the Space place across the street from the church was purchased as a home for the priest. St. Patrick's Parochial School was opened September 5, 1892, with 200 children and five teachers. It now has about 275 scholars.

The Church of the Holy Cross (Polish Roman Catholic), of Salamanca, was organized August 5, 1893, with about 350 members. The corner-stone of their church edifice on Broad street was laid September 3d with appropriate ceremonies. The priest in charge is Father Besinski, a Polander. It is the intention to found very soon a parochial school, in which the Polish children can be taught in their native language.

The Free Methodist church on Academy street is under the pastorship of Rev. G. S. Chamberlain. It has a flourishing Sunday school.

Cattaraugus Lodge, No. 239, F. & A. M., was instituted at Little Valley under a dispensation granted in 1850 to Benjamin Chamberlain, Staley N. Clarke, Samuel Barrows, Solomon S. Childs, Gaius Wheaton, Luther Peabody, Israel Day, Moses Beecher, Smith Finch, and Ira Gaylord. The first officers were Ira Gaylord, M.; Benjamin Chamberlain, S. W.; and Luther Peabody, J. W. The lodge received its charter in June, 1851. The meetings were held at Little Valley until December, 1873, when the lodge was removed to Salamanca. It is now in a flourishing condition. The officers are George B. Abbott, M.; Edward F. Norton, S. W.; Henry C. Whitlock, J. W.; Andrew H. Krieger, treasurer; Ernest D. Van Etten, secretary.

Salamanca Chapter, No. 266, R. A. M., was instituted under a dispensation granted March 6, 1872, to John B. Shaw, H. P.; E. H. Space, K.; and companions Chase, Whipple, Krieger, Brainard, Waterman, Griffin, Wait, Elliott, Hevenor, Henderson, O'Donnell, and Farquharson. The chapter was chartered about a year later. The principal officers in 1893 are Thomas A. Heller, H. P.; Otis B. Fullam, K.; Isaac Brown, S.; Andrew H. Krieger, treasurer; William C. Hirschert, secretary.

Salamanca Commandery, No. 62, K. T., was chartered in the spring of 1893. It was organized under a dispensation of the Grand Commandery of this State a year previous. Its principal officers are E. B. Vreeland, C.; Henry O. Wait, G.; William L. Alexander, C. G.; Frank W. Simmons, P.; William G. Hevenor, treasurer; William C. Hirschert, recorder.

Salamanca Lodge, No. 501, I. O. O. F., was instituted June 17, 1882. The first officers were W. C. Palmer, N. G.; S. A. Beckwith, V. G.; A. H. Forman, secretary; Daniel Folts, treasurer. It now has 153 members.

Salamanca Encampment, No. 124, I. O. O. F., has forty-eight members. The officers are W. H. Agnew, C. P.; H. W. Berry, S.; Fred Stillman, treas.

Star Union, No. 336, E. A. U., was organized March 22, 1879. It now has 155 members. Salamanca Lodge, No. 37, A. O. U. W., was instituted September 7, 1876, with thirty-six members.

Sherwood Post, No. 380, G. A. R., was organized September 1, 1891, with about thirty members and the following officers: Jerome Brownell, commander; J. A. Andrews, senior vice-commander; Samuel C. Shirley, junior vice-commander; Rev. M. F. Trippe, chaplain. The present membership numbers ninety-six with the same officers first elected. Connected is a Woman's Relief Corps, of which Mrs. Alice Markell is president, and Krieger Camp, Sons of Veterans, of which George S. Beckwith is commander.

Forest Council, No. 24, Home Circle, was organized in January, 1880, with twenty members. Seneca Council, No. 258, Royal Arcanum, was organized February 17, 1879, with seventeen members. Banner Lodge, No. 314, K. of H., was instituted June 28, 1876, with fifteen members. Division No. 2, Ancient Order of Hibernians, was organized March 19, 1893, with thirty-five members. Salamanca Union of the W. C. T. U. is offered in 1893 by Mrs. M. Hubbard, president; Mrs. J. Paxton, Mrs. E. Saxton, Mrs. B. M. Dalton, and Mrs. Mary Payne, vice-presidents; Mrs. E. R. Jones, recording secretary; Mrs. Dell Spaulding, treasurer. The union meets every Friday in a hall controlled by the Salamanca Reading Room Association.

Jerome A. Andrews, the second child of Willis M. and Mariette Andrews, was born at East Otto, Jan. 6, 1839, and married Emma Lattin, daughter of Linus Lattin, of Mansfield, Sept. 23, 1868. Their children are Bret, born Feb. 5, 1871, married Fannie, daughter of A. F. Benson, of Cattaraugus, Jan. 28, 1893; Neil, born Dec. 27, 1874, a law student in Buffalo; and Max, born July 4, 1884. Jerome A. remained on the farm till April, 1861, when he enlisted in Co. I, 37th N. Y. Vols., in which he served as private and sergeant through all the hard-fought battles during his term of enlistment, re-enlisting in 1865 as veteran and first lieutenant. Immediately subsequent to the fall of the Confederacy he engaged in the sale of general merchandise with his brother G. W. at East Otto, continuing until 1869, when he went to New Albion, where he was postmaster, and subsequently removing to Cattaraugus, where he engaged in the same business. Thence he went to Salamanca and engaged in the hardware trade with Hon. S. S. Laing, which business he still follows with his oldest son Bret as J. A. Andrews & Son. He is prominent in G. A. R. circles and has been several times commander of E. A. Andrews Post, No. 287, which was named for his brother, and has also been a delegate to State and National encampments. He is now an aid-de-camp on the staff of the department commander of the State of New York. (See also p. 552.)

James S. Beers's father, Benjamin Beers, and mother, Sarah Osterbank, were natives of Connecticut. He was born in Westchester county, N. Y., in 1816, and settled in Little Valley in 1850, whence he removed to West Salamanca in the fall of 1864, where he still resides. His leading life occupation has been that of a jeweler.

Stephen A. Beckwith, born in Fredonia, N. Y., Aug. 5, 1837, attended the common schools, and at the age of eighteen began the trade of a carriage painter. May 17, 1861, he enlisted in Co. H, 37th N. Y. Vols., was married in June 7, 1861, and was discharged June 22, 1863. He was at the first battle of Bull Run, served in the Peninsula campaign, and was at Chancellorsville. In Jan., 1862, he was detailed on recruiting service and, spent about three months in New York city. At Fair Oaks he had an attack of typhoid fever and was sent in a delirious condition to the hospital on David's Island. Returning to his regiment he participated in the battle of Fredericksburg and at the close of the war returned home with the rank of sergeant. He married, Oct. 19, 1864, Philopene Seil. In the fall of 1875 he removed to Salamanca, where he is engaged in the manufacture, repair, and sale of carriages. He is a member of Sherwood Post, No. 380, and has two sons and two daughters.

Jerome Brownell was born in Perrington, N. Y., Oct. 19, 1843. Aug. 8, 1862, he enlisted in Co. E, 108th N. Y. Vols., and fought his first battle at Antietam, Sept. 17, 1862. He was also at Chancellorsville and at Gettysburg, where he was struck by bullets five times and received a severe wound in his right shoulder. After recovering he went into the Second Brigade brass band as a musician in the Veteran Reserve Corps and was discharged July 25, 1865. He was then a miller in several places until 1880, when he settled in Salamanca, where he now resides, and where he is an engineer. He is now serving his second term as commander of Sherwood Post, No. 380, G. A. R. March 21, 1866, he married Patience A. Furlow. Children: James C. and Willard J.

Homer E. Crandall, son of Ira C. and Sarah J. (Duncan) Crandall, was born in Mansfield in 1863. About 1873 his father, who had been a farmer in Napoli, removed to the village of Cattaraugus, where he engaged in mercantile business. Homer E. attended the public schools and Chamberlain Institute, and at the age of fourteen began teaching common schools and taught five terms. He then entered a drug store in Randolph. In 1882 he came to Salamanca, where he remained a year with Dr. C. P. Colgrove and the late Dr. Day. In 1883 he entered the New York College of Pharmacy and was graduated therefrom in 1884. For one year he was in New York in charge of the prescription department in Murray Hill pharmacy and then returned to Salamanca as a clerk in the Palace drug store. At the death of Dr. Day he became his successor. April 26, 1888, he married Nellie V. Pickett.

William P. Crawford, son of Judge William and Nancy (Reed) Crawford, was born in Emlenton, Pa., March 15, 1810. His father was a prominent citizen of Venango county and held the office of judge. William P. came to Cattaraugus county in the fall of 1832, and engaged in cutting and hauling pine timber to the saw-mills. In the spring he ran a raft to Pittsburg and was thenceforward a river pilot until the railroad was completed. About 1839, with Jonathan Thompson, Robert Miles, and John McCullough, he built the Bucktooth mills on the south bank of the Allegheny river, about one mile below West Salamanca. Around these mills sprung up a little hamlet of about twenty families, which was the first within the town of Salamanca. He bought quite extensively of the timber of the Indians on the reservation and of the white settlers. In 1841 he married Catherine S., daughter of Luther Badger, also a pioneer of Bucktooth Mills. In the fall of 1847 he moved his family to the homestead, where he died Feb. 25, 1891. He succeeded John Boardman as postmaster about 1852 and held the position twenty-two years. He held most of the important offices of the town and in politics was first a Whig and later a Republican. He was often a delegate to political conventions.

Westbrook L. Davenport, son of Cyrinius and Cornelia (Lownsberry) Davenport, was born in Wawarsing, N. Y., April 3, 1846. He began life as a driver for his father on the Delaware & Hudson canal, his father being proprietor of two canal boats. In Dec., 1863, he enlisted in Co. G, 56th N. Y. Vols., and served until the close of the war. He received a gun-shot wound in his foot at the battle of Honey Hill near Charleston, S. C. In the spring of 1871 he settled in Salamanca and became an employee of the Erie railroad, being now assistant cashier of the freight department. Mr. Davenport is a staunch Republican and has been adjutant of Sherwood Post, No. 380, G. A. R. Oct. 17, 1875, he married M. Etta, daughter of H. V. B. Barker, of Cuba, N. Y. They have two sons and a daughter.

Charles A. Doty was born in Geneseo, N. Y., July 25, 1860. His father, William H. Doty, was a customs house officer in New York city, where the family resided several years. He learned the trade of harness making and in 1882 came to Salamanca, where he still resides. In May, 1885, he purchased a harness business and has since conducted a thriving trade. He married Mary L., daughter of Henry Johnson, of Salamanca, and has one son. His uncle, Lockwood L. Doty, was Governor Morgan's private secretary and the editor of the Livingston Republican.

Benjamin F. Eaton, son of Ira and Priscilla (McKeen) Eaton, was born in Colden, N. Y., Dec. 22, 1843. His father was a native of New Hampshire and of English descent. His mother was also born in New Hampshire and was of Scotch ancestry. He supplemented his public school education with a term at Griffith Institute in Springville. He spent fifteen years in the west, principally in Iowa, engaged in stock-raising and farming. Returning to his native State in Feb., 1882, he spent two years in farming in Springville and in 1884 settled in Salamanca, where he is still engaged in merchandizing. In Jan., 1879, he married Anna Maloney, of West Valley. Children: Albert R., Mabel Blanche, Franklin J., and Viva J.

William T. Fish, son of Joseph and Lucia (Fields) Fish, was born in Tioga county, Pa., in 1836, early learned the shoemaker's trade, and entered the store of his brother at Kill Buck as a clerk. When his brother sold to Charles Burnside Mr. Fish was placed in charge of the store and all of Mr. Burnside's book-keeping. Two years later he was admitted to partnership in the store under the firm name of W. T. Fish & Co. Two years afterward they built the first store in Salamanca and opened it for trade in the spring of 1865. A year later Mr. Fish purchased the interest of Mr. Burnside and has since conducted business alone. In the great fire in 1880 his store and stock were destroyed. He immediately rebuilt his present brick block. In 1880 he was influential in organizing the First National Bank of Salamanca and has since been one of its directors. He is a staunch Republican and has often served as a delegate to conventions. He is a member of the Masonic fraternity and was six years a member of the Board of Education. In 1862 he married Mary J. Brace, of Dunkirk, N. Y. Children: William J., Charles A., and Minnie C.

James G. Fitts, son of Isaac and Nancy (Bayley) Fitts, natives of Southamptton, Mass., was born in Dorchester, N. H., Nov. 30, 1829. His father, a pioneer farmer, removed to Dorchester in 1812 or 1813. He began business as a carpenter and was engaged near Boston about four years. In 1856 he came to Cattaraugus county and engaged in manufacturing lumber by contract for Blake, Elwell & Co., of Kill Buck, where he remained until 1869, when he settled in Salamanca (then Bucktooth). He assumed the management of the Hemlock mills under contract with Hall & Whitmore to saw all the pine timber on a tract of 7,000 or 8,000 acres. This employed him thirteen years. During this time Mr. Fitts manufactured an aggregate of 50,000,000 feet of pine and a large quantity of hemlock lumber and gave employment to fifty or sixty men. In 1883 he became, with Alonzo M. Kent, proprietor of the Hemlock mills. Mr. Fitts also divided a tract of seventy-five acres into village lots. His brother, Ephraim Fitts, was supervisor of Great Valley in 1885. In Feb., 1861, he married Mary C. Gillies, of Scotch descent, who was born on the Atlantic ocean in 1843. He died April 2, 1893.

Hiram Fosdick, son of Samuel and Caroline (Humphrey) Fosdick, was born in Erie county, N. Y., Feb. 14, 1827, and was reared in Youngstown, Niagara county. He became a tailor and when eighteen went to Michigan, where he remained five years as a journeyman. He also learned of his father the trade of carpenter and in 1849 settled in Randolph, where he resumed his trade as a tailor, which he conducted several years. On account of impaired health he took up the business of carpenter, which he continued until 1860, when he became the book-keeper and salesman for A. G. Dow, then dealing in hardware. In Feb., 1863, he went to Memphis, Tenn., where he was citizen clerk in the post quartermaster's department. In December he returned to Randolph and had charge of Hon. A. G. Dow's banking business in his absence as member of Assembly. In the spring of 1864 Mr. Dow bought a hardware business in East Randolph and made Mr. Fosdick his equal partner. In 1865 that business was closed up and consolidated with Warren Dow's stock of hardware in Randolph and the combined store was conducted under the firm name of Dow & Fosdick until 1868, when the business was sold. April 1, 1869, he again entered Mr. Dow's banking office, where he remained until Oct., 1875, when he had a position with the State Bank of Randolph, where he was employed until he resigned March 1, 1882, to accept the position of cashier of the Salamanca National Bank, which position he has since filled. In 1866 Mr. Fosdick married Helen Windsor, of York, N. Y.

Charles E. Gallagher was born of Irish parentage in Little Valley, June 15, 1849, was educated in the common schools and in Randolph Academy, studied law with Hudson Ansley and others, and had charge of the law office of Judge Lamb and C. P. Vedder in Salamanca about two years, but never made application for admission to the bar. His sight became impaired and for a while he was totally blind. Partially recovering he opened a hardware and grocery store in Salamanca and is now engaged in the sale of hardware, agricultural implements, carriages, and sleighs, and as a contractor and builder.

Frank H. Gardner was born in Salamanca, Feb. 3, 1862. He is the son of C. S. Gardner and received a good business education in Cleveland, Ohio, after which he learned the printer's trade in his native village. He married Annie Coyle, Oct. 27, 1884, and has three children.

C. R. Gibson has resided in Salamanca several years. He built the opera house in 1890, on the site of the one erected by Fitts & Ansley, and has recently metamorphosed it into stores. He is a wholesale dealer in wines and liquors and one of the substantial men of the village.

Noble H. Gillespie, a native of the North of Ireland and of Scotch descent, was born May 3, 1859, emigrated to America in the spring of 1880, and settled in Chicago, where he was engaged in the meat packing establishment of Fowler Brothers, who sent him to Salamanca in 1881 to superintend their refrigerator department. He was their agent alternately in Chicago and Salamanca until 1889, since which time he has been a permanent resident here and is now engaged in the harness business. Oct. 28, 1886, he married Emma, daughter of A. H. Krieger.

Rev. William Hall, son of Ephraim, was born in Dracut, Mass., Sept. 20, 1808. His father settled in Hanover, N. Y., in 1810. At the age of twenty-six he was ordained a minister of the Congregational church. Oct. 22, 1834, he married Emeline Gaylord and the next day came with his bride to the Allegany reservation and located at Bucktooth Mills as an Indian missionary to the Seneca Nation. In May following his house was burned and one Indian boy perished in the flames. He then removed to Old Town in South Valley, where he labored as an Indian missionary, being sustained by the American Board of Foreign Missions, and had very little intercourse with white people for twenty years. Except about ten years which he spent as a home missionary in London, Mich., he labored constantly as a Christian minister with the Seneca Indians. In 1878 he was placed on the retired list, but he has continually preached to his Indian congregation. He resides in West Salamanca. His life work has been one of great hardship and self-denial. Feb. 17, 1882, his wife died; of three sons and three daughters three are living: Silas C., Mrs. Lydia S. Halleck, and Mrs. Clarissa Peabody. Nov. 24, 1891, Mr. Hall married Mrs. Sophia M. (Phillips), widow of Sylvester Cowles, D.D., of Randolph.

Robert H. Hoag, son of Alexander and Margaret (Brown) Hoag, was born in County Entran, North of Ireland, in 1842, of Scotch ancestry, and came to America with his parents, a brother, and three sisters in 1846, spending three years in the city of New York, where Alexander was engaged as a stone mason. The family settled in 1849 in Humphrey, whence, in 1876, he removed to Salamanca, where he still resides. Robert H. Hoag enlisted Oct. 2, 1861, in Co. I, 37th N. Y. Vols., participated in the battles of Williamsburg, Seven Pines, and siege of Richmond, and was discharged for disability. In 1880 he settled in Salamanca and since 1884 has been the business manager of the firm of R. H. Hoag & Co. He is a member of Sherwood Post, G. A. R.

James C. Keating, son of John and Ellen (Carran) Keating, was born in Hanover, N. Y., April 18, 1856. He learned telegraphy and was employed by the Erie Railroad Company from the age of seventeen until 1879. He conducted the Union House in Olean in 1880 and was again a telegraph operator until the fall of 1882. He then settled in Salamanca and conducted a restaurant. In 1890 he erected Hotel Keating and opened it to the public Jan. 1, 1891. He has one of the best hotels in Cattaraugus county.

Truman Kelsey, son of Samuel and Elizabeth (Carver) Kelsey, was born in Smyrna, N. Y., June 30, 1801. Jan. 27, 1825, he married Laura Olin, who was born in Vermont, Feb. 25, 1807. In 1825 they settled in Great Valley one mile west of Peth, where Mrs. Kelsey died Oct. 27, 1856. Soon afterward Mr. Kelsey went to Delevan, Wis., where he died. He held most of the town offices and was many years a justice of the peace. He had six sons and seven daughters, of whom one son died in infancy.

Kathalo Kelsey, the third son of Truman, was born on the homestead in Great Valley, Dec. 25, 1830, and was educated in the common schools, in the Ellicottville Union School, and in Olean Academy, and began business as a teamster in the lumber woods. He also taught district schools in winter and with his brother Samuel bought the homestead, which for several years they conducted, having also an extensive nursery of fruit trees, shrubs, etc. From 1868 to 1873 he was a farmer in Kansas. Returning to Cattaraugus county he settled in 1875 in Salamanca, where he has since followed the professions of civil engineering and land surveying. Sept. 2, 1861, he married Agnes Flint, of Great Valley, and has five children. They belong to the Baptist church.

Hon. Solon S. Laing, son of John (see page 557), was born in East Otto in 1847 and was educated in the common schools and in the Buffalo Commercial College. In 1870 he began business as a hardware dealer in his native town, where he carried on trade eighteen years. He is now of the firm of Laing & Andrews, hardware dealers in Salamanca. Mr. Laing is a prominent Democrat and represented East Otto on the Board of Supervisors in 1884, 1885, 1889, and 1890, was sixteen years a member and two years chairman of the Democratic County Committee, and several times represented his district in State conventions. He was postmaster of East Otto several years, cashier of the Bank of Cattaraugus some time, and for five years has been president of that institution. He was elected member of Assembly in 1891 and was placed on the Committee of Ways and Means, of Agriculture, and of Indian Affairs. In the spring of 1892 he removed to Salamanca, where he now resides. In the fall of 1870 he married Martha D. Eddy, of Mansfield, and has a son and a daughter.

John D. McDonell, born in Ottawa, Canada, in the year 1826, was educated in the public schools and academies, was a clerk in his uncle's general store and lumber camps, and began business as a merchant in his native city (then Bytown), where he remained until 1856, when he came to this State. In 1859 he became a clerk for the Erie railroad and in 1866 settled in Salamanca. Since 1888 he has conducted a news, book, and stationery business. He is of staunch Highland Scotch descent and inherits many native characteristics.

Richard J. McKay, of Scotch descent, was born in Mansfield, April 23, 1842. His great-great-grandfather, Elkenny McKay, emigrated to America from Edinburgh, Scotland, about 1725. His father was one of the well-known McKay family of nine brothers. Richard J., in Aug., 1863, enlisted in the 13th N. Y. H. A., but was rejected by the examining surgeon. He began business as a butcher and dealer in meat in West Salamanca in 1863. With and without partners he dealt extensively until 1864 in horses, cattle, and sheep, which he shipped to eastern markets and later to the Pennsylvania oil regions, and produced oil near Titusville, where he had a packing and wholesale pork and beef market in 1871. In 1874 he began buying dead and crippled stock in the West Salamanca stock yards and soon made this a very profitable business. In 1876 he was made cashier of the stock yards and a year later became general manager. In 1882 he leased the yards and in 1883 Hon. John R. McPherson associated in business with him, and the yards were enlarged and the business reached huge proportions. Mr. McKay was elected the first president of the village of West Salamanca in 1884 and became a director of the First National Bank of Salamanca in April, 1880, resigning the position in July, 1889. He was elected president of the Salamanca National Bank in April, 1889, and held the position at the time of his death. When Mr. McKay became president of the bank the management of the stock yards was given to his son, John J. McKay, who has since conducted the business. Mr. McKay died in Aug., 1891.

Peter Messinger, born in Baden, Germany, June 3, 1831, was there a drafted soldier at the age of twenty-one and served in the German army until 1855. Without leave of absence he emigrated to America in a sailing vessel, which was six weeks crossing the Atlantic. He arrived in Kill Buck, Sept. 20, 1855, and on the 24th engaged as a laborer in the "Hemlock mills." Aug. 12, 1862, he enlisted in Co. A, 154th N. Y. Vols., and was discharged June 21, 1865. He participated in the battles of Chancellorsville and of Gettysburg, where he was taken prisoner and confined in the southern prisons until March 1, 1865, when he was paroled and taken to the Union hospital, whence he was sent home on a furlough and was finally discharged at Elmira. In Sept., 1871, he entered the employ of the Atlantic & Great Western railroad, and since 1872 has been local car inspector for the Erie railroad. He is a member of Sherwood Post, No. 380, G. A. R. July 9, 1857, he married Catherine Bachmann, of Germany; children: Carl H., born June 4, 1858; Cora M., born May 29, 1866; and Emma, born Sept. 30, 1868.

The Miller Brothers (E. H. and H. J.), dealers in wall papers, window shades, etc., who employ constantly a corps of skilled workman in paper hanging and painting, have been located in Salamanca since 1881. Their enterprise has become one of the leading industries of the town.

Charles Neis, born in Prussia, Germany, in 1848, received a substantial education in the public schools of his native country, and in 1867 emigrated to America and joined his sister, Mrs. Krieger, in Salamanca, where he still resides. He began business as a journeyman cabinet maker and soon established a trade of his own. About 1876 he engaged in dealing in real estate and became also an extensive builder on his own lands, having completed in Salamanca the new Neis block at a cost of about $25,000. He also erected the brick block on the corner of Main and Maple streets and besides has built numerous hotels and dwelling houses in Salamanca and in Bradford, Pa. He has been trustee and treasurer of the village and was one of the founders and continuously a director of the First National Bank. In the spring of 1878 he married Emma Coast, of Olean, and has five sons and two daughters.

John J. Nichols, son of John and Ann (Seeley) Nichols, was born in Warsaw, N. Y., May 16, 1843, and was reared a farmer. Oct. 29, 1861, he enlisted in Co. D, 64th N. Y. Vols., and was discharged with the rank of sergeant Oct. 29, 1864. He participated in all the battles of his regiment until his discharge, and at the Wilderness was under fire every day from May 6 until July 30, 1864.

E. F. Norton is engaged in the sale of watches, clocks, and jewelry in Salamanca, and is a man of high character and sound business principles.

John O'Brien, born June 22, 1859, in Limestone, attended the schools of Salamanca and his native town, followed railroading for a time, and finally settled permanently in Salamanca, where he conducts a billiard parlor. May 13, 1885, he married Ettie, daughter of M. M. Sullivan.

William C. Palmer, son of Amos N. and Mary (Barber) Palmer, was born in Hopkinton, R. I., in 1833. At the age of eighteen he became a clerk in a general store and in 1871 came to East Randolph as a dealer in groceries, where he remained in trade until 1877, when he established the same business in Salamanca, where he still resides. About 1888 he formed a partnership with Thomas P. Jones under the firm name of Palmer & Jones. They also have a large store in Bradford, Pa. In 1856 he married Sarah J. Watson, of South Kingston, R. I., and they have had three sons and five daughters; one of the daughters and all the sons are deceased; those living are Eveline (Mrs. A. P. Sprague), Media (Mrs. Benjamin Watson), Susie, and Ruby.

J. Davis Palmer, born in Lindley, N. Y., May 31, 1850, came to Salamanca in the fall of 1869 and purchased the interest of Robert H. Walker in a grocery business in which Mr. Walker was a partner with James H. Palmer, brother of J. D. He was a merchant with his brother three or four years under the firm name of Palmer Brothers, and was a clerk in the express office under A. M. Chase from 1874 until 1879, when he became express messenger, which position he still holds. His brother formed a partnership with Hevenor Brothers, sold to them, and afterward was a druggist, which business he continued until his death Dec. 6, 1874. J. D. Palmer married Emma, daughter of Daniel Hale, of Olean; children: Arthur D. (who married Anna Smith, of Newark, N. Y., and has one daughter), Ralph H., Estelle, and Alma.

Daniel H. and Otis H. Patterson, oldest and youngest sons of Robert and Charlotte (Howe) Patterson, are natives of Great Valley. They began business as lumbermen, which has always been their avocation. They built their mills in Salamanca village, on the Allegheny river, in the fall of 1880 and began sawing lumber Jan. 6, 1881. They manufacture annually from 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 feet. Robert Patterson was born in Center township, Butler county, Pa., Dec. 3, 1800. Their grandfather was a native of Cumberland county, Pa., was a farmer, and died in Butler county, Pa., in 1847. Their great-grandfather emigrated from Scotland at an early day and settled in Cumberland county. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war and was killed. Robert Patterson settled in Great Valley in 1827, where he was a lumberman, hotel keeper, and farmer. He cast his first presidential vote for Henry Clay and after the formation of the Republican party he labored for its success. He was a Presbyterian. Mr. and Mrs. Patterson are deceased.

Frank A. Reeves, of West Salamanca, son of George W. (see page 501), was born Nov. 30, 1857. He was a student in Chamberlain Institute five years and commenced teaching public schools before he was seventeen years of age, teaching in all twenty-eight terms. In 1877 he was principal of the Union School of West Salamanca, was principal of the graded school of Columbus, Pa., two years, and then engaged in general merchandizing. He was burned out in Sept., 1889, and is now conducting a grocery store. In June, 1889, he was appointed postmaster of West Salamanca, which position he still holds. He has also served as trustee of the village. March 27, 1879, he married Nellie J. Childs, of West Salamanca.

Elisha Reynolds was born in Savoy, Mass., Dec. 10, 1816, and in 1844 married Maria, sister of Hon. Commodore P. Vedder. For many years he resided in Franklinville, but latterly lived in Salamanca with his son, Vedder C. Reynolds, where he died May 19, 1893. His wife died in Franklinville, March 4, 1884. All their six children survive them. (See page 400.)

Oscar B. Seneer, son of George W., was born in Milford, N. Y., Dec. 15, 1831, removed with his parents to Ellicottville in 1833, and became a salesman in a general store. In 1857 he was admitted a partner with one of his employers, Francis Green, Jr., in mercantile and lumber business, in which he has alone and with others been engaged to the present time. He is a staunch Republican and in Great Valley and Salamanca has held several town offices. He was deputy sheriff from 1873 to 1876.

James O. Spencer, son of Col. James O. and Triphena (Chamberlain) Spencer, was born in Cuba, N. Y., April 28, 1844. His father was a pioneer of Cuba, where he built a frame house and the first good hotel. He was supervisor for fourteen or fifteen consecutive years and was colonel of the militia. His mother was a sister of Judge Benjamin Chamberlain, in whose family James O. was reared. May 16, 1861, he enlisted in Co. H, 37th N. Y. Vols., served his term of enlistment, and re-enlisted in Co. D, 179th N. Y. Vols., and served to the close of the war, being discharged July 30, 1865. He was duty-sergeant of Co. H and first sergeant of Co. D, and participated in twenty battles, escaping without a wound. Mr. Spencer was captured in front of Petersburg in July, 1864, and was confined in prison ten months, being released on parole in June, 1865. He studied law at East Randolph with Jenkins & Goodwill several months, removed to Portageville, N. Y., where he pursued his law studies with E. Townsend over a year and served as justice of the peace, and in 1879 removed to Salamanca, where he still resides. He is serving his second term as justice of the peace of Salamanca and is police justice of West Salamanca. He served as justice of sessions in 1890 and was the Democratic nominee for member of Assembly in the fall of 1890. He is president of the Board of Education of West Salamanca. July 4, 1872, he married Arvilla D. Metcalf, of Randolph. Children: John J., born May 4, 1873, entered the law office of Ansley & Davis at the age of fourteen; George B. Mc., born July 12, 1876, a law student with Judge Vreeland since 1880; Armenia T., born in Oct., 1881.

George Shedd, son of John D., was born in Jamestown, N. Y., Feb. 19, 1836. April 22, 1861, he enlisted in Co. F, 3d Ohio Vols., while on a visit in Hamilton, Ohio, and was discharged at the expiration of his three months' term of enlistment. Sept. 4, 1861, he enlisted as sergeant in Co. F, 69th Ohio Vols., and in the battle of Stone River at Murfreesboro, Tenn., Jan. 2, 1863, he received a severe wound from a six-pound solid shot, which carried away the upper part of his right shoulder. He was discharged for disability Sept. 13, 1863. Nov. 5, 1863, he received the commission of lieutenant-colonel of Ohio State Militia and was assigned to duty on the borders of Ohio and Kentucky, where his regiment did duty, and where he served out his term of five years, being mustered out of service near the close of the year 1867. Colonel Shedd returned to Hamilton and served on the police force until the spring of 1870, when he removed to his native town and resumed the trade of harness making, which he had commenced before he entered the army. Two years later he removed to Randolph, where he prosecuted his trade eight years, serving two years of the time on the police force. Jan. 1, 1882, he settled in Salamanca, where he is engaged in harness manufacturing. Two brothers of Colonel Shedd were soldiers in Co. D, 35th Ohio Vols., and both died of wounds. Sept. 13, 1862, he married Mary E. Carr, of Hamilton, Ohio. Their only son, Albert, born March 27, 1864, enlisted in the regular army in Sept., 1886, has served a term of five years in the 5th United States Regulars, and ten days after his discharge he re-enlisted for five years more. He is now stationed with his regiment in New Orleans.

Fred Stillman, born in Dunkirk, N. Y., Oct. 20, 1854, received his education in his native village, and being the oldest of the family the support of his mother and a younger brother and sister fell upon him after his father's death. He learned the cabinet maker's trade in Dunkirk, and in Aug., 1876, he began business as a furniture dealer in Salamanca. In 1888 he sold this business and is now the only undertaker in the town. He was supervisor of Salamanca in 1887 and 1888 and is now one of the county coroners and a member of the Board of Education.

Alonzo L. Stratton, only son of Leander and Lucy (Foster) Stratton, was born at Little Valley Center, Feb. 22, 1836, where, until he was thirty-three years of age, he was engaged in farming on the homestead which his grandfather settled about 1824. In 1869 he located on a farm on Saw-Mill run, which he still owns, residing in West Salamanca. He has been a dealer in musical instruments, a fire insurance agent, and is now a salesman in the store of J. J. McKay. Aug. 18, 1862, he married Frances Kilbourn, a native of Hartford, Conn., who was born in 1840. Children: Ella (Mrs. Watson Eddy), Delbert, and Charles.

Bennett E. Tobias, son of Julius and Elizabeth (French) Tobias, was born in Grove, N. Y. His grandfather, Asa Tobias, was one of the first settlers in Geneva, N. Y. His father was a farmer and lumberman. Beginning at the age of fifteen he spent seven years in the oil regions of Titusville, Pa., as a well driller. In 1865 he drilled a test well for a New York company in Steamburgh. He next drilled five wells for the United States Oil Company at Pit-hole. In 1869 he began operating in oil in Little Colorado, Pa. In Dec., 1883, he came to Salamanca, where he still resides, and where he is serving his third year as assessor. In 1869 he married Nellie Clark, of Allegheny city, Pa., who died in Nov., 1879, being the mother of two daughters. In 1882 Mr. Tobias married Mrs. Ely, of Altoona, Pa.

Philip J. Velie, born in Schenectady, N. Y., in 1804, was employed by the Green Bay Fur Company and later he settled at Cold Spring, near Bath, N. Y., where he had charge of a paper-mill. In Hammondsport he managed a warehouse and was next in Oramel, Allegany county, a lumberman. About 1858 he went to Olean, where he was a wholesale merchant. In 1863 he came to Salamanca and opened a boarding house and later kept the American House. Mr. Velie was deputy sheriff in Steuben county and held several of the town offices in Salamanca. He died in Dec., 1884. Children: Jacob W., a graduate of the Geneva Medical College, subsequently manager of the Academy of Science in Chicago, and now with his brother Arunah A. proprietor of a museum in St. Joseph, Mich.; Benjamin W., of Elgin, Ill.; Charles, of East Saginaw, Mich.; Elisha W.; James B.; Mrs. T. Bidwell and Mrs. J. Welts, of Salamanca; Mrs. J. D. Pease, of Corning, N. Y.; and Mrs. J. Rogers, of Burlingame, Kan. Elisha W. Velie was born near Bath, N. Y., in 1836 and commenced business in Olean as a boatman on the Genesee Valley canal in company with his brother Charles. They manufactured potash in Wethersfield, Wyoming county, where he married Susan Narmore in 1861. In 1863 he came to Salamanca, where he still resides. Here he has been a sawyer, a carpenter, a car-builder, and the past two years assistant foreman of the railroad shops. James B. Velie resides in Salamanca and is first assistant in the express office at the Erie depot.

Edward B. Vreeland, a son of Simon and Jerusha (Butterfield) Vreeland and a brother of Judge Oliver S. Vreeland, is a native of Cuba, N. Y., and was born Dec. 7, 1857. He received his education in the public schools and in Friendship Academy, and moved to Salamanca in 1871. He was a teacher several years, five of which he was principal of Salamanca Union Free School, and by his influence an academic department was instituted under his administration. He studied law while teaching, and was admitted to the bar in 1880, but has never practiced. He commenced the insurance business in 1880, which he has since continued. He was active in the re-organization of the Salamanca National Bank, was one of its directors in 1881, and was elected its president in Sept., 1891, which position he still holds. He was appointed postmaster of Salamanca by President Harrison in April, 1889, and held the position until July 1, 1893. He is an active Republican, a speaker of ability, and takes the stump in presidential campaigns. In 1880 he married Almira, daughter of J. O. Price, of Friendship. They have three children.

Col. Henry O. Wait, son of Christian and Rachel (Briggs) Wait, was born in Owego, N. Y., Sept. 19, 1840. His father was an extensive lumberman on the Susquehanna river and rafted his products of long shingles and staves to Harrisburg and Philadelphia. Later he was a farmer. He was a native of Half Moon, N. Y., and went to Owego with his father and family, who located an extensive tract of wild land and gave each of his five sons a farm in the neighborhood of Wait's Settlement, a hamlet so named in their honor. Mrs. Wait died Jan. 16, 1868. Mr. Wait died June 15, 1883, aged eighty-two. Henry O. Wait enlisted April 28, 1861, in Co. K, 26th N. Y. Vols., and served with distinction to the close of his term of enlistment. He immediately re-entered the U. S. service and served until he was again mustered out at the close of the war. He was promoted to colonel, was present at the first and second battles of Bull Run, Antietam, Cedar Mountain, and several others, and was with General Sherman in his march to the sea. In the fall of 1865 he came to Salamanca and was in the ticket department of the Erie and Atlantic & Great Western railroads about eighteen years. Colonel Wait was supervisor of Salamanca in 1873, 1874, and 1875, and was elected treasurer of Cattaraugus county in the fall of 1878 and has since continuously held that position. At the organization of the First National Bank of Salamanca, May 15, 1880, he was elected vice-president and in Jan., 1881, was chosen president, which office he still holds. Mr. Wait is a member of the G. A. R. and of all the Masonic organizations to Knight Templar, including the 32d degree. May 6, 1864, he married Belle, only child of David Kirkpatrick, of Cuba, N. Y., a lady of great executive ability and a talented musician.

Warren W. Wellman, son of Jonas, was born in Friendship, N. Y., June 28, 1833. He received an academic education and at the age of twenty commenced a mercantile career in Little Genesee. In June, 1861, he returned to Friendship and engaged in the combined business of banking and merchandizing. In Dec., 1863, he settled in Brockwayville, Pa., where he was a merchant about fifteen years. In 1880 he accepted the office of cashier of the First National Bank of Salamanca, which position he still holds. In Dec., 1860, he married M. Elvira Crandall, of Little Genesee, and has three daughters.

John Wheeler, a native of New Salem, Mass., married Rhoda Osgood, in his native town, where his eight children were born. His father was a soldier in the Revolutionary war and was detailed with about 800 "picked men" and sharpshooters who captured General Burgoyne's provision train and transferred it to the American camp; he was also present when Burgoyne surrendered. In 1833 John Wheeler removed from Massachusetts to Gainesville, N. Y., and about 1835 came to Little Valley, settling in the south part of that town on the place he bought of James Rosenberry. His house he opened as a temperance tavern and in it the town meetings were frequently held. He later owned 280 acres. He also built a good saw-mill on Little Valley creek on the farm where his youngest son, George Wheeler, now resides. In religion he favored the Presbyterian denomination and in politics was a Whig. He was a farmer and lumberman and died June 1, 1862. Mrs. Wheeler survived until April 18, 1868. George Wheeler, their youngest child, was born in New Salem, Sept. 6, 1827, came with his parents to Cattaraugus county, and when twenty-one became a farm laborer. July 4, 1854, he married Nancy A., daughter of Rufus C. Brainard, and settled on a farm on lot 10 on the line between Salamanca and Little Valley. He now resides on the same lot, but just across the highway from his first purchase, and has always been a farmer. He is also a natural mechanic and the patentee of a bee hive. In politics he is a Republican and is a member of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ. Children: Clark, Viola H. (Mrs. Erastus Winship), Charles S., and Ida C.

CHAPTER XLVII.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF SOUTH VALLEY.

SOUTH VALLEY was formed from Randolph and Cold Spring, April 2, 1847, and in 1848 another portion of the last named town was annexed.

November 26, 1890, Elko was taken off, leaving South Valley with its present area of 37,749 acres. It is the southwestern town of Cattaraugus county and is bounded on the south by Pennsylvania, on the west by Chautauqua county, on the north by Randolph, and on the east by Elko, and comprises town one of the eighth range and a small portion of town one of the ninth range of the Holland survey. The erection of the town of South Valley was due largely to the exertions of Warren H. Reeves, one of its early settlers and foremost citizens. The surface is broken into high hills amounting almost to mountains, very few of which are susceptible of cultivation. The valleys are deep and narrow, but fertile, producing hay, grain, and fruit abundantly.

The soil on the hills is of a slaty and clayey nature, and recent investigations lead to the belief that some of it could be profitably utilized in the manufacture of mineral paint. In the valleys or lowlands a rich, gravelly loam mixed with some clay prevails. The best land lies along the Allegheny river and within the Indian reservation. Scarcely any of this has been cleared. The township was originally covered with a fine growth of pine and hemlock, most of which has been cut off and manufactured into lumber, leaving a second growth of deciduous trees. As an evidence of the fine quality of pine which once constituted the dense forests of South Valley it is related that two masts, 110 and 115 feet long respectively, were cut out between 1840 and 1850 to furnish spars for a war vessel building in Pittsburg. The town is drained by the Allegheny river and its tributaries. The river enters the eastern edge near the center and flowing southwesterly passes into the State of Pennsylvania near the southeast corner, traversing the center of the Indian reservation. Its principal accessions on the west side are Pierce, Bone, Saw-Mill, and State Line runs, all having easterly and southeasterly courses. Hotchkiss run, which has its source in Elko, empties into the Allegheny in the eastern part of this town. The Peter Crouse creek, so called from Peter Crouse, an early character among the Indians, is the only tributary on the east side of the river. Nearly all these streams afford good water-power, but most of the mill sites have been abandoned.

The first landowners in town, in 1821, were Alexander Van Horn, George W. Fenton, Reuben Owens, Joseph Russell, William Sprague, and Matthias Bone. There is no evidence, however, that any of these ever became actual settlers. The first settlement was doubtless made by Ephraim Morrison in 1825, on lot 5, where Abel A. Wilcox now lives. Here he kept a tavern, the first one in the town. David Cargill came this same year, but a few months later, and settled on the farm now owned by Warren L. Reeves. He moved to Warren county, Pa., where he died. Their houses were of frame, a story and a half high, and in outward appearance were nearly alike. Other early settlers, the dates of whose coming can not be ascertained, but who lived here in 1832, were Roswell Fenton, Ira Green, Stephen Hadley, Benjamin Marsh, Smith Ott, Samuel Ross, William Springer, and Merritt Hotchkiss. These were all on the west side of the river. On the east side, in this town, John Crooks, from Pennsylvania, and Jonas Genung were the earliest settlers.

The Pierce and Bone families were early comers, settling on the streams to which were applied their respective names. John I. Stryker in 1835 settled on lot 21. He was a native of New Jersey, and prominent here in town affairs. Two sons, Jasper B. and John M., were long-time residents of the neighborhood, the former occupying for many years the homestead. Mr. Stryker built a large and expensive grist-mill,—the first one in South Valley,—the frame of which is still standing. He died here about 1870. Stephen P. Wilcox was also an early settler. Warren H. Reeves came in 1837 and settled on the farm where his son Warren L. now resides. Mr. Reeves was one of the most prominent men the town ever had. He was foremost in developing its resources, giving liberally of both time and money for the advancement of its educational, agricultural, and lumbering interests, and was all his life a representative citizen. David Moore located here in 1835 and Frederick K. Moore in 1840. Others of this family were also early settlers.

Benjamin Mason, still living, settled on lot 37, and David Tucker, also still living, on lot 35. On State Line run a Mr. Grover was the first settler. Besides those already noticed the early comers to Onoville were E. P. Haley, James Akin, and William C. Webber. Mr. Akin built and run the first hotel in Onoville after it became a village. He died in California. Richard L. Stone, now of Buffalo, came from Saratoga county in 1848. He was a well known citizen, taking considerable interest in town affairs. Frederick Aldrich, Jr., who settled in Cold Spring in 1838, came here in 1857. The Wilcox family were early settlers, and have always been prominent and respected citizens. Peter Murphy was doubtless the foremost Catholic resident at an early day. In his house on Saw-Mill run was celebrated the first mass in town. He donated land for the Catholic cemetery, a plat he had long used for private burials.

One of the foremost of the early Indians was John Pierce, who was a good farmer and built a fine frame house, which long commanded attention for its stateliness and excellent finish. His last male descendant, Abel Pierce, was drowned in the Allegheny river in 1891. Peter Crouse, a German, was captured when seven years old, by the Indians, on the Monongahela in Pennsylvania, and adopted into their tribe. He was short in stature, and both energetic and enterprising. He settled at an early day at the mouth of the stream known by his name, where he died. He was the progenitor of a large family, of whom many of his grandchildren and great-grandchildren yet live, and tell with pleasure of their ancestor's remarkable career. He was a farmer, but during a greater part of his life turned his attention to hunting and trapping, in which he became an expert. Governor Blacksnake, "The Nephew," the war chief of the Senecas, a relative of Cornplanter, and a nephew of Red Jacket, lived, it is claimed, in this town some time. This triumvirate were Indian councillors at different periods.

The first town meeting was held May 4, 1847. Warren H. Reeves, being appointed by the act erecting the town of South Valley, presided, and Arad Rich and John F. Fenton acted as moderators. William I. Reeves was chosen clerk of the meeting. These officers were elected: John Crooks, supervisor; Frederick K. Moore, town clerk; Arad Rich, John Covell, and Warren H. Reeves, justices of the peace; Patrick Quinn, Samuel Wilder, and Arad Rich, assessors; Chauncey Carrier, superintendent of common schools; John F. Fenton, John I. Stryker, and Leonard Barton, commissioners of highways; John D. Woodward, collector; Warren H. Reeves and Albert M. Thornton, overseers of the poor; Amos B. Chapman and James Moore, inspectors of election; J. D. Woodward, William D. Johnson, Asher Barton, constables.

In 1876, during the incumbency of Gideon Caskey as supervisor, the town was bonded for $500 to repair Quaker bridge, then within the limits of South Valley. These bonds as well as all other indebtedness have recently been paid off, leaving the township free from debt. The first game constable, Charles Barton, was elected in 1879. In 1886 a resolution was adopted authorizing the purchase of Frank Townsend's suspension bridge across the Allegheny between Onoville and the switch of the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad. This bridge was built by Mr. Townsend and opened for travel in the fall of 1884, tolls being charged until it passed into the possession of the town. It is 508 feet long with a roadway twelve feet wide, and at first was supported by two galvanized wire cables. There are seven spans, and the abutments are on piles, three to each pier. The first winter after the bridge was constructed one of the cables gave way at the anchorage, precipitating a team, driver, and sleigh-load of bark into the river. All were rescued. In the spring of 1891 a cable parted, letting a sleigh-load of ties, the driver, and team into the water, and for this accident the town paid $112.50 damages. The bridge was repaired at a cost of about $1,600. The town, on July 5, 1886, authorized the highway commissioners to keep the approaches in good condition and a special meeting on March 29, 1888, appropriated $350 for repairs. The principal town officers have been as follows:

Supervisors.—John Crooks, 1847-50, 1853-54; Stephen P. Wilcox, 1851-52, 1857; Samuel Phillips, 1855-56; David Tucker, 1858, 1867-70; Leonard Barton, 1859; John F. Fenton, 1860-64; Austin J. Morrison, 1865-66, 1881-85, 1890; E. C. Topliff, 1871; William H. Aldrich, 1872; Warren L. Reeves, 1873, 1891-92; Gideon Caskey, 1874-80; Abel A. Wilcox, 1886-89; Arthur Brooks, 1893.

Town Clerks.—Frederick K. Moore, 1847-50; John Convers, 1851; Edson Green, 1852 (moved away and E. D. Fenton appointed to fill vacancy); Clark R. White, 1853-55 (moved west in 1855 and Warren L. Reeves was appointed); Warren L. Reeves, 1856-57, 1859-60, 1862, 1865-67, 1869, 1872, 1886-87, 1890; Stephen P. Wilcox, 1858, 1861; William H. Aldrich, 1863; George W. Reeves, 1864 (moved away and his brother Warren L. was appointed pro tem.); Albert G. Barton, 1868; Napoleon R. Wilcox, 1870; Frederick Aldrich, 1871; Richard L. Stone, 1873; Ephraim Palmer, 1874-85; David M. Tucker, 1888-89; Abel A. Wilcox, 1891-93.

Justices of the Peace.—1847, Arad Rich, John Covell, Warren H. Reeves; 1848, Rufus C. Brainard, Chester Barton; 1849, R. C. Brainard, J. Covell, Leonard Barton; 1850, W. H. Reeves, J. Covell, J. D. Woodward; 1851, Ariel Wellman; 1852, R. C. Brainard, Wm. C. Webber; 1853, Wm. D. Johnson, L. Barton; 1854, J. Covell, Elzi Flagg, W. H. Reeves; 1855, W. H. Reeves, Asa Phillips; 1856, A. W. Needham, I. Baker; 1857, H. Morrison; 1858, Elzi Flagg; 1859, Jackson Sample; 1860, Corydon Holmes; 1861, W. H. Reeves, Alonzo Norton, Jedediah Hiller; 1862, Stephen P. Wilcox; 1863, Charles Fuller; 1864, R. L. Stone, William L. Marsh; 1865, Alonzo Norton, William L. Marsh; 1866, Robert Johnson; 1867, William L. Marsh; 1868, Asher Bliss, Leonard Barton, John F. Featon; 1869, Asher Bliss, Frederick Aldrich, Corydon Holmes; 1870, Corydon Holmes; 1871, Frederick Aldrich; 1872, Arza O. Stone; 1873, David G. Bliss; 1874, Corydon Holmes, Asher Bliss; 1875, James Freeman; 1876, Frederick Aldrich, L. L. Moore; 1877, Asher Bliss, William W. Moore; 1878, Corydon Holmes, S. M. Bliss; 1879, James Freeman; 1880, Frederick Aldrich, Asa Flagg; 1881, S. M. Bliss, H. D. Johnston; 1882, Charles Fuller; 1883, Ransom Dennison; 1884, Asher Bliss, Elzi Flagg; 1885, J. P. Ferrin, Peter Durning, J. H. Covell; 1886, J. H. Covell; 1887, Peter Durning, Warren L. Reeves; 1888, Peter Durning, A. W. Day; 1889, David Flagg, H. D. Johnston; 1890, Thomas Crisman; 1891, Frederick Aldrich, David Snover; 1892, John P. Ferrin, Thomas Crisman; 1893, Peter Durning, Sullivan Volentine; 1894, Robert Hattenbaugh, Frederick Aldrich, David Flagg; 1895, Henry Earl, Matthew Murphy, Josiah Hotchkiss, Ernest Brown; 1896, George P. Brown, John Laughlin, Jr.*

With perhaps one or two exceptions there is no town in the county so destitute of even passable roads as was South Valley up to a dozen years ago. The clayey nature of the soil, the few scattering inhabitants, the dense growth of forests, all combined to make good road building a difficult task. Thousands of dollars in time and money have been expended in bridges and grading only to be washed away by the annual freshets. Within the last decade improvements of a substantial character have been the rule, until now the highways compare quite favorably with those of the neighboring towns. The first road put through the town is that on the reservation following the west bank of the Allegheny river. It was built and for many years kept in repair by the State. Warren H. Reeves contributed sufficient funds—$90—to cut a road up Saw-Mill run to Frewsburg, Chautauqua county. In 1848 twelve road districts were formed; 1849 there were thirteen; in 1850, seventeen; in 1855, eighteen; in 1865, nineteen; in 1869, twenty-two; in 1872, twenty-five; in 1877, twenty-six; in 1881, twenty-seven; in 1891, twenty. About 1860 Albert Barton erected a wire ferry across the river a little below the mouth of Saw-Mill run. A flat-boat was rigged to this wire by ropes and pulleys and so manipulated as to employ the current of the stream for motive power. Mr. Barton was succeeded by S. M. Bliss, who operated it until the bridge was constructed in 1884. A ferry of the same character was built about 1882 near the mouth of State Line run, about half a mile above the Pennsylvania line, by Holt & McCabe, who still run it. Gideon Caskey put up a private ferry near the confluence of Bone run with the Allegheny, which was abandoned several years ago.

In 1882 the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad was built along the east side of the Allegheny river on the Indian reservation. No depot has been erected. The company put in a siding east of Onoville, where trains stop regularly, and one near the State line, called Quinn's switch.

South Valley, until recent years, has been a great lumber town. Its dense forests of tall pines and hemlocks have long afforded employment to the lumberman, the manufacturer, and the shipper, many of whom accumulated considerable wealth, but the industrious woodman's axe has generally been superseded by the farmer's plow, leaving the territory little else than a sparsely settled agricultural district. A few saw-mills yet remain, remnants of a former activity. Nearly all the inhabitants have at one time or another engaged in lumbering of some kind, many of them having passed through the experience of logging and rafting, floating huge bulks down the river to Pittsburg and the west. The first mill erected in the town was built for the Indians at a very early day on the west bank of the Allegheny a short distance below Saw-Mill run. Evidences of this mill can still be seen.

Ira Green put up a mill on lot 12 on Saw-Mill run. Smith Ott, in 1830, erected another on lot 21, which afterward became the property of the Stryker family. In 1846 Patrick Quinn erected a saw-mill on lot 30, the site on which David Walsh operated one many years later. About 1850 Whitman & Newman built a mill on lot 45, later owned by David Tucker. The same year Stephen P. Wilcox and James Akin erected a saw-mill on lot 46. Quinn & Murphy put up another on lot 28, which later was owned by A. & A. Crowley, and finally by James Murphy. Richard Orr built one on the same lot, which was afterward converted into a steam mill by Baker & Whitney and later operated by J. Brannon. On lot 43 Fenton, Frew & Scowden built a steam mill which was finally removed. On lot 51 were located William Wyman's saw and shingle-mills and the shingle-mills of Willard Littlefield and Mark Murphy. On this branch was also the steam shingle-mill of Curtis Harding which was changed to water-power with an over-shot wheel. Other mill-owners here were Henry Samson, Kilborn & Whitney, Brannon Brothers, Gideon Caskey, Elijah Akin, Frank Wyman, Marcus Murphy, and Kyle Burch. Arthur Brooks built a steam shingle-mill in 1889 and a planing-mill in 1891, which he still operates. Barnard Laughlin and Oliver Guernsey have steam shingle-mills and John Burch a steam saw and shingle-mill. John Burgett has a steam saw-mill in "Brown hollow" near Onoville. Still another saw-mill is located at the forks of Saw-Mill run.

On Bone run Roswell Fenton erected a saw-mill about 1835 on lot 1, which was rebuilt by A. M. Thornton and later operated by Wheeler & Aldrich. Frederick K. Moore put up another on lot 6 in 1845 and the next year John F. Fenton, on lot 14, built and operated a large saw and shingle-mill until 1873, when Gideon Caskey bought it, converting it into a steam mill and using the water-power to operate a stave factory. Mr. Caskey moved it to the confluence of the Phillips branch with Bone run, where it was enlarged and run until the spring of 1889, when it was abandoned. The building is still standing. This was the largest mill ever erected in the north part of the town. John F. Fenton, in 1837, put up on lot 32 a saw-mill which was later abandoned, and on lot 41 Isaac L. Smith had a steam mill. On lot 15 H. A. Phillips built a saw and shingle-mill, which became the property of A. Colburn, and the Fenton Mill Company operated a shingle-mill near by. Other millowners on Bone run were Patrick Smith, W. H. H. Fenton, Sylvester Covell & Brother, Comfort Hall, George Cowen, and Lorenzo Martin. L. Vollentine has a steam saw-mill on Phillips branch which was formerly a shingle-mill. Amasa Birt in 1892 built a steam factory on for sawing out grape-basket covers and bottoms.

On Pierce run B. Kent & Co. operated a saw-mill on lot 9 for some time. Subsequent owners were a Mr. McNall and Dudley Kenison. It is now owned by Arnold Bentley, who converted it into a steam mill and saws both shingles and boards. Lewis Shrader built a steam saw and shingle-mill in 1889 and still operates it. The largest saw-mill ever erected in South Valley was built on the west side of the Allegheny, three-fourths of a mile above the State line, by Guy C. Irvine in 1841 and operated by him until 1855. He constructed a dam across the river and carried the water through a raceway over half a mile to the mill. He claimed to have built this dam in five days and prided himself on performing such an astonishing feat. At a point under the mill where the water left the race and fell into the river was a convenient fish trap where quantities of fish were captured. The mill was furnished with two drawways, a gang of fourteen saws, and three single saws, giving it an immense capacity. The mill fell into Indian hands after the lease expired and finally rotted away.

John I. Stryker, in 1857, built a grist-mill on lot 21, on Saw-Mill run, which was run by water-power and contained a bolt and three runs of stone. The raceway is nearly a half-mile in length and was excavated by donation. The mill never paid and the machinery was finally taken to Pennsylvania. Its last owner here was Theron Dailey. The building, though somewhat dilapidated, is still standing, a family landmark and the only grist-mill ever erected in town.

A. J. Hotchkiss has a wagon and blacksmith shop and a cider-mill on Pierce run. Schultz Brothers started a cheese factory in Onoville about 1882. Butter making was later added, the factory being run in all two years, when it was converted into a hotel and finally burned. The Onoville cheese factory was built in the spring of 1891 by O. H., Ira, and Calvin Marsh. The following fall O. H. Marsh disposed of his interest to his brothers, who now operate it. It is of frame, two stories high, and has a capacity of about 150 cows.

Owing to the fact that South Valley is contiguous to the great oil fields of Pennsylvania there has been more or less speculation as to the probability of discovering oil in the town, and as a test five wells were sunk one after another in the last dozen years. In none of them were even evidences of oil ever discovered. The first well was put down on lot 9 on Pierce run. Then two were sunk on Saw-Mill run in 1881, on lots 43 and 34, followed by a third in 1891 on lot 12. The latter produced gas, but it has never been utilized. The last well was sunk in 1892, on Pierce run, to a depth of about 2,600 feet.

The Indians formerly buried their dead in various places along the river and the early white settlers either used private burial grounds or made their interments in Corydon, Pa., or Randolph. Isaac Hotchkiss had a small plat of ground on Pierce run which he devoted to this purpose, the last burial being made there about 1860. It is now a cultivated field. One of the earliest burial places in South Valley was that used by the Stryker family on a portion of what is now the Warren L. Reeves farm. This plat has long since been abandoned, yet the spot, though not cared for, is kept sacred to those who sleep beneath its sod. Peter Murphy early started a private cemetery on his farm on lot 28, on Saw-Mill run, which he and other Catholics used in common till 1867, when he donated it to the Catholic church. About an acre of ground is inclosed, and this is the only regular cemetery in town.

Onoville is the only village in South Valley and was formerly an important point for the lumber trade. It is said that every lumberman carried from here a jug of liquor when he went into the woods to work, and on this account the place was locally known for many years as "Jugville." In 1859, when the postoffice was established, the hamlet received its present name, but not until after considerable casting about for an appropriate term. A meeting was called for this purpose and name after name was proposed, but none could be agreed upon. Each was declined with the remark: "Oh, no, that will not do." Finally the wag of the village, William C. Webber, who had listened to the several names in silence, sarcastically suggested: "Well, call it oh, no, ville, then, and be done with it." This unique term pleased the people and it was immediately adopted with a modified orthography—Onoville. The village is situated in the southern part of the town, on Saw-Mill run, about a half-mile west of the Allegheny. The first store was opened by John Conners soon after 1840. In the building in which he traded the following have also carried on mercantile business: Warren H. Reeves, Warren L. Reeves, Frederick Aldrich, David Tucker, William Worth, and Fred N. Aldrich. Richard L. Stone was another merchant in a store near by. Daniel Zibble at one time was in trade on the reservation. The present store keepers are Seitz Brothers and B. J. McLindon. Ephraim Morrison was the first inn keeper in South Valley. He had a public house in Onoville about 1830 on land now occupied by the dwelling of Abel A. Wilcox. James Akin built a tavern in 1848, conducted it a few years, and finally went to California, where he died. John P. Ferrin was a later hotel keeper. His hostelry burned about 1883 with the dwelling house of Daniel Zibble. C. M. Phillips still later kept the "Exchange Hotel and Sutherland House." This property was burned November 8, 1892. On this site some years before a blacksmith shop was destroyed by fire and the family of George Champlin, living overhead at the time, had a narrow escape. Onoville now contains one general store, one hardware store, two blacksmith shops, a shoe shop, a cheese factory, a small hotel, a Catholic church, a graded school, a postoffice, and about fifteen dwellings. The postoffice was established about 1839 with Erasmus D. Fenton as the first postmaster. Since him the postmasters have been William H. Aldrich, Stephen P. Wilcox, David Tucker, Richard L. Stone, B. J. McLindon, and Sullivan W. Vollandine. In the summer of 1891 the office was burned.

The first school district was formed in 1829 and embraced all of what is now South Valley and Elko, but the first record of a school meeting was on March 8, 1838, and this speaks of the district as No. 11, then under the town of Randolph. The first school house, a log one, was erected in Onoville on land now occupied by Benjamin Brown. Of the meeting on March 8th John I. Stryker was chosen moderator and Warren H. Reeves, John I. Stryker, and Ephraim Morrison, trustees. It was decided to buy the school house and lot just mentioned and erect thereon a new frame building. There were twenty-five children, school was kept four months, and the teacher received $48.50. In 1839 there were twenty-eight scholars under sixteen years of age. A library then was both necessary and obligatory, and the one belonging to this district contained nine volumes. In 1840 there were twenty-four; in 1843, thirty-six. The text books used in 1843, according to the records, were the "Elementary Spelling Book," the "American Preceptor," the "English Reader," "History of the United States," the "New Testament," "Daboll's Arithmetic," and the "History of Columbus." The most prominent individual in pioneer schools here was Warren H. Reeves. Through him the first school of any importance was established; with his own funds he paid and boarded the teacher for some time. In 1886 the Ononville graded school house was erected at a cost of about $1,600, on a lot previously used for school purposes. The building committee consisted of Warren L. Reeves, Abel A. Wilcox, and Jasper B. Stryker. It is a handsome frame structure, two stories high, capable of accommodating 130 scholars, or 65 in each room. The town has four school districts, with a school house in each, which were taught in 1892 by five teachers. The value of the buildings and sites is $3,910 and the assessed valuation of the districts aggregates $102,438. The amount received from the State was $571.84 and by local tax $1,150.67.

It is quite probable that the first religious services held in town were those conducted by the Methodists, though no regular church organization of that denomination has been effected. Members of the Presbyterian denomination worshiped for many years at a mission of that faith at Old Town, where a church edifice was erected. The Methodists still hold services in the school house in Onoville every alternate Sunday, the present pastor being Rev. William Calhoun, of Corydon, Pa. There is a class of 15 members.

For many years Catholic services were held in private houses by Father McKenna, a Franciscan brother from Allegany. His visits occurred every six months. The first mass was celebrated by him in Peter Murphy's dwelling on Saw-Mill run. In 1874 a church edifice was erected in Onoville under Bishop Ryan, the priest in charge being Father J. J. Baxter. The parish then comprised about twenty-eight families. The priests prior to Father Baxter's pastورشip were, besides Father McKenna, Fathers McKeever, Burns, Miller, McMullin, Cahill, and Bloomer. Subsequent to Father Baxter were Fathers Richard R. Coyle, J. J. Roach, Thomas Ledworth, William Morrison, Frank Burns, L. W. Murphy, and John Cunningham, the present priest. During Father Coyle's incumbency the parish, which up to that time had been in the Jamestown charge, was set off to Randolph, where it has since remained and is known as St. Mary's Roman Catholic church. They have the only church edifice in town. The building was originally 24x40 feet in size, but an addition on the rear in 1891 gives it its present dimensions of 24x65 feet. The lot was donated by Napoleon R. Wilcox. The total cost of the building was about $1,800. It was formally dedicated in 1877. The structure is of frame, with a tower in front sixty-five feet high, and will seat about 200 persons. The trustees are Abel A. Wilcox and B. J. McLendon.

Religious services of a missionary character have been held on the Indian reservation from time to time, but within the limits of South Valley no church edifice was erected until recently. In the fall of 1891 the corner-stone of the Presbyterian church was laid on the east side of the Allegheny a few rods from the bridge. The building is a frame structure and was dedicated September 12, 1893. The missionary in charge is Rev. M. F. Trippe.

A Wesleyan Methodist Society was organized in Onoville in July, 1892, by William A. Backus, a licentiate from Cold Spring, with 20 members.

The Union Veterans' Union was organized about 1889, the first and only commander being Harrison Covell. None but soldiers in actual service three years or more were eligible to membership, which numbered twenty-eight. It existed about a year and went down, and the Spencer Whipple Post, G. A. R., was instituted in 1891. This has some seventeen members.

Gideon Caskey, for seven years town supervisor, and at one time one of the leading lumber manufacturers of southwestern Cattaraugus, was born in Worcester, O., Nov. 29, 1833, came to South Valley on the 4th of March, 1857, and died at Moreland, Ky., Nov. 1, 1889. He built several saw-mills and manufactured for himself or on contract millions of feet of lumber. He was liberal, kind-hearted, and enterprising. His wife's parents, Leonard and Evelina (Fargo) Barton, emigrated from Carroll, Chautauqua county, to Elko in 1838.

John Convers came to this town about 1840. He was a carpenter and joiner by trade, kept the first store in Onoville, and did the work of erecting the first school house. His wife was Charlotte Doane, an early school teacher. Their son Abner T., a millwright and carpenter, died here in 1874. Another son, Henry E., was for many years a pilot on the Allegheny river.

John D. Eddy came to South Valley from Chautauqua county in 1874 and settled on Bone run, where he died in April, 1881. His children were Floyd S. and Lulie (Mrs. Wallace Milks, of Napoli). Floyd S. Eddy, born July 4, 1859, came here with his father and has always been a farmer on Bone run. He has served as collector and school trustee and has held other minor town offices. By his wife, Lyde Fleming, of Reidsburg, Pa., he has four children: Ernest C., Annie, John, and Lillie.

John F. Fenton, son of George W. and Elsie (Owen) Fenton, was born in Carroll, Chautauqua county, Oct. 30, 1816. He was a brother of Hon. Reuben E. Fenton, of Jamestown, governor and statesman, and was the most conspicuous resident South Valley ever had. Receiving a common school education he embarked quite extensively in lumbering before attaining his majority, investing his profits in timber lands in the county and ultimately acquiring a vast tract near the Allegheny, for which he was once offered $250,000. He engaged largely in manufacturing and rafting, in which he continued until his death Sept. 10, 1869. His wife died Jan. 22, 1874. A Republican in politics he was supervisor of South Valley from 1860 to 1864 inclusive and held also the offices of assessor and highway commissioner.

Benjamin Mason, the oldest man now living in South Valley, was born Oct. 7, 1801, in Rutland, Vt. He came to Randolph in 1825 and to this town in 1847, following lumbering for many years. He has served as assessor, school trustee, and commissioner of highways. By his first wife, Polly Akin, his children were Olive (deceased); Mary Ann (deceased); Jane A. (Mrs. William Tobey); Reuben (killed in a shingle-mill); Alonzo (deceased); Lorenzo (deceased); Rev. Benjamin, Jr., of Pennsylvania; Melissa, of Kansas; Chauncey, of Chautauqua county; and Annette (deceased). His second wife was Mrs. James Whelpley, of South Valley, and their only child is De Forest, who lives in Onoville, and with whom Mr. Mason now resides. De Forest Mason married a daughter of John Convers.

Warren H. Reeves was born June 26, 1797, came to South Valley (then Randolph) in the spring of 1837, and died at Kent's Corners in April, 1866. He was a farmer and lumberman, and during his entire residence in South Valley was the town's most energetic and exemplary citizen. He was a justice of the peace over thirty years and a class-leader in the M. E. church the greater part of his life. To him belongs the honor of establishing the first school of any importance in what is now South Valley, with his own funds erecting the school house and hiring and boarding the teacher. He also contributed $90 (the sole contribution) to cut a road through the forests from Onoville to Frewsburg in Chautauqua county. His first wife, Laura Beecher (born in April, 1797, died in 1854), bore him these children: William I., born July 28, 1820, of Columbus, Pa.; Eliza A. (Mrs. William Johnson), born in Jan., 1826, of Russellville, Pa.; George W. (see page 501); Warren L.; Benjamin, born in Dec., 1832, died in Feb., 1891; Daniel T. (see page 501); Laura (Mrs. Benjamin Marsh), of East Randolph; and Mary J. (Mrs. John Archer), of East Randolph. Mr. Reeves's second wife, Mrs. Mary Crofoot, now living in Leon, bore him two children: Charles W., born in 1855, died in March, 1881, and Ransom, born in July, 1860, now of Pittsburg, Pa.

Warren L. Reeves, born April 7, 1830, has lived in South Valley since seven years of age. He now occupies the homestead and has made it one of the finest places in the town. For fourteen years he has been town clerk and for three years supervisor. He has held every office within the gift of his townsmen. He married Electa T., daughter of Daniel Thurston, a very early settler of Randolph; children: Asa W., of Salamanca; Edwin A., of Joliet, Ill.; Mary E. (Mrs. Dr. R. B. Parks), of East Jamestown, N. Y.; Alden P. (deceased); and L. Belle.

Charles Sample, one of the representative citizens and a leading farmer of South Valley, is connected with the family of Sample, of Sample hill, in Randolph (q. v.).

R. L. Stone, living in the homestead at Onoville, was born on August 22, 1814, at Ballston Spa, N. Y. Losing his parents during his early boyhood he was obliged to make his own way up to manhood. At the age of twenty-seven he located at Frewsburg, N. Y., where he married, two years later, Elizabeth L. Thayer, both being school teachers. In 1849 they moved into South Valley and soon became prominent in the educational interests of the new town. For twenty years Mr. Stone served as school trustee, nearly the entire time being the sole occupant of that office in his school district. For about the same time he was justice of the peace and for one term was justice of sessions for the county. He was an ardent Republican and active in political affairs. For fifteen years he was postmaster of the only postoffice in South Valley. He had five daughters and three sons.

The first of the Wilcox family to come to South Valley was Mrs. Abel Wilcox and her five sons in 1847—Abel, Jr., Napoleon R., Rodney H., Marvin, and Marshall. All were prominent in the history of the town, many of them and their descendants holding offices of trust and responsibility. Abel died June 3, 1850. His only child, Abel A., married a daughter of Barnard Murphy. He was supervisor of South Valley in 1886, 1887, 1888, and 1889 and is now town clerk. (Mr. Murphy settled on Saw-Mill run in 1849 and died there Nov. 11, 1886. His children were Ann, Patrick, Bridget E., Matthew, Michael, Margaret E., and James S.) Napoleon R. Wilcox served his town in various capacities. Rodney H. was constable and collector several years. A daughter of Mrs. Abel Wilcox married James Akin, who settled here in 1844. He died in California. Ransom D. Wilcox, of the third generation from Mrs. Abel Wilcox, is a substantial farmer, residing in the village of Onoville. Stephen P. Wilcox, another member of this family, was an early and prominent settler, serving as supervisor, town clerk, etc. Until recently the name was spelled Willcox, but the present representatives of the family have adopted the modern orthography, Wilcox.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF YORKSHIRE.*

YORKSHIRE was formed from Ischua by an act of the State Legislature passed on the 13th of April, 1820, and originally comprised that part of the Holland survey known as towns five and six of range five. Lots 1, 8, 16, and 24, lying south of Cattaraugus creek in town seven, range five, belonged to Sardinia, Erie county, and upon the circumstances of their annexation to Yorkshire hangs an interesting tale. Proctor Williams occupied lot 1 and made a large quantity of maple sugar, which he sold to a Mr. Moffit, of Ischua, who found it badly adulterated with meal. As Williams lived in Erie county it was difficult to reach him by law, so Mr. Moffit, through a member of the Legislature from Cattaraugus county, had an act passed setting off the four lots from Sardinia to Yorkshire, which brought Williams within the jurisdiction of our county courts. Moffit got his damages.

Town five was set off as Machias on the 16th of April, 1827. In 1844 the west tier of lots in Freedom was annexed to Yorkshire and in 1847 the south tier of lots was taken from this town and added to Machias, leaving Yorkshire with its present area of 23,580 acres. It is bounded on the north by Erie and Wyoming counties, on the east by Freedom and Wyoming county, on the south by Machias, and on the west by Ashford and Erie county. The surface is undulating and hilly, but the hills are of easy grade, are largely cultivated, and afford the best of pasturage. The soil is rich and productive. The lowlands are composed of a gravelly loam and the uplands of clay. The hills and valleys were originally covered with a heavy growth of maple, beech, basswood, elm, and hemlock, of which maple predominated. The chief industry is the dairy business; the shipments of butter and cheese from this section are large. The drainage is afforded by Cattaraugus creek and its south branch and their small tributaries. The surface slopes northwardly except a small part of the southwest corner, which bears to the west.

The first settlers of Yorkshire compared favorably with all the pioneers of western New York. They were a hardy, honest, and energetic class, who came here prepared to endure fatigue and hunger and cold to subdue the wilderness and build homes for themselves and their children. That they well performed their mission the well-stocked farms and substantial buildings of today furnish ample proof. There were no society lines in their day, and no man built on his pedigree, but muscle, endurance, and hard knocks counted. They were necessarily unselfish, for they were mutually dependent. If a log house was to be put up the settlers for miles around turned out and gave a day to the business.

The first settlers in the town of Yorkshire were doubtless Benjamin Felch and Bethuel Bishop, who located here in 1810. Felch became a prominent citizen, held several town offices, was supervisor for five years, and removed to Wisconsin in 1840. His son Alson was born in June, 1813, and eventually became a prominent resident of Racine, Wis. Mr. Bishop died here in 1818. William, a brother of Benjamin Felch, came to the town soon after 1810. This year came also Thomas Dow, the first blacksmith, and his son Benjamin; Isaac Williams the first settler on the site of Yorkshire Corners; Isaac, Jr., Albert, and Proctor Williams, sons of Isaac; and John Brown. Isaac Williams, Sr., in 1814 built the first saw-mill and grist-mill on Cattaraugus creek and in 1820 erected the first frame house in town. Two years later this was opened by his son Proctor as a tavern. The settlers between 1810 and 1820, as far as ascertained, were Solomon Clark and son Solomon, David and Chauncey Clark, Luther Thompson, Benjamin Thompson, James Boyce (the first settler on the site of West Yorkshire), John Pierce, James and Ezekiel Smith, Edward Bump, Robert Steele, Samuel G. Sutton, Jacob Cochran, James Haines, David Haynes and sons Daniel B. and James A., Colonel Hibbard, Samuel Silliman, Daniel W. Cheney, Joseph Pierce (who started a primitive distillery), Josiah Hakes, John Ward, John Moffit, Alvah Wilson, George Barnes, Benjamin Thompson, John C. Marston, Warren Worden, Samuel Metcalf, James Marston, Girah Phinney and sons Girah, Jr., and Orrin, John and Henry Smith, Stephen Langmade, and Ezekiel Pingrey. During the next decade (1820-30) came Alfred and Abram Howell, David and Henry I. Paddock, George Graham, Abel Gordon, Mason Smith, William Campbell, Samuel King, Robert Nickless, Samuel Davis, John Harmon, Stephen Hollister, William Wattles, Carpenter Bull, Luther Wheeler, David Putnam, Caleb Turner, Israel Thornton, Elihu Hollister, Obadiah Weeks, James Ray, Richard Thornton, Asa Willard, Dr. Augustus Crary, Benjamin Packard, Lewis Marsh, Rev. Solon Pierce, Lewis M. Fisk, Weaver G. Fisk, Reuben Smith, Henry L. Baker, and Dr. Patterson.

Robert Steele was the first collector, one of the first three justices of the peace, and supervisor five years. At his house, while he was boarding with his tenant, David Haynes, was held the first town meeting in 1821. Samuel G. Sutton, who settled at the forks of the creek, was the first supervisor, surveyor, and postmaster, the first postoffice being established at his house about 1825. Colonel Hibbard had been a soldier in the War of 1812. In 1824 he started mills and a distillery at the Corners, and for some years transacted a large business. Mason Smith was the original owner of most of the site of the village of Yorkshire Center, making the first clearing thereon in 1821. He erected the same year the first frame barn in town. With Abel Gordon he also built the first house, a log structure, at the Center. Benjamin Packard put up the first brick dwelling in 1824; this was used as a hotel for several years. Lewis M. Fisk settled at West Yorkshire, where he established the first carding-mill in town. Henry L. Baker opened the first store in 1822, his goods being displayed in the barroom of Proctor Williams's tavern at the Corners.

The act organizing the town (April 13, 1820) provided for the holding of the first town meeting at the dwelling of Robert Steele on Tuesday, March 6, 1821, when the following officers were elected: Samuel G. Sutton, supervisor; Joshua Daniels, town clerk; Elijah T. Ashcraft, Benjamin Felch, and Jacob Cochran, assessors; Robert Steele, collector; Joseph Kinney and Edward Bump, overseers of the poor; Joseph Kinney, Jr., Robert Steele, and Warren Worden, constables; Benjamin Felch, Elisha Brown, and Joseph Pierce, highway commissioners; Samuel G. Sutton, Benjamin Felch, and Charles H. Biggs, commissioners of common schools; Robert Steele, Samuel Silliman, and William Gowen, school inspectors; Robert Steele, Obadiah Vaughan, Jr., and David Clark, poundmasters; Elijah T. Ashcraft, Robert Steele, and William Warner, justices of the peace. The supervisors, town clerks, and justices of the peace have been as follows:

Supervisors.—Samuel G. Sutton, 1821-22, 1827, 1831; Howard Peck, 1836; Robert Steele, 1828-1830, 1832-33; Solomon Love, 1834; George Graham, 1835, 1841-42, 1849-53, 1860; Lewis Marsh, 1836-40; Seth R. Crittenden, 1843-45, 1847-48; George S. Collins, 1846; Lorenzo D. Cobb, 1854, 1869; Joseph H. Wright, 1855-57, 1864; Erastus Daily, 1858-59; Charles T. Lowden, 1861; Perry Howe, 1862-63; Edwin M. Pierce, 1865-66; Aldis Spring, 1867-68; Dwight J. Woodworth, 1870; Elliott A. Cobb, 1871-72; Solomon Howe, 1873, 1876; Gershon S. Rowley, 1874-75; Charles H. Miller, 1877-78, 1883-89, 1893; Chester C. Pingrey, 1879-80; Walter Graham, 1881-82; Eugene W. Read, 1890-91; David D. Smith, 1892.

Town Clerks.—Joshua Daniels, 1821-25; Nathan Follett, 1826; George Graham, 1827-33; Daniel Rich, 1834; Paschal P. Whitney, 1835, 1851; Benjamin Packard, 1836-37, 1841; George W. Thomas, 1838; John Willey, 1839; Lafayette Marsh, 1840, 1842-44; Artemus Spring, 1845; Solomon Love, 1846; Charles T. Lowden, 1847-48; George W. Bailey, 1849-50, 1852-53, 1857; Joseph H. Wright, 1854, 1859, 1862-63, 1867-71; Stephen Holmes, 1855-56; Nathan T. Thomas, 1858; George W. Whiting, 1860-61; Truman Cole, 1864; John B. Foote, 1865-66; H. M. Pomeroy, 1872; William L. Whitman, 1873-74; Walter W. Cheney, 1875; Chester C. Pingrey, 1876-78; Frank A. Howell, 1879; Charles S. Persons, 1880, 1884-88; Nelson Smith, 1881; L. J. Cheney, 1882; A. J. Wiltse, 1883; Deward S. Churchill, 1889-90; Myron E. Fisher, 1891; Dennis E. Arnold, 1892-93 (upon the death of Mr. Arnold in June, 1893, W. G. Woodworth was appointed to fill vacancy).

Justices of the Peace.—Elijah T. Ashcraft, William Warner, Robert Steele, 1821; George Graham, 1827; Augustus Cray, 1828; Barnard Wood, 1829; Arunah Hibbard, 1830; George Graham, 1831; Barnard Wood, Reuben Hollister, 1832; Robert Steele, 1833; Arunah Hibbard, 1834; George Graham, 1835; Miles Carter, 1836; Ira Bishop, 1837; Samuel G. Sutton, 1838; George Graham, 1839; Miles Carter, 1840; Joseph Metcalf, 1841; Solomon Love, Samuel G. Sutton, 1842; George Graham, 1843; Rufus Crowley, 1844; Henry Stringham, 1845; Samuel G. Sutton, 1846; George Graham, 1847; Solomon Lincoln, James R. Barnes, 1848; Charles T. Lowden, 1849; Aldis Spring, 1850; Samuel Persons, 1851; Solomon Lincoln, Isaac White, 1852; Charles T. Lowden, 1853; William W. King, 1854; Samuel Crooker, 1855; Lorenzo D. Cobb, Isaac White, 1856; Joseph H. Wright, 1857; Aldis Spring, Hiram Thornton, 1858; Isaac White, 1859; Lorenzo D. Cobb, 1860; Buel G. Smith, 1861; Aldis Spring, 1862; Isaac White, 1863; Lorenzo D. Cobb, 1864; Buel G. Smith, 1865; Aldis Spring, 1866; Stephen Rich, 1867; Lorenzo D. Cobb, 1868; Buel G. Smith, 1869; William W. King, 1870; William B. Stacey, 1871; George Williams, 1872; Stephen Rich, G. W. Tapple, 1873; Earl Silliman, Henry L. Marsh, 1874; Buel J. Smith, Eugene M. Whitney, 1875; Hiram G. Blood, Warren Worden, 1876; William C. Smith, 1877; William W. King, 1878; Buel G. Smith, 1879; Hiram Blood, 1880; William C. Smith, 1881; Fred Silliman, 1882; Buel G. Smith, David D. Smith, William W. King, 1883; Octavious P. Vedder, 1884; William C. Smith, 1885; William W. King, 1886; Buel G. Smith, 1887; Henry L. Marsh, W. F. Persons, 1888; C. S. Persons, 1889; Fred Silliman, 1890; C. S. Persons, 1891; John Wurtenburg, 1892; H. W. Blighton, 1893.

In 1821 Yorkshire had thirteen road districts and since then the highways have been kept in comparatively good condition. In 1825 the town passed the following resolution: "Aney Person Drawing lumber acrost aney Bridge in the Town of Yorkshire, with a chain, without aney Carriage under it, shall pay the sum of One Dollar for every such offence." The Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad traverses the eastern part of the town and passes through the villages of Yorkshire Center (Delevan postoffice) and Yorkshire Corners. For the construction of this road the town voted $18,000.

The population of Yorkshire in 1830 was 823; in 1850, 2,010; in 1870, 1,575; in 1880, 1,784; in 1890, 1,723. The first school in town was taught by Daniel Davis in 1815, at the Corners, in a log school house roofed with bark. This primitive institution stood a little east of the village on what is now the Wilber place. Mr. Davis came to Arcade, N. Y., in 1810 and a few years later to this town, where he taught school three years. April 24, 1822, Jacob Cochran, Samuel G. Sutton, and Wiggin M. Farrar, school commissioners, reported one school district (No. 4) in the town entitled to school moneys, which amounted that year to $12. In 1892 there were nine school districts attended by 403 children and taught by eleven teachers. The assessed valuation of the districts was $665,945 and the value of the buildings and sites aggregated $5,025. The amount of money received from the State for school purposes was $1,593.48 and by local tax $1,349.65. In 1892 a fine brick school building was erected in Yorkshire Corners, and the district in which it is located was recently organized into the Delevan Union School District with a full Board of Education, the first term opening in September, 1893.

Yorkshire Center (Delevan postoffice), the business center of the town, is situated on the outlet of Lime Lake and on the south branch of Cattaraugus creek. Since the building of the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad it has had a steady, healthy growth and is now a business and shipping point for a large region of country. Its present population is 525. It contains Baptist, Methodist Episcopal, Wesleyan Methodist, and Universalist churches, four general stores, two grocery stores, one drug store, two hardware stores, two milliner stores, two photograph galleries, a bakery, one jeweler, one furniture store, a harness shop, two shoe shops, two barber shops, two meat markets, two blacksmith shops, one ladder factory, a wagon shop, a printing office, one dentist, a creamery, one hotel, a union school, and a postoffice. The books of the merchants show a trade of $114,000 for 1892. The creamery was started here in the spring of 1893. A system of water works was completed and in operation in 1891. The water is brought from a large spring one mile west of the village, at an elevation of 140 feet above Main street level. There is also an efficient fire department. Grounds have been purchased and the work commenced for a lumber yard and planing-mill near the depot. The south branch of Cattaraugus creek affords ample water-power for manufacturing purposes and is now utilized for the operation of one saw-mill, a cheese-box factory, a shingle-mill, a flour and feed-mill, and the electric light plant now being established for lighting the village. The postoffice, which for years was known as Yorkshire Center, was changed in 1892 to Delevan. It issues money orders.

Yorkshire Corners (Yorkshire postoffice) is beautifully located in the north-east corner of the town, one mile from the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad, on the south bank of Cattaraugus creek, and contains two churches, two grocery stores, a saw-mill and grist-mill, a foundry, one harness shop, a wagon shop, a blacksmith shop, one cheese factory, a tin shop, a cider-mill, hotel, graded school, and about 300 inhabitants.

West Yorkshire is a hamlet and postoffice on Cattaraugus creek near the center of the north border of the town, and contains a saw-mill, cheese factory, blacksmith shop, a store, and about ten dwellings.

From the most authentic data obtainable it appears that the Methodists organized a class as early as 1814 or 1815. Elder Judah Babcock held Free-will Baptist services at the dwellings of Isaac Williams and Benjamin Felch about 1817. The First Baptist church of Yorkshire was organized at the Center on the 13th of May, 1855, by Rev. E. W. Bliss with seventeen members. The right hand of fellowship was extended on June 6th at a council of ministers and churches, and the first deacons were Erastus Wheatley and M. S. Durfee. The church edifice was erected and dedicated December 9, 1856, and cost $2,000. It has recently been repaired and modernized and will now seat 350 people. The first pastor was Rev. William J. Kernott, a licentiate.

The Universalist church of Yorkshire was formed at the Yorkshire Center school house January 3, 1856, with twenty-two members, by Rev. Gideon S. Gowdy, who became the first pastor. The legal organization of the society was deferred until 1858, with twenty-three members, and in this year, in connection with the Methodists, they built a church edifice. They still maintain an organization, but at present have no church services.

The Methodist Episcopal church of Yorkshire was organized at the Center by Rev. S. G. Hammond in 1857 as a part of the Machias charge and in 1873 as an independent church. It was again placed on the Machias charge in 1877, where it remained until about 1880, when it was once more made an independent church with a membership of thirty-five. The present number of members is seventy. The house of worship was erected in 1858 by the Methodist and Universalist societies as a union edifice. It cost $2,500 and will seat 350 people.

The Wesleyan Methodist church of Yorkshire Center was organized and the church building erected in 1884. The membership is small, but they have supported most of the time a resident minister.

The First Free Methodist church of Yorkshire was organized at Yorkshire Corners, June 8, 1868, by Rev. Henry Hornsby, with fourteen members. The first pastor was Rev. William R. Cusick. The same year the society bought and remodeled the wooden building used by the Odd Fellows, at a cost of $1,800, and dedicated it for their use. It will seat 200 persons. The membership is 20. Rev. Norman Martin is pastor. Connected is a Sunday school.

In 1865 Rev. Clinton Colgrove, originally a Baptist, held a series of meetings of the Advent persuasion in the school house at Yorkshire Corners. In 1868, with Revs. William A. Fenn and Jonas Wendell, he organized the Advent church of Yorkshire with sixty-three members, and remained their pastor until 1875. A church edifice was built in 1869 at a cost of $3,000. It will seat about 300 persons.

Yorkshire Center Lodge, No 616, I. O. O. F., was instituted December 16, 1891, by D. D. G. M. Orson E. Helms, the first officers being Rev. E. B. Olmstead, N. G.; W. F. Persons, V. G.; Dr. F. Krehbiel, secretary; William J. Strong, treas. An I. O. O. F. lodge formerly flourished at Yorkshire Corners.

Ira Bishop, son of John and Dorcas (Hawkins) Bishop, was born in Williamsburg, Mass. In 1797 he settled in Otsego, N. Y., where he lived until 1831, when he moved to Yorkshire with an ox-team, bringing his wife and five children and settling on the farm now owned by his son, Amasa H. Bishop. He took up 160 acres of land, which he cleared. He taught school and was justice of the peace for several years. He married Margaret Babbitt, of Otsego. Children: Maryette, Dorcas, Palmyra, Reuben B., Miranda M., John D., Sarah A., Amasa H., and Romelia E. He died in 1866 and his wife in 1879. Amasa H. Bishop was born March 19, 1837, and has always been a farmer, being also for a brief time a teacher. He married Keturah, daughter of Levi Howell, of Jerseyville, Canada, and settled on the homestead. His son Levi L. married Jennie E., daughter of Morris Jones, of Freedom.

Carpenter Bull, a native of Vermont, came to Yorkshire in 1825 and settled on the farm now owned by his son Abel. He was a veterinary surgeon and traveled over a large area of the country in the practice of his profession. He married Mariah, daughter of Edward Bump, and had fourteen children.

Harley Bump, son of Lail, was born in Vermont in 1801. In 1828 he married a daughter of Alpheus Harmon, of Yorkshire, and in 1830 settled on the farm now owned by David Quackenbush. He always remained a resident of the town and was a farmer. Children: George R., Lewis L., and Sallie S. (Mrs. Lucas Studley). Mrs. Bump died Feb. 8, 1863. Mr. Bump died in 1872. George R. Bump was born March 18, 1834. Aug. 17, 1861, he enlisted in Co. H, 44th N. Y. Vols., was wounded and is a pensioner, and was mustered out in 1864. He married Lucinda E., daughter of Asahel and Mary (Reynolds) Taylor; children: Edward L., George H., Asahel T., Guy A.

Ray Card, a native of Rhode Island, came to Yorkshire in 1837 or 1838 and settled on the farm his son Jerry now owns, where he lived and died. He had ten children.

Daniel W. Cheney, a native of Ashford, Conn., was descended from good old Puritan stock, his ancestors having come from England with the early Pilgrim Fathers. He emigrated from Connecticut to Essex county, N. Y., but after a brief stay he went into Vermont for a time. Thinking that he could better his condition by a return to New York he located in what is now the town of Machias in the year 1808. He resided here a short time, then removed about five miles farther north and took up land on the old "town line" road, in what is now the town of Yorkshire. Here he passed the remainder of his days, dying in 1837. He left the reputation of being an upright, industrious citizen, enjoying the esteem and confidence of all his acquaintances. His wife survived him but a few years. There were born to him eleven children, nine of whom attained manhood and womanhood. All of these are dead but one, Wells Cheney, who still lives with an only daughter, Nancy, in Delevan, and is an intelligent old gentleman in his 86th year, full of reminiscences of the past.

John Cheney, the second son of Daniel W., was born in 1813 in the limits of the town of Machias. In his early manhood he succeeded in accumulating a sufficient amount of money to purchase and partially pay for the farm already taken up by his father. In 1840 he married Sarah Ann Hodges, who helped him accumulate a large property. For the next few years, until 1856, he passed his time partly in New York State and partly in Pennsylvania, where for a time he run a large lumber mill. Finally returning to New York he settled upon his farm, remaining there till within a few months of his death. He was public spirited, honorable, and highly esteemed. He was one of the founders of the Methodist Episcopal church in Delevan, a liberal supporter and member of it, and one of its trustees for nearly a quarter of a century. He died in 1881 at his residence in the village of Delevan. His widow still lives at the same place. Never taking any active part in politics, he was yet greatly interested in public affairs, usually voting with the Republican party. He was for several terms elected one of the assessors of the town. Besides his widow seven children survive him: Clark A., a farmer in York-shire; Walter W., an oil operator of Bradford, Pa.; Irene E. Crooker, living with her husband at Franklinville; Francis J., principal of the State Normal and Training School, Cortland, N. Y.; George H., in business in Boston, Mass.; Lyman J., postal clerk on the W. N. Y. & P. railroad.

Francis J. Cheney was born near Warren, Pa., in June, 1848, third son of John and Sarah Ann Cheney. In 1856 he came with his parents to York-shire. Here he worked on the farm until he was twenty years old, attending the district school winter and summer as far as the farm work would permit. He early manifested a wish to go to college, and in this he was encouraged by his parents. By attending a neighboring academy at Arcade, N. Y., during the fall term, teaching a district school in the winter, and working on the farm through the spring and summer, he finally obtained a part of the necessary means and preparation for college, and entered Syracuse University in 1868, while it was yet Genesee College, graduating in 1872. After graduation he was professor of mathematics in the Northern New York Conference Seminary, Antwerp, N. Y., for two terms. In March, 1873, he was elected principal of Dryden Union School, Dryden, Tompkins county, N. Y. Here he remained seven years, resigning his position in June, 1880. He had studied law, was admitted to practice, and intended, at this time, to enter upon the profession of law, when he received a letter from a member of the Board of Education of Kingston Free Academy, Kingston, N. Y., asking him to consider the proposition of becoming its principal. The result of the correspondence was that he became principal of this school at a salary of $2,000.

In 1882 he was asked to take a professorship in Syracuse University, but the Kingston Board of Education held out such inducements to retain him as to influence him to stay. In 1888 he was elected superintendent of schools in Olean, N. Y. Again the Board of Education at Kingston so strongly desired him to remain that he declined this attractive position. In June, 1889, he received the degree of Ph.D. from Syracuse University, on examination. In 1890 he was unanimously elected inspector of high schools and academies of New York by the Regents of the University of the State of New York. This position he accepted, and entered upon his duties in September of the same year. He held this important office one year, when he was appointed principal of the State Normal and Training School, Cortland, N. Y. Having been confirmed as principal by the State superintendent of public instruction he resigned the office of inspector to accept this desirable and useful position, which he still holds, finding in it an agreeable field of activity and usefulness. In July, 1873, he married Lydia H., daughter of Buel G. Smith, of Delevan, N. Y. Not a little of his success is due to the well directed helpfulness of his intelligent and clear headed wife. But 45 years of age, in perfect health, it would seem that many years of usefulness are still before him.

Salmon Clark, son of Salmon, and a native of Vermont, settled in Yorkshire on the farm now owned by Seymour King at an early day. Some years later he moved onto what is now a part of the Isaac Beach estate, where he died. He had seven children. His daughter, Polly C. Clark, married John Hinman, a native of Vermont and a son of James. John Hinman settled in Yorkshire in 1831 and in 1838 removed to Great Valley, where his wife died in 1852. He died in 1866. They had thirteen children.

Capt. Danforth Daggett, son of Ebenezer, was born in Massachusetts, came to Yorkshire in 1830, and engaged in farming. He married Sarah Snow; children: Nelson, Phebe, Mary, and Franklin B.

Hiram Goo came to Ashford from Schuyler, N. Y., about 1821 and carried on the trades of carpenter and millwright. He married Elizabeth Hufstader, of Ashford, where he resided about thirty years. He finally moved to Yorkshire, where he died. His wife lives with her daughter Elvira. Children: Eliza, Mary Ann, Corsand, J. F., Amy, Almira, Elvira, Hiram, Catharine, Charles T.

George Graham was born in Concord, N. H., Oct. 5, 1801, a son of Asa Graham, who, about 1820, came to Yorkshire with his son, but never became a settler here. George located in town and in a few years returned to Concord, N. H., where he married, Jan. 13, 1825, Lucia Thorn, whom he at once brought to his home in Cattaraugus county. She died March 7, 1871, and Feb. 12, 1873, his death occurred. Children: Joseph C., born Oct. 14, 1825; Flora Taylor, deceased; Sarah L., born Sept. 22, 1826; Rozilla A., born June 8, 1828, married J. F. Jackman, Feb. 20, 1851; Rachel M., born Nov. 14, 1830; John C., born Jan. 15, 1833, married Teressa Jacobs, Dec. 15, 1861; George H.; Lucia E., born March 14, 1837, married Solomon Howe, Oct. 7, 1869; Walter A., born April 30, 1839, married Altie E. Nye, Sept. 29, 1866; Mary J., born Feb. 4, 1842, died Jan. 20, 1845; and Mary L., born May 15, 1844. Mr. Graham was first a Whig and later a Republican, and was supervisor of Yorkshire nine terms and justice of the peace twenty-four years. He also held other town offices. George H. Graham, born March 5, 1835, married Ellen M. Morse, March 24, 1861, and is a farmer near Delevan. He was supervisor in 1881-82 and, like his father, is a representative citizen.

Lucius Hall, an early settler in this town, was born March 27, 1807. He had sixteen children, forty grandchildren, and twenty-five great-grandchildren. He enlisted in Co. G, 78th N. Y. Vols., and took three of his boys with him: Harvey C. and Wyman in Co. H, 44th N. Y. Vols., and Alfred in Co. G, 78th N. Y. Vols. He died July 27, 1887. Harvey C. Hall, son of Lucius, was born in Alexander, N. Y., Sept. 28, 1840. When he was eight years of age his father moved to Yorkshire. In Sept., 1861, he enlisted in Co. H, 44th N. Y. Vols., was shot in the left shoulder at the battle of Laurel Hill, and was mustered out in 1864. He married Jane, daughter of Chester and Clarissa (Moon) Ashcraft; children: Lottie M. (Mrs. Sheldon Eastland) and George H.

John Harmon, a native of Rupert, Vt., came to Yorkshire in 1823 with his father, Alpheus, who settled upon the farm now owned by Ethan Harmon. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Luther and Lucy Wheeler, and had seven children, of whom two are now living in this town: Mrs. John Bishop and Ethan (on the homestead). The latter married Sarepta, daughter of Stephen and Angeline Randall, of Machias, and has one child, Howard E.

Solomon Howe was a grandson of Moses Howe, a Revolutionary soldier. His father, Aaron, was born in New Hampshire, and after residing elsewhere in this State he finally settled in Cattaraugus county, where he died in 1836. His wife died March 6, 1870. Solomon was born in Groton, N. Y., May 4, 1818, and came to Yorkshire with his parents in 1830. He married, in 1845, Minerva Gould, who died June 27, 1865. Oct. 7, 1869, he married Lucia E., daughter of George Graham, of this town, who bore him two children: Ormond and Minerva. Mr. Howe was supervisor of Yorkshire in 1873 and again in 1876, and also held other town offices. He was the Democratic nominee to the Assembly in 1869, but was defeated by George N. West; in 1872 he was a candidate on the same ticket for county superintendent of the poor.

Samuel King came from Darien, Genesee county, to Machias in 1823, bringing his wife, Sabra A. Winslow, and six children with an ox-team. He articulated 100 acres of land, built a log house, and set out an orchard, and three years later traded it for 137 acres in Yorkshire, where he reared his family. His wife died in 1864 and he in 1876. Children: B. Franklin, Clarissa, Stephen W., Simeon K., Solomon J., Angeline, Frederick W., Samuel S., Lydia A., Almari, and Betsey. Those living are Solomon J. in Farmersville, Clarissa (Mrs. Lyman Joslin) in Yorkshire, and Almari (Mrs. L. Rogers) in Freedom.

Charles King, son of Reuben, was born in Alexander, N. Y., and in 1838 settled on the farm in Yorkshire now owned by his son Marvin D., where he died. He was a farmer and held several important town offices. He married Clara Sherman, by whom he had four children. His second wife was Betsey Williams, who bore him four children. His son William W., now living at West Yorkshire, came to the town in 1840. He married Harriet P., daughter of Harry House, and has one child living, Mrs. Minnie M. Walpole.

Seymour King, son of Alvah and Hannah (Carney) King, was born in Sardinia, N. Y., Feb. 25, 1830. In 1860 he married Ann Eliza, daughter of Robert and Martha Steele, and settled on the place where he now resides. Children: Frank S., Manley E., Ernest R., and Mertie E. (Mrs. L. Conger). His wife died in 1872 and he married, second, Sarah Silliman. He has been assessor several years and by occupation is a farmer and an apiarist.

The Langmades were among the first settlers in this town. Stephen Langmade settled here as early as 1810 with the Dows. They came from Vermont. Later his brother, Dr. William Langmade, came in. The doctor was in the War of 1812 and reared thirteen children, all of whom attained manhood. Solomon, another brother, was in the War of 1812 and lived to the age of ninety-nine years and eight months, dying in 1892. Dr. Langmade, was the father of A. J. Langmade, who served three years and six months in Co. K, 105th N. Y. Vols., and in Co. K, 94th N. Y. Vols., spending six months of the time in rebel prisons. Laura A., daughter of Daniel Davis, the first school teacher in Yorkshire, was the wife of Dr. Langmade. She was one of the pupils of the first three years of school taught in town.

Berena Olthof came from Ibergun, Holland, and located in this town in 1850. He was a shoemaker by trade, but the later years of his life were devoted mainly to farming. Six years he spent in Holland in the army. Shortly after his removal to this place he married Elizabeth Vanderlick, also of Holland. Five children were born to them, three of whom are living—one son and two daughters. Mr. Olthof died in 1884. His son Henry B. and widowed mother occupy the homestead two miles south of Yorkshire Center. Mr. Olthof was a good citizen, just and honorable in his dealings, very decided in his opinions, both political and religious, and his mind, once made up, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, was not subject to change.

John Perryman came to Yorkshire about 1834. His son, A. Perryman, came at the same time and settled on the farm now owned by A. Phinney. He died in South Wales, Erie county. He married Elizabeth Holloway and had seven children, of whom only one is living in town: Green Perryman, who married Emeline Bigelow. The latter enlisted in Co. K, 105th N. Y. Vols., and served three years. He was wounded at the battle near Petersburg and was in most all the engagements of the regiment. His children living are Lovina and Adda.

Ezekiel Pierce was born in Penfield, Monroe county, in 1809, and came to Yorkshire in 1825. In 1840 he purchased a farm one mile south of the Center, which he occupied until his death, which occurred in 1892. Mr. Pierce was a fair type of the early settlers: a man of strict integrity, true to his friends, ever ready to reach out a helping hand to the needy, and in his death the community lost a good citizen. Mrs. Pierce's father, Richard Thornton, built the first saw-mill in this town, the one now owned by Goo & Bastion in Delevan.

Alpheus Stone, a native of Mendon, Mass., came to Yorkshire in 1830 and settled on the farm now owned by Fred Silliman, where he lived several years. He afterward moved to Yorkshire Center and resided with his daughter, Mrs. N. T. Thomas, and died Dec. 4, 1878. His wife, Sinda (Carter) Stone, died July 18, 1865. He was a mason by trade and had two sons (both dead) and one daughter (Loretta, now Mrs. N. T. Thomas). He served in the War of 1812 and drew a pension several years.

John Strong was born of Dutch parentage in old Fort Herkimer in 1800 and came from Mohawk, N. Y., in 1850 and settled on a farm now in Yorkshire Center village limits. He was a blacksmith by trade, but devoted a part of his time to farming. He had three sons and two daughters, four of whom reside in the Center and one (a daughter) in Iowa. He died in 1869. Two of the sons, William and Darius, occupy the homestead. This house is said to be the first frame building erected in the village limits. It has been added to in recent years, but the original is still in good condition. It dates back nearly seventy years. There is a story connected with the building of this dwelling which is well worth telling. It was built by a man named Paddock. When partly completed he ran short of funds, and being something of a sport and the owner of a fast horse he got up a scheme to "do up" the sporting men at the races soon to come off at Rochester. His wife was privy to it. They started for Rochester a day or two before the races, and at the outskirts of the town he left his wife to drive in later, while he went to the horsemen's headquarters on foot. Paddock could get drunk on occasion or he could feign drunkenness so perfectly as to deceive the elect, and that is just what he did on this occasion; and steadying himself against the bar he offered to bet $100 that he could take the first horse that came along the street and beat anything they had. It did not take long to arrange such a bet as that and Paddock was on the street waiting for a horse which, as pre-arranged, soon came along. The woman was naturally very indignant for being stopped on the street by a drunken man, but the promise of a good dinner and $5 settled it and the horse was secured. Whether the Rochester sports ever found out the full extent of the joke played on them was never learned, but that sorry looking horse, hitched to an old democrat wagon, was really one of the fleetest racers in western New York, and Paddock returned to Yorkshire with a load of nails and glass to finish his house.

Thomas Thomas, a native of Mendon, Mass., came here in 1836 and settled at West Yorkshire, where he worked at shoemaking for his son George W., who carried on tanning and shoemaking. He died Aug. 2, 1860. His wife, Sabria (Thwing), died Nov. 26, 1835. He had six sons and a daughter.

N. T. Thomas, came to West Yorkshire in 1837 and worked for his brother G. W. at shoemaking. He married Loretta Stone and has one child, Emeline S. (Mrs. B. F. Darte).

George W. Thomas, son of Thomas Thomas, came to West Yorkshire and erected a tannery and carried on that and shoemaking forty years. He married Priscilla C., daughter of John Hinman, and had six children. He died at Yorkshire Corners in 1892.

Joseph G. Thomas, son of Thomas Thomas, settled in Yorkshire in 1836. He was a farmer and married Martha R., daughter of John and Millie Steele. Of his four children three are living: George R., Bertha B., and Lula A. (Mrs. Baxter Sovereign).

Caleb Turner, son of William, was born in Westfield, Mass., Dec. 22, 1808. In 1826 he came to Yorkshire and settled on the farm where he now resides. He is said to be the only one now living in town who articulated the land from the Holland Land Company. He married Polly Paddock, by whom he has had five children, three of whom are living: Orson O., George C., and Mary O. He married, second, Mrs. Algera Austin, by whom he has seven children: William D., Edwin O., Harvey R., Waller S., Cory B., Franklin I., and Emma J.

Obadiah Weeks, son of Roland, was born in New Salem, Mass., in 1794. He married Jerusha Herriott, of Great Bend, Pa., and in 1822 moved to Yorkshire and settled on a farm now owned by William Burns. Here he died July 4, 1872. His wife died Nov. 21, 1869. Of their five children two are living: Mary H., of Franklinville, and Riley, of Yorkshire Center. The latter married Clarissa, daughter of Stephen S. Langmade, and has four children: Ina B., Netta E., Grant W., and John A.

Luther Wheeler, a native of Danbury, Conn., came to Yorkshire in 1823 and settled on the farm now owned by J. W. Nourse. He married Lucy Arundel and had nine children, of whom only Mrs. John Harmon is living.

George H. Whiting came to this town in 1840. He was living in Yorkshire in 1860, when, on the 29th of July, one of the most horrible murders ever known in western New York was committed. Ann Wheat, whose maiden name was Ann Dwinell, was murdered by James Wheat, her husband, and Salmon Wheat, her father-in-law.

Isaac Williams came from Vermont and took up 300 acres of land where Yorkshire Corners now stands, where he built the first frame house in town and where his son Proctor kept the first hotel. He also built the first saw and grist-mill on Cattaraugus creek in 1814. He afterward removed to Aurora, N. Y., where he worked at the cooper's trade, and thence returned to Ash-ford. Albert Williams, son of Isaac, was born in Vermont, came to Yorkshire, married Melinda Sackett, moved to Ashford about 1833, and settled where Richard Williams now lives. Children: Richard, Aurilla, Riley, Isaac, Harvey A., Eliza, and Peter.

CHAPTER XLIX.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF ISCHUA.

ISCHUA of today and the original town of Ischua in Cattaraugus county never had a territorial connection. The old township of the name embraced lands whose south line forms the north bounds of the present organization, or, more definitely, all that part of the county lying north of the line running east and west between the third and fourth tiers of lots of the Holland Land Company's survey. The present town of Ischua was erected from Hinsdale on the 7th of February, 1846, and until March 27, 1855, was known as Rice. Since the latter date its territory has been designated Ischua, an Indian name which had previously been applied to the principal stream of eastern Cattaraugus. The township lies upon the east side of the county, in ranges three and four, and comprises the most of towns three in these ranges of the Holland survey. It has an area of 20,540 acres and is bounded on the north by Franklinville and Lyndon, on the east by Allegany county and Hinsdale, on the south by Hinsdale, and on the west by Humphrey.

Its surface is undulating and hilly, the highest elevation reaching a height of 600 feet above the valleys. The soil is mainly clay covered with a thin layer of mold and gravelly loam. Several quarries of good building stone exist. The principal drainage is afforded by Ischua creek, which flows southeasterly through nearly the center of the town, acquiring in its course several small tributaries. In the southwest corner of the town are the headwaters of Five Mile run.

The earliest settlers of Ischua were Abram M. Farwell and Seymour Bouton. The former was born in Fitchburg, Mass., in 1780, and came to western New York during the War of 1812, on foot, as a peddler, selling such goods as he could carry to defray his expenses. His real business was probably to see the country with a view of locating, for he explored Cattaraugus county. Taking a fancy to the region of Ischua creek he selected lot 45 for a home, to which he brought his wife and seven children in 1815 and became a farmer and the founder of the town. Seymour Bouton, who came from Westchester county, N. Y., is said to have visited this region as early as 1809. He located two miles north of the village of Ischua in 1812, and removed to a point one mile from Franklinville village in 1814, removing thence in 1816 to what is now Ischua village, of which he was the pioneer settler. He remained in town, only five years, removing to Olean in 1821, where he died the same year, aged thirty-nine years. It thus appears that Mr. Farwell was the first permanent settler. Jonathan Davis, from Boston, Mass., came in 1817 and the same year came William Kimball and Amos Pitcher. Mr. Davis was an early and a consistent temperance man. He had a heavy building to raise, and gave out that no liquor would be furnished. The report was started that it could not be raised without grog, but all the temperance men far and near turned out and put it up without any trouble. The rum drinkers were silenced. George H. Miner, about 1823, was the first settler on Yankee hill; Joel Godfrey was the next and he was followed in 1823 by David Hibner and Horace Guild. These four all came from Lima, Livingston county. Stephen Graves, from Worcester, Mass., came in 1827 and Frederick Carpenter, from Warren, Mass., in 1831. Benjamin Townsend brought his family from Attica, N. Y., in 1829, and was the first brick maker in Ischua.

On Dutch hill Jacob and George Learn and Peter Frantz were the pioneers in 1823, all from Pennsylvania. Elisha Terry, from Cortland county, N. Y., came in 1825; Joseph and David Raub, from New Jersey, and William Corthell, from Tompkins county, N. Y., settled here in 1826; Peter S. Carmer, John Wagner, and George Hollister, all from Tompkins county, came in 1827; Benjamin Osgood, from Washington county, N. Y., located in 1831, and Simon C. Mallory, from Columbia county, N. Y., in 1836. Jacob Howe, Byne Brown, and Joseph Conrad were also early settlers on Dutch hill. Charles, William, and John Raub owned and ran a distillery on Dutch hill which stood near the place where C. T. Washburn now resides. Anthony Caswell, from Rhode Island, settled in 1824 on the farm now the property of his son, Charles J. Caswell. The following record of Mr. Caswell's marriage introduces another early comer who held the county office of justice of the peace—Charles C. Hatch. He came from Chenango county, N. Y., and settled in 1826 on the farm now the home of his son, Hiram F. Hatch:

"Married by the undersigned, Justice of the Peace of Hinsdale, in the county of Cattaraugus, on the third of March, 1829, Mr. Anthony Caswell, aged twenty-four years, to Miss Sally Lockwood, aged eighteen years, both residents of Hinsdale. Anthony a farmer and Sally a spinster.

"Attested by Joseph Lockwood and ——— Lockwood, residents of Hinsdale.

"CHARLES C. HATCH,
"Justice of the Peace."

The Lockwoods—John, Major, and Joseph—were from Vermont and had all settled near Anthony Caswell's before 1829. Silas P. Otto, from Pennsylvania, came in 1835. Stephen W. Abbott, son of Salmon Abbott, of Susquehanna, Pa., settled on the eastern border of the town at an early day and the locality and postoffice both bear the name of Abbott's. Kniffen Willson, from Chenango county, N. Y., settled a mile and a half west of Abbott in 1831, and gave the land for the school house, and also for the cemetery, in which he was buried in 1862, both of which still bear his name.

The first school in Ischua was kept in A. H. Farwell's barn, in 1825, by Caroline Putnam. A school house was being built at the time and it became necessary to go into it when it was first enclosed. To keep the children comfortable Mr. Farwell took a big cauldron kettle into the school room and filled it with coals. Dr. Trowbridge succeeded Miss Putnam and was the first school master. The first religious services were held in Mr. Farwell's house by Rev. John Spencer in 1825. The imperative need of a grist-mill was supplied by Justin Cook and Josiah Cole in 1829. The first store keepers were Stevens & Lawrence; Jonathan H. Lyon was the next, he being followed by William Richardson, Nelson Chapin, Gideon Searl, Isaac Fuller, and Henry Chamberlin. The latter sold in 1870 to Erastus Chamberlin and he in 1883 to his brother, Wales Chamberlin, who is still in business. Smith & Haynes traded from 1871 to 1874 and R. E. Gardner from 1876 until succeeded by Arthur Moon & Co.

The first town meeting was held at Eleazer Densmore's tavern February 24, 1846, at which Frederick Carpenter was elected supervisor; Isaac N. Fuller, town clerk; Philo Burlingame, superintendent of schools; William S. Pitcher, Simon C. Mallory, and A. L. Barnard, assessors; and Morgan I. Titus, Frederick Carpenter, Charles C. Hatch, and Hiram L. Seavy, justices of the peace. The principal town officers have been as follows:

Supervisors.—Frederick Carpenter, 1846-48, 1850, 1852-55, 1857, 1860, 1865, 1867, 1869-71; Jonathan Davis, 1849; Hazen Chamberlin, 1851, 1874, 1876; C. G. Chamberlin, 1856; Philo Burlingame, 1858, 1869; Benjamin C. Townsend, 1859; Henry Chamberlin, 1861-62, 1864; William Smith, 1863; George Utter, 1866; James A. Haynes, 1872; Henry C. Farwell, 1873, 1875; S. R. Sherlock, 1877; Ransom Terry, 1878; Jason P. Rathbun, 1879; John L. Adams, 1880; Elam T. Seward, 1881, 1891-92; O. W. Chamberlin, 1882-83; Charles C. Baxter, 1884, 1888-90; D. W. Odell, 1885; Fred L. Carpenter, 1886-87; Albert Babcock, 1893.

Town Clerks.—Isaac N. Fuller, 1846; S. Botts, 1847; Neri Taylor, 1848, 1853; Abner Smith, 1849-50; William S. Pitcher, 1851; Samuel Conrad, 1852; H. Chamberlin, 1854; Alonzo Guild, 1855; Alonzo F. Smith, 1856-57; William Smith, 1858; Lyman Slocum, 1859; William H. Smith, 1861; Anson Densmore, 1861-62, 1877-79, 1882, 1888; William Densmore, 1863; A. R. Thornton, 1864-65, 1875-76, 1880-81, 1883; Benjamin Bacon, 1866; J. E. Pettingill, 1867-68; D. C. Corthell, 1869-70; B. C. Townsend, 1871-72; Wesley Lewis, 1873; Wallace Sibley, 1874; George W. Lynde, 1884, 1889-90; Wales Chamberlin, 1885-87, 1891-93.

Justices of the Peace.—1846, Morgan I. Titus, C. C. Hatch, Frederick Carpenter, Harvey L. Seavy; 1848, Philo Burlingame; 1849, Samuel Searl; 1850, Frederick Carpenter, Charles C. Hatch; 1851, Frederick Carpenter; 1852, Philo Burlingame; 1853, Neri Taylor, J. Sheldon; 1854, Gardner Sheldon, Benjamin Townsend; 1855, Frederick Carpenter; 1856, Stephen Morris; 1857, B. C. Carpenter, Henry Chamberlin; 1858, Gardner Sheldon; 1859, Frederick Carpenter; 1860, C. C. Hatch; 1861, B. C. Townsend; 1862, S. R. Sherlock; 1863, Philo Burlingame; 1864, Amos S. Bristol; 1865, B. C. Townsend; 1866, Daniel B. Haynes; 1867, S. R. Sherlock; 1868, Amos Bristol; 1869, B. C. Townsend; 1870, N. Pierce; 1871, S. R. Sherlock; 1872, William P. Guild; 1873, B. C. Townsend; 1874, E. Chamberlin; 1875, S. R. Sherlock; 1876, F. Carpenter; 1877, J. L. Adams; 1878, H. C. Farwell; 1879, F. Carpenter; 1880, Nathan Learn; 1881, R. C. Gardner; 1882, T. P. Guild; 1883, C. C. Baxter; 1884, J. L. Adams; 1885, Erastus Chamberlin; 1886, William P. Guild; 1887, Frank Osborne; 1888, B. C. Townsend; 1889, R. E. Gardner; 1890, W. P. Guild; 1891, E. E. Bacon; 1892, E. Chamberlin; 1893, Clement B. Conklin.

The chief industry of the inhabitants of the town is farming, with dairying as the leading branch. The milk from the numerous dairies is principally manufactured into cheese, there being three or four cheese factories, the first of which was built at Abbott's about 1873 by I. N. Sheldon. In 1890 Abbott's union factory was built by the patrons of the old establishment at a cost of $2,200. In 1892 this manufactured 170,000 pounds of cheese. The officers are John Watson, president; John Mabey, secretary; Timothy O. Regan, Chauncey W. Roat, and Frank Abbott, trustees. Willson factory, No.

1, was built by Kniffen Willson in 1885, on his farm, and Willson factory, No. 2, was erected in 1891 on A. M. Farwell's land by his son, Quincy A. Willson. Each factory is making about 100,000 pounds of cheese per year. The farmers also have a large surplus of hay, which is next to their dairy products in point of revenue. Large crops of potatoes and oats are also produced. The total valuation of real estate in 1892 was $342,780; value of personal property, $18,250; value of railroads, $79,045; value of telegraph lines, etc., $4,190. The total tax levy was but $2,454.60. July 3, 1872, the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad was formally opened through the town, and for its construction bonds were issued to the amount of $10,000, which have all been paid. The road has a station at the village of Ischua.

Ground for the cemetery at Ischua village was given by Benjamin Townsend in 1842. Amos Pitcher had formerly owned it and was buried there in 1832. Maple Grove Cemetery was donated by Jacob Learn. Mary Raub was the first person buried therein. The land for the Abbott burying ground was given by Stephen W. Abbott.

The settlement of Ischua village was begun by Seymour Bouton in 1816. The site was located on a thoroughfare of travel that soon required a public house, which was opened and kept by Mr. Bouton, who left in 1821. He was succeeded by Amos Pitcher. In 1829 the place supported two hotels, Eleazer Densmore keeping the other. At the time of the Dutch Hill war Gideon Searl kept the tavern in the village. He was succeeded by Anson Densmore, who sold the property to John J. LaFever about 1866. He continued it as a public house till his death in 1872, since which time his son, Frank D. LaFever, has occupied the place for a dwelling and a grocery. Some of the early industries in or near Ischua village were a foundry on Luzern Williams's farm, where plows, sleigh-shoes, and other castings were made by Mr. Stoddard from about 1832 till he had to abandon the business on account of the difficulty in getting iron, after which the building was used for a school house; a hat factory belonging to W. S. Pitcher; a tannery operated by Edwin McKee from 1835 to 1855 on land now covered by William Pettingall's place; a brick yard opened by Benjamin Townsend in 1829 on ground now owned by William Osgood, which ran till 1848; an ashery on what is now Henry Farwell's farm, which had to cease for want of water; and another ashery which was built by Nelson Chapin and Jonas M. Brown just south of the present Baptist church about 1834, and operated by the builders till 1844, Isaac Carpenter till 1848, Nathaniel Rowley, James Warring, Seymour Woodruff, William S. Pitcher, and Frederick Carpenter, who had a grocery store in connection with it. Anson Densmore owned it next and in 1865 sold it to Lyman M. Thornton, who run it one year, about which time ashes became too scarce to continue the business. He sold it and engaged at his present location in the grocery trade. A remarkable storm which seemed to be the meeting of three separate cloud gatherings occurred August 13, 1866, at Ischua village. The rain poured for three and a half hours, and ran from the hills north of the village down Mill street in a torrent that carried Mr. Thornton's store clear into Ischua creek. The first postoffice was established as West Hinsdale, October 2, 1828, changed to Rice, April 28, 1848, and again changed to Ischua, July 31, 1855. The first postmaster at Ischua was Seymour Bouton. Amos Pitcher was the next, and he also carried the mail on horseback each way between Hinsdale and Franklinville. In 1829 John Magee, of Bath, Steuben county, ran a stage route from Bath to Olean, which passed through Hinsdale. William S. Pitcher, son of Amos, was the postmaster and was succeeded by Henry Chamberlin, B. C. Townsend, Eleazer Densmore, William Smith, B. C. Townsend again, Ransom Terry, William Sibley, R. E. Gardner, Lyman Thornton, and the present incumbent, Frank D. La Fever.

Abbott's is a postoffice on the county line and contains the Methodist church, Howard Otto's store, the union cheese factory, and Charles C. Wilbur's blacksmith shop. J. B. Swift has a store across the road in Allegany county, but Mr. Otto was the first store keeper and has been postmaster since 1888. Betsey S. Wilbur was the first postmaster. The office was established January 1, 1883.

In 1880 Ischua had a population of 935 and in 1890 this had decreased to 853. In 1892 the town had eight school districts with a school house in each, taught during the year by eight teachers, and attended by 168 pupils. The value of the school buildings and sites is $3,320 and the assessed valuation of the property in the town for school purposes aggregates $391,764. The money received from the State was $941.87 and that obtained by local tax amounted to $638.64.

The Methodist Episcopal church of Ischua was organized December 28, 1827, and was the first religious organization in town. The first trustees were William S. Pitcher, Daniel A. Ferris, and Abner Smith. Their house of worship, a wooden structure, was erected in 1861 at a cost of $1,500; the present value of the church property is $2,000. The building will seat 300 persons. The society has twenty-five members under the pastoral care of Rev. J. M. Leach. They have a prosperous Sunday school. About 1827 this society secured of the Holland Land Company the gospel lot as a gift to the first church organized in town. They held it until the erection of their edifice in 1861, when it was sold for $600; the present owners are Burlingame and Farwell.

The Methodist Episcopal church at Abbott's, near the county line, was organized about 1868. Their wooden house of worship was built in 1879, cost $800, will seat 200 people, and with the site, etc., is valued at $1,000. The land was leased to the society by Stephen W. Abbott. The present pastor is Rev. H. L. Feathers. A Sunday school is maintained during the summer months. The nucleus of this society originated in the organization at Abbott's of a Wesleyan Methodist class about 1860, of which S. R. Sherlock, of Franklinville, was leader.

The First Baptist church of Ischua was organized August 10, 1878, by Rev. Reuben Cherryman, the first pastor, with twenty-one members. Their house of worship was built of wood in 1886 and will seat 200 persons. It cost $1,500 and with the grounds, etc., is valued at $1,860. The society has seventy members under Rev. A. Dewar as pastor. The Sunday school has forty-five pupils. Prior to the organization of this church Baptist meetings were held in the village school house. In 1836, while it was a branch of the Scott's Corners charge, a covenant meeting was held and the room was warmed by an open fireplace. Within an hour after the people had gone the building caught fire and was burned to the ground. There was good evidence that the fire was left in a careless manner and it was plain that the Baptists were responsible for the loss. The school district offered to settle for $100, but the society refused to pay and the matter was settled by the courts, which gave a judgment of $200 and costs, which were paid by the Scott's Corners church. Rev. Eliab Going was the minister at this time.

The Free Methodist church of Dutch hill was organized by Rev. O. O. Bacon with four members in 1867. The house of worship was erected of wood in 1871 at a cost of $800. It will seat 250 persons and with other property is valued at $600. There are now fifteen members, who have services every two weeks, the pastor being Rev. Mr. Manning, of Hinsdale.

Fair Oaks Post, No. 16, G. A. R., was organized July 6, 1887, with these officers: Robert E. Gardner, commander; Lyman M. Thornton, S. V.; Allen Williams, J. V.; George P. Williams, adjutant; Ransom Terry, M. D., surgeon; Stephen Osgood, chaplain; Walter Chase, Q. M.; William W. Osgood, O. D.; Gideon L. Patterson, O. G.; Samuel W. Hoag, S. M.; Royal Colvin, Q. M.-S. Besides these officers there were nine more charter members. The present membership is twenty. The commander is Joseph Learn.

Lodge No. 179, A. O. U. W., was instituted October 21, 1878, with fourteen members. Dr. Ransom Terry was P. M. W.; B. B. Hinman, M. W.; John Haight, recorder; C. C. Baxter, financier; and Fayette Searls, receiver. The present P. M. W. is F. Kenfield. The membership is twenty-two. During its 15 years of existence the lodge has not lost a single member by death.

Charles C. Baxter is the son of John W. (born in 1792), grandson of John (born in 1760), and great-grandson of Petit Baxter (born in 1732), whose father, John Baxter, born about 1700, lived in Westchester county, N. Y. The ancestor of the Baxter family, Capt. John Baxter, came from England in 1664 in command of a company of Irish volunteers, and received for his services a grant of Throgg's Neck. John, the son of Petit, entered the Revolutionary army at the age of sixteen and was wounded by a tory named Underhill. With twenty-four others he was sent to a hospital in New York city, where the small-pox broke out, and he was one of only six survivors. His son John W. came to Allegany county in 1820, where he was a millwright, and died there in 1862. He married, in 1814, Mary McQueen, in Montgomery county, N. Y.; children: Dorcas, Henry, James, Richard, Mary, Rachel, Sarah, David, John L., Phebe, and Charles C. Charles C. Baxter was born in 1840 in Friendship. He was reared a lumberman and learned the millwright's trade. Leaving home when twenty-one years old he worked twelve years in Pennsylvania cutting lumber and building mills. In 1874 he came to Ischua and entered the grist and carding-mill which he now owns and operates. In 1862 he married Orenna Sherwood; children: Mary, who married Dennis C. Couell and died in 1889 in Buffalo, leaving children Grace, William, and Ellen; William C.; and Mina (Mrs. William Merrit), of Friendship; they have one child, Percy. Mr. Baxter married, second, in 1872, Mary J. McCormick; children: James, Katie, Florence, John, Lorena, and Robert H. He married his third wife in 1888; children: Jason and Norman. He has always been an active Republican, serving the town as auditor, justice of the peace one term, and as supervisor in 1884 and 1888-90. His son William C. is a railroad conductor in Mexico.

Eben R. Carmer is the son of Peter S. Carmer, who came from Dryden, N. Y., and settled on Dutch hill in Ischua in 1827, where Dr. Hillman now lives. He married Margaret Spriggle, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1802. Children: Jacob, who went west and died there; Cyrus, of Hinsdale; Eben R.; Maranda A., who died when thirteen years old; Eli (deceased); and Peter, of Wisconsin. Eben R. Carmer, born in 1831, has always been a farmer except the period from 1857 to 1869 spent in Minnesota and Wisconsin in lumbering. In 1886 he married Clarissa, daughter of Abram Farwell, of Ischua. Mr. Carmer was elected assessor on the Republican ticket in the spring of 1893. His mother, the oldest person in Ischua, is living in his family aged 91 years.

Frederick Carpenter is the son of Frederick Carpenter, of Rhode Island, who settled in Warren, Mass., where he married Eunice Burroughs. Children: Isaac, Eunice, Lucy, Laura, Calista, Mary, Eliza, Frederick, David, Sidney, Hannah, and Charles. Mr. Carpenter died there aged fifty-six and his wife at the age of ninety-six. Frederick was born in Warren, Nov. 4, 1804, and came to Franklinville in 1821. Isaac, Lucy, Eunice, David, and Laura Carpenter had already settled in Franklinville and Farmersville. Frederick had fifty cents in money left, which he paid Flavel Patridge, who kept a small store at Franklinville, towards a new axe, which cost $2.50. He began chopping cord-wood at fifty or seventy-five cents per day. He can now count more than 200 acres of woodland in Franklinville, Machias, and Ischua which he has chopped over since that time. In 1831 he bought the first forty acres of his present farm, paying $4 an acre, and on it he has lived sixty-two years, buying in the meantime 145 acres more. In 1829 he married Elsie, daughter of David Hibner; children: David, who died twenty-one years old; James and Sidney, of Stevens Point, Wis.; Ruth E. (Mrs. Noah Sherwood), of Ischua; Frederick L., who married Delilia, daughter of C. G. Chamberlin, of Ischua; Sarah E. (Mrs. William McStay), of Lyndon; Levi P., who died in 1860; Eunice S. (Mrs. William Wharton), of Nebraska; Spencer R., who died in 1862; Caroline (Mrs. Richard Durham), of Nebraska; and Charles E., who died in 1860. Mrs. Carpenter died in 1882. With the exception of two or three years in the ashery and mercantile business Mr. Carpenter has always been a farmer. In 1835 he was first elected justice of the peace and, although resigning twice, has since served nearly forty years. He served four years as supervisor of Hinsdale and was the first supervisor of Ischua (then Rice), holding the office in all nineteen years. When young he made two trips on the Erie canal between Buffalo and Albany and is one of the few men living who saw the three Thayers hung in Buffalo. Frederick L. Carpenter resides on the homestead in Ischua, which town he has served two terms as supervisor.

Charles Justus Caswell lives on the old farm on which his father, Anthony Caswell, settled in 1824. Anthony was born in Rhode Island, lived a while in Connecticut, went thence to Charleston, S. C., and returned the same year to Schenectady, N. Y., where he worked on the construction of the Erie canal in 1823 and 1824. The first cabin he built caught fire one day, burning his entire outfit, including his highly-prized rifle. This so discouraged him that he decided to leave, but his friend, Tibbetts Chamberlin, of Cuba, N. Y., persuaded him to stay by helping him to whatever he needed to start anew, and he continued to live alone in the woods four years. Then he ran Tibbetts Chamberlin's still in Cuba for a while and in 1829 married Sally, daughter of Justus Lockwood, of Lyndon. Children: Sarah S., who died young; Juliette E. (Mrs. Lewis Snyder), of Lyndon; Rensselaer J., of Franklinville; Horace A., who died aged twenty-one; Calvin T.; George G. and George M., who both died young; Charles J.; Decimal W.; and Mary A. and John S., who both died of diphtheria. Charles J., born in 1846, enlisted in 1864 in Co. D, 13th N. Y. H. A. In 1868 he married Electa A., daughter of James Davis, of Caneadea, N. Y. Children: Eugene, Frankie (deceased), Francis R., Myra A., Dow E.

William and Rebecca Chamberlin both descended from English families. They came to Hinsdale from Barton, Vt., traveling the long, cold route in the winter of 1815-16 with a canvas-covered sleigh drawn by a yoke of oxen. Much of the way they were compelled to hitch one ox ahead of the other in tandem style to pass the deep and drifted snow, arriving in Feb., 1816. Accompanying them were Ira A. and Cornelius G. Chamberlin, who were then nine and seven years of age, who took turns driving the white-faced cow, which supplied them with milk on their journey. Hazen and William were the other and younger members of the family on that trip. Henry and Candace M. were born to them after their arrival. They first settled on what is now the Horace Smith farm. William afterward removed his family within the limits of what is now Ischua, where he was killed in 1824 while raising a bridge over the creek near where E. F. Davis now lives. The eldest sons, Ira A. and Cornelius G., together with their mother, contracted from the land office the farm afterward owned by Cornelius G. Ira A. was born in Barton, Vt., in 1807. He married Susan, daughter of Abram M. Farwell; children: Candace L., Ophelia D., Loren I., Andrew J., Adaline C., Hazen E., Emily C., Caroline G., and L. A. Mr. Chamberlin removed to Hinsdale village, where he died in 1889. Cornelius G. Chamberlin was born in Barton, Vt., in 1809, and married, in 1835, Hulda, daughter of Eleazer Densmore, of Ischua. Children: Rosalie (deceased), William W., Erastus, Franklin H., Wales, Phebe E., and Finace. Mr. Chamberlin died in Ischua in 1892. He was regarded throughout all his mature years as one of the most sagacious, capable, and successful business men in his section of Cattaraugus county. His widow lives in Ischua village. Their son Erastus was born in Ischua, and was raised a farmer with a common school education. From 1859 to 1865 he was a clerk in Henry Chamberlin's store, and then spent five years in the oil regions—at Pithole and other points. In 1870 he bought Henry Chamberlin's store and residence in Ischua village, where he was a merchant till 1883, when he sold to his brother, Wales Chamberlin. Since then he has been a farmer and real estate and agricultural implement dealer. For several years he was justice of the peace and has had almost the experience and practice of a professional lawyer. He married, in 1871, Grace, daughter of Robert Reid, of Franklinville. Children: Gertie, born in 1873; Robert, deceased; and Floyd, born in 1892. Mr. Chamberlin is a Democrat in politics. Cornelius G., Hazen, and Henry have each represented Ischua on the Board of Supervisors of Cattaraugus county.

Walter Chase is the son of Elias Chase, who lived in Vermont, where he married Rachel Taylor; children: Elzina, Van Buren, Alfred, Walter, Edmund, Asa, and Cynthia. Walter was born in Fletcher, Franklin county, Vt. In 1861 he enlisted in Co. H, 2d Vt. Vols., was mustered into the Army of the Potomac, was at the battles of first Bull Run, Fair Oaks, and Malvern Hill, where he was taken sick and sent to the hospital. In 1863 he re-enlisted and participated in the battle of the Wilderness, was sixteen days under fire at Spotsylvania, and received a shot in his left leg at Cold Harbor. He served also in other battles, including Petersburg, and was discharged in 1865. In 1866 he married Florence Hill and settled in Ischua; children: Alfred, who married Dora Trowbridge and has one child, Florence; Mettie (Mrs. Albert Trowbridge), of Ischua; Luther; Francis; Jesse; and Etta. Soon after the war Mr. Chase's health declined and he has not walked a step in four years.

Frederick Cline is the son of Seymour Cline, who came from Oxford, N. Y., in 1840 and settled on lots 22 and 30. He died in 1856. He married Lovina Bennett; children: Frederick; Edward, who married Minerva Hill and lived and died in Ischua; and Augusta (Mrs. Gilbert Wheeler), of Ischua. At the age of twenty-one Frederick, who was born in 1829, left home and bought a farm on lot 30, adding to it until he had over 400 acres, and lived on it twenty-one years. He married, in 1853, Almira, daughter of Elisha Terry, of Ischua; children: Terry E., born in 1861, and John W., born in 1873, died in 1875. In 1876 Mr. Cline moved to Ischua village, where he has been a dealer in lumber, live stock, and farm produce. He has served three years as assessor, one term as commissioner of highways, and is now a member of the Excise Board.

Milo Cole is a son of Casey and a grandson of Freeman Cole, of Crawford county, Pa. The children of Casey and Nancy Cole were Amanda, Prudentia, Arvilla, Philena, Olive, Parker (a soldier), Alvira, Milo, Amelia, and Bela (also a soldier). Milo was born in Augusta, N. Y., in 1820, and married, in 1843, Eliza Marks, of Perry, N. Y., where his father then lived; children: Mary (Mrs. Herbert Strong), of Friendship, N. Y.; Sidney, of Crawford county, Pa.; Alice; Amanda L. (Mrs. George S. Waldron), of Ischua, who has children George H. and Grace E.; and William, of Bradford, Pa. Mr. Waldron enlisted in the 9th H. A. and fought in twenty-one battles, including the Wilderness, Harper's Ferry, Lookout Mountain, and Gettysburg. He captured a battle flag at Farmerstown, Pa. Milo Cole came to Ischua in 1854 and bought 130 acres of land on which he still lives.

Abram Farwell is a son of Abram M. Farwell, the pioneer, who was born in Fitchburg, Mass., in 1780, and settled in Ischua in 1815. He married, in 1800, Lydia Jackson, who was born in Brookline, Mass., in 1780. Children: Sarah, born in 1801; Thaddeus, 1803; John H., 1805; James, 1807; Susan, 1809; Abram, 1811; Lydia, 1813; Mary A., 1815; Adeline, 1817 (the first white girl born in Ischua); and Catharine, 1819. Abram M. built the first saw-mill in town, was a lumberman and farmer, and died in 1868; his wife died in 1874. Abram was reared in the pursuits his father followed and in 1835 he married Sarah, daughter of John E. Wright, of German Flats, N. Y., who was born in London, Eng., in 1818. Children: Levi, of Ischua; Abigail, born June 13, 1838, died May 28, 1860; Jonathan, born July 22, 1840, died June 13, 1841; Clarissa A., born April 30, 1843, married Evan Carmer, March 9, 1887; Helen N., born July 15, 1846, married Addison Shafer, March 13, 1874, and has one son, Abram; Jonathan D., born April 1, 1849, married Alice Thrall, Jan. 1, 1872, and has two daughters, Dora and Clara; Edmund M., born March 26, 1851, died Feb. 9, 1857; Ephraim M., born April 13, 1853, died Feb. 9, 1857; Sophia, born March 29, 1855, married Lovinus Karn, March 9, 1882, and has children Sarah, Orrin, Levi, and Helen; Abbie, born Dec. 23, 1865, married Churchill Woolhiser, Nov. 3, 1883, and has two children, Glen and Blanche. All were born on the place where he now lives excepting Levi, who was born on his own farm.

Levi Farwell, son of Abram and grandson of Abram M., was born in Ischua, March 21, 1836, and was reared on and now owns the farm his grandfather settled in 1815. April 29, 1873, Levi married Frances, daughter of Amos G. Hamilton, of Ischua; children: Sadie and Mary. The homestead contains 350 acres and includes the site of the pioneer saw-mill. It is the most historic farm in Ischua.

John A. Frederick is the son of Thomas Frederick, who married Anna Robbins and settled at Port Allegany, Pa. Children: Matilda, Mary, George, John A., William, Adelbert, Clyde, and Kear. John A. was born July 26, 1859, and has followed farming the past four years in Ischua. His father died in 1881 at Bullis Mills, Pa., where his mother now lives.

William P. Guild is a son of Horace Guild, who was born in Chelsea, Mass., in 1794, the son of Israel and Rhoda (Graves) Guild. John, the ancestor, was born in England in 1616 and settled in Dedham, Mass., in 1636. Horace Guild came to Goshen, N. Y., where he married, in 1819, Desire Owen; children: Alonzo and Desire. He married, second, in 1823, Rhoda Parker, widow of Lyman Hall, of Lima, N. Y., and in 1825 they came to Ischua. Their children were Charles L.; Sarah A., who was born in 1826 and married William Munger, of Lima, in 1849, who came to Ischua and died in Michigan; Rhoda; Edmund C.; Willis M.; Harriet L.; and William P. Horace and his brothers Joseph, Levi, and George were all mechanics in Ischua and put up many of the first frame buildings in town; they also erected a saw-mill on Ischua creek between the Farwell and Chamberlin bridges. George was one of the builders of Amherst College. Charles L. was sergeant in Co. C, 154th N. Y. Vols., was taken prisoner at Gettysburg, and died in the hospital. Willis was killed at Chancellorsville. Edmund, the third soldier brother, escaped serious injury and returned home at the close of the war. In 1850 Horace went to California, where he worked at his trade and in the mines, receiving from $12 to $16 per day. In 1864 he returned home and spent the remainder of his life on the farm of 100 acres which cost him $200 in 1825. He died there in 1885. William P., his son, still owns and lives on the homestead, where he was born in 1839. In 1863 he married Lucy M., daughter of William B. Thomas, of Ashford; children: Grace (Mrs. C. C. Chittenden), of Cadillac, Mich., who has children Ralph and Robert; Charles W., a physician in Harriman, Tenn.; Glen, who died when three years old; William P.; and Bessie, who died when two years of age. Mr. Guild has been town collector, justice of the peace, and justice of sessions.

Dauchy in 1824; children: Lodusky G., Thomas D., Lucy E., Walter R., and Harris. The latter was born in 1835 and married Emily Roat, of Broome county, N. Y., in 1857. They settled in Lapier, N. Y., and came to Lyndon in 1865 and to Ischua in 1871, buying their present farm of 512 acres in 1880. They now keep a dairy of 80 cows. The winter Mr. Johnson was married he chopped in the town of Virgil 200 cords of wood for thirty-one cents a cord—cutting ten cords of hemlock wood in two days. In 1877 he went to Bradford, Pa., and run a store for a while. Harris and Emily Johnson have three children: Deforest E., Flora M. (Mrs. Berdell Burlingame, whose children are Harris and Ina F.), and Fannie E.

Solomon Kenfield, son of John, was born in Massachusetts, Nov. 4, 1822. His father moved to Camden, N. Y., and thence to Naples, N. Y., where he married Ruth Streeter in 1844. In Nov., 1845, he moved to Ischua and settled on the farm now owned by M. A. Kenfield, his son. Children: Felton, a farmer adjoining the homestead; Lucina R. L. (Mrs. William Allen), of Farmersville; and M. A. The latter was born Aug. 20, 1847. Sept. 1, 1868, he married Lydia J., daughter of S. R. and Prudenda A. (Morgan) Williams, and settled on the homestead, which he now owns. Children: Lucy L. (Mrs. J. Deeley), Emma O., John S., and Harriet L.

Frank D. La Fever is a son of John J., whose father was Deacon L. F.

La Fever, of Dundee, N. Y. John J. La Fever came to Cattaraugus county about 1820 and settled at Haskel flats. He married Maria Cowdry, of Geneva, N. Y. Children: Samuel, Frank D., George, Mortimer, Sarah, and Louisa. He was a farmer and for several years opened his house for a hotel. About the close of the war he came to Ischua and bought Anson Densmore's hotel, which he kept till his death in 1872. It is now the property of his son Frank D. Frank D. La Fever was born in Hinsdale in 1836 and was reared on a farm. In 1864 he went on the road selling door bells, which he followed till the death of his father, when he closed the hotel and opened the grocery and store business which he has followed for twenty-five years. He is serving his second year as postmaster. He married, in 1873, Susie, daughter of L. Badger, of Allegany: children: Bertha, Josephine (deceased), and Frances.

Thomas Learn is a son of Jacob and the grandson of John Learn, who was born in Northampton county, Pa., and lived near the Pocono mountains, twenty miles from Easton, where his father and an uncle were killed by the Indians during the Revolutionary war. Jacob Learn, who was born in 1793 and served in the War of 1812, married Catharine Moyer; children: Thomas, Lavina, John, Peter, Margaret, Jacob, Reuben, Alburus, and Morris. All were born in Ischua except Thomas and Lavina. Jacob and his brother George came to Ischua in 1823 and were the first settlers on Dutch hill. Thomas Learn was born in 1819, and was reared a farmer and lumberman. In 1844 he married Rachel, daughter of James Shafer, of Cuba, N. Y., and has settled in Hinsdale. Children: Joseph L., who married Sarah Babcock and has children Ernest E. and Rosa A.; John R., who married Esther Sherlock; Edwin A.; Walter L., who married Elizabeth Osgood and has children Daisy, Lulu M., Robert, and Harrison; Florence (Mrs. Thomas Shafer), who has one child, Guy C.; and William C., who married Hattie Wilber, lives in Humphrey, and has children Glen W., Calvin T., Clyde, Nellie, Lena, and Florence M. Thomas Learn enlisted in the Civil war in 1861, served under McClellan, and lost his right arm in the battle of Seven Pines. He was discharged in 1862. His son Joseph L. went to the front after his father was disabled and served through the war, receiving a gun-shot wound in his neck in a cavalry charge. Thomas Learn also had three brothers in the war—Jacob (who died in New Orleans), Morris, and John. Mr. Learn lived in Olean and peddled glassware, clothing, dry goods, and silks twenty years. One day near Keating, Pa., himself and his son John R., each with a wagon of valuable goods, were attacked in a piece of woods by three robbers. Thomas knocked two of them down with a stone and the third ran into the woods. Mr. Learn has a farm of 300 acres, has been town collector, and sold plows over ten years.

Nathan B. Learn is a son of George Learn, one of the pioneers who cut the first road from Ischua to Dutch hill in 1823, having only one dollar in money and his team when he settled there on the farm his son now owns. George Learn married Fanny Spriggle; children: Samuel, Evan, Nathan B., Joseph, Mary A., Fanny, and Lydia. Nathan B. was born in 1830. In 1855 he married Orvilla, daughter of David Cooper, of Hinsdale, and settled in Humphrey. Children: Orlando C., who married Rosalia Morris; Edna A. (Mrs. Leander Yates), of Ischua, who has children Mabel and Lewis; Emmett G., who married Lou Quinby and has one child, Maud; Clara (Mrs. C. G. Smiley), of Olean, whose children are Glessner A. and Granger M.; and Edgar E., who married Rosa A., daughter of Joseph Learn. Mr. Learn has a couple of old-time relics of rare interest: one is a powerful steel bear trap still in working order, the other a well preserved anvil which weighs 236 pounds and has the date 1749 on its side. Both were brought by his father from Pennsylvania. While in Humphrey Mr. Learn, a Democrat in politics, served four years as collector and four years as assessor, and since his removal to Ischua in 1860 has been highway commissioner, justice of the peace, and assessor.

Alonzo Linderman is the son of Nicholas Linderman, who came about 1833 from Tompkins county, N. Y., to Humphrey, and settled on Bozard hill, where he died in 1887, aged eighty-four. He married Rebecca Whitlock, of Ithaca, N. Y.; children: John, Ezekiel, Orson, Alonzo, Mary, Lester, and Emma and Addie (twins). Alonzo was born in 1838 and married, in 1865, Lucinda, daughter of Jacob Searl, of Franklinville, when he bought the farm and settled where he now lives, on the Five Mile tract. Lewelon, their oldest child, married Nancy Conrad, and is now in Oswego, N. Y. The four younger children, Ora A., Edgar, Frank, and Merton, are at home. In 1891 Mr. Linderman built on his farm a steam saw-mill of thirty-five horse-power, in which are three circular saws and a shingle-mill. This is the only saw-mill in Ischua and cuts 200,000 feet of lumber per year.

Charles L. Mallory is a son of Simon C. Mallory, who was born in Hillsdale, N. Y., in 1804, and came to Franklinville in 1815 with his father, who was a lumberman, and who died in Cincinnati, where he had gone with a raft. Simon C. married, in 1828, Sophronia McNall; children: Melissa, John O., Sarah A., Sanford S., Edwin W., Charles L., Mary L., Candis, and Lydia M. He came to Ischua in 1836 and in 1846 belonged to the first board of town assessors. He bought a farm on Yankee hill, which now belongs to his son, Charles L. Mallory. The latter was born in 1840 and became a carpenter as well as a farmer, and has been a contractor and builder in this and adjoining towns till within the past three years. In 1889 he bought his present farm of 139 acres in the village. His house was burned in 1890, when he immediately built his present dwelling. Mr. Mallory married, in 1883, Anna, daughter of John Taylor, of Ischua. Children: Charlie L., Ira S., Lloyd, Bert E., Cecil E., and Hazel G. He was highway commissioner in 1884.

Andrew J. Morris is the son of Thomas Morris, who was born in Franklinville in 1812, whose father, Thomas Morris, then a merchant, was appointed judge by Gov. Daniel D. Tompkins about 1814, and was supervisor in 1881 and 1819. Thomas, Jr., was reared a farmer, and settled in Ischua on the place now owned by Eldridge Morris in 1833. He married Fanny, daughter of John Learn; children: John, Louisa, Andrew J., and Eldridge. Andrew J. was born in Ischua in 1849 and in 1872 built a steam saw and shingle-mill on the homestead and run it six years. In 1882 he exchanged the works for those of greater capacity and built, in company with Frank Fitch, a new saw and grist-mill at Humphrey's switch, buying his partner's interest the next year and adding planing and matching machinery. In 1889 he exchanged with Frank Fitch the mill property for his present farm of 197 acres in Franklinville. In 1874 Andrew J. Morris married C. Emma, daughter of Asaph Fitch, of Franklinville. They have one child, Mabel A. Besides his farming interests Mr. Morris deals in lumber and live stock.

William M. Morris, who lives at the head of the Five Mile tract, is a son of Neely Morris, whose father, Thomas Morris, settled as a merchant in Franklinville about 1810, and whose children were John, born in 1802; Esther, 1804; Neely, 1807; Eli, 1809; Thomas, 1812; and Sarah, 1814. Judge Morris moved to Ischua in 1825 and settled on land now the property and home of his grandson William M. Neely Morris married Elizabeth Raub, who was born in New Jersey in 1799, and settled on the home farm. Children: Cordelia, born in 1830, married Miles J. Learn; John, born in 1831, died young; Eli, born in 1833; William M., born in 1835; Mary, born in 1839, married James Barnard; and Melvin, deceased. William M. Morris married, in 1855, Emeline, daughter of Peter Miller, of Hinsdale. They have one child, Rosalia, born in 1856, who married Orlando C. Learn in 1888 and has children Clifford and Baby.

Eldridge Morris is the grandson of Judge Thomas Morris, the pioneer. His father, Thomas Morris, settled on the farm Eldridge now owns. The latter was born in Ischua in 1851. In 1880 he married Hannah, daughter of Julius A. McClune; children: George E., Arthur J., Ada M., Mamie V., and Sarah. His mother died in 1889 and his father in 1890. Julius A. McClune, Mrs. Morris's father, was a soldier under General Banks in the Rebellion.

Richmond S. Nichols is a son of James Nichols, who came from Vermont to Chenango county, N. Y., and married Mary Ireland. Richmond S., their fifth child, was born in 1834, came to Ischua in 1867, and was a farmer. He married Eliza Pike, his first wife, in 1861, and Sarah E. Wickwire, his second, in 1871. Children: Charles B., Grace, and Robert R. In 1885 he married, third, Flora Gilbert. He opened a hotel in Ischua in 1876 and in 1878 built the hotel he has since occupied.

Howard Otto is a son of Silas P. Otto and a grandson of Joseph Otto, of Farmer's Valley, Pa. Silas P., a general wood worker and painter, came to Ischua in 1835 and married Hannah Stickland, of Lyndon; children: Sartwell, Joseph, Emma, Amelia, and Howard. The latter was born in 1847 and when sixteen enlisted in Co. K, 22d N. Y. Cav., serving in the Shenandoah valley. He was in the battles from Winchester to Cedar Creek, was on the left of the turnpike helping to stop stragglers when General Sheridan arrived there the day of his famous ride, was in the fight at Waynesborough, when the Second Brigade captured 1,300 rebels, and saw General Sheridan throw his arms around Custer in admiration of his splendid work. He was discharged in Aug., 1865. In 1870 he married Rose, daughter of Daniel Emery, of Belfast, N. Y. Children: Burna and Jessie. Mr. Otto came to Abbott's in 1877, where he has been a merchant since 1880 and postmaster since 1888.

Gideon L. Patterson is a son of Porter and a grandson of Joseph Patterson, a soldier in the War of 1812, who came from Whitehall, Washington county, to Lyndon in 1816, where his son Porter was born that year. Porter married Abigail Lewis; children: Joseph (a soldier, who died at Elmira, N. Y.); Isaac A. (who died in Andersonville prison); Gideon L., Jephtha D., Bethiah, Phebe L., Abigail (Mrs. George Williams), Laura, John W., Justus G., and Aaron A. Gideon L. Patterson was born in 1844 and enlisted in 1862 in Co. K, 136th N. Y. Vols. He was in the battles of Chancellorsville and Gettysburg and then fought in seventeen engagements under General Thomas. Since the war he has been a painter.

Peter Raub, living in the town of Hinsdale, near the south line of Ischua, is the son of Joseph Raub, who came from New Jersey to Cattaraugus county about 1826 and settled near the Free Methodist church in Ischua. He married Anna Swartz; children: Peter, George W., Mary E. (Mrs. Stephen A. Mott), of Olean, and George W. The latter married Catharine Grimes and lives in Greenville, Mich. Peter was reared a farmer and married Fanny S., daughter of George Learn; children: Olive C., who died aged five years, and Lillie, who lived to be twenty-two years old.

Elam T. Seward, son of Alpheus and grandson of Elam Seward, of Orange county, N. Y., was born in Indian Town, Ill., in 1843, where his father, who was born in 1810, died in 1846. His mother, born in Salem, Mass., who was Allie Townsend before her marriage in 1832, came with her two sons, Tilly G. and Elam T., to Ischua soon after her husband's death, where she married Abram Lewis in 1854. They had one child, Frank. Tilly G. died at the age of twenty-six. Elam T. followed farming till 1876, when he opened his present blacksmith shop. He married, in 1865, Aurelia, daughter of David Hibner, of Ischua. Children: Neola, Lena H. (Mrs. Claude F. Townsend), Emma A., and Tilly A. The latter has learned the blacksmith's trade and works with his father. Mr. Seward as a Democrat was elected highway commissioner in 1877 and held that office five years. He was excise commissioner three years and was elected supervisor in 1881, 1891, and 1892.

William Riley Terry is a son of Elisha and a grandson of Freeman Terry, of Terryville, Conn., whose father was a minister and lost his life as a soldier in the Revolutionary war when Freeman was eight years old. Freeman came to Homer, N. Y., where Elisha was born in 1802. In 1825 Elisha Terry came to Ischua and settled on Dutch hill. His wife was Amy Hawley, of Homer; children: Jane, Caroline, Elmira, Ransom, and Zell. William R. was born in 1829, in Franklinville, and in 1859 married Rebecca A. Adams; children: Willie, Elisha, and Ella (Mrs. J. C. Ticnor). He married, second, in 1881, Mrs. Belle (Morris) Lewis. They have one child, Annie Belle. Mr. Terry's farm of 380 acres cost him $25 per acre in 1868.

Lyman W. Thornton is a son of Alonzo R. Thornton, who came from Waterloo, N. Y., and married Phebe Stewart, of Yorkshire. Phebe, their only child, married Stephen Osgood, of Ischua. Mr. Thornton's second wife, Adeline, was a sister of his first; children: Lucy, Melinda, Lyman M., Zylpha A., and John. Alonzo was a shoemaker in Ischua many years and died here in 1886. Lyman M. was born in Yorkshire in 1846. He enlisted in 1862 in the 154th N. Y. Vols. and was in the battles of Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, and Lookout Mountain. Soon after the latter he was taken sick. At the close of the war he bought the ashery of Anson Densmore, run it a year, and sold it. In 1865 he married Delina A., daughter of James Chase, of Lyndon; children: Frank C., of Ischua; Mildred (Mrs. Morris D. Williams), of Salamanca; and Fred G. Mrs. Thornton died in 1874 and he married, second, Mrs. Ann E. Moon, whose son Archie D. has been his partner in general mercantile business for several years under the firm name of A. D. Moon & Co.

Benjamin C. Townsend is a son of Benjamin and a grandson of Isaac Townsend, who came from Massachusetts to Attica, N. Y., in 1796, where he was a tanner, merchant, miller, and brickmaker. He died in 1843. His son Benjamin was born in New Salem, Mass., in 1777, and married there Ada Page. They came to Attica in 1826 and thence to Ischua in 1829. Here he was the first brickmaker in town. He died in 1856 and his wife in 1868. Children: Zebina, Philo, Sally, Chester P., Sophia, Marilla, and Benjamin C. The latter was born in New Salem, Mass., in 1821, and was reared a farmer and brickmaker. He was a trader from 1866 to 1872. In 1852 he was elected justice of the peace and served twenty-four consecutive years, and one term since; he has been town clerk, supervisor, and postmaster several terms—twenty years in all. In 1852 B. C. Townsend married Hestyr, daughter of Benjamin Bacon, of Friendship; children: Annie (Mrs. Frank Brown), who has one child, Clara; Clara and Chester, who died young; Cora (Mrs. Fred D. Sherwin); and Claude F., who was born in 1863. Claude F. became a telegraph operator, which he followed twelve years at various offices on the Western New York & Pennsylvania railroad, the last seven years at Chaffee, where he was also agent. In 1872 he bought G. L. Patterson's hardware business in Ischua and still conducts it. In 1886 he married Lena H., daughter of E. T. Seward, of Ischua. They have one child, Ethel.

Alpheus M. Trowbridge is a son of Dr. James Trowbridge (see page 137), who was born in Worcester, Mass., in 1795, and whose father's name was William. Dr. Trowbridge came to Franklinville in 1817 and later to Ischua, being the first physician and the first school master in town. He married Olive Sackett, of Connecticut; children: Clarissa, Achsah, James, William, Charles, Alpheus M., Eliza, Edwin, and Adner. He moved from Ischua to Hinsdale and from there in 1829 to Ohio, thence to Spring Prairie, Wis., where he died in 1849. Alpheus M. was born in Little Valley, N. Y., in 1828. In 1853 he married Elizabeth Whitlock and settled in Ischua. Children: Francelia (Mrs. William Shipman), of Humphrey; Alice (Mrs. Edwin Shipman); Edwin, who married Rosa Mathewson; Charles, who died when twenty-seven years old; and Albert, who married, in 1886, Nettie Chase; children: Guy A. and Walter C. Mrs. Trowbridge died in 1890, and Mr. Trowbridge married, second, Mrs. Caroline Myrick, daughter of Caleb Barber, of Ischua.

Calvin T. Washburn is a son of Ira Washburn, whose father lived in Vermont and served in the Revolutionary war. Ira Washburn settled in Vandalia in this county as a lumberman. He married an adopted daughter of Benjamin Chamberlain, the father of Judge Chamberlain; children: Lucy (Mrs. Wing), of Hinsdale; Calvin T.; Sarah; George; and Eunice—all born in Vandalia. Calvin T., who was born in 1834, married Carrie A. Bennett in 1860, and settled in Cuba, N. Y. George Wallace, their eldest child, is now a miner of large experience in British Columbia, and Charles O., the next, is a miner in the State of Washington. The two younger children, Calvin T. and John, are at home. Mr. Washburn came to Ischua in 1876 and bought his present farm of 180 acres. Two years later he was elected on the Republican ticket as assessor and served by re-elections fifteen consecutive years.

William H. Wilbur is a son of Abner and Abigail (Benton) Wilbur and a grandson of Joseph Wilbur, who came from Connecticut (where he was born in 1781) to Cortland county, N. Y., and thence to Ischua in 1850, where he died in 1865. Abner Wilbur was born in 1802 and married Miss Allen, of Cortland county. His second wife was Mrs. Abigail B. Munsell; children: Isaac, deceased; Clarissa (Mrs. Charles Wagner); William H.; Thomas C., a veteran soldier and now a blacksmith at Abbott's; Chauncey C., a soldier who died in 1865; Mary M. (Mrs. William Sherlock); and Arthur L. The latter, born in Willet, Cortland county, in 1847, married, in 1865, Hannah J., daughter of Samuel D. Wood, of Ischua; children: George H. and Willie H. William H. Wilbur was born in Willet, N. Y., in 1836, and is now a farmer on the homestead in Ischua. He married, in 1893, Mrs. Ruth E. Sherwood, daughter of Frederick Carpenter, of Ischua.

Mrs. A. E. Willson is the widow of Adelbert Willson, whose father, Kniffen Willson, was born in 1785 and came in 1831 from New Berlin, N. Y., to Ischua. He bought here a half section of land and another half section in Hinsdale. Kniffen was a pioneer in that part of the town. He gave the land for the Willson cemetery, in which his remains were interred, and the lot for the school house just west of it, known as the Willson district. Kniffen married, first, when about twenty years old. His first child, Nehemiah, was born in 1806; his other children were Caroline, Mary, Narcissa E., Benjamin, David, Marinda, Susanna, Nelson, and Ruth M. His second wife was Hannah Fitch; children: Charlotte, Durand F., Urben, Adelbert, Urben K., Ambrosia H., and Le Grand D. Adelbert was born in Ischua in 1841 and married, in 1867, Anna E., daughter of John C. Adams, of Cuba, N. Y. John C. Adams was a son of Prosper Adams, of Portage, N. Y., whose father, Jesse Adams, of Pawlet, Vt., was a Revolutionary soldier. Mrs. Willson's mother, Eunice F. Robinson, was the granddaughter of Capt. Ephraim Robinson, also of the Revolutionary army. The children of Adelbert and Anna E. Willson were: Quincy A., born in 1872, now manager of the farm and the Willson cheese factories; Urben J., born in 1872, died young; and Lucy A., born in 1885, died when one year old. Adelbert Willson died in 1885.

CHAPTER L.

HISTORY OF THE TOWN OF LYNDON.

LYNDON was originally included within the old town of Ischua, which was erected from Olean in 1812. By subsequent divisions this extensive territory was reduced, and March 3, 1824, the remainder of the town was officially designated Franklinville, which then comprised the present towns of Franklinville and Lyndon. The township of Lyndon was set off January 24, 1829, and is described in the Holland survey as all of town four, range three, and the east part of town four, range four. It covers an area of 21,107 acres and is bounded on the north by Farmersville, on the east by Allegany county, on the south by Ischua, and on the west by Franklinville. April 7, 1857, the name of the town was changed to Elgin, but the next year, on April 16th, the original name Lyndon was restored.

The surface is broken into hills and uplands, some of the former reaching a height of 500 feet above the Allegheny river. The principal elevation lies near the center of the town and extends north and south. On the east are the headwaters of Oil creek, while on the west are those of tributaries of Ischua creek. These small branches form the drainage of the town. The soil is mainly clay, covered with a light vegetable mold upon the hills and a gravelly loam in the valleys. The inhabitants of Lyndon are mainly engaged in farming and dairying. Abundant crops of all kinds of farm produce are grown. There are a number of factories, which manufacture large quantities of milk into cheese and butter, bringing to the husbandman his chief revenue.

The first settlement in Lyndon was made in 1808 by Solomon Rawson and his brother William. They came with their wives from Pennsylvania and located near the head of Oil creek on lots 6 and 7 in this town, cutting their road up from Cuba and settling on what afterward became the Olean road. The site of their location has long been known by their family name. To Solomon Rawson in August, 1809, was born a daughter, Natilla, the first white birth in town. A little later came Seth Markham and his brothers David and Jeptha with their father, James, from Connecticut. In 1811 James Markham died, his being the first death in Lyndon. Thenceforward for several years no settlements appear to have been made, and for some time the dwellings of these two families sheltered travelers and emigrants to the west. Solomon Rawson and Seth Markham had a deer lick at which they caught a bear in one of their traps. One night Mr. Rawson went into the woods to find his cow. Instead he found a bear that chased him up a tree, where he remained till long after dark before he dared venture down. Rawson was a prosperous man, became deacon in the church, and was supervisor in 1830 and 1835. He accumulated money and indulged in a silver service for table use, which a thief one night carried off together with some surplus cash. Solomon Rawson and the Markhams were preceded in contracting for land in the town by James Brooks, to whom the Holland Land Company issued a contract in 1806.

Paul Crandall was an early settler. Ezra Brockway came from Connecticut in 1818. It thus appears that the pioneers of Lyndon settled in the eastern part. Nicholas Melrose, from Scotland, settled in the western part of the town about 1820. Of course there were others, but of their names and records little is known. Cyrus Porter and Edmund Stone were early comers, the latter coming from Madison county in 1821. Joshua Frary came about 1820. In 1824 Elijah Lake, Eben Lake, and Michael Vincent settled in the south part of the town. They came from Cayuga county. In 1825 William Little and Abel Hicks came in; Isaac Newton and Benjamin Newton came in the year 1825 or 1826. Linnus French and brother settled in the south part of the town in 1826. Orrin Upson, Thomas Ashton and cousin, and Arby Morris and family were also early comers. Dr. Hayden and three other families settled in the north part of the town the same year (1826). About 1826 or 1827 William Petit and family settled near the Haydens and were the cause of a sad affair. A young man from Canada, deaf and dumb, named Franklin, came to Ischua to see a young couple, both mutes, by the name of Coonrad. Returning home he lost his way and called at Petit's house for information. He rapped at the door and they asked what was wanted, but he kept rapping. Petit was of a nervous temperament and it is said that some family troubles had made him apprehensive and suspicious of night visitors. Fearing danger he took his gun and fired, killing Franklin. Petit was tried and acquitted. He lived where Daniel Goss now resides. Dr. Fell, who had a son Benjamin, also a physician, lived where James Scott now is. Deacon Hammond and the De La Martyrs came in 1839. Judge Elias Hopkins came from Bath, Steuben county, in 1824, and settled on a part of the present William Little farm. His son Elias came in 1846 and in 1849 sold seventy-five acres to William Little at $18 per acre. Henry Morris, born in Rockville, Conn., came from Baldwinsville, N. Y., and settled on the farm still the home of his widow and her son, John W. Spofford. Mr. Morris was a prominent citizen of Lyndon. He was the first supervisor of the town and filled that office seven years, the last time in 1859. His brother, Arby Morris, came a little later and was chosen supervisor in 1845 and 1851. Mrs. Thomas Spofford was Henry Morris's third wife. His first wife and two young children were buried north of the house.

The first tavern was kept by William Rawson between 1820 and 1830, when he was succeeded by Elkany Bates, who came to Rawson before 1830 and continued the hotel until about 1850. Jacob S. Nottingham, a native of Kingston, N. Y., who first settled in Allegany county, brought his wife and children Simcon, William H., Elmina, Seth, Phineas, and Diana to Lyndon in 1828. William Little, from Scotland, settled at the Center in 1830. Stephen Graves, from Jefferson county, N. Y., came the same year to the western part of the town. Elisha Hoag came in 1831 from Washington county, N. Y., and Henry Goss, from England, in 1832, as did also Aaron Bissell, from Vermont, who settled at Elgin, where his son William now lives. He was supervisor in 1849 and 1850. In 1833 Richard Little came from England and settled where his son John now resides. He was a contractor and builder and was supervisor of Lyndon from 1867 to 1871 inclusive. The same year Josiah Kent came from England, Andrew Currie from Scotland, and Matthew Straight from Madison county, N. Y. Selah Clark, from Madison county, came in 1834; Robert Camp from Otsego county; Thomas Day from England; and William Maxwell, from Scotland, in 1835. The latter still lives where he first located. Nelson Metcalf came from Herkimer county and Joseph S. Allen from Ireland and his son John from Steuben county in 1836; Andrew Carter and his son William, William Dunn, and Colin McLennan, all from Scotland, came in 1837; Phineas Case and his son Luke, from Tioga county, and James R. Thompson, from Greene county, in 1839; Joseph Gene from Massachusetts, Edmund Stone from Oneida county, Samuel Wood from Tompkins county, and Joseph Johnson from Liverpool, N. Y., in 1841; George Davidson from Scotland, Hawley Pratt and his son Charles from Rutland county, Vt., and William Morton, in 1842; Mrs. Thomas Spofford and her sons James P. and John W. from Herkimer county, N. Y., Matthew Mitchell from Scotland, and Sylvanus Bennett from Massachusetts in 1843; Elias, son of Judge Hopkins, and Allen Myward, from Warsaw, N. Y., in 1846; James Scott from Scotland in 1847, still living on the farm he bought in 1848; and Chauncey Adams, from Yates county, in 1848. Duncan Campbell, a teacher from Washington county, was store keeper and postmaster at Elgin till his death in 1881; his daughter Bella M. is now postmaster there.

John Livingston came from Caledonia, N. Y., in 1851 and William McStay from Ireland in 1854.

The first marriage occurred March 1, 1815, being that of William Markham and Rachel Phillips. The first school was taught in 1815 by Sally Osborne near Rawson. The first saw-mill was built in 1843. It stood on land now owned by Edwin Case and belonged to Jason Sherman. Another saw-mill, erected by Willard Gould about 1860, stood on the land now owned by John Straight. Charles Gillman opened the first store in 1827. The first religious services were conducted by a Presbyterian at the house of Seth Markham in 1810. About 1830 a remarkable cake of maple sugar was made in this neighborhood by Myron Sumner, near where William McStay's barn now stands. It filled a big potash kettle and weighed 1,000 pounds. Sumner took it to Buffalo, where it created much curiosity. John Frary, who lived where his grandson, Arden M. Frary, now resides, and Seth Markham, who lived where James Spencer now does, gave in 1835 the land for the burying ground at Rawson.

The first town meeting was held at the dwelling of Samuel Gleason, March 3, 1829, when these officers were chosen: Supervisor, Henry Morris; town clerk, Hezekiah Lippitt; assessors, Peter C. Lane, Orrin Upson, and Ezra Brockway; collector, Charles Gillman; overseers of the poor, Solomon Rawson and John Warren; commissioners of highways, John Lippitt, John Frary, and Thomas Ashton; constables, Charles Gillman and James Clark; commissioners of common schools, Russell D. Jones, John Warren, and Augustus N. Hayden; inspectors of common schools, Hezekiah Lippitt, Orrin Upson, and Henry Morris; justices of the peace (elected in November, 1829), Hezekiah Lippitt, Peter C. Lane, Ezra Brockway, and Orrin Upson. The supervisors of Lyndon have been as follows:

Supervisors.—Henry Morris, 1829, 1837-38, 1840-41, 1853, 1859; Solomon Rawson, 1830, 1835; Ezra Brockway, 1831-34, 1836; William Frary, 1839; Henry Stringham, 1842; John Warren, 1843-44; Arby Morris, 1845, 1851; Orrin Upson, 1846-48; Aaron Bissell, 1849-50; Edmund Stone, 1852; Josiah Q. Perry, 1854-58, 1872; Charles Thompson, 1860-61; James R. Thompson, 1862-63; Willard Gould, 1864-66; Richard Little, 1867-71; Thomas Davis, 1873-74; A. L. Turnbull, 1875-80; Arden M. Frary, 1881-83, 1886; James J. Maxwell, 1884-85; Robert Maxwell, 1887-90; Milo D. Farwell, 1891; George W. Hogg, 1892-93.

In 1880 Lyndon had a population of 831, which in 1890 was 677. In 1892 the town had six school districts and the same number of school houses, attended during the year by 157 children, who were taught by six teachers. The buildings and sites are valued at $2,795, while the districts are assessed for school purposes at $315,202. The money received from the State was $730.80 and from local taxation $563.07.

Elgin is a postoffice and hamlet in the center of the town whose name in 1857 was officially given to the township for a brief period. The place now contains a church, school house, a store, one blacksmith shop, a shoe shop, and a small cluster of houses. The postoffice was established here in 1826 with a Mr. Hopkins as postmaster, and apparently the office was long known as Hopkins.* The first mail was carried through Lyndon that year by a Mr. Shaw, his route running from Angelica to Franklinville. The settlement at Elgin and vicinity is often referred to as Lyndon Center.

Rawson is a postal hamlet near the northeast corner of the town, lying partly in Allegany county. It derives its name from Lyndon's pioneer, Solomon Rawson. It contains a few business establishments, a postoffice, and a small group of dwellings. Anent this settlement the "Pioneer History of Western New York," in 1850, says: "The traveler who passes over the road from Rushford to Cuba will have his attention arrested soon after he first strikes the headwaters of Oil creek by a cluster of neat farm buildings in the center of a highly-cultivated farm, the whole nestling in rural quiet amid the surrounding hills. It is where the venerable pioneer of Lyndon first broke into the wilderness, and he still lives to enjoy the rewards of his early toils and privations."

The Elgin cheese factory, located one-half mile north of the Center, was started over twenty years ago by Richard Little. The present owners are John Little, Thomas Day, and Joseph Mitchell. The output is about 100,000 pounds of cheese annually. The Abbott cheese factory, No. 2, was moved from Ischua in 1892 to the south part of this town. It is owned by Mrs. I. N. Sheldon, of Cuba, N. Y., and during the season of 1892 manufactured 135,000 pounds of cheese.

The first religious services in Lyndon were held in 1810, at the house of Seth Markham, by Rev. Robert Hubbard, a Presbyterian missionary. At the same dwelling was organized in 1816 the first religious society in town. This was the Freewill Baptist church of Lyndon and the organizers were Revs. Abraham and Jeremiah Folsom, missionaries. One of the first deacons was Solomon Rawson and the first pastor was Rev. Thomas Pratt. Their house of worship was erected in 1839 and cost $1,200. The society now has 35 members, but no pastor. The church edifice, with a seating capacity of 280, is valued, with the grounds, etc., at $1,400. A Sunday school is maintained during the summer months.

The United Presbyterian church in Lyndon had its inception in a series of meetings held in a log school house at London Center in 1835 by Rev. John White, an Associate Reformed minister from Seneca county. Rev. Mr. Irvin also preached the same year and in 1836 Rev. William Howden was appointed to labor in the charge then embracing Franklinville, Ellicottville, Lyndon, Freedom, and Cuba. He remained until 1848, preaching one year for the New-School Presbyterians at Franklinville. A small frame church edifice was erected at Elgin in 1838, and February 29, 1840, Rev. Mr. Howden organized a church society with thirty members. Rev. D. C. McVean, then a licentiate, succeeded Mr. Howden, preaching his first sermon in Lyndon the first Sunday in July, 1849, and being ordained pastor January 29, 1850: This congregation was then under the care of the Associate Reformed Presbytery of Caledonia. Mr. McVean remained its pastor until September 6, 1865. In 1852 their present edifice was erected at a cost of $1,800. The union of the "Associate" and "Associate Reformed" churches occurred at Pittsburg, Pa., May 25, 1858, the united body being styled the United Presbyterian church of North America, and since then the Lyndon church has been under the United Presbytery of Caledonia. In 1867 several members of this church were dismissed to form a similar body in Franklinville (page 642). The minister succeeding Mr. McVean was Rev. Robert Gregg Campbell, who was ordained and installed pastor of the church September 1, 1870, and administered to their spiritual wants until 1880, his successor being Rev. James Dugeon Lyttle, who was installed June 2, 1881, and remained until 1886, when he resigned and was succeeded in 1887 by Rev. J. L. Thompson. The church lot was purchased of Richard Little for $25. Their edifice will seat 275 people and with other property is valued at $2,000. The society has seventy-five members and a flourishing Sunday school.

John Allen is the son of Joseph S. Allen, who was born in Ireland in 1792, and who was the son of John Allen. Joseph S. came to America as a soldier in the British army during the War of 1812, from which he deserted near the Canada line. He first settled in Washington county, N. Y., and married Nancy Heist in 1818; children: John; Henry H., born in 1821 was drafted and paid $300, went to Virginia, and died there; Mary H., born in 1823, married George W. Matthews, of Reading, N. Y., who went to Richmond county, Wis., and had children Charles A., George W., John W.; Joseph, born in 1825; Nancy, born in 1828, who married Jephtha Scott and had children Charles and Myra; Sarah, born in 1831, who married Matthew Swift; and Daniel, who married Grace Grover and had one child, Alice. John Allen was born in Reading, N. Y., in the year 1819, and came with his father to Tyrone, N. Y., and thence in 1836 to Lyndon, and settled on the farm now owned by Robert Maxwell. About 1840 John Allen bought the farm of 180 acres now the property of his nephew, John W. Matthews, where he lived till 1893. Mr. Allen has never married and with a handsome competence spends his time with his relatives. John W. Matthews came to Lyndon in 1891, married Eugenie Carpenter, of Waukesha, Wis., in 1892, and settled on the John Allen farm. His mother died in 1889.

Aaron Bissell was born in Rutland, Vt., in 1805. He early came to Tyrone, N. Y., where he resided three or four years, and where he married Delilah Pullin. As early as 1830 he removed with his wife to Lyndon and settled on a wood lot of about 100 acres, the farm upon which his son William now resides. He was a good financier and was noted as a breeder of good cattle, horses, and sheep. In early life he was interested in military affairs and rose to the position of captain. He was supervisor several terms and magistrate for many years. He died in Dec., 1878. Mrs. Bissell died on the homestead Oct. 28, 1883. They had ten children, of whom five are living.

Ezra M. Brockway is the grandson of Ezra Brockway, of Connecticut, who married Lydia Jones in 1817 and came to Lyndon in 1818. He bought 174 acres of land at $2.50 per acre. Children: Ezra, Horace, Laura, Martha, Rufus, Herman, and Leonard. Ezra, born in 1820, married, in 1841, Amy Straight, who was born in Smithfield, N. Y., in 1818; children: Tacy A., who married Samuel Howard, of Franklinville, and Ezra M., who was born in 1848. In 1869 Ezra M. married Ellen Thrall; children: Bertie, who married James Spencer, of Lyndon; Hermon; Phronie B.; and Bulia E. Ezra Brockway died in 1848. He was a member of the Free Baptist church and prominent in town affairs. Ezra M. is a farmer on the homestead, deals in live stock, has been constable five years, collector two years, and highway commissioner.

Chester F. Camp is the son of Robert Camp, of Otsego county, N. Y., and the grandson of Benjamin Camp, who lived to be 103 years old. Robert Camp married Harriet Tiffany; children: George (who went into the army and was killed at Pittsburg Landing), Mary, Eliza Ann, Chester F., Welcome, and Harriet. Robert Camp brought his family to Centerville, N. Y., and about 1835 bought of Amos Pettit, for $3.50 per acre, the farm Chester F. now owns. The latter married, in 1850, Cordelia A., daughter of John Miller, of New Hudson. Their eldest child, De Los, is a traveling agent for the Buckeye Mower and Reaper Company. He married Emma Elwood; children: Mary, Flora, Maggie, and Cora. Flora, the youngest of their two children, married William Salisbury, of Buffalo; children: Willie and Sadie. Mr. Camp spends a portion of his time traveling for a fertilizer company. He is quite a collector of Indian relics, finding a good many on his own and neighboring farms.

Edward N. Case, son of Thomas and Betsey (Melrose) Case, of Franklinville, was born in Lyndon, Dec. 9, 1849. He was reared on the farm and attended Franklinville Academy. In 1875 he married Lizzie E., daughter of William McStay. They have one child, Ralph E. Mr. Case is a large dairy farmer on the homestead of 233 acres, where he was born. He built in 1887 the finest barn in Lyndon and one of the best in Cattaraugus county.

Decimal W. Caswell is the son of Anthony Caswell, the early settler, whose father, Allen, was of German extraction. Their experiences as pioneers frequently furnished material for thrilling stories. When out hunting the nights were often so dark in the woods that they could not find their way home and would camp out. The morning light often disclosed the fact that they were less than a half-mile from home. It was a frequent experience that the straw in their beds had to be fed to the cow or oxen to get through the long cold spring. Decimal W. Caswell was born in 1847 and has always been a farmer. In 1872 he married Orlanda Roach; children: Archie T., Medie M., Merl A., Darwin W., Lora, Mary A., and John.

George P. Clark is the son of Selah Clark, of Onondaga county, N. Y., who married Mary McDonald and was the father of three children: Harriet M., Sophia R., and George P. (who was born in 1823). Selah Clark came to Lyndon in 1834 and paid $151.25 for the farm of 110 acres which George P. now owns. The latter, in 1853, married Electa Burr; children: Charles, who married Martha Marble and died aged thirty, leaving one child, Ellie; Effgene (Mrs. Harlow Goss); Ruth; Essel; Homer, of Farmersville; Addie; and Courtland. Mr. Clark's father died in 1878 and his mother in 1883. He has always been a farmer and now keeps a dairy of sixteen cows.

Anson Clement is the son of Sewell and the grandson of Timothy Clement, of Montreal, Canada. Sewell Clement went to Vermont and came thence in 1843 to Pike, N. Y., where he settled and spent the remainder of his life as a farmer. He married Aseneth Dean, from Connecticut; children: Stillman, who married Adeline Fuller, of Rutland county, Vt., settled in Franklinville, and has nine children; Sewell, of Pike, who married Relief Brown and has seven children; Louisa (Mrs. Porter Miller), of Pike, who died in 1887; Almira (Mrs. Thomas Eckenson), of Pike, who died in 1888; Timothy, who married Mary Waite, of Lyndon, and died there; Anson; Jesse, who married Mrs. Timothy Clement and lives in Farmersville; and Susan, who married Washington Whitney, of Pike, and has three children. Anson Clement was born in 1827 and has always been a farmer. He enlisted in 1861 and entered the Army of the Potomac. He was in the battles of Second Bull Run, Antietam, Gettysburg, Chancellorsville, Fredericksburg, and the Wilderness, and was discharged in 1865. He settled the next year on the farm he now owns.

George H. Davidson is the son of George and Gene Davidson, who were born in Scotland, came to America in 1842, and settled on the farm now the home of their son. Of their six children Jessie, John, and Alexander were born in Scotland and George H., Mary A., and Margaret J. in Lyndon. George H., born in 1843, became a soldier in 1862 and was taken prisoner at Gettysburg. Of his army experiences he says: "I was taken to Belle Isle prison, where 9,000 men were confined on four acres of ground. We got so poor as we drew nearer and nearer to death by starvation and exposure that we had to dig a little trench in the ground when we lay down at night for our hip bones to rest in. It was winter and we lay close together, spoon fashion, to keep warm. One night Loren Phillips sang out 'right-face,' which was an order to turn over, for when one turned all the rest of that squad had to turn also. One of us asked what was the matter. 'I can't stand these lice any longer; I am willing they should have a square meal, but when they get full and bite off chunks and throw them at each other it's beyond endurance,' was the reply. His humor was hardly an exaggeration. Many a time we walked most of the night to keep from freezing. I actually lost 100 pounds of flesh—from 190 to ninety—and then went one day and lay down with the sick ones and smuggled myself into the hospital, whence I had the good luck to be exchanged. I was the only one out of fifty in one ward of the hospital who lived." After recuperating Mr. Davidson returned to Chattanooga and was at the battle of Nashville. Since the war he has been a farmer, except a year in a foundry in Cuba and keeping a store at Rawson from 1886 to 1893. In 1870 he married Mary A. Whiteright; children: John A., Genie, and Jessie. Mr. Davidson was elected assessor in 1889 and is now president of the Rawson Farmers' Alliance.

Thomas Day, son of Robert, of Lincolnshire, England, was born in Minting, Eng., May 12, 1805. At the age of twenty-three he came to this country and settled in Pittsford, Monroe county, where he remained about seven years. In 1835 he came to Lyndon. In 1834 he married Dorothy Smart, of Dean, England. Children: Justina E.; Brice, who died in the army; Mary Jane (Mrs. Allan Williams), of Ischua; Lucy Ann (Mrs. Ira Westbrook), of Missouri; Elisha, of Michigan; Thomas Benjamin, of Port Allegany, Pa.; Carolina C. (Mrs. Charles Wesley Persons), of Jamestown, N. Y.; Julia A. (Mrs. Alfred Smith), who died in 1879; and Eupheme (Mrs. Gustavus Lane), of Centerville, Allegany county. Mr. Day died in March, 1893.

Arden M. Frary is the grandson of John Frary, who came with his family from Madison county, N. Y., in 1817, bringing all their goods on an ox-cart, and settled on 145 acres of land, on which his son Joshua was born in 1820, and which is now the property of Arden M. Joshua Frary married, in 1846, Mary A., daughter of David Higbee, of Onondaga county, N. Y.; children:

Lovina J., who died young, and Arden M., who was born in 1847. He attended the common schools and Rushford Academy, and finally became an expert in cheese making. He made cheese in Rawson in 1873-74, at Elgin four years, and was running a factory in Allegany in 1879, when cheese ran down to five cents a pound. Besides farming, to which he returned in 1881, he still gives his attention to marketing cheese. A Republican in politics he served as supervisor in 1881, 1882, 1883, and 1886. He married, in 1876, Bridget Nolan; children: Irvin M., Mary, Hattie, and Ruth (who died when five years old). Joshua Frary was active and prominent in military affairs and was captain and lieutenant-colonel. He died in 1849.

John Gillman and Isabella Randolph, his wife, emigrated from New Jersey to Cambridge, N. Y., where their son Charles was born Feb. 9, 1803. The family removed thence to Otisco, Onondaga county, in 1811, and May 1, 1824, started for Cattaraugus county. They arrived at Angelica a few days after Howe was executed, and after crossing the Genesee river they came to Rawson settlement and thence to the center of what is now Lyndon. A few days before Elias Hopkins and Charles Howell had arrived and claimed to be agents for the Holland Land Company. Charles Gillman and Henry Morris examined every lot in town. Morris selected a lot in the east part, purchased 300 acres, and Gillman took 200 acres adjoining him on the west, the latter paying $150 towards the deed the two agents were to procure. But this agreement Hopkins and Howell never fulfilled. About a year after the family's arrival Mrs. Gillman died and her husband followed her in Feb., 1835, at Otisco, N. Y. In 1832 Charles Gillman began a mercantile business in Rushford, Allegany county, and Oct. 11, 1832, he married Julia Elmer, of Hume, N. Y. He removed to Rochester in 1864, to Washington, D. C., in 1869, to New York in 1876, and to Olean in 1887, where he still resides.

Daniel Goss is the son of Henry Goss, who was born in Lincolnshire, England, in 1796, who married Mary Wood, and who came to America in 1832, settling in Lyndon on the farm now owned by his son Daniel, which cost him $250 for 100 acres. Children: John, Charles, Joseph, George, David, and Daniel. The latter was born at Little Linford, England, in 1827. Daniel learned the carpenter's trade. In 1849 he married Savannah Nichols; children: James, a miller in Franklinville, who married Sarah Reese, and has one child, Nellie; Elizabeth (Mrs. Alexander McCall), of Franklinville; Harlow, who married Effie Clark and has children Earl, Bessie, Ruth, and Ethel; Mary (Mrs. William Currie), whose children are Afton, Alexander, Frank D., Gerald, and Mary; and Haydon, who married Jennie Gould and lives in Franklinville. Mr. and Mrs. Goss at the time of their marriage settled on the homestead, which now contains 185 acres. Since 1860 he has done considerable blacksmithing and wagon repairing.

Elijah Hoag is the grandson of Elijah Hoag, of Vermont, who came to Lansing, N. Y., where his son Elisha was born in 1807. Elisha married Anna Wood, of Enfield, N. Y., in 1831. The same year he came to Lyndon and settled on the farm now owned by Charles Lockwood, where he lived sixty-one years and died in 1892. Children: Elijah, Phebe A., Samuel W., Israel (who married Amelia Ingalls, of Cuba, settled in Ischua in 1865, and has children Alice M. and Lizzie), and John O. Elisha Hoag held the offices of assessor and highway commissioner several terms each. His son Elijah was born in Lyndon in 1831 and has always been a farmer. In 1855 he married Sarah E., daughter of David Hedding, of Ischua, who was born in Germany. After four years' residence in Wisconsin they returned and bought their present farm on the county line, paying $20 per acre for it. They have one child, Orson A., who was born in Wisconsin in 1856. He has taught school several terms and in 1890 served as poormaster.

William Little is a son of Richard and a grandson of William Little, of Castle Douglas, Scotland, who was a contractor and engineer, and who went to England, where he married Elizabeth Stedman. Children: William, Richard, Jane, James G., Mary, Elizabeth, and Isabel. Richard was born in Whitby, England, in 1795, and removed to Castle Douglas, Scotland, where he became a house joiner. He married Agnes McConnochie; children: Isabel, Elizabeth, William, John, Richard, and James. The latter died at sea during the passage of the family to America in 1833. Richard Little brought his family to Lyndon in August of that year and settled on the farm his son John now owns. His brother William had come to Philadelphia about 1820 and to Lyndon some ten years later. William had also learned his father's trade and become a contractor and builder, and the two soon became widely known, doing work singly or together in Buffalo, Rochester, Olean, Rushford, Cuba, Arcade, Franklinville, and many other places. Richard Little died in 1858. His son has been an active builder until within a few years. William Little married, in 1869, Mrs. Eunice L. Fox, daughter of Horatio N. Waldo, of Arcade, N. Y. Children: Agnes (who died when one year old), Richard W., Rachel E., Agnes E., and James R. Richard Little was supervisor of Lyndon from 1867 to 1871 inclusive. William Little was originally a Republican, but is now a staunch Farmers' Alliance supporter.

James J. Maxwell, son of James, was born in 1852. James married Jane Tait, of Kirkpatrick, Dunham, Scotland, in 1841; children: John and James J. The latter married, in 1881, Mary M. Scott and has children Alfred, Frank S., and Ella Jane. Mr. Maxwell was supervisor of Lyndon in 1884 and 1885, assessor one term, and census enumerator in 1890.

William Maxwell, son of John, was born near Dumfries, Scotland, May 13, 1814. When nineteen he came to America, settling in Lyndon about 1835. Dec. 29, 1846, he married Margaret Johnson, of Franklinville, and had two sons: Robert, a farmer in Lyndon, and John William, a civil engineer and president and general manager of the Lima Steel Company, of Lima, Ohio. Mr. Maxwell was commissioner of highways three terms. His son Robert has been supervisor. Robert Maxwell married, in 1872, Isabella A. Mitchell. Children: Margaret, John, and Anna G.

Colin McLennan, son of Roderick, of Scotland, was born June 11, 1811. Coming to America in 1835 he lived in various places in New England and New Jersey and about 1837 came to Lyndon, where he purchased the farm he still occupies. June 15, 1849, he married Ann Frazer, of Scotland; children: Anna (Mrs. William Johnson); Hon. Peter B., of Syracuse, N. Y., justice of the Supreme Court; Christina; John, a lawyer of Syracuse, N. Y.; Roderick C., a physician in Syracuse; and Donald T., a lawyer in Syracuse. This is one of the most prominent families the town ever claimed as citizens.

William McStay, son of John McStay, was born in Ireland in 1826. In 1847 he came alone to Wheatland, Monroe county, N. Y., and in 1851 married Mary McCreedy. He came in 1854 to Lyndon. Children: Lizzie (Mrs. Edward Case), who has one child, Ralph; Mary (Mrs. Eben Wildrick), whose children are Ethel and Georgie; Emma (Mrs. John Maybee), whose children are Ray and Paul; John, of Tioga, Pa.; James, of Franklinville; and Jennie.

Mr. McStay married, second, in 1881, Mrs. Samuel Scott, daughter of Fred Carpenter, of Ischua. In 1865 he was drafted and went to the front in Co. D, 96th N. Y. Vols., serving on the James river and in Tennessee.

Gilbert Metcalf is the son of Nelson, the grandson of Levi, and the great-grandson of Nathan Metcalf, who moved from Vermont to Salisbury, N. Y., where his son Levi was born in 1792. Levi married Diana Van Steinberg, by whom he had one child, Nelson, born in 1814. Nelson Metcalf came to Lyndon in 1836 and married, in 1837, Sophronia Porter; children: Nelson, born in 1843, married Orsevilla Hall, and has children Sophronia, Anna, Fred, and George; Gilbert; and Frank, who, in 1870, married Maggie McGeorge, lives in Erie county, and has five children. Gilbert Metcalf was born in 1848 and was reared a farmer. In 1868 he married Maria, daughter of Gilbert Wood, of Lyndon; children: Viola, Phebe, and Luella. Besides managing his farm he has given considerable attention to the oil business. He owns six wells in Little Genesee and leases new territory. He is also an agent for wind-mills.

Mansel Newman, son of Thomas Newman, an old resident of Vermont, was born in Henrietta, Monroe county, N. Y., March 19, 1816. He came to Cuba, Allegany county, in 1824, where he remained about thirty years. He married Fanny Winchel, of Lyndon, who died about 1838; children: Alzina and Mary Ann, both deceased. About 1840 he married Dealy Jenks, also of Lyndon, who died in 1872; children: Sarah Jane, widow of Emory Bozworth, of Allegany county; James Otis, of Cuba; Mary L., who died in 1889; Thomas M., of Randolph; William L.; and George W. In 1856 he married, third, Adeline Munger, who lived in Cuba, and who died in 1872; children: Newell, Eunice J. (Mrs. De Lancy Ford), Emma A. (Mrs. Alonzo Warner), and Nancy, who died in 1878. March 5, 1876, he married Anna Baker, of Allegany county, who died in 1892. Mr. Newman died in 1891.

Josiah Q. Perry, son of Ebenezer, was born in Canandaigua, N. Y., Nov. 12, 1812. In 1840 he married Emily M. Knickerbocker, of Rushford, N. Y.; children: Egbert F., of Lyndon, and Addice E., of Belfast, N. Y. In 1845 Mr. Perry brought his family hither and bought his present farm of 200 acres of Lorentis Salisbury, of Franklinville, for $6 per acre. It had been held for a higher price by men in New York city, who expected the Erie railway would pass through Rawson. Mr. Perry was one of the builders of the first cheese factory in Cuba in 1865 and made cheese there two or three years. This was the second in this section, the Rushford factory being the first. He was first elected supervisor of Lyndon in 1854 and served five consecutive years, and again in 1872, and was several terms assessor and justice of the peace. His son, Egbert F. Perry, born in 1844, remains on the farm with his father. He married, in 1875, Jennie B. Dunn, of Lyndon; children: Lelia B., Lottie M., Bessie G., Hortense, Leslie, and Josephine. Mr. Perry has been collector and assessor.

Jeremiah Pratt, Jr., son of Jeremiah, was born in Burlington, N. Y., and came with his family to Lyndon in 1843, settling on the farm where Chester Camp now resides. He died in 1853. Children: William H., T. C., E. O., E. F., Harriet A. (Mrs. R. L. Thompson), and Albert A. Edward F. was killed Sept. 4, 1864, near Berryville, Va.

Chancy W. Roat is a son of Hiram W. Roat, who was born in Orange county, N. Y., and came to Lyndon in 1865, paying $2,000 for the 85-acre farm which Chancy W. now occupies. Hiram W. married Fannie Luce, of Tompkins county; children: Theodore, Sarah A., Emily, Chancy W.,

Orlando, Orlanda, and Leetta. Chancy W. was born in 1853 in Ithaca, N. Y., and married, in 1872, Adeline Snyder, of Lyndon. Children: Ella and Nora. Mr. Roat has always been a farmer, residing on the homestead since 1882. He has been constable and collector in Lyndon, and is a trustee in the Abbott cheese factory. His mother died in 1892.

James Scott is a son of John and Mary (McKenzie) Scott, of Dumfries, Scotland. Of their six children—Agnes, John, Robert, James, Margaret, and William T.—all but John and Robert came to Lyndon. Agnes came about 1844; her husband, William Morton, had come a year or two earlier. James came in 1847 and bought, in 1848, 100 acres of his present 200-acre farm at $6 an acre. He learned the ship carpenter's trade in England and has been a house carpenter here in addition to farming. He married Mary Nelson in 1852; children: Jennet (Mrs. Robert Stinson), of Ohio; John, who died aged twenty-three; Robert, who married Elizabeth Snyder and has children Ruth and Mabel; Mary (Mrs. James Maxwell), who has children Alfred, Frank, and Ella J.; and Nelson, of Wyoming, who married Lydia Hood. In 1870 Mr. Scott married, second, Mary Henderson; children: William H., George B., and Richard L. The springs which supply the water for the village of Franklinville are on Mr. Scott's farm; the works were built in 1891. Mr. Scott has served as highway commissioner, seven years as town clerk, and is now an excise commissioner. In 1864 he enlisted and served under Admiral Porter on the Mississippi and Tennessee rivers. He belongs to Alanson Crosby Post, G. A. R., and since 1882 has been an elder in the United Presbyterian church in Lyndon. His father, John Scott, who came here in 1854, died in 1866.

John W. Spofford is a son of Thomas and a grandson of John B. Spofford, of Brocket's Bridge, N. Y. Thomas married Julia McKinney, from Connecticut; children: James P., who married Susan McVeigh, of Franklinville, and now lives in Jersey City; and John W., born in 1837. Thomas Spofford died in 1839, and his widow and her two sons came to Rushford, N. Y., the same year. In 1843 she married Henry Morris, of Lyndon, who had settled in 1824 on the farm now her home and the home of her son John W. Henry Morris, from Connecticut, married, first, Sarah Northrup and second Isabella Gillman, by whom he had two children: Orra (Mrs. Cyrus Gordon), of Rushford, N. Y., and Lucy (Mrs. Walter De La Martyr), deceased. Mr. Morris was elected in 1829 the first supervisor of Lyndon, and again in 1837, 1838, 1840, 1841, 1853, and in 1859. Near a spring on his farm the Indians had a favorite camping ground, where they gathered as late as 1835.

Dewitt C. Stone is a son of Edmund Stone, of Madison county, N. Y., who was born in 1800 and came to Farmersville in 1821. His wife was Sally Pierce; children: Jennett, Jonathan O., Maranda O., Dewitt C., Sarah A., and William F. Mrs. Stone died and he married, second, Rebecca Worthington; children: Priscilla, James M., Lucy, Mary, and Edmund. James M. enlisted in the army and received a bullet wound in his leg at Winchester. Edmund enlisted in the 64th Regt. and was killed at Gettysburg. Dewitt C. was born in 1830. He became a carpenter and builder, at which trade he has worked most of the time for the past thirty years. In 1853 he married Harriet R., daughter of John B. Smith, of Herkimer county; children: Frank, who married Nancy Newcomb and has one child, Floyd; and Fred L., who married Cora Dye and has one child, Clayton. Edmund Stone was justice of the peace several years and in 1852 was elected supervisor of Lyndon. Dewitt C. Stone has been highway commissioner, assessor, and justice of the peace.

James R. Thompson is a son of John and grandson of Robert Thompson, of Genesee county, N. Y. John married Sarah Deyo; children: James R., Nathan, Caroline, Rebecca E., Marlin D., John S., Andrew J., Sarah M., Catharine, and George W. James R. was born in 1817, came to Lyndon in 1839, and married Sally A. Fargo in 1842; children: Addison S.; John E., born in 1845, enlisted in the Civil war, and died in service; David, of Rushford; and Frank E., who died aged three years. Addison S. was born in 1843, enlisted in the army in 1861, re-enlisted in the field in Co. E, 5th N. Y. Cav., and had three horses shot from under him. He married Eunice McKaigue; children: Robert E., John, and Mary. He is an expert cheese maker. Always a Republican he served his Assembly district in the Legislatures of 1890 and 1891. Mrs. Sally (Fargo) Thompson died in 1853, and he married, second, Mrs. Sarah A. Frary in 1856; children: Estella, Frank, Charles, Adella, and Dennella. James R. Thompson was supervisor of Lyndon in 1862 and 1863.

Milton F. Thompson, son of Hiram, was born April 29, 1844, in Utica, N. Y. Aug. 5, 1862, he enlisted in Co. K, 117th N. Y. Vols., and was with the regiment till his discharge June 8, 1865. Jan. 6, 1866, he came to Franklinsville. In 1867 he married Emma M., daughter of John and Eliza A. (Morehouse) Stevenson. In 1868 he moved to Farmersville, where he resided till 1869, when he removed to Sardinia, N. Y., where he resided eight years. He came to Lyndon in 1877.

LITTLE VALLEY.

Benjamin Winship, son of Benjamin and Mary (Adams) Winship, was of English origin and of New England stock. He was born in Salem, Mass., in 1796. He served in the War of 1812 and received a land warrant from the government and after his death another was granted his widow. In 1817 or 1818 he located a farm at Little Valley Center, now Elkdale postoffice. He made the journey with a yoke of oxen and a wagon and was six weeks on the road. He took a contract for about 300 acres. In 1832 he received his first deed for fifty acres, to which he added until he had a farm of 156 acres, on which he died Dec. 10, 1851. In 1823 he married Hannah Sanders, of Ashford, a native of Salem, Mass. Mr. Winship was many years a deacon of the Freewill Baptist church. He was assessor, town clerk, and commissioner of highways. The remains of his father and mother as well as those of himself and wife repose side by side in the cemetery near the homestead. His children were Nathan, Charles, Benjamin S., Joseph; Isaac, Truman, and Esther. Nathan was born June 29, 1824, married Eunice Wheeler, and settled on a farm in Little Valley. In 1855 or 1856 he sold it and removed to Wisconsin, where he was first a farmer and then a merchant and postmaster in Tunnel City, where he died April 14, 1866. Charles, born December 21, 1825, married Eveline Starks, and settled on a farm in his native town. He was a carpenter, highway commissioner, and overseer of the poor, and died May 1, 1880. Benjamin S., born April 2, 1831, married China E. Thompson, and was a liveryman and then a merchant in Little Valley. He removed to Wisconsin, where he was a hotel keeper, merchant, and lumberman, and died April 15, 1882. Joseph, born September 1, 1833, married Laura Wellington. He was a school teacher and also removed to Wisconsin, where he was a farmer and teacher. He served in the war for the Union, and died April 23, 1881. Isaac, born October 15, 1835, married Adaline Starks, and settled on the homestead, where he has always lived. He has always been a farmer and has also manufactured and dealt in lumber and furnished wood to the railroad. He is a Democrat and has held most of the offices in town. He has served as supervisor, justice of the peace twelve years, and is now the overseer of the poor. He has added to the homestead until he now owns 258 acres and has a herd of high grade Holstein cattle of his own breeding. Truman, born September 26, 1837, married Candis Fairbrother, commenced business as a partner with his brother Isaac, and conducted the farm and rafted lumber down the Allegheny river to Cincinnati and Covington. They divided the property in 1863 and he now owns the Donaldson farm, a part of the Crosby farm, and a small portion of the Winship homestead, in all 310 acres, which adjoins his brother's estate. He continues the lumber trade, and is a wholesale and retail dealer in western pine shingles. He has also been an extensive dealer in butter and cheese. He is a Democrat and has served as assessor and highway commissioner. He owns a fine herd of thoroughbred and grade Holstein cattle. Esther (Mrs. Edwin D. Carter) early went west as a teacher. She married in Wisconsin and settled in Humbird.
